proofed translations

—[01c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ As for the Way, the Way that can be spoken of is not the constant Way; ~ As for names, the name that can be named is not the constant name. ~ The nameless is the beginning of the ten thousand things; ~ The named is the mother of the ten thousand things. ~ Therefore, those constantly without desires, by this means will perceive its subtlety. ~ Those constantly with desires, by this means will see only that which they yearn for and seek. ~ These two together emerge; ~ They have different names yet they're called the same; ~ That which is even more profound than the profound - ~ The gateway of all subtleties.

—[01c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ TAO can be talked about, but not the Eternal Tao. ~ Names can be named, but not the Eternal Name. ~ As the origin of heaven-and-earth, it is nameless: ~ As "the Mother" of all things, it is nameable. ~ So, as ever hidden, we should look at its inner essence: ~ As always manifest, we should look at its outer aspects. ~ These two flow from the same source, though differently named; ~ And both are called mysteries. ~ The Mystery of mysteries is the Door of all essence.

—[01c03t] D. C. Lau ~ The way that can be spoken of ~ Is not the constant way; ~ The name that can be named ~ Is not the constant name. ~ The nameless was the beginning of heaven and earth; ~ The named was the mother of the myriad creatures. ~ Hence always rid yourself of desires in order to observe its secrets; ~ But always allow yourself to have desires in order to observe its manifestations. ~ These two are the same ~ But diverge in name as they issue forth. ~ Being the same they are called mysteries, ~ Mystery upon mystery - ~ The gateway of the manifold secrets.

—[01c04t] R. L. Wing ~ The Tao that can be expressed ~ Is not the Tao of the Absolute. ~ The name that can be named ~ Is not the name of the Absolute. ~ The nameless originated Heaven and Earth. ~ The named is the Mother of All Things. ~ Thus, without expectation, ~ One will always perceive the subtlety; ~ And, with expectation, ~ One will always perceive the boundary. ~ The source of these two is identical, Yet their names are different. ~ Together they are called profound, ~ Profound and mysterious, ~ The gateway to the Collective Subtlety.

—[01c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ The Tao that can be spoken of is not the eternal Tao; ~ The name that can be named is not the eternal name. ~ The nameless is the origin of Heaven and Earth; ~ The named is the root of all things. ~ Therefore, the subtleties of Tao are always apprehended through their formlessness, ~ The limits of things are always seen through their form. ~ These two (the form and the formless) have the same source but different names. ~ Both of them can be called deep and profound, ~ The deepest and the most profound, the door of all mysteries.

—[01c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ The Tao that can be told is not the eternal Tao. ~ The name that can be named is not the eternal name. ~ The nameless is the beginning of heaven and earth. ~ The named is the mother of ten thousand things. ~ Ever desireless, one can see the mystery. ~ Ever desiring, one can see the manifestations. ~ These two spring from the same source but differ in name; this appears as darkness. ~ Darkness within darkness. ~ The gate to all mystery.

—[01c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ Ways that can be spelled out ~ cannot be the eternal way. ~ Names that can be named ~ must change with time and place. ~ Emptiness is the origin of heaven and earth; ~ Existence is the mother of everything that had a birth. ~ Appreciate Emptiness, that we may see the nature of the Dao's versatility; ~ Appreciate Existence, that we may see the extent of the Dao's possibilities. ~ These two, Emptiness and Existence, came from the same source. ~ Though they bear different names, they serve the same mystical cause. ~ A mystery within a mystery, ~ such is the gateway to all versatility.

—[01c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ The DAO can be talked about, but that is not the ever-lasting DAO. ~ The NAME can be called, but that is not the ever-lasting NAME. ~ Nothingness is called the origin of the world. ~

Existence is called the root of everything. ~ Therefore, ~ you should stay in nothingness if you want to see the real essence of the world; ~ you should stay in existence if you want to see the different entities of the world. ~ They are from the same source but named differently: both are called XUAN. ~ Understanding the XUANs is the key to the kingdom of truth.

—[01c09t] Walter Gorn Old, MARKING OUT THE PATH ~ The Tao that is the subject of discussion is not the true Tao. ~ The quality which can be named is not its true attribute. ~ That which was before Heaven and Earth is called the Non-Existent. ~ The Existent is the mother of all things. ~ Therefore doth the wise man seek after the first mystery of the Non-Existent, while seeing in that which exists the Ultimates thereof. ~ The Non-Existent and Existent are identical in all but name. ~ This identity of apparent opposites I call the profound, the great deep, the open door of bewilderment.

—[01c10t] James Legge ~ The Tao that can be trodden is not the enduring and unchanging Tao. ~ The name that can be named is not the enduring and unchanging name. ~ (Conceived of as) having no name, it is the Originator of heaven and earth; ~ (conceived of as) having a name, it is the Mother of all things. ~ Always without desire we must be found, ~ If its deep mystery we would sound; ~ But if desire always within us be, ~ Its outer fringe is all that we shall see. ~ Under these two aspects, it is really the same; ~ but as development takes place, it receives the different names. ~ Together we call them the Mystery. ~ Where the Mystery is the deepest is the gate of all that is subtle and wonderful.

—[01c11t] David Hinton ~ A Way become Way isn't the perennial Way. ~ A name become name isn't the perennial name: ~ the named is mother to the ten thousand things, ~ but the unnamed is origin to all heaven and earth. ~ In perennial nonbeing you see mystery, and in perennial being you see appearance. ~ Though the two are one and the same, once they arise, they differ in name. ~ One and the same they're called dark-enigma, ~ dark-enigma deep within dark-enigma, ~ gateway of all mystery.

—[01c12t] Chichung Huang ~ A tao that can be spoken about ~ Is not the constant Tao; ~ A name that can be named ~ Is not the constant name. ~ Nonbeing names ~ The ten thousand things' beginning; ~ Being names ~ The ten thousand things' mother. ~ Therefore, constantly be desireless, ~ Whereby to observe its minutiae; ~ Constantly be desirous, ~ Whereby to observe where it ends. ~ The two issued from the same origin, ~ And, though different in name, ~ Refer to the same thing. ~ Deep and remote, doubly deep and remote, ~ Gate of multitudinous minutiae.

—[01c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ Tao that can be spoken of, ~ Is not the Everlasting (ch'ang) Tao. ~ Name that can be named, ~ Is not the Everlasting (ch'ang) name. ~ Nameless (wu-ming), the origin (shih) of heaven and earth; ~ Named (yu-ming), the mother (mu) of ten thousand things. ~ Alternate, ~ Non-being (wu), to name (ming) the origin (shih) of heaven and earth; ~ Being (yu), to name (ming) the mother of ten thousand things. ~ Therefore, always (ch'ang) without desire (wu-yü), ~ In order to observe (kuan) the hidden mystery (miao); ~ Always (ch'ang) with desire (yu-yü), ~ In order to observe the manifestations (chiao). ~ Alternate, ~ Therefore, by the Everlasting (ch'ang) Non-Being (wu), ~ We desire (yü) to observe (kuan) its hidden mystery (miao); ~ By the Everlasting (ch'ang) Being (yu), ~ We desire (yü) to observe the manifestations (chiao). ~ These two issue from the same origin, ~ Though named differently. ~ Both are called the dark (hsüan). ~ Dark and even darker, ~ The door to all hidden mysteries (miao).

—[01c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ Tao (Truth) can be talked about (theorized in any manner each person considers viable), though hardly of these theories will be eternally valid; ~ Names (Descriptions) can be ascribed [to Tao in any fashion each person deems workable], yet hardly of these names (descriptions) will last forever. ~ The beginning of the Universe (Heaven and Earth) [is beyond us, so in all honesty it] is indescribable; ~ [Nevertheless,] whatever is namable (describable) by us served as the mother (origin) of [our knowledge of] myriad (all and every) things and creatures. ~ Accordingly, ~ I constantly refrain from my selfish (subjective) desires for the purpose of exploring its (Nature's) manifested (apparent) wonder; ~ I also constantly maintain my will [to seek objective knowledge] in order to pursue its (Nature's) deep-seated enigma. ~ These two (Tao and Te) were originated from the same source, but they were described with different names by us. ~ They are both depicted as profound [as each is intricate in its own right]; ~ The profundity (complexity) intensifies as we fathom its mystery further and deeper; ~ Eventually, it will [lead us] to the gateway of all mysteries.

—[01c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ The way that can be talked about is not the eternal Way. ~ The name that can be named is not the eternal name. ~ "Nothing" is the name of the origin of Heaven and Earth. ~ "Being" is the name of "the mother" of all things. ~ So, in eternal Nothing, we should look at the wonderfulness of the Way. ~ In eternal Being, we should look at its outer aspects. ~ These two flow from the same source, though differently named; and both are called mysteries. ~ Mysterious and more mysterious. ~ That is the door of all wonders.

—[01c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ If Tao can be described, then it is not general Tao. ~ If a name can be dened, then it is not a general name. ~ The invisible is the origin of the universe. ~ The visible is the mother of all things. ~ By constantly thinking the invisible, we understand the universe; ~ By constantly observing the visible, we can see how the natural laws work. ~ Thinking and observing are two different things. ~ Yet they serve the same goal: to theorize. ~ Theorizing and evolving these theories is the gate to marvels.

—[01c17t] Arthur Waley ~ The Way that can be told of is not an Unvarying Way; ~ The names that can be named are not unvarying names. ~ It was from the Nameless that Heaven and Earth sprang; ~ The named is but the mother that rears the ten thousand creatures, each after its kind. ~ Truly, 'Only he that rids himself forever of desire can see the Secret Essences'; ~ He that has never rid himself of desire can see only the Outcomes. ~ These two things issued from the same mould, but nevertheless are different in name. ~ This 'same mould' we can but call the Mystery, ~ Or rather the 'Darker than any Mystery', ~ The Doorway whence issued all Secret Essences.

—[01c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ The Dao that can be described in language is not the constant Dao; ~ the name that can be given it is not its constant name. ~ Nameless, it is the origin of the myriad things; ~ named, it is the mother of the myriad things. ~ Therefore, always be without desire so as to see their subtlety. ~ And always have desire so as to see their ends. ~ These two emerge together but have different names. ~ Together, we refer to them as mystery: the mystery upon mystery and gateway of all subtleties.

—[01c19t] Lin Yutang ~ ON THE ABSOLUTE TAO ~ The Tao that can be told of ~ Is not the Absolute Tao; ~ The Names that can be given ~ Are not Absolute Names. ~ The Nameless is the origin of Heaven and Earth; ~ The Named is the Mother of All Things. ~ Therefore: ~ Oftentimes, one strips oneself of passion ~ In order to see the Secret of Life; ~ Oftentimes, one regards life with passion ~ In order to see its manifest forms. ~ These two (the Secret and its manifestations) ~ Are (in their nature) the same; ~ They are given different names ~ When they become manifest. ~ They may both be called the Cosmic Mystery: ~ Reaching from the Mystery into the Deeper Mystery ~ Is the Gate to the Secret of All Life.

—[01c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ The ways that can be walked are not the eternal Way; ~ The names that can be named are not the eternal name. ~ The nameless is the origin of the myriad creatures; ~ The named is the mother of the myriad creatures. ~ Therefore, ~ Always be without desire in order to observe its wondrous subtleties; ~ Always have desire so that you may observe its manifestations. ~ Both of these derive from the same source; ~ They have different names but the same designation. ~ Mystery of mysteries, ~ The gate of all wonders!

—[01c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ The Tao that can be spoken of is not the eternal Tao. ~ The name that can be named is not the eternal name. ~ The nameless is the beginning of heaven and earth. ~ The named is the mother of the ten thousand things. ~ Send your desires away and you will see the mystery. ~ Be filled with desire and you will see only the manifestation. ~ As these two come forth they differ in name. ~ Yet at their source they are the same. ~ This source is called a mystery. ~ Darkness within darkness, ~ the gateway to all mystery.

—[01c22t] David H. Li ~ Direction, as expressed, is no ordinary direction; ~ as named, no ordinary name. ~ Null identifies the universe at the beginning. ~ Ull identifies the mother of myriad matters. ~ Thus, visit Null to observe its intricateness. ~ Visit Ull to observe its limitlessness. ~ These two spring from the same source; ~ only their identifications differ. ~ Both are profound. ~ Profound upon profound, it is the portal to all intricacies.

—[01c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ The Tao Eternal is beyond definition. ~ No name given can capture its eternality. ~ Nameless, it is the origin of the Kosmos. ~ Named, it is the beginning of all things. ~ Nothingness, it is the inner being of the Kosmos. ~ Thingness, it is the outer distinctions of the Kosmos. ~ These two, though different in names, arise from the same source: ~ The source called the Invisible. ~ Invisible beyond the invisible, ~ It is the entry into the myriad wonders of the Eternal Kosmos.

—[01c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ The Tao that can be expressed in words is not the eternal Tao. ~ The name that can be defined in words is not the name that never changes. ~ Non-existence is what we will call the source of heaven and earth. ~ Existence is the mother of all things. ~ From eternal non-existence, therefore, we observe the beginning of the existence of the many hidden qualities of the universe. ~ From eternal existence, therefore, we clearly observe the overt qualities of the universe. ~ These two, the hidden and the overt, are originally the same at source, and become different when they manifest themselves. ~ This same origin is "the smallest of the small." ~ The absolute "smallest of the small" is the gate from which the beginning of all the parts of the universe emerges.

—[01c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ The Tao that can be talked about is not the true Tao. ~ The name that can be named is not the eternal Name. ~ Everything in the universe comes out of Nothing. ~ Nothing - the nameless is the beginning; ~ While Heaven, the mother is the creatrix of all things. ~ Follow the nothingness of the Tao, ~ and you can be like it, not needing anything, ~ seeing the wonder and the root of everything. ~ And even if you cannot grasp this nothingness, ~ you can still see something of the Tao in everything. ~ These two are the same only called by different names ~ - and both are mysterious and wonderful. ~ All mysteries are Tao, and Heaven is their mother: ~ She is the gateway and the womb-door.

—[01c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ The Tao that is utterable ~ Is not the eternal Tao; ~ The name that is namable ~ Is not the eternal Name. ~ The Nothingness is the name of the beginning of heaven and earth; ~ The Being (substance) is the name of the mother of all things. ~ Hence one should gain an insight into the beginning of the Tao by constantly observing the Nothingness, ~ And should perceive the end of the Tao by constantly observing the Being. ~ These two things, the Nothingness and the Being, are of the same origin but different in name. ~ They are both so profound as to be a key to the door of myriad secrets.

—[01c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ The Tao that can be named is not the eternal Tao. ~ The Name that can be spoken is not the eternal name. ~ The Nameless is the beginning of Heaven and Earth. ~ The Named is the mother of all creatures. ~ Observe the mysteries of the Tao without longing. ~ Survey its appearance with desire. ~ Both mysteries and appearance come from the same origin but wear a different name; ~ they are enigmatic. ~ The greatest mystery is the gate to all mysteries.

—[01c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ There are ways to follow, ~ But what is followed is not the true Way. ~ There are names to give, ~ But what is given is not the true Name. ~ Let us call non-being the beginning of the universe ~ And let us call being the development of all things. ~ When we follow non-being ~ We approach the wonder of the Way. ~ When we follow being ~ We approach the farther-end manifestation of the Way. ~ Each has the same origin, ~ And here exists a metaphysical door to true wisdom.

—[01c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ Understanding The Tao ~ Lao Tze says, ~ The Tao is that on which one can always tread. ~ That on which one cannot always tread is not the Tao. ~ And fame is that of which one can always remember. ~ That of which one cannot always remember is not fame. ~ All things are without names prior to the formation of Heaven and Earth. ~ And names are brought out to classify various things. ~ Since there is no name in the very beginning, why should one care about fame! ~ Hence, those who are constantly free of desire of fame shall see the Tao's subtle secret. ~ Those who bear desire shall see the end lying in front of them. ~ Both two types of men ferment their thinking in the same place, yet they will experience different fates. ~ Both their fates shall be up to Heaven. ~ Beyond our heaven, there are other heavens: whoever knows this shall find the gate of the Tao.

—[01c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ The Tao that can be expressed is not the eternal Tao; ~ The name that can be defined is not the unchanging name. ~ Non-existence is called the antecedent of heaven and earth; ~ Existence is the mother of all things. ~ From eternal non-existence, therefore, we serenely observe the mysterious beginning of the Universe; ~ From eternal existence we clearly see the apparent distinctions. ~ These two are the same in source and become different when manifested. ~ This sameness is called profundity. ~ Infinite profundity is the gate whence comes the beginning of all parts of the Universe.

—[01c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ The Tao that can be spoken of is not the eternal Tao; ~ The Name that can be named is not the eternal Name. ~ The Nameless [non-being] is the origin of heaven and earth; ~ The Namable [being] is the mother of all things. ~ Therefore constantly without desire, ~ There is the recognition of subtlety; ~ But constantly with desire, ~ Only the realization of potentiality. ~ The two come from the same source, ~ Having different names. ~ Both are called mysteries, ~ More mystical than the most mystical, ~ The gate of all subtleties.

—[01c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ The Tao that can be told is not the invariant Tao, ~ the names that can be named are not the invariant Names. ~ Nameless, it is the source of the thousands of things ~ (named, it is 'Mother' of the thousands of things). ~ Yes: ~ Always: ~ being desireless, ~ one sees the hidden essentials. ~ Always: ~ having desires, ~ one sees only what is sought. ~ These two lines are about The Merging - ~ it is when things develop and emerge from this that the different names appear. ~ The Merging is something mysterious - ~ mysterious, and more mysterious, ~ the abode of all the hidden essences.

—[01c33t] Cheng Lin ~ The truth that may be told is not the everlasting Truth. ~ The name given to a thing is not the everlasting Name. ~ Nothingness is used to denote the state that existed before the birth of heaven and earth. ~ Reality is used to denote the state where the multitude of things begins to have a separate existence. ~ Therefore, ~ when the mind rests in the state of Nothingness, the enigma can be understood; ~ when the mind rests in the state of Reality, the bounds can be reached. ~ These two states, though bearing different names, have a common origin. ~ Both are mysterious and metaphysical. ~ They are the most mysterious, and form the gateway to all mysteries.

—[01c34t] Yi Wu ~ The way that can be talked about is not the constant Way. ~ The name that can be named is not the constant Name. ~ Non-being is the name of the origin of Heaven and Earth; ~ Being is the name of the mother of all things. ~ Therefore: ~ Constantly in Non-being, one wishes to contemplate its (the Way's) subtlety. ~ Constantly in Being, one wishes to contemplate its path. ~ These two come from the same source, but are different in name. ~ The same source is called Mystery. ~ Mystery and more mystery.

~ It is the gateway to myriad subtleties.

— [01c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ Dao that can be expressed in words is not the absolute Dao. ~ The names that can be given are not the absolute names. ~ Non-being is before the dawn of time, ~ Being is when everything begins to emerge. ~ Therefore, maintaining a passive and receptive mode, ~ You can watch the secret of life; ~ Maintaining an active and attentive mode, ~ You can perceive the rhythm of life. ~ These two cognitive processes, though differing in names, ~ Are in the same continuum. ~ Both are known as the inscrutable Mystery, ~ Which is the greatest of all mysteries. ~ And it is through these perspectives that we can observe the marvellous phenomena of Nature.

— [01c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ Tao, the subtle reality of the universe cannot be described. ~ That which can be described in words is merely a conception of the mind. ~ Although names and descriptions have been applied to it, the subtle reality is beyond the description. ~ One may use the word "Nothingness" to describe the Origin of the universe, and "Beingness" to describe the Mother of the myriad things, ~ but Nothingness and Beingness are merely conceptions. ~ From the perspective of Nothingness, ~ one may perceive the expansion of the universe. ~ From the perspective of Beingness, ~ one may distinguish individual things. ~ Both are for the conceptual convenience of the mind. ~ Although different concepts can be applied, ~ Nothingness and Beingness and other conceptual activity of the mind all come from the same indescribable subtle Originalness. ~ The Way is the unfoldment of such subtle reality. ~ Having reached the subtlety of the universe, ~ one may see the ultimate subtlety, ~ the Gate of All Wonders.

— [01c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ The Tao that can be spoken of is not the Tao itself. ~ The name that can be given is not the name itself. ~ The unnameable is the source of the universe. ~ The nameable is the originator of all things. ~ Therefore, oftentimes without intention I see the wonder of Tao. ~ Oftentimes with intention I see its manifestations. ~ Its wonder and its manifestations are one and the same. ~ Since their emergence, they have been called by different names. ~ Their identity is called the mystery. ~ From mystery to further mystery: ~ The entry of all wonders!

— [01c38t] Henry Wei ~ Realization of Tao ~ T'i Tao ~ The Tao that can be stated is not the Eternal Tao. ~ The name that can be named is not the Eternal Name. ~ The Unnameable is originator of Heaven and Earth. ~ The Nameable is mother of the ten thousand things. ~ Therefore, ~ Always be desireless, so as to discern Tao's wonderful essence; ~ Always have some desire, so as to discern its manifestations. ~ These two come out from the same source, ~ But are different in name. ~ Their identical nature is a mystery. ~ Mystery of mysteries - ~ That is the gate of all wonderful essence.

— [01c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ No Tao that may be Tao is the constant Tao; ~ No name that may be a name is the constant name. ~ By non-being you name the beginning of Heaven and Earth; ~ By being you name the mother of the ten thousand things. ~ Therefore, always free of desire you see the secret; ~ Always with desire you see its appearance. ~ These two ~ Are the same in origin yet different in name. ~ Their sameness may be called a mystery. ~ It is the mystery beyond mysteries, ~ The gate to myriad secrets.

— [01c40t] Tao Huang ~ The Tao that is voiced is no longer that of eternal Tao. ~ The name that has been written is no longer that of eternal name. ~ The nameless is the beginning of the cosmic universe. ~ The named is the mother of the myriad creatures. ~ Being at peace, one can see into the subtle. ~ Engaging with passion, one can see into the manifest. ~ They both arise from a common source but have different names. ~ Both are called the mystery within the mystery. ~ They are the door to all wonders.

— [01c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ Dao that can be talked about is not the eternal Dao itself; ~ A name that can be given is not the eternal thing itself. ~ The nameless existed ~ Before the birth of birth of Heaven and Earth - Universe; ~ The names which were given were after ~ The birth of All Things. ~ By the eternity of unknown existence ~ Comprehend the common essence of things; ~ By the eternity of Existence ~ Observe the apparent differences. ~ These two came from the same origin - the unknown, ~ But with different names. ~ They all are called the "profoundness", ~ Profoundly and profoundly it is the entrance ~ From which come all wonders.

— [01c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ The Tao that can be told of is not the eternal Tao; ~ The name that can be named is not the eternal name. ~ The Nameless is the origin of Heaven and Earth; ~ The Named is the mother of all things. ~ Therefore let there always be non-being, so we may see their subtlety, ~ And let there always be being, so we may see their outcome. ~ The two are the same, ~ But after they are produced, they have different names. ~ They both may be called deep and profound. ~ Deeper and more profound, ~ The door of all subtleties!

— [01c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Если Дао могут высказать, Дао не является незыблемым; ~ если могут назвать имя, имя не является незыблемым. ~ Безымянность - вот начало Неба и Земли, ~ в наличии же имени таится мать десяти тысяч вещей. ~ Незыблемое неналичие - желаю поглядеть на скрытые в нем чудеса; ~ наличие в незыблемости - желаю осмотреть его окраину. ~ Выходит эта пара вместе, но именами различается. ~ Даю одно им имя сокровенного. ~ За сокровенным - сокровенное, врата множества чудес.

— [01c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Дао, которое может быть выражено словами, не есть постоянное Дао. ~ Имя, которое может быть поименовано, не есть постоянное имя. ~ Небытие зовётся началом Неба и Земли. ~ Бытие зовётся Матерью мириад созданий. ~ Поэтому, желая узреть его утончённо-неуловимую сущность, обрети постоянство небытия. ~ Желая наблюдать его проявления, пребывая в постоянстве бытия. ~ Оба они произрастают вместе и различаются лишь именем. ~ Будучи тождественными, они зовутся сокровенным. ~ Сокровенное и ещё раз сокровенное - врата ко множеству потаённого.

— [01c93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Путь, что может быть пройден, не есть постоянный Путь-Дао. ~ Имя, что может быть поименовано, не есть постоянное имя. ~ Безымянное - Неба, Земли начало. ~ Именуемое - Матерью сущего стало. ~ В отсутствии тайну вещей созерцать стремись. ~ В наличии предел бытия созерцать стремись. ~ Те двое родятся вместе, но их имена различны. ~ Их вместе назову я Сокровенным. ~ И Сокровенное вновь Сокровенным стало. ~ Таковы врата всех тайн.

— [01c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Дао, которое может быть высказано, не есть постоянное Дао. ~ Имя, которое может быть названо, не есть постоянное имя. ~ Небытием именуется начало Неба и Земли, ~ Бытием именуется Мать мириад вещей. ~ Поэтому: ~ обращаясь к постоянному небытию, стремлюсь к тому, чтобы увидеть его тайну; ~ обращаясь к постоянному бытию, стремлюсь к тому, чтобы увидеть его предел (спиральный путь). ~ Оба они (небытие и бытие) из тождества происходят, но различно именуются. ~ В тождестве они называются первоначалом. ~ Первоначало и еще первоначало - вот дверь ко всем тайнам.

— [01c95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Дао, которое может быть выражено словами, не есть постоянное дао. ~ Имя, которое может быть названо, не есть постоянное имя. ~ Безымянное есть начало неба и земли, ~ обладающее именем - мать всех вещей. ~ Поэтому тот, кто свободен от страстей, видит чудесную тайну [дао], ~ а кто имеет страсти, видит его только в конечной форме. ~ Оба они одного и того же происхождения, но с разными названиями. ~ Вместе они называются глубочайшими. ~ [Переход] от одного глубочайшего к другому - ~ дверь ко всему чудесному.

— [01c96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Тао, которое должно быть действительным, не есть обыкновенное Тао. ~ Имя, которое должно быть действительным, не есть обыкновенное имя. ~ То, что не имеет имени, - есть начало неба и земли; ~ то, что имеет имя, - есть мать всех вещей. ~ Вот почему свободный от всех страстей видит величественное проявление Тао, ~ а находящийся под влиянием какой-нибудь страсти видит только незначительное его проявление. ~ Эти оба происходят из одного и того же начала, но только носят разное название. ~ Они называются непостижимыми. ~ Непостижимое из непостижимых и есть ворота всего таинственного.

— [01c97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Путь, о котором можно поведать, - не постоянный Путь. ~ Имя, которое можно назвать, - не постоянное Имя. ~ Где имени нет - там начало всех вещей, ~ Где имя есть - там мать всех вещей. ~ Посему, постоянно не имея желания, видишь его исток, ~ А постоянно имея желание, видишь его исход. ~ То и другое является совместно, ~ Они имеют разные имена, но одинаково сказываются. ~ В сокровенном есть еще сокровенность: ~ Вот откуда исходит все утонченное.

— [01c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Постоянный Путь составляется из возможности выбора Пути и невозможности выбора Пути. ~ Постоянное имя составляется из возможности выбора имени и невозможности выбора имени. ~ Отсутствием именуется начальное действие Неба-Земли. ~ Наличием именуется рождение-материнство мириад существ. ~ Причинность: ~ Стремление к постоянному отсутствию осуществляет созерцание тончайшей тайны. ~ Стремление к постоянному наличию осуществляет созерцание его внешнего проявления. ~ Эта пара представляет собой общность исхода при различии наименования. ~ Если определить вместе, то это будет непостижимая тайна. ~ Пытаясь проникнуть в эту тайну, придешь только к тайне. ~ Это врата для появления множества тончайших начал.

— [02c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ When everyone in the world knows the beautiful as beautiful, ugliness comes into being; ~ When everyone knows the good, then the not good comes to be. ~ The mutual production of being and nonbeing, ~ The mutual completion of difficult and easy, ~ The mutual formation of long and short, ~ The mutual filling of high and low, ~ The mutual harmony of tone and voice, ~ The mutual following of front and back - ~ These are all constants. ~ Therefore the Sage dwells in nonactive affairs and practices the wordless teaching. ~ The ten thousand things arise, but he doesn't begin them; ~ He acts on their behalf, but he doesn't make them dependent; ~ He accomplishes his tasks, but he doesn't dwell on them; ~ It is only because he doesn't dwell on them, that they therefore do not leave him.

— [02c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ WHEN all the world recognizes beauty as beauty, this in itself is ugliness. ~ When all the world recognizes good as good, this in itself is evil. ~ Indeed, the hidden and the manifest give birth to each other. ~ Difficult and easy complement each other. ~ Long and short exhibit each other. ~ High and low set measure to each other. ~ Voice and sound harmonize each other. ~ Back and front follow each other. ~ Therefore, the Sage manages his affairs without ado, ~ And spreads his teaching without talking. ~ He denies nothing to the teeming things. ~ He rears them, but lays no claim to them. ~ He does his work, but sets no store by it. ~ He accomplishes his task, but does not dwell upon it. ~ And yet it is just because he does not dwell on it ~ That nobody can ever take it away from him.

— [02c03t] D. C. Lau ~ The whole world recognizes the beautiful as the beautiful, yet this is only the ugly; ~ the whole world recognizes the good as the good, yet this is only the bad. ~ Thus Something and Nothing produce each other; ~ The difficult and the easy complement each other; ~ The long and the short offset each other; ~ The high and the low incline towards each other; ~ Note and sound harmonize with each other; ~ Before and after follow each other. ~ Therefore the sage keeps to the deed that consists in taking no action and practises the teaching that uses no words. ~ The myriad creatures rise from it yet it claims no authority; ~ It gives them life yet claims no possession; ~ It benefits them yet exacts no gratitude; ~ It accomplishes its task yet lays claim to no merit. ~ It is because it lays claim to no merit ~ That its merit never deserts it.

—[02c04t] R. L. Wing ~ When all the world knows beauty as beauty, There is ugliness. ~ When they know good as good, There there is evil. ~ In this way ~ Existence and nonexistence produce each other. ~ Difficult and easy complete each other. ~ Long and short contrast each other. ~ High and low attract each other. ~ Pitch and tone harmonize each other. ~ Future and past follow each other. ~ Therefore, Evolved Individuals ~ Hold their position without effort, ~ Practice their philosophy without words, ~ Are a part of All Things and overlook nothing. ~ They produce but do not possess, Act without expectation, Succeed without taking credit. ~ Since, indeed, they take no credit, it remains with them.

—[02c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ When all people in the world know the beautiful as beauty, ~ There appears ugliness; ~ When they know goodness as good, ~ There appears evil. ~ Therefore, by opposing each other, ~ Existence and nonexistence come into being, ~ Difficult and easy form themselves, ~ Long and short are distinct, ~ High and low contrast, ~ Sound and voice harmonize, ~ Front and back emerge. ~ Thus, the sage manages affairs by "nonaction," ~ And teaches by "saying nothing." ~ He leaves all things to grow and change without initiation; ~ Raises all things without making claim for his ownership; ~ Promotes all things without attributing them to his contribution; ~ And takes no credit for himself when the work is done. ~ It is because no claim is made that his credit cannot be forfeited.

—[02c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ Under heaven all can see beauty as beauty only because there is ugliness. ~ All can know good as good only because there is evil. ~ Therefore having and not having arise together. ~ Difficult and easy complement each other. ~ Long and short contrast each other; ~ High and low rest upon each other; ~ Voice and sound harmonize each other; ~ Front and back follow one another. ~ Therefore the sage goes about doing nothing, teaching no-talking. ~ The ten thousand things rise and fall without cease, ~ Creating, yet not possessing, ~ Working, yet not taking credit. ~ Work is done, then forgotten. ~ Therefore it lasts forever.

—[02c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ People under heaven see beauty in what they call "beauty," ~ that way they know of the "ugly." ~ Similarly people see good in what they call "good," ~ that way they know of the "bad." ~ Existence and Emptiness are concepts that make sense by comparison. ~ Similarly, long lends meaning to short, and high to low. ~ Harmony is produced when sounds combine in unison. ~ Because the fore goes, so the back follows. ~ Thus the Sage would not act as if he could act on his will. ~ He teaches the unspoken teaching. ~ No word is ever spoken, yet living things thrive. ~ No ownership is claimed, though Nature begets all creation. ~ Humility is maintained even as achievement is made. ~ No credit is claimed even as work is done. ~ Because no credit is claimed, so no credit is ever lost.

—[02c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ Everyone knows that beauty is good, but ugliness exists as well. ~ Everyone knows that kindness is good, but unkindness exists as well. ~ Therefore, nothingness and existence always coexist; ~ As do difficulty and easiness, long and short, high and low, and sound and hearing. ~ For this reason, the great men practiced WUWEI. ~ They wordlessly taught people and let the world develop by itself. ~ Create but do not control, nurture but do not own, accomplish but do not claim. ~ Only when you do not claim the accomplishment, will it never leave.

—[02c09t] Walter Gorn Old, SELF-PERFECTION ~ When the world speaks of beauty as being beautiful, ugliness is at once defined. ~ When goodness is seen to be good, evil is at once apparent. ~ So do existence and non-existence mutually give rise to one another, as that which is difficult and that which is easy, distant and near, high and low, shrill and bass, preceding and following. ~ The Sage therefore is occupied only with that which is without prejudice. ~ He teaches without verbosity, he acts without effort; he produces without possessing, he acts without regard to the fruit of action; he brings his work to perfection without assuming credit; and claiming nothing as his own, he cannot at any time be said to lose.

— [02c10t] James Legge ~ All in the world know the beauty of the beautiful, ~ and in doing this they have (the idea of) what ugliness is; ~ they all know the skill of the skilful, ~ and in doing this they have (the idea of) what the want of skill is. ~ So it is that existence and non-existence give birth the one to (the idea of) the other; ~ that difficulty and ease produce the one (the idea of) the other; ~ that length and shortness fashion out the one the figure of the other; ~ that (the ideas of) height and lowness arise from the contrast of the one with the other; ~ that the musical notes and tones become harmonious through the relation of one with another; ~ and that being before and behind give the idea of one following another. ~ Therefore the sage manages affairs without doing anything, ~ and conveys his instructions without the use of speech. ~ All things spring up, and there is not one which declines to show itself; ~ they grow, and there is no claim made for their ownership; ~ they go through their processes, and there is no expectation (of a reward for the results). ~ The work is accomplished, and there is no resting in it (as an achievement). ~ The work is done, but how no one can see; ~ 'Tis this that makes the power not cease to be.

— [02c11t] David Hinton ~ All beneath heaven knows beauty is beauty only because there's ugliness, and knows good is good only because there's evil. ~ Being and nonbeing give birth to one another, ~ difficult and easy complete one another, ~ long and short measure one another, ~ high and low fill one another, ~ music and noise harmonize one another, ~ before and after follow one another: ~ that's why a sage abides in the realm of nothing's own doing, ~ living out that wordless teaching. ~ The ten thousand things arise without beginnings there, ~ abide without waiting there, ~ come to perfection without dwelling there. ~ Without dwelling there: that's the one way you'll never lose it.

— [02c12t] Chichung Huang ~ When all under heaven know beauty as beauty, ~ There is ugliness; ~ When all know goodness, ~ There is evil. ~ That being and nonbeing mutually generate, ~ Difficult and easy mutually complement, ~ Long and short mutually formulate, ~ High and low mutually fulfill, ~ Music and voice mutually harmonize, ~ Front and back mutually follow ~ Is constant. ~ Hence, the sage man ~ Assumed the office of nonaction, ~ Conducted speechless instruction. ~ When the ten thousand things rose, ~ He did not initiate. ~ He assisted without taking credit; ~ Scored merits without claiming. ~ Precisely because he claimed not, ~ They never vanished.

— [02c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ When all under heaven know beauty (mei) as beauty, ~ There is then ugliness (o); ~ When all know the good (shan) good, ~ There is then the not good (pu shan). ~ Therefore being and non-being give rise to each other, ~ The difficult and easy complement each other, ~ The long and short shape each other, ~ The high and low lean on each other, ~ Voices and instruments harmonize with one another, ~ The front and rear follow upon each other. ~ Therefore the sage manages affairs without action, ~ Carries out (hsing) teaching without speech (yen). ~ Ten thousand things arise and he does not initiate them, ~ They come to be and he claims no possession (yu) of them, ~ He works (wei) without holding on, ~ Accomplishes (ch'eng) without claiming merit. ~ Because he does not claim merit, ~ His merit does not go away.

— [02c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ In our world: ~ When there was a consensus on what should be judged as beautiful, a convention on what should be disliked [as ugly] was reciprocally brought in [inadvertently]. ~ When there was an agreement on what should be deemed good, an agreement on what was evil (not good) was correspondingly decided upon. ~ Accordingly, [the following contrasting concepts were formulated because of their relative relations]: ~ Existence (being) and non-existence (nothing) are inter-dependent [concepts]; ~ Difficulty and easiness are determined by comparison; ~ Long and short are conjointly formulated; ~ High and low owe their existences to their relative positions [to the observer]; ~ Tune and sound are distinguished by [the rule whether a stream of sounds has internal harmonization]; ~ Front and back are joined together by perspective positions [of objects to the observer]. ~ Accordingly, a Sage (leader) [adopts the following measure to lead]: ~ When comes to managing the government, he would practice the policy of non-interference; ~ When comes to educating the population, he would avoid making speeches (through using tantalizing rhetoric); ~ Even after having had activated and motivated all and every things and creatures to embark their potentialities on the best possible course, he will never withdraw from his continuous and painstaking support. ~ [A Sage] would help [all creatures] to relish their lives without being possessive; ~ [He] would carry out good deeds without asserting his authority; ~ [He] would not claim his merit after each success; ~ It is just because of his avoiding appropriating his contributions, nothing whatsoever can take away from him his achievements [of Te].

—[02c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ When the entire world recognizes beauty as beauty, there is ugliness. ~ When the entire world recognizes good as good, there is evil. ~ Indeed, "nothing" and "being" give birth to each other. ~ Difficult and easy complement each other. ~ Long and short exhibit each other. ~ High and low set measure to each other. ~ Voice and sound harmonize each other. ~ Back and front follow each other. ~ Therefore, the sage manages his affairs by "non-doing", and spreads his teaching by "non-talking". ~ The Way makes all things and denies nothing; it gives birth to them, but lays no claim to them; it does its work, but does not say by its work; it accomplishes his work, but does not dwell on things. ~ And yet it is just because he does not dwell on things that nobody can ever take them away from it.

—[02c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ People know what beauty is, because there is ugliness; ~ people know what good is, because there is bad. ~ Likewise, empty and full, difficulty and ease, long and short, high and low, sound and tone, front and rear, all go side by side. ~ Thus, ~ the sage handles affairs without the intention for fame, and teaches without preaching, ~ lets things develop without initialize them, ~ lets things grow without interfering them, ~ lets things move ahead without forcing them, ~ lets things succeed without boast about them. ~ Because the sage does not brag his success, he would continue to be successful.

—[02c17t] Arthur Waley ~ It is because every one under Heaven recognizes beauty as beauty, that the idea of ugliness exists. ~ And equally if every one recognized virtue as virtue, this would merely create fresh conceptions of wickedness. ~ For truly 'Being and Not-being grow out of one another; ~ Difficult and easy complete one another. ~ Long and short test one another; ~ High and low determine one another. ~ Pitch and mode give harmony to one another. ~ Front and back give sequence to one another'. ~ Therefore the Sage relies on actionless activity, ~ Carries on wordless teaching, ~ But the myriad creatures are worked upon by him; he does not disown them. ~ He rears them, but does not lay claim to them, ~ Controls them, but does not lean upon them, ~ Achieves his aim, but does not call attention to what he does; ~ And for the very reason that he does not call attention to what he does ~ He is not ejected from fruition of what he has done.

—[02c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ Once all under Heaven knew beauty as "beauty"; at that moment "ugliness" was already there. ~ Once all knew goodness as "goodness"; at that moment "not good" was already there. ~ Thus it is that presence and absence generate each other; ~ difficulty and ease determine the sense of the other; ~ long and short give proportion to the other; ~ highs and lows are a matter of relative inclination; ~ instrumental sounds and voice tones depend on one other for harmony; ~ and before and after result from their relative places in a sequence. ~ Therefore, the sage [sheng] tends to matters without conscious effort ~ And practices the teaching that is not expressed in words. ~ The myriad folk model their behavior on him, yet he does not tell them to do so. ~ He gives them life, yet he possesses them not. ~ He acts, yet they do not depend on him. ~ And he achieves success yet takes no pride in it. ~ It is just because he is not proprietary that he does not lose it.

—[02c19t] Lin Yutang ~ THE RISE OF RELATIVE OPPOSITES ~ When the people of the Earth all know beauty as beauty, ~ There arises (the recognition of) ugliness. ~ When the people of the Earth all know the good as good, ~ There arises (the recognition of) evil. ~ Therefore: ~ Being and non-being interdepend in growth; ~ Difficult and easy interdepend in completion; ~ Long and short interdepend in contrast; ~ High and low interdepend in position; ~ Tones and voice interdepend in harmony; ~ Front and behind interdepend in company. ~ Therefore the Sage: ~ Manages affairs without action; ~ Preaches the doctrine without words; ~ All things take their rise, but he does not turn away from them; ~ He gives them life, but does not take possession of them; ~ He acts, but does not appropriate; ~ Accomplishes, but claims no credit. ~ It is because he lays claim to no credit ~ That the credit cannot be taken away from him.

—[02c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ When all under heaven know beauty as beauty, already there is ugliness; ~ When everyone knows goodness, this accounts for badness. ~ Being and nonbeing give birth to each other, ~ Difficult and easy complete each other, ~ Long and short form each other, ~ High and low fulfill each other, ~ Tone and voice harmonize with each other, ~ Front and back follow each other - it is ever thus. ~ For these reasons, ~ The sage dwells in affairs of nonaction, carries out a doctrine without words. ~ He lets the myriad creatures rise up but does not instigate them; ~ He acts but does not presume; ~ He completes his work but does not dwell on it. ~ Now, ~ Simply because he does not dwell on them, his accomplishments never leave him.

—[02c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ All under heaven see beauty as beauty only because they also see ugliness. ~ All announce that good is good only because they also denounce what is bad. ~ Therefore, ~ something and nothing give birth to one another. ~ Difficult and easy complete one another. ~ Long and short fashion one another. ~ High and low arise from one another. ~ Notes and tones harmonize with one another. ~ Front and back follow one another. ~ Thus, ~ the True Person acts without striving and teaches without words. ~ Deny nothing to the ten thousand things. ~ Nourish them without claiming authority, ~ Benefit them without demanding gratitude, ~ Do the work, then move on. ~ And, the fruits of your labor will last forever.

—[02c22t] David H. Li ~ For [people in] the world to know [only] beauty and what is beautiful is ugly; ~ to know [only] goodness and what is good is not good. ~ Ull and Null complement in generation, ~ difficult and easy complement in completion; ~ long and short complement in form, ~ high and low complement in norm; ~ voice and sound complement in harmony, ~ front and rear complement in company; ~ - they are ever so. ~ Thus, ~ a sage practices laissez-faire governance and provides wordless instructions. ~ [A sage] neither interferes with myriad matters' generation, ~ nor takes possession of [their] cultivation, ~ nor expects approbation of [his/her] provision, ~ nor seeks acclamation for [their] accomplishments. ~ It is because [the sage] does not seek acclamation for [his/her] accomplishments that they do not disappear.

—[02c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ When the world recognizes beauty as beauty, ugliness arises. ~ When the world recognizes good as good, evil arises. ~ Being and non-being create each other. ~ Difficult and easy define each other. ~ Long and short form each other. ~ High and low support each other. ~ Tone and voice accompany each other. ~ Before and after follow each other. ~ Hence, ~ the sage lives in the state of non-action - of eternal balance, ~ And teaches by the precept of silence - and through his silent deed. ~ He accepts things as they arise, ~ Creates without possessing, ~ Performs without depending, ~ Accomplishes without claiming credit. ~ Because he does not claim credit for himself, ~ His virtues endure forever more.

—[02c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ When the world understands that beauty is beautiful, ugliness will exist. ~ When the world understands that goodness is good, evil will exist. ~ From that we learn that: ~ Existence affirms non-existence, ~ Ease affirms difficulty, ~ Short derives from long, because that is what it is compared to, ~ Low derives from high, because according to that it is measured, ~ Echo affirms sound, ~ After follows before. ~ Accordingly, ~ The sage operates without action, ~ And teaches his pupils without words. ~ Everything in the universe, when defined, is relative to everything else. ~ The sage does not try to differentiate things, he does not try to show his preference for things either in deed or in speech. ~ This does not mean that the sage does nothing or says nothing; ~ rather, it means that he "accepts things as they are," easily and naturally, without making any demands.

— [02c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ Beauty and mercy are only recognized by people ~ Because they know the opposite, which is ugly and mean. ~ If the people think they know goodness ~ Then all they really know is what evil is like! ~ Nothing, and Heaven share the same root - ~ Difficulty and ease are a part of all work. ~ The long and the short are in your hands, ~ Above and below exist because they each do, ~ What you want and what you say should be the same ... ~ Neither future nor past can exist alone. ~ The sage has no attachment to anything, ~ and he therefore does what is right without speaking by simply being in the Tao. ~ Life, all life began without words. ~ Life is made - and no one owns it. ~ The Tao is neither selfish nor proud. ~ The Tao is generous and graceful in what it does ~ Without ever claiming any merit ~ And the sage's greatness lies in taking no credit.

— [02c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ The whole world knows the beautiful as beautiful ~ Only because of the existence of the ugly; ~ The whole world knows the good as good ~ Only because of the existence of the bad. ~ Hence the Being and the Nothingness exist in opposition; ~ The difficult and the easy complement each other; ~ The long and the short manifest themselves by comparison; ~ The high and the low are inclined as well as opposed to each other; ~ The consonants and vowels harmonize with each other; ~ The front and the back follow each other. ~ Thus the sage behaves ~ Without taking active action, ~ Teaches without using words, ~ Lets all things rip without interference, ~ Gives them life without claiming to be their owner, ~ Benefits them without claiming to be their benefactor, succeeds without claiming credit. ~ Because he does not claim credit, ~ His credit is never lost.

— [02c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ The whole world can see the beautiful as the beautiful only because of the ugly. ~ The whole world can recognize the good as the good only because of the bad. ~ Something and nothing create each other. ~ The difficult and the easy complement each other. ~ The long and the short define each other. ~ The high and the low counterbalance each other. ~ Before and after follow each other. ~ Therefore the sage acts without action, teaches without words. ~ The myriad creatures keep on going without an end, ~ creating life without possessing it, ~ performing deeds without expectations, ~ fulfilling the mission without claiming a victory, ~ because the sage does not ask for praise, ~ therefore the praise remains with him for ever.

— [02c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ We know beauty because there is ugliness. ~ We know goodness because there are evils. ~ Therefore, being and non-being are relative to each other ~ As are what is difficult and what is easy; ~ What is long and what is short; ~ What is high and what is low; ~ What sounds and what resonates; ~ And what precedes and what follows. ~ The wise do good by doing nothing ~ And teach well by teaching nothing. ~ Things work without intruding on the natural process, ~ Develop and produce without desiring willfully, ~ And are successful without feeling success. ~ Only those who possess nothing ~ Will lose nothing.

— [02c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ The Rise Of Relative Opposites ~ Lao Tze says, ~ When the people in the world gain a knowledge of that which is beautiful, ~ they will also gain a knowledge of that which is ugly. ~ When they gain a knowledge of that which belongs to the realm of the good, ~ they will also gain a knowledge of that which belongs to the realm of the bad. ~ Existence and non-existence shall rotate to take place; ~ difficulty and ease impress people by the prepossession; ~ length long and short are acknowledged in comparison; ~ tallness and lowness confront to make contrast; ~ harmonious musical pieces, the notes and tones interdepend; ~ that which is before or behind leads or follows the other. ~ Therefore, there is a sage who likes to do business without the intent to control fate and conveys his instruction without speech. ~ All things make an effort to prosper, and there is no one who comes to interfere with them. ~ Moreover, the one who gives life to all things does not claim ownership of them; ~ works laboriously for them, and does not expect a reward in return; ~ establishes the feat for them, and does not confess the achievement. ~ Because it does not confess the achievement, no one can forget the achievement.

—[02c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ When all in the world understand beauty to be beautiful, then ugliness exists. ~ When all understand goodness to be good, then evil exists. ~ Thus existence suggests non-existence; ~ Easy gives rise to difficult; ~ Short is derived from long by comparison; ~ Low is distinguished from high by position; ~ Resonance harmonizes sound; ~ After follows before. ~ Therefore, the Sage carries on his business without action, and gives his teaching without words.

—[02c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ When all in the world recognize beauty as beauty, it is ugliness. ~ When they recognize good as good, it is not good. ~ Therefore, ~ being and non-being beget each other, ~ hard and easy complement each other, ~ long and short shape each other, ~ high and low rely on each other, ~ sound and voice harmonize with each other, ~ front and back follow each other. ~ Therefore, the Sage administers without action and instructs without words. ~ He lets all things rise without dominating them, ~ produces without attempting to possess, ~ acts without asserting, ~ achieves without taking credit. ~ And because he does not take credit, it will never leave him.

—[02c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ When everyone in the world recognizes the elegant as elegant ... ~ then ugliness has just appeared. ~ When all recognize goodness as good ... ~ then the not-good has just appeared. ~ Yes: ~ 'Being' and 'nothing' give birth one to the other; ~ 'the difficult' and 'the easy' give full shape to one another; ~ 'what excels' and 'what falls short' form one another; ~ 'the noble' and 'the lowly' give content to one another; ~ the music and the voice harmonize with one another; ~ the back and the front follow one another. ~ Always. ~ And so the Wise Person: ~ Settles into his job of Not Doing, ~ carries on his teaching done without talking. ~ The thousands of things arise and are active - ~ and he rejects none of them. ~ He is a doer but does not rely on this, ~ he achieves successes but does not dwell in them. ~ He just does not dwell in them, and so they cannot be taken away.

—[02c33t] Cheng Lin ~ As soon as the world regards some thing as beautiful, forthwith also appears ugliness. ~ As soon as the world regards some deed as good, forthwith also appears evil. ~ Thus we have the alternation of existence and non-existence; ~ the succession of the difficult and the easy; ~ the comparison of the long and the short; ~ the contrast between the high and the low; ~ the variation of pitch notes; ~ the order of precedence and sequence. ~ The Sage is ever free from artifice, and practises the precept of silence. ~ He does things without the desire for control. ~ He lives without the thought of private ownership. ~ He gives without the wish for return. ~ He achieves without claiming credit for himself. ~ Because he does not claim credit for himself, he is always given credit.

—[02c34t] Yi Wu ~ When all in the world know beauty as beauty, ~ then ugliness already has arisen. ~ When all know good as good, ~ then bad already has arisen. ~ Therefore: ~ existence and non-existence give birth to each other, ~ difficult and easy complement each other, ~ long and short contrast with each other, ~ high and low rely on each other, ~ sound and voice harmonize with each other, ~ front and back follow each other. ~ Therefore: ~ the sage manages his affairs by non-action and spreads his teachings without words. ~

All things arise, he does not reject them. ~ He produces, but does not possess; ~ acts, but does not take credit; ~ achieves merit, but does not dwell [on it]. ~ Because he does not dwell on it, it does not leave him. — [02c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ When everyone knows what beauty is, ~ There must also be ugliness. ~ When everybody knows what goodness is, ~ Then evil must also exist. ~ Therefore, the haves and the have-nots coexist. ~ Easy and hard become complementary. ~ Long and short differ in length. ~ High and low contrast in height. ~ Tone and pitch harmonise with each other. ~ The past is followed by the present. ~ Hence, the sage manages his affairs with non-action, ~ Teaches without utterance, ~ And lets everything develop without any interference. ~ Dao procreates but does not possess. ~ It facilitates development but does not gloat. ~ When it accomplishes his task, it does not claim credit. ~ As the sage does not claim credit for his success, ~ The credit cannot be taken away from him.

— [02c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ As soon as the world regards something as beautiful, ~ ugliness simultaneously becomes apparent. ~ As soon as the world regards something as good, ~ evil simultaneously becomes apparent. ~ In exactly the same manner, ~ existence and nonexistence give birth to each other. ~ Difficult and easy define each other. ~ Long and short form each other. ~ High and low make each other distinguishable. ~ Silence and sound make each other conspicuous. ~ Front and back connect each other. ~ Realizing this, one does not separate one's being from the subtle essence of the universe. ~ One holds no preconceptions, and does things without insisting on personal conditions. ~ One guides people by living in accord with the essence of life. ~ One brings good things about, but has no intention of possessing them. ~ One performs work, but has no intention to acquire personal power. ~ When one's task is accomplished, ~ one lets go of it and seeks no reward or recognition. ~ Because one does not claim credit for oneself, ~ one does not do any damage to oneself.

— [02c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ When beauty is universally affirmed as beauty, therein is ugliness. ~ When goodness is universally affirmed as goodness, therein is evil. ~ Therefore: being and non-being are mutually posited in their emergence. ~ Difficult and easy are mutually posited in their complementariness. ~ Long and short are mutually posited in their positions. ~ High and low are mutually posited in their contradiction. ~ Voice and tone are mutually posited in their unity. ~ Front and back are mutually posited in their succession. ~ Thus, the wise deals with things through non-interference and teaches through no-words. ~ All things flourish without interruption. ~ They grow by themselves, and no one possesses them. ~ Work is done, and no one depends on it. ~ Achievements are made, but no one claims credit. ~ Because no one claims credit, achievements are always there.

— [02c38t] Henry Wei ~ Self-Culture ~ Yang Shen ~ When all the world knows beauty as beauty, ~ Then ugliness comes into being; ~ When all the world knows goodness as goodness, ~ Then evil comes into being. ~ Therefore, ~ Being and Non-Being condition each other; ~ Difficult and Easy give rise to each other; ~ Long and Short set off each other; ~ High and Low contrast each other; ~ Tone and Voice harmonize each other; ~ Front and Rear succeed each other. ~ Thus the Sage handles affairs non-assertively, ~ And imparts his teaching without words. ~ The ten thousand things grow apace, ~ But he does not let them down. ~ He produces but does not claim ownership; ~ He acts but does not presume on the result; ~ He achieves success but does not take the credit. ~ For the very reason that he takes no credit, ~ Credit does not separate from him.

— [02c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ All under Heaven recognize beautiful as beautiful, ~ But this is none other than ugly. ~ Everyone recognizes good as good, ~ But this is none other than bad. ~ Therefore being and non-being rise together; ~ Difficult and easy complete each other; ~ Long and short shape each other; ~ High and low lean on each other; ~ Sound and voice come in harmony; ~ Front and back accompany each other.

~ Therefore the sage ~ Relies on no-action, ~ Practices wordless teaching. ~ There rise the ten thousand things, but he disowns nothing, ~ He gives them life, yet does not possess them; ~ Rules them, yet does not depend on them; ~ His work is done, but he never dwells in it. ~ Truly, since he never dwells, ~ He never departs.

— [02c40t] Tao Huang ~ In the world, ~ Everyone recognizes beauty as beauty, ~ Since the ugly is also there. ~ Everyone recognizes goodness as goodness, ~ Since evil is also there. ~ Since being and nonbeing give birth to each other, ~ Difficulty and ease complete each other, ~ Long and short measure each other, ~ High and low overflow into each other, ~ Voice and sound harmonize with each other, ~ And before and after follow each other, ~ Therefore the sage ~ Lives in actionless engagement, ~ And preaches wordless doctrine. ~ The myriad creatures ~ Act without beginning, ~ Nourish without possessing, ~ Accomplish without claiming credit. ~ It is accomplishment without claiming credit that makes the outcome self-sustaining.

— [02c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ When the whole world recognizes that beauty is beautiful, ~ It may be not beautiful at all. ~ When the whole world recognizes that goodness is good, ~ It may not be good at all. ~ Thus, existence and nonexistence produce each other. ~ The high and the low are compared with each other. ~ The long and the short show off each other. ~ The high and the low compliment each other. ~ The front and the rear follow each other. ~ Thus the Sage ruler administered state affairs by non-interference and carried out education by non-preaching. ~ All things are resolved in order and nothing is rejected. ~ It produces All Things but it does not possess them. ~ It provides everything for them but it does not take anything from them. ~ He accomplished deeds for them, but he did not claim the deeds. ~ Since he did not claim the deeds, they did not leave him.

— [02c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ When the people of the world all know beauty as beauty, ~ There arises the recognition of ugliness. ~ When they all know the good as good, ~ There arises the recognition of evil. ~ Therefore: ~ Being and non-being produce each other; ~ Difficult and easy complete each other; ~ Long and short contrast each other; ~ High and low distinguish each other; ~ Sound and voice harmonize each other; ~ Front and behind accompany each other. ~ Therefore the sage manages affairs without action ~ And spreads doctrines without words. ~ All things arise, and he does not turn away from them. ~ He produces them but does not take possession of them. ~ He acts but does not rely on his own ability. ~ He accomplishes his task but does not claim credit for it. ~ It is precisely because he does not claim credit that his accomplishment remains with him.

— [03c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ By not elevating the worthy, you bring it about that people will not compete. ~ By not valuing goods that are hard to obtain, you bring it about that people will not act like thieves. ~ By not displaying the desirable you bring it about that people will not be confused. ~ Therefore, in the government of the Sage: ~ He empties their minds, ~ And fills their bellies. ~ Weakens their ambition, ~ And strengthens their bones. ~ He constantly causes the people to be without knowledge and without desires. ~ If he can bring it about that those with knowledge simply do not dare to act, ~ Then there is nothing that will not be in order.

— [03c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ BY not exalting the talented you will cause the people to cease from rivalry and contention. ~ By not prizing goods hard to get, you will cause the people to cease from robbing and stealing. ~ By not displaying what is desirable, you will cause the people's hearts to remain undisturbed. ~ Therefore, the Sage's way of governing begins by ~ Emptying the heart of desires, ~ Filling the belly with food, ~ Weakening the ambitions, ~ Toughening the bones. ~ In this way he will cause the people to remain without knowledge and without desire, and prevent the knowing ones from any ado. ~ Practice Non-Ado, and everything will be in order.

— [03c03t] D. C. Lau ~ Not to honour men of worth will keep the people from contention; ~ not to value goods which are hard to come by will keep them from theft; ~ not to display what is desirable will keep them from being unsettled of mind. ~ Therefore in governing the people, the sage empties their minds but fills their bellies, weakens their wills but strengthens their bones. ~ He always keeps them innocent of knowledge and free from desire, and ensures that the clever never dare to act. ~ Do that which consists in taking no action, and order will prevail.

— [03c04t] R. L. Wing ~ Do not exalt the very gifted, And people will not contend. ~ Do not treasure goods that are hard to get, And people will not become thieves. ~ Do not focus on desires, And people's minds will not be confused. ~ Therefore, Evolved Individuals lead others by Opening their minds, ~ Reinforcing their centers, Relaxing their desires, Strengthening their characters. ~ Let the people always act without strategy or desire; ~ Let the clever not venture to act. ~ Act without action, And nothing is without order.

— [03c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ Refrain from exalting capable men, so that the people shall not compete. ~ Refrain from valuing rare goods, so that the people shall not steal. ~ Refrain from displaying anything which arouses desires, so that the people's hearts will not be disturbed. ~ Therefore the government of (under Heaven) the sage lies in: ~ Simplifying the people's minds, ~ Filling their bellies, ~ Weakening their ambitions, ~ Strengthening their bones, ~ And always keeping the people innocent of knowledge and desires. ~ (Thus) anyone who thinks himself clever is afraid of meddling. ~ By handling affairs on the principle of nonaction everyone will do well.

— [03c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ Not exalting the gifted prevents quarreling. ~ Not collecting treasures prevents stealing. ~ Not seeing desirable things prevents confusion of the heart. ~ The wise therefore rule by emptying hearts and stuffing bellies, ~ by weakening ambitions and strengthening bones. ~ If people lack knowledge and desire, then intellectuals will not try to interfere. ~ If nothing is done, then all will be well.

— [03c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ The wise ruler treats able men the same as he would treat others. ~ In so doing he avoids strife. ~ He plays down precious goods. ~ In so doing he discourages the emergence of thieves. ~ He makes an effort to stem the emergence of objects of desire. ~ In so doing he ensures that his citizens' minds will not be thrown into disarray. ~ Thus the Sage's governance satisfies the real needs of people, ~ while emptying their minds of desires; ~ Builds up the inner strengths (bones) of people ~ while weakening their vain ambitions. ~ He would preserve the natural simplicity of his citizens' minds and reduce their desires. ~ In so doing the clever people will learn that their contrivance will not work. ~ Because the Sage does nothing but following the law of nature ~ nothing will deviate from their natural and orderly places.

— [03c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ If you do not worship the nobility, there will be no fighting among people. ~ If you do not value scarce items, there will be no stealing. ~ If you do not show people temptations, their hearts will not be wild. ~ Therefore, the great men's ways of governing people were: ~ To remove their greed but fill their stomachs, ~ To weaken their ambition but strengthen their bodies. ~ Always keep them without knowledge and without desires, ~ And this prevents those clever manipulators from doing anything.

— [03c09t] Walter Gorn Old, RESTING THE PEOPLE ~ Avoiding distinctions of merit among the people prevents jealousy. ~ Not setting a value on rare things prevents theft. ~ Not seeking the things of sense keeps the mind in peace. ~ Thus the Sage governs by ridding the heart of its desires, giving the stomach due satisfaction, by resting the muscles and strengthening the bones, by preserving the world from a knowledge of evil and hence from its desire, and by making those who have such knowledge afraid to use it. ~ He acts by non-action, and by this he governs all.

— [03c10t] James Legge ~ Not to value and employ men of superior ability is the way to keep the people from rivalry among themselves; ~ not to prize articles which are difficult to procure is the way to keep them from becoming thieves; ~ not to show them what is likely to excite their desires is the way to keep their minds from disorder. ~ Therefore the sage, in the exercise of his government, empties their minds, fills their bellies, weakens their wills, and strengthens their bones. ~ He constantly (tries to) keep them without knowledge and without desire, and where there are those who have knowledge, to keep them from presuming to act (on it). ~ When there is this abstinence from action, good order is universal.

— [03c11t] David Hinton ~ Never bestow honors and people won't quarrel. ~ Never prize rare treasures and people won't steal. ~ Never flaunt alluring things and people won't be confused. ~ This is how a sage governs. ~ Fill bellies and empty minds, ~ strengthen bones and weaken ambition, ~ always keep the people from knowing and wanting, ~ then those who know are those who never presume to act. ~ If you're nothing doing what you do all things will be governed well.

— [03c12t] Chichung Huang ~ Do not exalt talents ~ So that the people will not contend; ~ Do not treasure goods hard to come by ~ So that the people will not steal; ~ Do not parade enviable things ~ So that the people will not rebel. ~ Hence, when the sage man ruled, ~ He emptied their minds, ~ Filled their stomachs, ~ Weakened their ambitions, ~ Strengthened their bones. ~ He constantly made the people ~ Uncrafty and unlustful, ~ And made them know not to be daring, ~ He acted not, that is all. ~ Thus, the state cannot but become well-ruled.

— [03c13t] Ellen M. — [03c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ [A Sage] would not exalt sages [with honor and benefit] for the purpose of preventing sapiens from [connivingly] contending [for the title out of vanity]; ~ [He] would not promote hard-to-get goods so that people will not [be tempted to] rob and steal; ~ [He] would keep sense-appealing objects out of people's sight so that people's hearts (minds) will not be confused. ~ Accordingly, ~ A Sage rules with the following measure: ~ Humbling people's heart [to weed out prejudices and conceit from their minds, so that they are prepared for the reception of true knowledge]; ~ Filling up people's stomachs; ~ Weakening people's [selfish and improper] desires; ~ Strengthening people's backbones [for the quest of truth]. ~ [A Sage] would constantly keep people away from [unaccountable] knowledge and [selfish] desires; ~ By doing so, sly and artful people will not dare to muddle through; ~ Practicing the principle of non-interference with utmost diligence will bring about orderly and even-handed management.

— [03c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ Do not exalt the talented, and the people cease from rivalry and contention. ~ Do not prize goods hard to get, and the people cease from robbing and stealing. ~ Do not display what is desirable, and the people's hearts remain undisturbed. ~ Therefore, the sage's way of governing is: emptying the mind, filling the belly, weakening the will, toughening the bones. ~ In this way he will cause the people to remain without knowledge and without desire, and prevent the knowing ones from any doing. ~ Doing "non-doing", and everything will be in order.

— [03c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ Do not glorify the elite, and people will not compete. ~ Do not treasure rare things, and people will not steal them. ~ Do not let people see things that induce desire, and people will not commit crimes. ~ Thus, ~ the sage will make people know less, but feed them well; ~ make them less ambitious, but physically strong; ~ make people less knowledgeable and have less desire. ~ This way, even knowledgeable people would not dare to have ambition. ~ Do not coerce people, and then they are not difficult to rule.

— [03c17t] Arthur Waley ~ If we stop looking for 'persons of superior morality' (hsien) to put in power, there will be no more jealousies among the people. ~ If we cease to set store by products that are hard to get, there will be no more thieves. ~ If the people never see such things as excite desire, their hearts will remain placid and undisturbed. ~ Therefore the Sage rules ~ By emptying their hearts ~ And filling their bellies, ~ Weakening their intelligence ~ And toughening their sinews ~ Ever striving to make the people knowledgeable and desireless. ~ Indeed he sees to it that if there be any who have knowledge, they dare not interfere. ~ Yet through his actionless activity all things are duly regulated.

— [03c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ Do not exalt the worthy [xian], and so keep the common folk from contention. ~ Do not value goods hard to get, and so stop the common folk from becoming thieves. ~ Do not let them see desirable things, and so spare the hearts/minds of the common folk from disorder. ~ Therefore the way the sage governs is to keep their hearts/minds empty and their bellies full. ~ He keeps their wills weak and their bones strong. ~ He always keeps the common folk free from the capacity for knowing and from feeling desire. ~ And prevents the knowledgeable from ever daring to act. ~ Because he acts without conscious effort, nothing remains ungoverned.

—[03c19t] Lin Yutang ~ ACTION WITHOUT DEEDS ~ Exalt not the wise, ~ So that the people shall not scheme and contend; ~ Prize not rare objects, ~ So that the people shall not steal; ~ Shut out from sight the things of desire, ~ So that the people's hearts shall not be disturbed. ~ Therefore in the government of the Sage: ~ He keeps empty their hearts, ~ Makes full their bellies, ~ Discourages their ambitions, ~ Strengthens their frames; ~ So that the people may be innocent of knowledge and desires, ~ And the cunning ones shall not presume to interfere. ~ By action without deeds ~ May all live in peace.

—[03c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ Not exalting men of worth prevents the people from competing; ~ Not putting high value on rare goods prevents the people from being bandits; ~ Not displaying objects of desire prevents the people from being disorderly. ~ For these reasons, ~ The sage, in ruling, ~ hollows their hearts, ~ stuffs their stomachs, ~ weakens their wills, ~ builds up their bones, ~ Always causing the people to be without knowledge and desire. ~ He ensures that the knowledgeable dare not be hostile, ~ and that is all. ~ Thus, ~ His rule is universal.

—[03c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ Not exalting the talented prevents rivalry. ~ Not valuing goods that are hard to obtain prevents stealing. ~ Not displaying desirable things prevents confusion of the heart. ~ Therefore, ~ the True Person governs by ~ emptying the heart of desire ~ and filling the belly with food, ~ weakening ambitions ~ and strengthening bones. ~ If the people are simple and free from desire, ~ then the clever ones never dare to interfere. ~ Practice action without striving and all will be in order.

—[03c22t] David H. Li ~ Where admiration is not bestowed upon the wise, ~ the populace will not compete for recognition. ~ Where premium is not placed on rare goods, ~ the populace will not engage in robbery. ~ Where desirable items are not on display, ~ the populace will not be tempted. ~ Thus, ~ the sage governs by cleansing [the populace's] hearts, ~ filling their stomachs, ~ taming their will, ~ and strengthening their bodies ~ - to induce the populace, in time, not to indulge in knowledge nor to cultivate avarice. ~ So prepared, those with wisdom dare not offer schemes, and laissez-faire governance follows. ~ With that, no affair is beyond governance.

—[03c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ When the learned is not over esteemed, ~ There will not be unnecessary competition amongst people. ~ When the treasure is not over valued, ~ There will not be acts of stealing amongst people. ~ When we do not show people things that stir up their wants, ~ Their minds will not be disturbed. ~ Therefore, the sage governs the people by ~ Restoring balance in value and worth, through ~ Emptying people's minds and filling their essence, ~ Weakening their ambition and strengthening their character, ~ Freeing them from knowledge and wants, and ~ Keeping the learned from over exercising their authority. ~ Act in accordance with the principle of non-action - of eternal balance, ~ Then order will arise of itself.

—[03c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ If the exalted are not praised, the humble will not put on airs. ~ When rare things are not assigned a value, the thief has no reason to steal them. ~ When the desired object is not shown, the heart has no reason to covet it. ~ Therefore the sage says: ~ By emptying their hearts ~ By filling their stomachs ~ By weakening their ambition ~ By strengthening their bones, ~ He prevents them from knowing what evil is and yearning for good, and this also prevents the knowledgeable ones from acting according to their knowledge. ~ He governs by non-action, ~ And therefore, there is nothing that cannot be done. ~ Non-quiet and non-order in the world are caused by ambition to attain the unattainable, ~ and by plotting to go from the undesired to the desired. ~ If people would obey the laws of the world the way the sage does, there would always be balance between body and soul, and peace and serenity would abound in the world.

—[03c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ If the sage refuses to be proud ~ Then people won't compete for his attention; ~ If the sage does not buy treasures ~ Then the people won't want to steal them; ~ If the sage governs with vision ~ Then his people will not go wrong. ~ So in his wisdom, he restrains himself: ~ - by not being greedy for food ~ - by not dominating the State ~ - by keeping himself healthy and fit. ~ The sage always makes sure that the people don't know what he's done, so they never want to be in control - and are never driven by ambition. ~ He keeps them in truth like this acting invisibly. ~ You see, if there is nothing to fight for ~ then there is nothing that can break the flow.

—[03c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ Keep the people from contention by disregarding men of abilities; ~ Keep the people from theft by not valuing rare goods; ~ Keep the people from the disturbed state of mind by concealing what is desirable. ~ That is why in governing the people ~ The sage simplifies their minds but fills up their stomachs; ~ weakens their wills, but strengthens their bones. ~ By keeping the people from knowledge and desires, ~ He disables wise men from taking any active action. ~ Act in accordance with this principle of inaction ~ And the world will be kept in order everywhere.

—[03c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ Not to value one's own virtues is the way to restrain people from striving for wealth. ~ Not to value the precious is the way to restrain people from theft. ~ Not to see the desirable is the way to restrain confusion in the mind. ~ Therefore the wise way to rule is: ~ not to give importance to oneself, ~ or try to enrich one's spirit and virtue; ~ not to be inordinately proud of one's ability, ~ or try to make unceasing efforts to improve oneself. ~ Let the people stay free from desire and knowledge in order to avoid the pitfalls that knowledge may bring. ~ Rule by doing nothing, then everything will be as it should.

—[03c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ Worship no sage, ~ And people will not struggle for vanity. ~ Treasure no rare goods, ~ And people will not steal them. ~ Dangle no tantalizer, ~ And people will not be confused in mind and will. ~ Therefore, ~ The wise politics fills the stomach rather than the mind, ~ Strengthens the bones and muscles rather than the will, ~ And enables people to be rather than to desire to be. ~ Indeed, it is through doing nothing misleading ~ That the greatest political success can be achieved.

—[03c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ Acting Without The Intent To Control Fate ~ Lao Tze says, ~ When I don't promote those men of high character to the position of authority and give them gifts, then people will not strive to follow their examples. ~ When I don't value those things which are difficult to attain, then people will be kept from becoming thieves. ~ When I don't let people see things which will excite evil desires, their minds will be kept from becoming disordered. ~ Therefore, when a sage is in charge of the government, he prefers to humble people's minds, feed their stomachs, weaken their ambitions, and make their frames strong. ~ He constantly keeps them from knowledge and from desire, and those who have knowledge would not presume to act against this rule. ~ When practicing acting without the intent to control fate, there is no evil which can't be cured.

—[03c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ Not exalting the worthy keeps the people from emulation. ~ Not valuing rare things keeps them from theft. ~ Not showing what is desirable keeps their hearts from confusion. ~ Therefore the Sage rules ~ By emptying their hearts, ~ Filling their stomachs, ~ Weakening their ambitions ~ And strengthening their bones. ~ He always keeps them from knowing what is evil and desiring what is good; thus he gives the crafty ones no chance to act. ~ He governs by non-action; consequently there is nothing un-governed.

—[03c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ Exalt not the worthy, so that the people will not fight. ~ Prize not the rare treasure, so that they will not steal. ~ Exhibit not the desirable, so that their hearts will not be distracted. ~ Therefore in governing, the Sage ~ empties the people's hearts and fills their stomachs, ~ weakens their will and strengthens their bones. ~ He always keeps them void of knowledge and desire, so that those who know will not dare to act. ~ Acting through inaction, he leaves nothing ungoverned.

— [03c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ Not promoting the wise and worthy, ~ brings it about that the people are not contentious. ~ Not prizing goods hard to come by, ~ brings it about that the people do not become thieves. ~ Not paying attention to the desirable, ~ brings it about that the people's minds do not become disordered. ~ And so, the government of the Wise Person: ~ Empty their minds, fill their bellies, ~ weaken their ambitions, strengthen their bones. ~ Always bring it about that the people ~ are without knowledge and without desires. ~ Bring it about that the clever ones ~ do not presume to set about doing, ~ Do Not Doing, ~ and nothing will be left un-governed.

— [03c33t] Cheng Lin ~ When talents are not esteemed, men will not strive to excel one another. ~ When wealth is not treasured, men will not attempt to rob one another. ~ When the objects of sensual satisfaction disappear, men's minds are free from distraction and confusion. ~ Wherefore the Sage, as regards government, wishes only that it will enable men to be humble at heart, well-fed in body, free from sensuous desires, and strong in physique. ~ When the people are free of cunning, desires, and artifice, there must be good order.

— [03c34t] Yi Wu ~ [The ruler] not exalting talent, the people will not compete; ~ [The ruler] not valuing rare goods, the people will not steal; ~ [The ruler] not displaying desirable things, the people's hearts will not be disturbed. ~ Therefore, the sage's government: ~ empties their hearts, ~ fills their bellies, ~ weakens their wills, ~ strengthens their bones. ~ He always causes the people to have no knowledge and no desires ~ And causes those who are clever to not dare to act. ~ Acting by non-action, nothing will not be governed well.

— [03c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ Do not venerate the intelligentsia, ~ So that people will not rival. ~ Do not value rare objects, ~ So that people will not steal. ~ Do not display any desirable goods, ~ So that people will not be tempted. ~ Therefore, the sage rules the people by ~ Emptying their hearts, filling their stomachs, ~ Diminishing their desires and strengthening their bones. ~ He constantly makes people devoid of cunning and ambition, ~ So much so that even a rabid rabble-rouser among them ~ Is not able to stir up any trouble. ~ By practising non-action, ~ The rule will be peaceful.

— [03c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ When the superior are not exalted, envy will not be aroused. ~ Then there will be no rivalry or contention among people. ~ When wealth is not treasured, desire for possessions will not be stirred up. ~ Then people will not be tempted to rob one another. ~ By shutting that which is desirable out of sight, the heart will remain undisturbed. ~ Then there will be no confusion in the hearts of people. ~ The guidance of the Universal One of natural wholeness is therefore: ~ Empty your mind. ~ Enjoy good health. ~ Weaken your ambitions. ~ Strengthen your essence. ~ When people are free from cunning, desire, and artifice, everything will be well-ordered of its own accord.

— [03c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ If no one esteems the best, men will be free from contention. ~ If no one values the precious, men will be free from illegal gain. ~ If men see nothing to desire, their minds will be free from confusion. ~ Therefore, the wise guides men by relaxing their minds and keeping their bellies firm; ~ By reducing their wills and letting their physiques become strong. ~ He always frees men from the search for knowing and demanding. ~ This means that the knower dares not act for the known. ~ When action is through non-action, no one is uncultivated.

— [03c38t] Henry Wei ~ Peace to the People ~ An Min ~ Do not exalt the worthy, ~ So that the people will not contend. ~ Do not treasure hard-to-get objects, ~ So that the people will not become thieves. ~ Keep what is desirable out of sight, ~ So that their heart will not get excited. ~ Therefore, in ruling the people the Sage ~ Empties their hearts, ~ Fills their bellies, ~ Weakens their aspirations, ~ Strengthens their bones. ~ He always makes them guileless and desireless, ~ And makes the guileful ones afraid to interfere. ~ Practice non-interference, ~ And there will never be any misrule.

— [03c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ If you do not exalt the worthy, ~ You will keep the people from contention. ~ If you do not treasure rare goods, ~ You will keep them from stealing. ~ If you do not exhibit things that may arouse their desire, ~ You will keep their minds in peace. ~ Therefore the sage, in governing the people, ~ Makes their minds empty, ~ Their stomachs full, ~ Their ambitions weak, ~ Their bones strong.

— [03c40t] Tao Huang ~ Do not exalt intelligence and people will not compete; ~ Do not value rare goods and people will not steal; ~ Do not display for public view and people will not desire. ~ So the sage's governing methods are: ~ Emptying the mind, ~ Vitalizing the stomach, ~ Softening the will, ~ Strengthening the character. ~ This always makes people not know and not desire. ~ This always makes the knower dare not act. ~ Therefore, nothing is beyond ruling.

— [03c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ Promote no exalted persons, thus enabling the people to cease competition. ~ Prize no rare goods, thus enabling the people to cease robbery. ~ Don't display desirable things. ~ Let people's minds be undisturbed. ~ A Sage ruler enabled them to be tranquil in their hearts; ~ be filled in their stomachs; ~ be weakened in their ambitions; ~ be strengthened in their will. ~ He made them less intelligent and less desirous. ~ If intelligent people are made afraid of doing wrong, then no one in the world can not be governed.

— [03c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ Do not exalt the worthy, so that the people shall not compete. ~ Do not value rare treasures, so that the people shall not steal. ~ Do not display objects of desire, so that the people's hearts shall not be disturbed. ~ Therefore in the government of the sage, ~ He keeps their hearts vacuous, ~ Fills their bellies, ~ Weakens their ambitions, ~ And strengthens their bones. ~ He always causes his people to be without knowledge (cunning) or desire, ~ And the crafty to be afraid to act. ~ By acting without action, all things will be in order.

— [04c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ Empty of all doctrines, ~ The Tao is wisdom eternally inexhaustible. ~ Fathomless for the mere intellect, ~ The Tao is the law wherewith all things come into being. ~ It blunts the edges of the intellect, ~ Untangles the knots of the mind, ~ Softens the glare of thinking, ~ And settles the dust of thought. ~ Transparent yet invisible, ~ The Tao exists like deep pellucid water. ~ Its origin is unknown, ~ For it existed before Heaven and Earth.

— [04c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ The Tao, if you examine it, will always be empty and will never be full. ~ In its infinite emptiness lies the source of all things, ~ It will remain in its depths forever. ~ I don't know whose seed it is, ~ But it looks like the predecessor of the universe itself.

— [04c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ The Tao pours out everything into life - ~ it is a cornucopia that never runs dry. ~ It is the deep source of everything - ~ it is nothing, and yet in everything. ~ It smooths round sharpness and untangles the knots. ~ It glows like the lamp that draws the moth ... ~ Tao exists, Tao is ~ but where It came from I do not know. ~ It has been shaping things from before the First Being, ~ from the before the Beginning of Time.

— [04c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ The Tao is invisibly empty, ~ But its use is extremely plentiful. ~ It is profound like the originator of all things. ~ It shows no sharpness, ~ stays away from entanglements, ~ glows with veiled radiance, ~ mingles with dust. ~ It is formless and invisible, but indeed exists. ~ I do not know where it comes, ~ It seems to have appeared before the existence of God.

— [04c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ The Tao is based on harmony between emptiness and abundance. ~ It is the deep source of the myriad creatures. ~ It softens their sharpness. ~ It releases their confusion. ~ It lessens their lustre. ~ It merges with their dust. ~ The Tao is so clear and so transparent that it is nearly invisible, nearly formless; ~ no one can know its origin, ~ for it came before all creation.

— [04c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ The Way is open for endless use ~ And will never fill up. ~ Like an endless valley ~ It blunts the sharpness, ~ Dissolves the currents, ~ Softens the intense light, ~ Assimilates all substances. ~ Is it being or non-being? ~ I don't know which son takes after which father.

— [04c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ The Character Of The Tao ~ Lao Tze says, ~ The Tao in the void state works on everything. ~ It guards against fullness. ~ Its depth is unfathomable, as if it were the honored ancestor of all things. ~ It blunts the sharp points, sets in order the tangles, tempers the light, and agrees with the obscurity of others. ~ How pure and still the Tao is, as if it would ever stand. ~ I do not know its origin, and it seems to have existed before the coming of all gods.

— [04c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ Tao, when put in use for its hollowness, is not likely to be filled. ~ In its profundity it seems to be the origin of all things. ~ In its depth it seems ever to remain. ~ I do not know whose offspring it is; ~ But it looks like the predecessor of Nature.

— [04c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ Tao is empty, used yet never filled. ~ It is deep, like the forefather of all things. ~ It dulls sharpness, and sorts tangles, ~ Blends with the light, becoming one with the dust. ~ So serene, as if it hardly existed. ~ I do not know whose son it is. ~ It seems to have preceded God.

— [04c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ Tao being Empty, ~ it seems one who uses it will lack solidity. ~ An abyss, ~ it seems something like the ancestor of the thousands of things. ~ It dampens the passion, ~ it unties the tangles, ~ it makes the flashing things harmonious, ~ it makes the dust merge together. ~ Deep, ~ it is perhaps like an enduring something. ~ I don't know of anything whose offspring it might be - ~ it appears to precede God.

— [04c33t] Cheng Lin ~ Truth may appear hollow, but its usefulness is inexhaustible. ~ It is so profound that it comprehends all things. ~ It is so vague that its very existence may seem doubtful. ~ I do not know its origin, but I believe that its existence preceded that of the gods.

— [04c34t] Yi Wu ~ The Way appears empty; ~ in use, it may not overflow. ~ Fathomless, it seems to be the ancestor of all things. ~ It blunts its own sharpness, ~ unties its own tangles, ~ tempers its own brightness, ~ unites itself with dust. ~ Deep but clear, it seems to exist and not to exist. ~ I do not know whose son it is. ~ It symbolizes that which precedes the Creator.

— [04c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ Dao is akin to an empty vessel. ~ It is inexhaustible, as if the vessel can never be filled completely. ~ So deep and unfathomable, ~ It must be from where all things come forth. ~ Dao blunts its own sharpness, ~ Simplifies its own complexity, ~ Attenuates its own brilliance, ~ And mingles with the dirt. ~ Vast and profound, it appears that it could go on forever. ~ I do not know whose progeny it is. ~ It was there before the existence of the creator.

— [04c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ The subtle Way of the universe appears to lack strength, ~ yet its power is inexhaustible. ~ Fathomless, it could be the origin of all things. ~ It has no sharpness, ~ yet it rounds off all sharp edges. ~ It has no form, ~ yet it unties all tangles. ~ It has no glare, ~ yet it merges all lights. ~ It harmonizes all things and unites them as one integral whole. ~ It seems so obscure, ~ yet it is the Ultimate Clarity. ~ Whose offspring it is can never be known. ~ It is that which existed before any divinity.

— [04c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ Tao functions through its nothingness. ~ And can not be conceived of as full of things. ~ Profound indeed, it is the model of all things. ~ Dulling its sharpness, ~ Releasing its entanglements, ~ Tempering its light, and ~ Unifying with the earth, ~ Clearly, indeed, it remains. ~ I do not know who created it, ~ But it is likely that it existed prior to God.

— [04c38t] Henry Wei ~ Source Non-Existent ~ Wu Yuan ~ Tao is hollow, yet its utility ~ Seems unlikely to reach the limit. ~ Profound indeed it is; ~ It seems to be the fount of all things. ~ It blunts the sharp; ~ It unravels the tangled; ~ It harmonizes with the light; ~ It mingles with the dust. ~ Calm like a deep pool it seems to remain. ~ I do not know whose son it is. ~ It apparently antecedes the Creator.

— [04c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ Tao is empty, ~ You may use it but never fill it. ~ Fathomless, it is like the progenitor of the ten thousand things. ~ [It] blunts the sharpness, ~ Unravels the tangles, ~ Softens the brilliance, ~ Identifies with the dust. ~ Deep and still, it seems as though existing forever. ~ I don't know whose son it is. ~ It bears the image of God's forefather.

— [04c40t] Tao Huang ~ Tao functions in empty harmony. ~ When used, it remains full. ~ For sure, this source is the very ancestor of the myriad things. ~ Blunting the sharp edges, ~ Unraveling the tangles, ~ Husbanding into the light, ~ Being as ordinary as the dust. ~ Ah! Limpid, it seems to exist forever. ~ I do not know whose son it is, ~ This who is exceeding the Heavenly Emperor.

— [04c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ Dao is charged to produce these gases into orderly use. ~ The eternal capacity will never overflow. ~ Profoundly! ~ It is the ancestor of All Things! ~ It blunts all sharpness; ~ it settles all disputes; ~ it harmonizes all lights and it unites all lands. ~ The clear mind will be constantly receptive. ~ We do not know whose descent it is. ~ It existed before all phenomena and all lives.

— [04c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ Tao is empty (like a bowl). ~ It may be used but its capacity is never exhausted. ~ It is bottomless, perhaps the ancestor of all things. ~ It blunts its sharpness. ~ It unties its tangles. ~ It softens its light. ~ It becomes one with the dusty world. ~ Deep and still, it appears to exist forever. ~ I do not know whose son it is. ~ It seems to have existed before the Lord.

— [05c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ Heaven and earth are ruthless; ~ They see the ten thousand things as dummies. ~ The wise are ruthless; ~ They see the people as dummies. ~ The space between heaven and earth is like a bellows. ~ The shape changes but not the form; ~ The more it moves, the more it yields. ~ More words count less. ~ Hold fast to the center.

— [05c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ Heaven and earth are unkind. ~ They treat everything like the straw dogs used in sacrifice. ~ The Sages too are unkind. ~ In their eyes everyone is no different from a straw dog. ~ Within the bounds of Heaven and Earth, ~ There is plenty of space, ~ Much like there is space within a bellows. ~ Hollow but unyielding is this space. ~ The more you work on it, ~ The more air comes out. ~ Words are superfluous and soon reach their limits. ~ It is far better to adhere to impartiality and the middle way.

— [05c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ Nature is not charitable; it neglects everything like a used grass-dog after sacrifice. ~ Great men were not charitable; they neglected people like a used grass-dog after sacrifice. ~ Between heaven and earth, is it not like a pair of bellows? ~ Empty, but always able to produce wind; the more you push, the more wind comes out. ~ Talking too much will lead to embarrassment: be like the bellows and keep the wind inside.

— [05c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE VALUE OF NOTHING ~ Neither Heaven nor Earth has any predilections; they regard all persons and things as sacrificial images. ~ The wise man knows no distinctions; he beholds all men as things made for holy uses. ~ The celestial space is like unto bellows - though containing nothing that is solid, it does not at any time collapse; and the more it is set in motion, the more does it produce. ~ The inflated man, however, is soon exhausted. ~ Than self-restraint there is nothing better.

— [05c10t] James Legge ~ Heaven and earth do not act from (the impulse of) any wish to be benevolent; ~ they deal with all things as the dogs of grass are dealt with. ~ The sages do not act from (any wish to be) benevolent; ~ they deal with the people as the dogs of grass are dealt with. ~ May not the space between heaven and earth be compared to a bellows? ~ 'Tis emptied, yet it loses not its power; ~ 'Tis moved again, and sends forth air the more. ~ Much speech to swift exhaustion lead we see; ~ Your inner being guard, and keep it free.

— [05c11t] David Hinton ~ Heaven and earth are Inhumane: ~ they use the ten thousand things like straw dogs. ~ And the sage too is Inhumane: ~ he uses the hundred-fold people like straw dogs. ~ Is all heaven and earth ~ really so much like a bellows-chamber? ~ It's empty but never contracts, ~ just keeps bringing forth more and more. ~ Words go on failing and failing, nothing like abiding in its midst.

— [05c12t] Chichung Huang ~ Heaven and earth are unfeeling, ~ Treating the ten thousand things like straw and dogs; ~ The sage man was unfeeling, ~ Treating the hundred family names like straw and dogs. ~ The space between heaven and earth - ~ Is it not like a bellows? ~ Empty yet inexhaustible. ~ The more it operates, the more it emits. ~ Much learning brings a quick end. ~ Better adhere to the middle.

— [05c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ Heaven and earth are not humane (jen), ~ They treat the ten thousand beings as straw dogs (ch'u kou). ~ The sage is not humane (jen), ~ He treats the hundred families as straw dogs (ch'u kou). ~ Between heaven and earth, ~ How like a bellows (t'o yo) it is! ~ Empty and yet inexhaustible, ~ Moving and yet it pours out ever more. ~ By many words one's reckoning (shu) is exhausted. ~ It is better to abide by the center (shou chung).

—[05c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ Heaven-and-Earth are not compassionate; ~ They created and destroyed myriad things and creatures [indiscriminately], in the same manner people made straw-dogs but routinely destroy them for ritual sacrifices [because they had no feeling attached to their destruction]; ~ Most of [so-called] sages (sapients) are not compassionate either; ~ They, too, treated people [without any feeling] as though they were [as cheap as] ritually disposable straw-dogs. ~ [The working of Tao] between Heaven and Earth is similar to the activities within a bellows. ~ A bellows is empty inside, yet a stream of forceful and inexhaustible air can be generated from within [the void]; ~ The more frequently the piston rod is worked up, the more forceful the stream of air is blown out [from the empty tube]. ~ Verbosity exhausts a person of his resources; ~ It is better to keep quiet and collect oneself and concentrate on individual self's inward serenity.

—[05c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ Heaven and Earth are not sentimental; they treat all things as straw-dogs. ~ The sage is not sentimental; he treats all his people as straw-dogs. ~ Between Heaven and Earth, there seems to be a bellows: it is empty, and yet it is inexhaustible; the more it works, the more it produces. ~ No amount of words can fathom it: Better look for it in the middle.

—[05c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ Heaven and earth have no bias; they treat everything as if they are the straw dogs used in ritual; ~ Rulers have no biases; they treat citizens as if they are the straw dogs. ~ The world is like the bellows. ~ When it is static, its ability to blow is not lost. ~ When it is moving, it generates more and more wind. ~ To go extreme is not as good as to stay normal.

—[05c17t] Arthur Waley ~ Heaven and Earth are ruthless; ~ To them the Ten Thousand Things are but as straw dogs. ~ The Sage too is ruthless; ~ To him the people are but as straw dogs. ~ Yet Heaven and Earth and all that lies between ~ Is like a bellows ~ In that it is empty, but gives a supply that never fails. ~ Work it, and more comes out. ~ Whereas the force of words is soon spent. ~ Far better is it to keep what is in the heart.

—[05c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ Heaven and Earth are not benevolent and treat the myriad things as straw dogs ~ The sage is not benevolent and treats the common folk as straw dogs. ~ The space between Heaven and Earth, is it not just like a bellows or a mouth organ! ~ Empty, it can never be used up. ~ Active, it produces all the more. ~ Many words lead to quick exhaustion; better to maintain emptiness within.

—[05c19t] Lin Yutang ~ NATURE ~ Nature is unkind: ~ It treats the creation like sacrificial straw-dogs. ~ The Sage is unkind: ~ He treats the people like sacrificial straw-dogs. ~ How the universe is like a bellows! ~ Empty, yet it gives a supply that never fails; ~ The more it is worked, the more it brings forth. ~ By many words is wit exhausted. ~ Rather, therefore, hold to the core.

—[05c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ Heaven and earth are inhumane; ~ they view the myriad creatures as straw dogs. ~ The sage is inhumane; ~ he views the common people as straw dogs. ~ The space between heaven and earth, how like a bellows it is! ~ Empty but never exhausted, ~ The more it pumps, the more comes out. ~ Hearing too much leads to utter exhaustion; ~ Better to remain in the center.

—[05c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ Heaven and earth are not moved by offerings of straw-dogs. ~ The True Person is not moved by offerings of straw-dogs. ~ The space between heaven and earth is like a bellows. ~ It is empty and yet never exhausted. ~ The more it works the more comes out. ~ Many words lead to exhaustion. ~ Better to hold fast to your center.

—[05c22t] David H. Li ~ The universe is ignoble; it regards myriad matters as straw dogs. ~ The sage is ignoble; he/she regards the gentry as straw dogs. ~ Is the universe not a wind tunnel? ~ Inexhaustible at rest; dynamic at its fiercest. ~ More rules yield faster demise. ~ Laissez-faire is a better device.

—[05c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ The Kosmos is not humane; ~ Impartially, it treats all things as transitory. ~ The sage is not humane; ~ Impartially, he treats all people as transitory. ~ Manifesting the Tao Eternal, ~ The kosmic space is like a bellows. ~ Empty, yet inexhaustible, ~ The more one activates it, the more it generates. ~ Being full, too many words lead one nowhere; ~ Impartially, keep to the silent core of emptiness.

—[05c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ Heaven and earth do not own all things, ~ For them, things are like straw dogs. ~ The sage does not own his words, ~ For him, all people are like straw dogs. ~ The hollow space that lies between heaven and earth is like the blacksmith's bellows. ~ Hollow in appearance, nothing is lacking, ~ And if it moves, a lot of what is in it moves. ~ The person who speaks a lot will be exhausted. ~ It would be better for him to keep his words to himself.

—[05c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ Heaven and earth are not like humans. ~ The Tao does not act like a human. ~ They don't expect to be thanked for making life, ~ so they view it without expectation. ~ Heaven and earth are like a pair of bellows: ~ they are empty, and yet they can never be exhausted. ~ Work them, and they produce more and more ~ - there's too much talking, it's really better to stay quiet. ~ There are too many laws, when all you have to do is to hold on to the centre.

—[05c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ Heaven and earth are not merciful, ~ They treat all things as straw dogs; ~ The sage is not merciful, ~ He treats the people as straw dogs. ~ Does not the space between heaven and earth form like a bellows? ~ It is empty but (the air in it) can never be exhausted; ~ The more air it expels, the more comes out. ~ That is why too many government decrees only result in more failures. ~ It is better, therefore, to hold fast to moderation and the void.

—[05c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ Heaven and Earth treat all creatures as they treat a straw dog: ~ with great kindness. ~ The sage treats the people as he treats a straw dog: ~ with great kindness. ~ Between Heaven and Earth there is a big void; ~ it is like a bag without a seam, ~ it is like the hole in a bamboo flute. ~ This void cannot be overpowered: ~ the more it moves, the more it yields. ~ Many words lead to less understanding, therefore it is best to guard the void.

—[05c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ The universe benefits none ~ And takes every being for a straw dog. ~ The wise king benefits none ~ And takes all people for nothing dearer. ~ Should we say that ~ It is just like bellows between Heaven and Earth? ~ It is empty but well propped up, ~ And any stir in it will cause spilling. ~ After all moralization and calculation, ~ It is a better strategy to keep that bellows empty.

—[05c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ The Heaven And The Earth Are Not Benevolent ~ Lao Tze says, ~ When Heaven and Earth proceed their works, they do not consider benevolence, ~ they regard all things as straw-made dogs. ~ When the sage proceeds his work, he does not consider benevolence, ~ he regards all people as straw-made dogs. ~ Between Heaven and Earth, space functions like a blacksmith's bellow. ~ It is void, but is not out of function. ~ Once it is set in motion, a continuous stream of production will issue from it. ~ And the people who like to talk face the same consequence; ~ the more they talk, the more shortage others will know. ~ There is no better way than to model after the Tao, and keep oneself in the void state also.

—[05c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ Heaven and earth do not own their benevolence; ~ To them all things are straw-dogs. ~ The Sage does not own his benevolence; ~ To him the people are straw-dogs. ~ The space between heaven and earth is like a (blacksmith's) bellows. ~ Hollow as it seems, nothing is lacking. ~ If it is moved, more will it bring forth. ~ He who talks more is sooner exhausted. ~ It is better to keep what is within himself.

— [05c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ Without kindness heaven and earth treat all things as straw dogs. ~ Without kindness the Sage treats the people as straw dogs. ~ The space between heaven and earth is a vacuum like a bellows, ~ Emptied, but inexhaustible. ~ The more it moves, the more it yields. ~ Too much talk often brings exhaustion. ~ Is it not better to keep to the middle path?

— [05c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ "Heaven and Earth are not Good, they treat the thousands of things like straw dogs. ~ The Wise Person is not Good, he treats the hundred clans like straw dogs." ~ The space between heaven and earth ~ isn't it like a bellows? ~ Empty, but not shrivelled up, ~ set it in motion and always more comes out. ~ Much talking, quickly exhausted. ~ It can't compare to watching over what is inside.

— [05c33t] Cheng Lin ~ The universe is a-moral, and it regards all things as mere straw-dogs. ~ The Sage is a-moral, and he regards all men as mere straw-dogs. ~ The whole universe may be compared to a bellows. ~ It is hollow, but not empty. ~ It is moving and renewing without cease. ~ The more volubly one talks, the quicker will come his exhaustion. ~ It is best to abide by the old traditions.

— [05c34t] Yi Wu ~ Heaven and Earth have no humanity; ~ They regard all things as straw-dogs. ~ The sage has no humanity; ~ He regards the people as straw-dogs. ~ Between Heaven and Earth, it is like a bellows or a flute! ~ Empty, but not exhausted; ~ With movement, more comes out. ~ Too much talk always exhausts; ~ It is better to keep to the inside.

— [05c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ Nature is impartial; ~ It treats everything like sacrificial straw dogs. ~ The sage is also indifferent; ~ He regards everyone as sacrificial straw dogs. ~ The universe is just like a bellows. ~ Though empty and intangible, it is never spent. ~ The more you use it, the more briskly it carries on. ~ But to argue excessively will definitely come to a dead end. ~ It is best to maintain the central core of human nature.

— [05c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ The subtle virtue of the universe is wholeness. ~ It regards all things as equal. ~ The virtue of the sage is wholeness. ~ He too regards all things as equal. ~ The universe may be compared to a bellows. ~ It is empty, yet it never fails to generate its products. ~ The more it moves, the more it brings forth. ~ Many words lead one nowhere. ~ Many pursuits in different directions bring only exhaustion. ~ Rather, embrace the subtle essence within.

— [05c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ Heaven and earth are not benevolent: ~ They treat ten thousand things indifferently. ~ The wise is not benevolent: ~ He treats men indifferently. ~ The entire universe is basically void, like a bellows: ~ When it is in non-action, it does not lack anything; ~ When it is in action, it is even more productive. ~ Debating with words leads to limitations. ~ Therefore, nothing is better than to remain in the state before things are stirred.

— [05c38t] Henry Wei ~ The Utility of Hollowness ~ Hsu Yung ~ Heaven and Earth are not kindly; ~ They equate the ten thousand things with straw dogs. ~ The Sage is not kindly; ~ He equates the people with straw dogs. ~ The space between Heaven and Earth, ~ Is it not like a bellows? ~ It is hollow, yet it never fails to supply. ~ The more it is worked, the more it gives forth. ~ Much talk often leads to exhaustion. ~ Better concentrate on the center.

— [05c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ Heaven and Earth are not humane: ~ They treat the ten thousand things as straw dogs. ~ The sage is not humane: ~ He treats the people as straw dogs. ~ The space between Heaven and Earth - ~ Is it not as though it were a bellows? ~ It is empty, yet inexhaustible. ~ Ever active, it gives off more and more. ~ Much talk inevitably leads to predicament. ~ It is better to hold on to the void.

— [05c40t] Tao Huang ~ Nature has no benevolence, ~ It treats all things like strawdogs; ~ The sage has no benevolence, ~ He treats his people like strawdogs. ~ Between heaven and earth it seems like a bellows: ~

Empty, yet inexhaustible, ~ The stronger it is activated, the greater the output. ~ Being overly informed leads to exhaustion, ~ Better to be centered.

— [05c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ Heaven and earth are not benevolent because they make All Things sacrificial victims. ~ Sage rulers were not benevolent because they punished the people as sacrificial victims. ~ Between the heavens and the earth there is nothing but an empty space! ~ It may be compared to a bellow or pocket of vast capacity. ~ Humbly modest but not submissive. ~ The more it moves, changes, the more nearly perfect it becomes. ~ Excess means Extreme. ~ It is better to hold fast to perfection.

— [05c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ Heaven and Earth are not humane. ~ They regard all things as straw dogs. ~ The sage is not humane. ~ He regards all people as straw dogs. ~ How Heaven and Earth are like a bellows! ~ While vacuous, it is never exhausted. ~ When active, it produces even more. ~ Much talk will of course come to a dead end. ~ It is better to keep to the center.

—[07c22t] David H. Li ~ The cosmos is long. ~ The earth is lasting. ~ The reason the cosmos is long and the earth lasting is that they exist not for self-perpetuation. ~ Unconcerned with self-perpetuation, they perpetuate. ~ Thus, the sage, ~ by queuing himself/herself behind others, ends in being ahead; ~ by being unconcerned, endures. ~ Is it not so that the sage, without self-interest, satisfies his/her self-interest?

—[07c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ Heaven is eternal and earth everlasting. ~ They thus endure forever, ~ Because they exist not for themselves ~ But for the whole, selflessly. ~ Whereby the sage, ~ Existing selflessly for the whole, ~ Puts himself behind and thereby finds himself foremost, ~ Holds himself outside and thereby finds himself inmost. ~ He has no self apart from the whole, ~ Wherefore he realizes the self that is the whole.

—[07c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ Heaven and earth will exist forever. ~ The reason they exist forever is that they do not live for themselves and they do not live because of themselves. ~ Therefore they live forever. ~ In the same way, the sage stays behind everything and finds himself in front of everything, he is not himself and he is preserved forever. ~ Since he has no self-interest, his self-interest can realize itself. ~ Even though it looks like heaven and earth give life to all creatures, they do not live in order to preserve their own existence, and therefore they live forever and never die. ~ In his rule over the kingdom, the sage does everything for people, ignoring his personal goals, and ultimately earns glory, honor, and everything he wanted for himself.

—[07c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ Heaven and earth are enduring. ~ The universe can live for ever, because it does not live for itself. ~ And so both last - outliving themselves. ~ The sage guides his people by putting himself last. ~ Desiring nothing for himself, ~ he knows how to channel desires. ~ And is it not because he wants nothing that he is able to achieve everything?

—[07c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ Heaven and earth exist for ever. ~ This eternal existence is justified by the fact ~ That they do not exist for themselves. ~ Thus they enjoy an eternal life. ~ The sage similarly puts himself behind others, ~ Yet it turns out that he comes before others; ~ He completely disregards his own existence, ~ And yet it turns out that his existence is preserved.

—[07c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ Heaven and Earth are enduring only because they have no ego; ~ therefore they can live for ever. ~ The sage does not try to be the first, and does not fight for fame. ~ Only through unselfishness can he achieve fulfillment.

—[07c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ The heaven lasts. ~ The earth lasts. ~ They last because they do not live to last. ~ The wise person lags behind in struggles for benefits ~ And finally benefits more than others; ~ The wise person does not live for himself, ~ And is therefore able to enjoy longevity. ~ Isn't it one's thorough selflessness ~ That makes one seem to be most successfully selfish?

—[07c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ Being Selfless Can Fulfill The Selfishness ~ Lao Tze says, ~ The Heaven has endured a long existence, so has the Earth. ~ The reason they can last so long is that they never go out of their way to seek life, hence they can be everlasting. ~ The sage understood this secret, put himself last, and became first at length. ~ He treated himself as extraneous, preserving his person safe and sound. ~ Cannot one who is selfless fulfill the selfishness?

—[07c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ Heaven is lasting and earth enduring. ~ The reason why they are lasting and enduring is that they do not live for themselves; ~ Therefore they live long. ~ In the same way the Sage keeps himself behind and he is in the front; ~ He forgets himself and he is preserved. ~ Is it not because he is not self-interested ~ That his self-interest is established?

—[07c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ Heaven lasts; earth endures. ~ They last and endure because they do not live for themselves. ~ And thus can live forever. ~ Therefore, the Sage positions himself behind and yet stays ahead. ~ He denies himself and so is preserved. ~ Is it not because of his selflessness ~ That he completes his own?

— [07c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ Heaven is lasting, Earth endures. ~ What enables Heaven and Earth to last and endure? ~ Because they do not live for themselves - ~ so it is that they can live so long. ~ And so, the Wise Person: ~ Puts himself last, and so finds himself in front. ~ Puts himself in the out group, and so maintains his place. ~ The personal does not exist for him - ~ isn't this how he can perfect what for him is most personal?

— [07c33t] Cheng Lin ~ Heaven is everlasting, and earth is perpetual. ~ Their endurance is due to the fact that they exist without the consciousness of self, because of which they endure for ever. ~ Likewise, the Sage is most highly esteemed because he regards himself as the least important. ~ His life is long preserved because he has no thought about his personal security. ~ He is able to realize his complete self because he is always selfless.

— [07c34t] Yi Wu ~ Heaven is eternal and Earth is everlasting. ~ The reason they can last forever ~ Is because they do not live for themselves. ~ So, they can live long. ~ Therefore, the sage places himself behind, ~ But actually he goes ahead; ~ Neglects himself, ~ But actually preserves himself. ~ Is it not because he has no self ~ That his self is realized?

— [07c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ The universe is everlasting. ~ It is eternal because it does not exist for its own sake. ~ Hence, it will be everlasting. ~ The sage safeguards his interest by always putting his personal interests last. ~ He regards his interests as inconsequential. ~ Yet, it is often preserved. ~ Is this because by not being self-serving that his interests are always preserved?

— [07c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ Heaven is everlasting and Earth is perpetual. ~ Why so? ~ Because they live without holding onto any consciousness of self. ~ Therefore, they can endure forever. ~ One who does not separate his being from the nature of universal wholeness lives with the universal virtue of wholeness. ~ He, too, dissolves all consciousness of self and lives as the universe. ~ By putting himself behind others, ~ he finds himself foremost. ~ By not considering his own personal ends, ~ his personal life is accomplished. ~ He finds himself safe, secure and preserved. ~ Because he does not hold a narrow concept of self, ~ his true nature can fully merge with the one universal life.

— [07c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ The existences of heaven and earth are long-lasting. ~ Their existences are long-lasting because they do not conceive of their existences as existences. ~ Therefore, their existences are long-lasting. ~ When the wise stays back, he steps forward. ~ When he forgets his self, he finds his self. ~ Is it not through selflessness that one achieves selfhood?

— [07c38t] Henry Wei ~ Dimming the Light ~ T'ao Kuang ~ Heaven is eternal, Earth is durable. ~ The reason why they are eternal and durable ~ Is that they do not exist for themselves. ~ This is why they can long endure. ~ Therefore, the Sage putting himself behind, ~ Finds himself in front; ~ And placing himself beyond his concern, ~ Finds himself well preserved. ~ Is this not because he is unselfish? ~ For the very reason that he is unselfish, ~ He is able to find Self-fulfilment.

— [07c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ Heaven and Earth are everlasting. ~ The reason why they are everlasting ~ Is that they do not live for themselves. ~ That is why they can live long. ~ Therefore the sage ~ Puts himself last and finds himself first; ~ He leaves himself out and finds himself preserved. ~ Is it not because he is selfless ~ That he can fulfill himself?

— [07c40t] Tao Huang ~ Heaven is eternal, and earth is long lasting. ~ What makes heaven and earth eternal and long lasting is that they do not give birth to themselves. ~ It is this that makes them eternal and long lasting. ~ Hence the sage, ~ Relaxing the body, the body comes to the fore. ~ Beyond the body, the body comes to the fore. ~ Beyond the body, the body exists of itself. ~ Not even relying on selflessness ~ Enables the self to be fulfilled.

— [07c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ Heaven is enduring and earth is lasting. ~ Why heaven and earth can be enduring and lasting is because they do not live for themselves, thus, they can endure and last. ~ So that a Sage ruler put himself behind others, and he came to the front; ~ he excluded himself from struggle with others and he survived. ~ It is because he was selfless that he fulfilled himself.

— [07c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ Heaven is eternal and Earth everlasting. ~ They can be eternal and everlasting because they do not exist for themselves, ~ And for this reason can exist forever. ~ Therefore the sage places himself in the background but finds himself in the foreground. ~ He puts himself away, and yet he always remains. ~ Is it not because he has no personal interests? ~ This is the reason why his personal interests are fulfilled.

—[08c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE EASY NATURE ~ The greatest virtue is like water; it is good to all things. ~ It attains the most inaccessible places without strife. ~ Therefore it is like Tao. ~ It has the virtue of adapting itself to its place. ~ It is virtuous like the heart by being deep. ~ It is virtuous like speech by being faithful. ~ It is virtuous like government in regulating. ~ It is virtuous like a servant in its ability. ~ It is virtuous like action by being in season. ~ And because it does not strive it has no enemies.

—[08c10t] James Legge ~ The highest excellence is like (that of) water. ~ The excellence of water appears in its benefiting all things, ~ and in its occupying, without striving (to the contrary), the low place which all men dislike. ~ Hence (its way) is near to (that of) the Tao. ~ The excellence of a residence is in (the suitability of) the place; ~ that of the mind is in abysmal stillness; ~ that of associations is in their being with the virtuous; ~ that of government is in its securing good order; ~ that of (the conduct of) affairs is in its ability; ~ and that of (the initiation of) any movement is in its timeliness. ~ And when (one with the highest excellence) does not wrangle (about his low position), no one finds fault with him.

—[08c11t] David Hinton ~ Lofty nobility is like water. ~ Water's nobility is to enrich the ten thousand things ~ and yet never strive: ~ it just settles through places people everywhere loathe. ~ Therefore, it's nearly Way. ~ Dwelling's nobility is earth, ~ mind's nobility is empty depth, ~ giving's nobility is Humanity, ~ word's nobility is sincerity, ~ government's nobility is accord, ~ endeavor's nobility is ability, ~ action's nobility is timing. ~ When you never strive you never go wrong.

—[08c12t] Chichung Huang ~ The supreme good man is like water. ~ Water is good at benefiting ~ The ten thousand things without contending, ~ Lying where the multitude loathes to: ~ Therefore, close to the Tao. ~ In habitation, ~ He is good at choosing the place; ~ In mind, ~ Good at profundity; ~ In giving, ~ Good at imitating heaven; ~ In speech, ~ Good at honesty; ~ In government, ~ Good at bringing order; ~ In duties, ~ Good at exerting his ability; ~ In making moves, ~ Good at timeliness. ~ Being uncontentious, ~ There is no resentment.

—[08c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ A person with superior goodness (shan) is like water, ~ Water is good in benefiting (li) all beings, ~ Without contending (cheng) with any. ~ Situated in places shunned (o) by many others, ~ Thereby it is near (chi) Tao. ~ (Such a person's) dwelling is the good earth, ~ (His/her) mind (hsin) is the good deep water (yuan), ~ (His/her) associates are good kind people (jen), ~ (His/her) speech shows good trust (hsin), ~ (His/her) governing is the good order, ~ (His/her) projects (shih) are carried out by good talents (neng), ~ (His/her) activities (tung) are good in timing. ~ Because he does not contend (pu cheng) with any, ~ He commits no wrong.

—[08c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ [The performance of people with] the highest Te (arete) resembles the [working of] water; ~ Water benefits myriad things and creatures without vying [for control or profits]; ~ It, however, settles for the lowest position which is [customarily considered] disdainful by people. ~ Therefore,

[the performance of] water comes very close to that of [people whose behaviors are] drawing closest to Tao. ~ [A Sage] withholds his principle [as unmovable] as the ground; ~ His heart tolerates as much (profoundly) as an abyss; ~ His actions are motivated by compassion; ~ His words are trustworthy; ~ His administration is efficient; ~ His performance is proficient; ~ His movements are timely; ~ Since he does not compete with people [for power or for profiting himself], so nobody has any good reason to accuse him. —[08c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ The man of the highest goodness is like water. ~ Water knows how to benefit all things without striving with them. ~ It stays in places loathed by all men. ~ Therefore, it comes near the Way. ~ In choosing your dwelling, know how to keep to the earth. ~ In cultivating your mind, know how to dive in the abyss. ~ In dealing with others, know how to be in relation to benevolence. ~ In speaking, know how to keep faithfulness. ~ In controlling the affairs of the state, know how to maintain good governing. ~ In working, know how to be suitable to ability. ~ In acting, know how to be suitable to time. ~ If you do not strive with others, you will be free from error.

—[08c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ The best virtue is like water. ~ Water nurtures everything; yet, without rivaling, it flows towards lower grounds, where people would be reluctant to go. ~ Water behaves like following Tao. ~ Live in suitable place; ~ Think deeply; ~ Give generously; ~ Keep one's words; ~ Rule orderly; ~ Do things ably; ~ Act when the time is right. ~ Do not rival, then there would be no trouble.

—[08c17t] Arthur Waley ~ The highest good is like that of water. ~ The goodness of water is that it benefits the ten thousand creatures; yet itself does not scramble, but is content with the places that all men disdain. ~ It is this that makes water so near to the Way. ~ And if men think the ground the best place for building a house upon, ~ If among thoughts they value those that are profound, ~ If in friendship they value gentleness, ~ In words, truth; in government, good order; ~ In deeds, effectiveness; in actions, timeliness - ~ In each case it is because they prefer what does not lead to strife, ~ And therefore does not go amiss.

—[08c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ The highest good is like water. ~ The goodness of water lies in benefiting the myriad things without contention, while locating itself in places that common people scorn. ~ Therefore it is almost exactly like the Dao. ~ Goodness in position depends on location; ~ goodness in heart/mind depends on profundity; ~ goodness in association depends on benevolence; ~ goodness in words depends on sincerity; ~ goodness in government depends on order; ~ goodness in affairs depends on ability; ~ goodness in action depends on timeliness. ~ And it is only by avoiding contention that no blame occurs.

—[08c19t] Lin Yutang ~ WATER ~ The best of men is like water; ~ Water benefits all things ~ And does not compete with them. ~ It dwells in (the lowly) places that all disdain - ~ Wherein it comes near to the Tao. ~ In his dwelling, (the Sage) loves the (lowly) earth; ~ In his heart, he loves what is profound; ~ In his relations with others, he loves kindness; ~ In his words, he loves sincerity; ~ In government, he loves peace; ~ In business affairs, he loves ability; ~ In his actions, he loves choosing the right time. ~ It is because he does not contend ~ That he is without reproach.

—[08c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ The highest good is like water; ~ Water is good at benefiting the myriad creatures ~ but also struggles to occupy the place loathed by the masses. ~ Therefore, ~ It is near to the Way. ~ The quality of an abode is in its location, ~ The quality of the heart is in its depths, ~ The quality of giving lies in trust, ~ The quality of correct governance lies in orderly rule, ~ The quality of an enterprise depends on ability, ~ The quality of movement depends on timing. ~ Now, ~ It is precisely because one does not compete that there is no blame.

—[08c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ The highest good is like water. ~ For water benefits the ten thousand things without striving. ~ It settles in places that people avoid and so is like the Tao. ~ In choosing your home look to the land. ~ In preparing your heart go deep. ~ In associating with others value gentleness. ~ In speaking exhibit good faith. ~ In governing provide good order. ~ In the conduct of business be competent. ~ In action be timely. ~ When there is no strife, nothing goes amiss.

—[08c22t] David H. Li ~ Goodness at its best is like water. ~ Water benefits myriad matters but is not in competition with them. ~ Water stays at a level disliked by others, as if it were the Direction. ~ Wherever [the sage] stays, it is a good place; ~ whatever [the sage] thinks, it is good thought; ~ whomever [the sage] contacts, it is nobleness; ~ whatever [the sage] expresses, it is truthfulness; ~ however [the sage] governs, it is good administration; ~ whatever [the sage] does, it is good deed; ~ whenever [the sage] acts, it is timely action. ~ Being not in competition, [the sage] has no concern.

—[08c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ The highest good is like water, ~ Benefiting all but contending with none, ~ Flowing in low places which the masses disdain. ~ Hence, it is close to the goodness of the Tao. ~ In dwelling, be grounded, ~ In thinking, be deep, ~ In giving, be balanced, ~ In speaking, be truthful, ~ In governing, be orderly, ~ In working, be competent, ~ In action, be timely. ~ In following the virtues of water, ~ The sage contends with no one, ~ And therefore he invites no troubles in life.

—[08c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ The best of the best is like water. ~ Water is beneficial to everything, ~ And does not demand anything for itself in return. ~ Water stays in places where nothing else stays. ~ Therefore, water is close to Tao. ~ At home, it is important for this to be a good place to live in. ~ In feeling, examine the depths of your heart. ~ In friendship, maintain good relations with others. ~ In words, have confidence. ~ In government, abide by good order. ~ In trade, taking things easy will be to your benefit. ~ In movement, use every opportunity. ~ Since there is no demand for anything, there is no blame, either. ~ This shows how the sage, the highest level of good, operates selflessly. ~ He does good for others but demands nothing of them. ~ He is satisfied with everything. ~ He does not covet anything that belongs to someone else. ~ When he serves as an example for us, the world enjoys peace and tranquillity.

—[08c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ The sage's way, ~ Tao is the way of water. ~ There must be water for life to be, and it can flow wherever. ~ And water, being true to being water is true to Tao. ~ Those on the Way of Tao, like water need to accept where they find themselves; ~ and that may often be where water goes to the lowest places, and that is right. ~ Like a lake the heart must be calm and quiet having great depth beneath it. ~ The sage rules with compassion, and his word needs to be trusted. ~ The sage needs to know like water ~ how to flow around the blocks ~ and how to find the way through without violence. ~ Like water, the sage should wait for the moment to ripen and be right: ~ water, you know, never fights ~ it flows around without harm.

—[08c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ The perfect goodness is like water. ~ Water approaches all things instead of contending with them. ~ It prefers to dwell where no one would like to stay; ~ Hence it comes close to the Tao. ~ A man of perfect goodness chooses a low place to dwell as water, ~ He has a heart as deep as water, ~ He offers friendship as tender as water, ~ He speaks as sincerely as water, ~ He rules a state as orderly as water, ~ He does a thing as properly as water, ~ He takes action as timely as water. ~ Like water, he never contends with others, ~ So he never commits a mistake.

—[08c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ The greatest good is like water: it benefits all life without being noticed. ~ It flows even to the lowliest places where no one chooses to be and so it is very close to the Tao. ~ It settles only in quiet locations. ~ Its deepest heart is always clear. ~ It offers itself with great goodness. ~ It keeps its rhythm as it keeps its promises. ~ It governs tributaries as it governs its people. ~ It adapts to all necessities. ~ It moves at the right moment. ~ It never flaunts its goodness and so it never attracts any blame.

—[08c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ The perfect goodness is like the water. ~ Water benefits everything without caring for its own profit, ~ And lives in places that none would like. ~ As a good instance of the able Way, ~ Water is best at choosing places for its existence, ~ Freeing its mind for working up new wonders ~ Matching the heaven in generous grace ~ Speaking with the most persuasive power, ~ Governing supremely without verbalized policies ~ Crowning everything it does with success ~ And taking its actions at the best times. ~ For one who struggles for nothing ~ Will find no difficulty in everything.

—[08c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ On Water ~ Lao Tze says, ~ Ultimate goodness shall be found in water. ~ Water is good at helping all things, being free of conflict with them. ~ It stays in places that most people despise, so it is closest to the Tao. ~ It provides benefit wherever it stays, ~ illustrates the example of good men's hearts by forming the depth of the abyss, ~ distributes to the needy one to demonstrate benevolence, ~ reflects genuine images to interpret credibility, ~ removes dirty things to purify the government, ~ transforms to different shapes to display its capability, ~ moves as the seasons change to show timeliness. ~ Because water never competes with others, hence no one will resent it.

—[08c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ The highest goodness is like water. ~ Water is beneficent to all things but does not contend. ~ It stays in places which others despise. ~ Therefore it is near Tao. ~ In dwelling, think it a good place to live; ~ In feeling, make the heart deep; ~ In friendship, keep on good terms with men; ~ In words, have confidence; ~ In ruling, abide by good order; ~ In business, take things easy; ~ In motion, make use of the opportunity. ~ Since there is no contention, there is no blame.

—[08c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ The man of supreme goodness resembles water. ~ Water benefits all things ~ Without competing with them, ~ Staying in places that men despise; ~ Therefore, it is very close to Tao. ~ Dwelling in good places, ~ Having a heart that loves the profound, ~ Allying with benevolence, ~ Inviting trust with words, ~ Being righteous in governing, ~ Managing all things well, ~ Moving at the right time. ~ Just because he does not compete, ~ The man of supreme goodness frees himself of blame.

—[08c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ The highest Excellence is like water. ~ Water, Excellent at being of benefit to the thousands of things, does not contend - ~ it settles in places everyone else avoids. ~ Yes, it is just about Tao. ~ Excellence in a house: the ground; ~ "Excellence in a mind: depth; ~ Excellence in companions: Goodness; ~ Excellence in speaking: sincerity; ~ Excellence in setting things right: good management; ~ Excellence on the job: ability; ~ Excellence in making a move: good timing." ~ Simply do not contend ~ then there will be no fault.

—[08c33t] Cheng Lin ~ The way of a good man is like that of water which benefits all things without contention. ~ He is content to keep that which is discarded by the multitude. ~ Hence he is close to Truth. ~ He adapts himself to any environment; ~ he attunes his mind to what is profound; ~ he associates himself with the virtuous; ~ his words inspire confidence; ~ his rule brings about order; ~ he administers affairs with ability; ~ his actions are opportune. ~ Because he does not contend, he gives no cause for resentment.

—[08c34t] Yi Wu ~ The supremely good [man] is like water. ~ Water is good at benefiting all things ~ but does not compete with them. ~ It dwells in places that people dislike; ~ therefore, it is close to the Way. ~ In dwelling, he is good at living close to the ground. ~ In mind, he is good at making himself like an abyss. ~ In giving, he is good at practicing humanity. ~ In speaking, he is good at keeping his word. ~ In governing, he is good at managing. ~ In doing, he is good at using his abilities. ~ In moving, he is good at discerning the right time. ~ Because he does not compete with others, he will be free from blame.

—[08c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ A person of great virtue behaves like water. ~ Water benefits everything but does not contend. ~ It resides at the lowest place that everyone loathes. ~ Thus this characteristic of water bears close resemblance to the typical trait of Dao. ~ A person of great virtue prefers to live on the lowest ground. ~ His heart is quiescent and serene. ~ His dealings with others are based on goodwill. ~ His utterances are forever sincere. ~ His rule is orderly and peaceful. ~ His managerial skills are superb. ~ His timing is always impeccable. ~ Because he is not contentious, nobody will ever hold a grudge against him.

— [08c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ One of universal nature is like water; ~ he benefits all things but does not contend with them. ~ He unprotestingly takes the lowest position; ~ thus, he is close to the universal truth. ~ One of universal virtue chooses to live in a suitable environment. ~ He attunes his mind to become profound. ~ He deals with others with kindness. ~ In his speech, he is sincere. ~ His rule brings about order. ~ His work is efficient. ~ His actions are opportune. ~ One of deep virtue does not contend with people; ~ thus, he is above reproach.

— [08c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ That which is best is similar to the water. ~ Water profits ten thousand things and does not oppose them. ~ It is always at rest in humble places that people dislike. ~ Thus, it is close to Tao. ~ Therefore, for staying, we prefer a humble place. ~ For minds, we prefer profundity. ~ For companions, we prefer the kindness. ~ For words, we prefer sincerity. ~ For government, we prefer good order. ~ For affairs, we prefer ability. ~ For actions, we prefer the right time. ~ Because we do not strive, ~ We are free from fault.

— [08c38t] Henry Wei ~ Yielding Nature ~ I Hsing ~ A man of the superior type resembles water, ~ Whose goodness lies in benefiting all things without contention, ~ And staying in places detested by the masses. ~ This makes him closely akin to Tao. ~ The goodness of his abode is its low location. ~ The goodness of his heart is its cavern-like hollowness. ~ Benevolence is the goodness of his offerings. ~ Sincerity is the goodness of his speech. ~ The goodness of his rule means peace. ~ The goodness of his dealings means competence. ~ His moves are good because timely. ~ As he is not disposed to contend, ~ He causes little resentment.

— [08c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ The supreme good is like water. ~ Water benefits the ten thousand things, yet contends with nothing. ~ It dwells where everyone is loath to be. ~ That is why it is near to Tao. ~ In dwelling, the good is the ground, ~ In thought, the good is depth, ~ In association, the good is gentleness, ~ In speech, the good is truthfulness, ~ In government, the good is order, ~ In work, the good is ability, ~ In movement, the good is timeliness. ~ Truly, because it [water] contends with nothing, ~ It is beyond reproach.

— [08c40t] Tao Huang ~ Eminent goodness is like water. ~ Water is good at benefiting all things, ~ Yet it actively competes. ~ It retires to undesirable places. ~ Thus it is near to Tao. ~ Dwelling in good places, ~ Drawing from good sources, ~ Supplying from good nature, ~ Speaking with good trust, ~ Governing with good rules, ~ Conducting with good ability, ~ And acting within good time. ~ For this reason, ~ There is no competition, ~ There is no concern.

— [08c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ Perfect excellence is like gentle water. ~ Gentle water benefits All Things and yet it does not struggle. ~ Do away with what all people hate. ~ Thus this is approaching Dao. ~ Give to what is of perfect personnel. ~ Stay in a perfect place, ~ think in a perfect way, ~ cooperate with perfect people, ~ speak perfect truth, ~ govern in perfect order, ~ work for perfect potentiality, ~ move when the time is perfect. ~ Because of non-struggle, therefore, there is no blame.

— [08c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ The best (man) is like water. ~ Water is good; ~ It benefits all things and does not compete with them. ~ It dwells in (lowly) places that all disdain. ~ This is why it is so near to Tao. ~ (The best man) in his dwelling loves the earth. ~ In his heart, he loves what is profound. ~ In his associations, he loves humanity. ~ In his words, he loves faithfulness. ~ In government, he loves order. ~ In handling affairs, he loves competence. ~ In his activities, he loves timeliness. ~ It is because he does not compete that he is without reproach.

— [08c91t] И. И. Семеновко ~ Высшее добро сходно с водой. ~ Добро воды состоит в том, что она

приносит пользу десяти тысячам вещей и при этом не соперничает. ~ Место, где она пребывает, ненавистно для толпы, поэтому она и близка к Дао. ~ Добрым местом обитания является Земля, ~ добром для сердца выступает глубина, ~ добро в общении составляет человечность, ~ добро в высказывании - это искренность, ~ добро в правлении исчерпывается порядком, ~ добро деяния заключается в способности, ~ добро движения есть время. ~ Не соперничает и поэтому не вызывает осуждения.

— [08с92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Человек высшей Благости подобен воде, ~ ибо вода приносит пользу мириадам существ, не соперничая с ними, и находится в том месте, которое все ненавидят. ~ Поэтому она близка Дао. ~ В жилище он ценит землю, ~ в сердце ценит глубину, ~ в союзе ценит гуманность, ~ в словах ценит искренность, ~ в правлении ценит порядок, ~ в поступках ценит способности, ~ в делах ценит время. ~ В силу того, что он не соперничает, он и не допускает ошибок.

— [08с93t] Е. А. Торчинов ~ Высшее благо словно вода. ~ Вода приносит благо и пользу всем существам, ни с кем вражды не зная. ~ Течет она в таких местах, где людям, да и тварям, жить нельзя. ~ Поэтому близка она Дао-Пути. ~ Живи в благих землях, пусть твое сердце станет полноводным водоемом блага. ~ Пусть милосердие твое всегда обрящет единение с благом, а речи проникнутся благом достоверности. ~ Всегда осуществляя благое исправление, свершай дела благие по возможности своей и действуй лишь во время должное, благое. ~ Лишь тот, кто не враждует, не будет ненавидим.

— [08с94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Верхняя доброта подобна воде. ~ Доброта воды приносит пользу вещам и не борется [с ними]. ~ [Вода] устремляется туда, где многие люди погрязли во зле. ~ Поэтому [она] почти как Дао. ~ Селясь где-нибудь, проявляй доброту к земле. ~ Сердцу повинуйся, проявляй доброту безмерно. ~ Завязывая дружбу, наполняй добротой Жэнь (Человеколюбие). ~ Говоря что-либо, наполняй добротой Синь (Доверие-Веру). ~ Управляя, согласовывай с добротой методы управления. ~ Отправляя службы, наполняй добротой способности. ~ Действуя, будь добр, следуй времени. ~ Ни в коем случае не соперничай и тогда не будешь повинен ни в чем.

— [08с95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Высшая добродетель подобна воде. ~ Вода приносит пользу всем существам и не борется [с ними]. ~ Она находится там, где люди не желали бы быть. ~ Поэтому она похожа на дао. ~ [Человек, обладающий высшей добродетелью, так же как и вода], должен селиться ближе к земле; ~ его сердце должно следовать внутренним побуждениям; ~ в отношениях с людьми он должен быть дружелюбным; ~ в словах должен быть искренним; ~ в управлении [страной] должен быть последовательным; ~ в делах должен исходить из возможностей; ~ в действиях должен учитывать время. ~ Поскольку [он], так же как и вода, не борется с вещами, [он] не совершает ошибок.

— [08с96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Высшая добродетель похожа на воду. ~ Вода, давая всем существам обильную пользу, не сопротивляется ничему. ~ Она находится на том месте, которого люди не видят, поэтому она похожа на Тао. ~ Жить хорошо - для земли; ~ сердце - для глубины; ~ союз - для любви; ~ слова - для доверия; ~ управление - для благоденствия (страны); ~ дела - для умения; ~ движение - для жизни. ~ Не ссорящийся не осуждается.

— [08с97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Высшее благо подобно воде: ~ Вода приносит благо всей тьме вещей и ни с чем не борется. ~ Собирается в местах, которых люди избегают, ~ Вот почему она близка Пути. ~ Для жизни благотворна земля; ~ Для сердца благотворна глубина; ~ В общении благотворна доброта; ~ В речах благотворно доверие; ~ В правлении благотворно смирение; ~ В деяниях благотворно умение; ~ В движениях благотворно само время. ~ Лишь там, где нет соперничества, не будет и ущерба.

— [08c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Продвижение к совершенству подобно воде. ~ Вода в своем совершенстве приносит пользу мириадам существ, не соперничая при этом. ~ Она находится в местах, которые неприятны множеству людей. ~ Причинность: ~ Она близка Пути. ~ Пребывание совершенствуется землей. ~ Сердце-сознание совершенствуется бездонностью. ~ Сопричастность совершенствуется контактностью. ~ Речь совершенствуется верой. ~ Управление совершенствуется порядком. ~ Ситуация-дело совершенствуется энергией-возможностью. ~ Движение совершенствуется временем. ~ И если только не соперничаешь, тогда - отсутствие просчетов.

— [09c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ To hold it upright and fill it, ~ Is not so good as stopping [in time]. ~ When you pound it out and give it a point, ~ It won't be preserved very long. ~ When gold and jade fill your rooms, ~ You'll never be able to protect them. ~ Arrogance and pride with wealth and rank, ~ On their own bring on disaster. ~ When the deed is accomplished you retire; ~ Such is Heaven's Way!

— [09c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ As for holding to fullness, ~ Far better were it to stop in time! ~ Keep on beating and sharpening a sword, ~ And the edge cannot be preserved for long. ~ Fill your house with gold and jade, ~ And it can no longer be guarded. ~ Set store by your riches and honour, ~ And you will only reap a crop of calamities. ~ Here is the Way of Heaven: ~ When you have done your work, retire!

— [09c03t] D. C. Lau ~ Rather than fill it to the brim by keeping it upright ~ Better to have stopped in time; ~ Hammer it to a point ~ And the sharpness cannot be preserved for ever; ~ There may be gold and jade to fill a hall ~ But there is none who can keep them. ~ To be overbearing when one has wealth and position ~ Is to bring calamity upon oneself. ~ To retire when the task is accomplished ~ Is the way of heaven.

— [09c04t] R. L. Wing ~ Holding to fullness Is not as good as stopping in time. ~ Sharpness that probes Cannot protect for long. ~ A house filled with riches Cannot be defended. ~ Pride in wealth and position Is overlooking one's collapse. ~ Withdrawing when success is achieved Is the Tao in Nature.

— [09c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ To hold and fill is not as good as to give up. ~ If a sword edge is sharpened to its sharpest, ~ It is hard to last long. ~ If your hall is filled with gold and jade, ~ Whoever could keep them safe? ~ To be proud with honour and wealth will bring misfortune. ~ To withdraw as soon as the work is done ~ That is Heaven's right way (Tao).

— [09c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ Better stop short than fill to the brim. ~ Oversharpen the blade, and the edge will soon blunt. ~ Amass a store of gold and jade, and no one can protect it. ~ Claim wealth and titles, and disaster will follow. ~ Retire when the work is done. ~ This is the way of heaven.

— [09c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ Holding a full load of what you desire in your hands ~ Is not as wise as putting it down. ~ Sharpening a knife edge to the extreme, ~ And it may chip off in use. ~ To have a house full of gold and jade, ~ And you will only invite thieves. ~ To succumb to conceit and arrogance upon getting wealth and status, ~ In the end you will regret it. ~ Retire once a task has been accomplished ~ And you are in consonance with Heaven's Way.

— [09c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ To be overflowing is not as good as having just enough. ~ If a point is made too sharp, the sharpness will not last long. ~ A houseful of treasure is impossible to keep. ~ The rich and arrogant are destined for disaster. ~ When you are successful and famous, quickly back out, which is the heavens' way.

— [09c09t] Walter Gorn Old, MAKING THINGS EQUAL ~ It is advisable to refrain from continual reaching after wealth. ~ Continual handling and sharpening wears away the most durable thing. ~ If the house be full of jewels, who shall protect it? ~ Wealth and glory bring care along with pride. ~ To stop when good work is done and honour advancing is the way of Heaven.

— [09c10t] James Legge ~ It is better to leave a vessel unfilled, than to attempt to carry it when it is full. ~ If you keep feeling a point that has been sharpened, the point cannot long preserve its sharpness. ~ When gold and jade fill the hall, their possessor cannot keep them safe. ~ When wealth and honours lead to arrogance, this brings its evil on itself. ~ When the work is done, and one's name is becoming distinguished, to withdraw into obscurity is the way of Heaven.

—[09c11t] David Hinton ~ Forcing it fuller and fuller can't compare to just enough, ~ and honed sharper and sharper means it won't keep for long. ~ Once it's full of jade and gold your house will never be safe. ~ Proud of wealth and renown you bring on your own ruin. ~ Just do what you do, and then leave: such is the Way of heaven.

—[09c12t] Chichung Huang ~ To hold and fill it to the brim - ~ You'd better stop it; ~ To hammer and sharpen it - ~ You cannot long preserve it; ~ To fill a room with gold and jade - ~ Nobody can safeguard it; ~ To be noble, rich but arrogant - ~ You will bring yourself calamity. ~ To withdraw yourself after scoring merits - ~ Heaven's Tao.

—[09c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ To hold and fill (a vessel) to the full (ying), ~ It had better not be done. ~ To temper and sharpen a sword, ~ Its edge could not be kept (pao) long. ~ To fill the hall with gold and jade, ~ There is no way to guard (shou) them. ~ To be rich, exalted, and proud, ~ This is to invite blame (chiu) upon oneself. ~ When work is done (sui), the person (sheng) retires, ~ Such is the Tao of heaven.

—[09c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ People who accumulate extravagantly are less fortunate than those who would voluntarily cease and desist [before the accumulation of wealth becomes an obsession]; ~ [It is similar to the fact that:] ~ If a person grinds and sharpens sword beyond reason he would run the risk of thinning off the blade, [not for long], he will be unable to keep the blade; ~ If a person has a house full of gold and jade, he will run into mounting problems of guarding them [against theft and robbery]; ~ If a person of wealth and power (fame) is arrogant, he will unquestionably incite hostility and criticism [against him]. ~ Retiring physically after deeds are accomplished and names (identification) are established is [a manifestation of] the heavenly Tao.

—[09c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ You hold to fullness, and it is better to stop in time! ~ You keep on beating and sharpening a sword, and the edge cannot be preserved for long. ~ You fill your house with gold and jade, and it can no longer be guarded. ~ You put on airs by your riches and honor, and you will only reap a crop of calamities. ~ Here is the Way of Heaven: When you have done your work, retire.

—[09c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ To fill to its full is not as good as to leave it alone. ~ Why make things very sharp, if the edge can not keep long-lasting sharpness. ~ Greed for treasure cannot make the fortune last. ~ Rich and arrogant, one would bring troubles for oneself. ~ Retire when the goal is achieved; this conforms to Tao.

—[09c17t] Arthur Waley ~ Stretch a bow to the very full, ~ And you will wish you had stopped in time; ~ Temper a sword-edge to its very sharpest, ~ And you will find it soon grows dull. ~ When bronze and jade fill your hall ~ It can no longer be guarded. ~ Wealth and place breed insolence ~ That brings ruin in its train. ~ When your work is done, then withdraw! ~ Such is Heaven's Way.

—[09c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ With it firmly in hand, he goes on to fill it up, but it would be better to quit. ~ If, having forged it, one goes on to sharpen it, it could not last long. ~ Gold and jade fill the hall, but none can keep them safe. ~ If one is arrogant because of wealth and rank, he will give himself a blameworthy fate. ~ Once achievement has occurred, one retires, for such is the Dao of Heaven.

—[09c19t] Lin Yutang ~ THE DANGER OF OVERWEENING SUCCESS ~ Stretch (a bow) to the very full, ~ And you will wish you had stopped in time. ~ Temper (a sword-edge) to its very sharpest, ~ And the edge will not last long. ~ When gold and jade fill your hall, ~ You will not be able to keep them safe. ~ To be proud with wealth and honor ~ Is to sow the seeds of one's own downfall. ~ Retire when your work is done, ~ Such is Heaven's way.

— [09c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ Instead of keeping a bow taut while holding it straight, better to relax. ~ You may temper a sword until it is razor sharp, but you cannot preserve the edge for long. ~ When gold and jade fill your rooms, no one will be able to guard them for you. ~ If wealth and honor make you haughty, you bequeath misfortune upon yourself. ~ To withdraw when your work is finished, ~ that is the Way of heaven.

— [09c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ Better to stop in time than to fill to the brim. ~ Hone a blade to the sharpest point, ~ and it will soon be blunt. ~ Fill your house with gold and jade, ~ and no one can protect it. ~ Be prideful about wealth and position, ~ and you bring disasters upon yourself. ~ Retire when the work is done. ~ This is the way of heaven.

— [09c22t] David H. Li ~ Filling to the brim is not as good as stopping short; ~ Polishing to the sharpest does not last long. ~ A roomful of gold and jade is hard to follow. ~ One prideful of wealth and fame sows the seeds of sorrow. ~ With mission accomplished, it is time to offer resignation. ~ This is cosmos's Direction.

— [09c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ To fill to the brim is to be out of balance, ~ Wherefore it is better to stop before overfilling. ~ To over-sharpen a sword is to be out of balance, ~ Wherefore its edge will not last long. ~ To line a hall with gold and jade is to be out of balance, ~ Wherefore no one can guard them. ~ If wealth and rank make a man haughty and clinging, ~ He will surely bequeath misfortune upon himself. ~ If success is achieved and honor bestowed, ~ Quietly withdraw from your position. ~ This is the Way of Heaven.

— [09c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ It is better to leave a thing alone ~ Than to hold it and keep it full to the brim. ~ If you sharpen the blade and use it, ~ It will not remain sharp for long. ~ When gold and jade fill the temple, ~ No one can protect them. ~ When wealth and honor come together with pride ~ Self-destruction quickly joins them. ~ After the goal has been achieved and the objective has been honorably accomplished, ~ The Tao of heaven ~ Is to retire from everything.

— [09c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ Hold yourself back from filling yourself up, or you'll tip off your stand. ~ You can hammer a blade until it's razor-sharp - and in seconds, it can blunt. ~ You may amass gold and jade in plenty ~ but then the more you have, the less safety ... ~ Are you strutting your wealth like a peacock? ~ Then you've set yourself up to be shot. ~ You bring about your own disaster ~ Because you've got too much. ~ Let go, when your work is done: ~ That is the Way of Heaven.

— [09c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ One should stop in due time ~ Rather than fill it to the brim. ~ When a point is whittled too sharp, ~ Its sharpness cannot remain long. ~ When a hall is full of gold and jade, ~ Nobody can keep them long; ~ When a man of wealth and rank is arrogant, ~ He is looking for a calamity upon himself; ~ When one succeeds and subsequently retires, ~ He follows the true way of heaven.

— [09c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ To stop in time is better than to hold a full bowl with fear of spilling. ~ A knife cannot be kept constantly sharp, therefore it is wise not to flaunt the blade. ~ Amass a hoard of gold and jade and it cannot be possessed for ever. ~ Those who vaunt their position and worth risk attracting blame. ~ To retire when the goal is reached: this is the Tao of Heaven.

— [09c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ Rather than possessing more and more wealth, ~ One would do better to give it all up. ~ Rather than forging sharper and sharper weapons, ~ One would get better protection by throwing them away. ~ One who gets a whole house of gold can not keep it. ~ One who is proud of wealth and status will suffer for it. ~ It is in agreement with the spirit of the Way ~ That one duly withdraws with his successes achieved.

— [09c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ The Danger of Overweening Success ~ Lao Tze says, ~ A full utensil in hand has to be halted. ~ The blade sharpened to the thinnest edge, cannot be endured long. ~ A hall full of jewels and gold, can never be safely guarded. ~ A man who takes pride in richness and nobleness, has his downfall because of the seeds he sowed. ~ Recess at the day of success, such is the way of Heaven.

—[09c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ Holding and keeping a thing to the very full - it is better to leave it alone; ~ Handling and sharpening a blade - it cannot be long sustained; ~ When gold and jade fill the hall, no one can protect them; ~ Wealth and honour with pride bring with them destruction; ~ To have accomplished merit and acquired fame, then to retire - ~ This is the Tao of heaven.

—[09c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ Hold [a cup] and fill it to the brim; ~ Is it not better to stop in time? ~ Hammer and sharpen [an edge]; ~ It cannot last long. ~ Fill a hall with gold and jade; ~ They cannot be protected. ~ He who is rich, honored, and arrogant brings blame upon himself. ~ He who withdraws after achieving success and performing duty adheres to the Tao of heaven.

—[09c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ In filling, if you keep on and on - ~ better to have stopped. ~ In sharpening, if you keep trying - ~ the edge won't last long. ~ When gold and jade fill the halls, ~ no one can guard it all. ~ Rich, famous - and conceited: ~ leading to a downfall self-caused. ~ Achieve successes, win the fame, remove yourself: ~ Heaven's Way.

—[09c33t] Cheng Lin ~ Those who amass wealth without ceasing are comparable to one who continues to temper a weapon until it loses its keenness. ~ A house that is filled with gold and jades cannot long remain secure. ~ A man who proudly displays his riches invites trouble for himself. ~ The effacement of self after success has been achieved is the way of Heaven.

—[09c34t] Yi Wu ~ Holding [a cup] until it overflows, is not as good as stopping in time. ~ [A sword] beaten to its sharpest, will not last long. ~ A hall filled with gold and jade, cannot be kept forever. ~ Pride in riches and honors, creates trouble for oneself. ~ After achieving merit, retire. ~ It is the Way of Heaven.

—[09c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ As brimming with pride will often lead to a downfall, ~ A timely halt is much preferred. ~ If you continue to hone the blade of a knife, ~ You will not be able to preserve its sharp edge. ~ It is impossible to safeguard a house full of treasures forever. ~ Wealthy people who are arrogantly extravagant, ~ Inevitably bring calamity upon themselves. ~ To retire after a successful career is to follow the way of Dao.

—[09c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ A bow that is stretched to its fullest capacity may certainly snap. ~ A sword that is tempered to its very sharpest may easily be broken. ~ A house that is full of jade and gold cannot remain secure for long. ~ One who proudly displays his wealth invites trouble. ~ Therefore, resign from a high position when your mission is complete. ~ This is the Universal Way of a life of deep virtue.

—[09c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ To hold things and to be proud of them is not as good as not to have them, ~ Because if one insists on an extreme, that extreme will not dwell long. ~ When a room is full of precious things, one will never be able to preserve them. ~ When one is wealthy, high ranking, and proud of himself, he invites misfortune. ~ When one's task is completed and his mission is fulfilled, he removes himself from his position. ~ This is indeed the way of Nature!

—[09c38t] Henry Wei ~ Practice of Placidity ~ Yun Yi ~ To hold and fill a vessel to brimful ~ Is not so good as to stop before the limit. ~ Hone a tool to its sharpest state, ~ And its keenness cannot be long preserved. ~ A hall filled with gold and jade ~ Can hardly be safeguarded. ~ To show pride in one's wealth and high rank ~ Is to pave the way for one's own doom. ~ Retire after achieving success and winning renown! ~ This is the Way of Heaven.

—[09c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ Rather than hold the bowl until it fills to the brim, ~ Better quit in time. ~ Hammer the blade to its sharpest, ~ And you will be unable to preserve it long. ~ Fill the hall with gold and jade, ~ And you will be unable to keep them safe. ~ He who is arrogant with his wealth and position ~ Will bring calamity upon himself. ~ To withdraw when the task is accomplished ~ Is the way of Heaven.

— [09c40t] Tao Huang ~ Hanging on to it will cause overflow, better to let go. ~ Forced consent does not endure. ~ Filling the house with gold and jade will not bring safety. ~ Riches and royalty result in pride, they bring about their own punishment. ~ When the work is done, the body withdraws. ~ This is the Tao of heaven.

— [09c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ Do not concentrate one's wealth in abundance. ~ It is far better for one to know where to stop. ~ Do not beat one's sword sharp, one can never keep its edge for ever. ~ If their houses are full of gold and jade, they have no way to keep them forever. ~ If they are proud of having great riches and honors, they just make more troubles for themselves. ~ When merits have been achieved, fame has been completed - one may withdraw himself. ~ That is to follow the law of Nature.

— [09c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ To hold and fill a cup to overflowing ~ Is not as good as to stop in time. ~ Sharpen a sword-edge to its very sharpest, ~ And the (edge) will not last long. ~ When gold and jade fill your hall, ~ You will not be able to keep them. ~ To be proud with honor and wealth ~ Is to cause one's own downfall. ~ Withdraw as soon as your work is done. ~ Such is Heaven's Way.

— [09c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Наполнить до краев, придерживая, чтобы не разлить, - не идет в сравнение с тем, когда уже пусто. ~ Не сохранить надолго острым то, что натачивают все острее. ~ Когда забита вся палата золотом и нефритом, никто не сможет их сберечь. ~ Кто гордится тем, что знатен и богат, сам обрекает себя на несчастье. ~ Дао Неба в том, чтобы успешно завершить свои труды и удалиться.

— [09c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Лучше вовремя остановиться, чем наполнить [сосуд] до краёв. ~ Если заточить лезвие до предела, то долго его не сохранить. ~ Покои могут быть полны золота и камней, но не найдётся того, кто устерёт бы их. ~ Похваляться богатством и знатностью - значит накликав на себя беду. ~ Добившись успеха - отступай. ~ В этом - Путь Неба.

— [09c93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Не лучше ли ослабить натянутую тетиву, чем вечно напрягать ее? ~ И даже если бесконечно точить клинок, надолго сохранить остроту его, пожалуй, не удастся. ~ Когда нефритом или золотом наполнен зал, кто сможет уберечь его от вора? ~ Когда богатством или знатностью кичатся люди, не навлекают сами этим ли беду большую? ~ Богатство, почести и слава сгинут прочь, истлеет тело - вот небесное Дао, вот Путь!

— [09c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Можно взять да и наполнить что-либо, ~ но не лучше ли оставить его как есть? ~ Можно расплющить и отточить что-либо, ~ но невозможно надолго сохранить [остроту]. ~ Можно золотом и яшмой завалить палаты, ~ да разве найдется тот, кто сможет сберечь [все это]? ~ Можно осыпать себя драгоценностями и смотреть на всех свысока, ~ но ведь только накличешь беду на себя. ~ Поэтому для успешного достижения цели ты сам возьми да и уступи Небесному Дао.

— [09c95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Лучше ничего не делать, чем стремиться к тому, чтобы что-либо наполнить. ~ Если [чем-либо] острым [все время] пользоваться, оно не сможет долго сохранить свою [остроту]. ~ Если зал наполнен золотом и яшмой, то никто не в силах их уберечь. ~ Если богатые и знатные проявляют кичливость, они сами навлекают на себя беду. ~ Когда дело завершено, человек [должен] устранился. ~ В этом закон небесного дао.

— [09c96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Чтобы посуда была наполнена чем-нибудь, нужно держать ее твердо (без малейшего движения) и ровно. ~ Чтобы лезвие наострилось, нужно долго продолжать натачивание. ~ Когда дом наполнен золотом и драгоценными камнями, то невозможно сохранить его в целостности. ~ Кто достигнет чести и приобретет богатство, тот делается гордым. ~ Он легко забудет, что существует наказание (за преступление). ~ Когда дела увенчаются блестящим успехом и будет приобретено доброе имя, то лучше всего удалиться (в уединение). ~ Вот это-то и есть небесное Тао (или естественное Тао).

— [09с97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Чем удерживать наполненное до краев, ~ Лучше вовремя остановиться. ~ Кто старается наточить острее, ~ Не сохранит достигнутого надолго. ~ Коли золото и яшма заполнили покои, ~ Никому не под силу их сберечь. ~ Тот, кто кичится богатством и знатностью, ~ Сам навлечет на себя беду. ~ Подвиг совершен, слава явилась, а сам скрылся - ~ Вот Путь Небесный.

— [09с98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Удерживают и заполняют его. ~ А лучше бы прекратить это. ~ Куют и заостряют его. ~ Не смогут сохранить долго. ~ Золото и драгоценности заполнили залы. ~ Никто не сумеет уберечь. ~ Если в богатстве и знатности загордился, сам себе создаешь проблемы на будущее. ~ Приходит успех - личность отступает. ~ Таков Путь Неба.

— [10с01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ In nourishing the soul and embracing the One - can you do it without letting them leave? ~ In concentrating your breath and making it soft - can you [make it like that of] a child? ~ In cultivating and cleaning your profound mirror - can you do it so that it has no blemish? ~ In loving the people and giving life to the state - can you do it without using knowledge? ~ In opening and closing the gates of Heaven - can you play the part of the female? ~ In understanding all within the four reaches - can you do it without using knowledge? ~ Give birth to them and nourish them. ~ Give birth to them but don't try to own them; ~ Help them to grow but don't rule them. ~ This is called Profound Virtue.

— [11с01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ Thirty spokes unite in one hub; ~ It is precisely where there is nothing, that we find the usefulness of the wheel. ~ We fire clay and make vessels; ~ It is precisely where there's no substance, that we find the usefulness of clay pots. ~ We chisel out doors and windows; ~ It is precisely in these empty spaces, that we find the usefulness of the room. ~ Therefore, we regard having something as beneficial; ~ But having nothing as useful.

— [11с02t] John C. H. Wu ~ THIRTY spokes converge upon a single hub; ~ It is on the hole in the center that the use of the cart hinges. ~ We make a vessel from a lump of clay; ~ It is the empty space within the vessel that makes it useful. ~ We make doors and windows for a room; ~ But it is these empty spaces that make the room livable. ~ Thus, while the tangible has advantages, ~ It is the intangible that makes it useful.

—[11c03t] D. C. Lau ~ Thirty spokes share one hub. ~ Adapt the nothing therein to the purpose in hand, and you will have the use of the cart. ~ Knead clay in order to make a vessel. ~ Adapt the nothing therein to the purpose in hand, and you will have the use of the vessel. ~ Cut out doors and windows in order to make a room. ~ Adapt the nothing therein to the purpose in hand, and you will have the use of the room. ~ Thus what we gain is Something, yet it is by virtue of Nothing that this can be put to use.

—[11c04t] R. L. Wing ~ Thirty spokes converge at one hub; ~ What is not there makes the wheel useful. ~ Clay is shaped to form a vessel; ~ What is not there makes the vessel useful. ~ Doors and windows are cut to form a room; ~ What is not there makes the room useful. ~ Therefore, take advantage of what is there, By making use of what is not.

—[11c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ Thirty spokes are united in one nave to make a wheel, ~ But it is on the hole of the nave that the use of the carriage depends. ~ Clay is mixed to mold a utensil, ~ But it is on its empty space that the use of utensils depends. ~ Doors and windows are cut out to form a room, ~ But it is on the vacancy within, that the use of the room depends. ~ Therefore, the advantage existence brings to people rests exclusively upon the decisive role of nonexistence.

—[11c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ Thirty spokes share the wheel's hub; ~ It is the center hole that makes it useful. ~ Shape clay into a vessel; ~ It is the space within that makes it useful. ~ Cut doors and windows for a room; ~ It is the holes which make it useful. ~ Therefore profit comes from what is there; ~ Usefulness from what is not there.

—[11c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ Thirty spokes make a wheel. ~ Forget about the spokes, ~ And we have the use of the wheel. ~ Working clay in the right way can produce a bowl. ~ Forget about the clay, ~ And we have the use of the bowl. ~ Carve a room off the side of a hill, ~ Forget about the hill, ~ And we have the use of the room. ~ We lay our hands on all kinds of materials for our advantage. ~ Yet we do not possess any of these materials ~ when we actually use their services.

—[11c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ A wooden wheel has thirty spokes: ~ Carve out the center to make it useful for a carriage. ~ A piece of clay is used to make a container: ~ Take out some clay from the middle to form a pot. ~ A house has four walls: ~ Empty the inside to make a room. ~ Therefore, having materials provides the resources, ~ But getting rid of some of it makes the materials useful.

—[11c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE USE OF NOTHING ~ The thirty spokes of a carriage wheel uniting at the nave are made useful by the hole in the centre, where nothing exists. ~ Vessels of moulded earth are useful by reason of their hollowness. ~ Doors and windows are useful by being cut out. ~ A house is useful because of its emptiness. ~ Existence, therefore, is like unto gain, but Non-Existence to use.

—[11c10t] James Legge ~ The thirty spokes unite in the one nave; ~ but it is on the empty space (for the axle), that the use of the wheel depends. ~ Clay is fashioned into vessels; ~ but it is on their empty hollowness, that their use depends. ~ The door and windows are cut out (from the walls) to form an apartment; ~ but it is on the empty space (within), that its use depends. ~ Therefore, what has a (positive) existence serves for profitable adaptation, and what has not that for (actual) usefulness.

—[11c11t] David Hinton ~ Thirty spokes gathered at each hub: absence makes the cart work. ~ A storage jar fashioned out of clay: absence makes the jar work. ~ Doors and windows cut in a house: absence makes the house work. ~ Presence gives things their value, but absence makes them work.

—[11c12t] Chichung Huang ~ Thirty spokes share a hub; ~ In its nothingness ~ Rests the carriage's usefulness. ~ One burns clay to make a pot; ~ In its nonbeing ~ Rests the clay pot's usefulness. ~ One cuts out doors and windows; ~ In its nonbeing ~ Rests the room's usefulness. ~ Therefore, being provides the advantage; ~ Nonbeing provides the usefulness.

—[11c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ Thirty spokes share one hub to make a wheel. ~ Through its non-being (wu), ~ There is (yu) the use (yung) of the carriage. ~ Mold clay into a vessel (ch'i). ~ Through its non-being (wu), ~ There is (yu) the use (yung) of the vessel. ~ Cut out doors and windows to make a house. ~ Through its non-being (wu), ~ There is (yu) the use (yung) of the house. ~ Therefore in the being (yu-chih) of a thing, ~ There lies the benefit (li). ~ In the non-being (wu-chih) of a thing, ~ There lies its use (yun).

—[11c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ A wheel was made through the process of assembling thirty spokes together, by befitting each spoke into individual holes (on the hub); ~ This illustrates that the holes (emptiness) are useful means in making carts; ~ A kitchen utensil (bowl) was made, because a hole was perforated (emptiness was created) in the middle of a lump of [solid] clay; ~ This again is an example that emptiness is useful for the shaping of a container; ~ Part of the solid walls of a room were cut out open so these openings could be used for either windows or doors; ~ Once again it is an example that emptiness (the voided sections of the wall) is useful in the completion of a room. ~ Accordingly: ~ Existence (Being) is advantageous; ~ While void (not to have the existence; Nothingness) is useful (significant) too.

—[11c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ Thirty spokes converge upon one hub; but it is the center hole that is the use of the cart. ~ We shape a lump of clay into a vessel; but it is the empty space within the vessel that is its use. ~ We make doors and windows for a chamber; but it is the empty space within it that is its use. ~ Thus, while the beings are profitable, the non-being is useful.

—[11c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ Thirty spokes connected to one hub with a hole (for shaft), can be used as a wheel. ~ Using clay to make a concave pottery, it can be used as a container. ~ Buildings with doors and windows can be houses. ~ Therefore, solidness provides the utility, and hollowness makes things useful.

—[11c17t] Arthur Waley ~ We put thirty spokes together and call it a wheel; ~ But it is on the space where there is nothing that the usefulness of the wheel depends. ~ We turn clay to make a vessel; ~ But it is on the space where there is nothing that the usefulness of the vessel depends. ~ We pierce doors and windows to make a house; ~ And it is on these spaces where there is nothing that the usefulness of the house depends. ~ Therefore just as we take advantage of what is, we should ~ recognize the usefulness of what is not.

—[11c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ Thirty spokes share one hub. ~ It is exactly where there is nothing of it that the functionality of the wheel resides. ~ Mix clay with water to make a vessel. ~ It is exactly where there is nothing of it that the functionality of the vessel resides. ~ Cut doors and windows to make a room. ~ It is exactly where there is nothing of it that the functionality of the room resides. ~ Therefore this is how what is there provides benefit and how what is not there provides functionality.

—[11c19t] Lin Yutang ~ THE UTILITY OF NOT-BEING ~ Thirty spokes unite around the nave; ~ From their not-being (loss of their individuality) ~ Arises the utility of the wheel. ~ Mold clay into a vessel; ~ From its not-being (in the vessel's hollow) ~ Arises the utility of the vessel. ~ Cut out doors and windows in the house(-wall), ~ From their not-being (empty space) arises the utility of the house. ~ Therefore by the existence of things we profit. ~ And by the non-existence of things we are served.

—[11c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ Thirty spokes converge on a single hub, ~ but it is in the space where there is nothing that the usefulness of the cart lies. ~ Clay is molded to make a pot, ~ but it is in the space where there is nothing that the usefulness of the clay pot lies. ~ Cut out doors and windows to make a room, ~ but it is in the spaces where there is nothing that the usefulness of the room lies. ~ Therefore, ~ Benefit may be derived from something, but it is in nothing that we find usefulness.

—[11c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ Thirty spokes connect to the wheel's hub; ~ yet, it is the center hole that makes it useful. ~ Clay is shaped into a vessel; ~ yet, it is the emptiness within that makes it useful. ~ Doors and windows are cut for a room; ~ yet it is the space where there is nothing that makes it useful. ~ Therefore, ~ though advantage comes from what is; ~ usefulness comes from what is not.

— [11c22t] David H. Li ~ Thirty spokes share one hub. ~ The hollow in the hub expresses the carriage's usefulness. ~ With clay, a vessel is molded. ~ The hollow within expresses the vessel's usefulness. ~ With doors and windows, a room is formed. ~ The hollow within expresses the room's usefulness. ~ Thus, visible provides the facility; hollow expresses its usefulness.

— [11c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ Thirty spokes share a hub; ~ The usefulness of the cart ~ lies in the space where there is nothing. ~ Clay is kneaded into a vessel; ~ The usefulness of the vessel ~ lies in the space where there is nothing. ~ A room is created by cutting out doors and windows; ~ The usefulness of the room ~ lies in the space where there is nothing. ~ Therefore, ~ The benefit of things lies in the usefulness of nothing.

— [11c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ Thirty spokes unite in the middle of the wheel, ~ And because of the part between them where nothing exists, ~ We enjoy the use of the carriage wheel. ~ Clay is formed into bowls and vessels, ~ And because of the hollow in it where nothing exists, ~ We use them as vessels. ~ Doors and windows are cut into the walls of the house, ~ And since they are empty space, we can use them. ~ Therefore, on the one hand, we have the advantage of what exists, ~ And, on the other, we utilize the non-existent. ~ Without that which does not exist, we cannot take advantage of the wheel, the vessel, or the house. ~ Without wooden spokes, clay, and walls, we cannot take advantage of the space they contain. ~ Ultimately, existence and non-existence coexist and are intertwined.

— [11c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ Thirty spokes on a cartwheel ~ Go towards the hub that is the centre ~ - but look, there is nothing at the centre and that is precisely why it works! ~ If you mould a cup you have to make a hollow: ~ it is the emptiness within it that makes it useful. ~ In a house or room it is the empty spaces ~ - the doors, the windows - that make it useable. ~ They all use what they are made of to do what they do, ~ but without their nothingness they would be nothing.

— [11c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ Thirty spokes share one hub. ~ It is just the space (the Nothingness) between them ~ That makes a cart function as a cart. ~ Knead clay to make a vessel ~ And you find within it the space ~ That makes a vessel as a vessel. ~ To build a house with doors and windows ~ And you find within them the space ~ That makes a house function as a house. ~ Hence the Being (substance) can provide a condition ~ Under which usefulness is found, ~ But the Nothingness (space) is the usefulness itself.

— [11c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ Thirty spokes share one hub, yet the spokes and the hub cannot make use of the carriage. ~ Mix water, mud and earth and they can be shaped into a vessel, yet they cannot make use of the vessel itself. ~ Cut out windows and doors to create a room, yet they cannot make use of the room itself. ~ Therefore take the useful as the useless, the useless as the useful.

— [11c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ Thirty strokes radiate from the axle, ~ And there is a good working cart when it is empty. ~ Clay is given shapes for holding things, ~ And there is a good working ware when it is not full. ~ Windows and doors have been made, ~ And there is a good working house when it is not occupied. ~ Therefore, in general principle, ~ Seeking after being is for profit, ~ Keeping non-being is for use.

— [11c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ The Utility of The Void ~ Lao Tze says, ~ It takes thirty spokes to share one nave. ~ Because a nave is a void space, we can have the use of the cart. ~ People knead clay to make a bowl. ~ Because a bowl is void in the center, we can use the bowl. ~ People cut out of a wall to make a door and a window. ~ Because they are void spaces, we can have the use of apartments. ~ Thus, this is something we can gain, that the positive existence shall serve for profitable adaption, ~ and that which has no existence shall serve for its purpose.

— [11c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ Thirty spokes unite in one nave, ~ And because of the part where nothing exists we have the use of a carriage wheel. ~ Clay is moulded into vessels, ~ And because of the space where nothing exists we are able to use them as vessels. ~ Doors and windows are cut out in the walls of a house, ~ And because they are empty spaces, we are able to use them. ~ Therefore, on the one hand we have the benefit of existence, and on the other, we make use of non-existence.

—[11c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ Thirty spokes converge in a nave; ~ just because of its nothingness [void] the usefulness of the cart exists. ~ Molded clay forms a vessel; ~ just because of its nothingness [hollowness] the usefulness of the utensil exists. ~ Doors and windows are cut into a house; ~ just because of their nothingness [emptiness] the usefulness of the house exists. ~ Therefore, profit from that which exists and utilize that which is absent.

—[11c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ Thirty spokes unite in one hollow hub - ~ in this 'nothing' lies the wheel's usefulness. ~ Knead clay to make a jar - ~ in its 'nothing' lies the jar's usefulness. ~ Cut out doors and windows in making a house - ~ in their 'nothing' lies the house's usefulness. ~ Yes: ~ 'Being' makes for profit, ~ 'Nothing' makes for usefulness.

—[11c33t] Cheng Lin ~ Thirty spokes share the space of one nave. ~ The substance and the void are both essential to the usefulness of a carriage. ~ Clay is moulded to make vessels. ~ The substance and the void are both essential to the usefulness of a vessel. ~ Doors and windows are hewn in a house. ~ The substance and the void are both essential to the usefulness of a house. ~ Thus, the presence of something may prove beneficial, just as the absence of something may prove useful.

—[11c34t] Yi Wu ~ Join thirty spokes at one hub; ~ in its emptiness, the carriage has its use. ~ Mold clay into a vessel; ~ in its emptiness, the vessel has its use. ~ Make doors and windows for a room; ~ in its emptiness, the room has its use. ~ Therefore, to have existence is beneficial; ~ not to have it is useful.

—[11c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ Thirty spokes come together at the hub. ~ The empty hub houses the axle of the wheel, and this allows the cart to move. ~ You mould clay to make utensils. ~ The empty space of the container makes it useful. ~ While building a house, you put in windows and doors. ~ The empty space gives us the room to use. ~ The substantial part creates the space, and thus provides us the benefit. ~ However, it is in the empty space that the actual utility lies.

—[11c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ Thirty spokes together make a wheel for a cart. ~ It is the empty space in the center which enables it to be used. ~ Mold clay into a vessel; ~ it is the emptiness within that creates the usefulness of the vessel. ~ Cut out doors and windows in a house; ~ it is the empty space inside that creates the usefulness of the house. ~ Thus, what we have may be something substantial, ~ but its usefulness lies in the unoccupied, empty space. ~ The substance of your body is enlivened by maintaining the part of you that is unoccupied.

—[11c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ Thirty spokes are joined at the hub. ~ From their non-being arises the function of the wheel. ~ Lumps of clay are shaped into a vessel. ~ From their non-being arises the function of the vessel. ~ Doors and windows are constructed together to make a chamber. ~ From their non-being arises the function of the chamber. ~ Therefore, as individual beings, these things are useful materials. ~ Constructed together in their non-being, they give rise to function.

—[11c38t] Henry Wei ~ Utility of Non-Being ~ Wu Yung ~ Thirty spokes converge on the nave of a wheel: ~ It is where there is non-being (hollow space) ~ That the usefulness of the wheel lies. ~ Clay is molded into a vessel: ~ It is where there is non-being ~ That the usefulness of the vessel lies. ~ Doors and windows are hewn out to make a room: ~ It is where there is non-being ~ That the usefulness of the room lies. ~ Therefore, while being is valuable, ~ It is non-being that is useful.

—[11c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ Thirty spokes share one hub; ~ On its non-being depends the usefulness of the wheel. ~ You make a vessel, kneading clay; ~ On its non-being depends the usefulness of the vessel. ~ You make a room, carving out doors and windows; ~ On its non-being depends the usefulness of the room. ~ Therefore, being's advantage ~ Is non-being's usefulness.

— [11c40t] Tao Huang ~ Thirty spokes join at one hub, ~ Yet it is the emptiness inside the hub that makes the vehicle useful; ~ Clay is molded into a vessel, ~ Yet it is the hollowness that makes the vessel useful; ~ Windows and doors are cut out, ~ Yet it is their empty space that makes the room usable. ~ So, any having makes for excess, ~ Any not-having makes for usefulness.

— [11c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ To combine two thirty-spoke wheels makes a cart. ~ Where there is a capacity in it, it possesses the function of a cart. ~ A lump of clay can be made into pottery. ~ Where there is a capacity within it, it possesses the function of a vessel. ~ A house is built with windows and doors. ~ Where there is a capacity in it, it possesses the function of a house. ~ Thus to possess a thing is for its utility, while its capacity is its function.

— [11c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ Thirty spokes are united around the hub to make a wheel, ~ But it is on its non-being that the utility of the carriage depends. ~ Clay is molded to form a utensil, ~ But it is on its non-being that the utility of the utensil depends. ~ Doors and windows are cut out to make a room, ~ But it is on its non-being that the utility of the room depends. ~ Therefore turn being into advantage, and turn non-being into utility.

— [12c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ Iridescent colours cause blindness. ~ Beautiful music causes deafness. ~ Delicious food causes loss of taste. ~ Racing and hunting cause madness. ~ Rare goods tempt people to rob and steal. ~ Therefore the sage only wants to feed the people rather than to dazzle them. ~ That's why he goes for the former and turns down the latter.

— [12c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ The five colors blind the eye. ~ The five tones deafen the ear. ~ The five flavors dull the taste. ~ Racing and hunting madden the mind. ~ Precious things lead one astray. ~ Therefore the sage is guided by what he feels and not by what he sees. ~ He lets go of that and chooses this.

— [12c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ Just as the five colors that we see can blind us, ~ So the five sounds that we hear can deafen us, ~ And the five tastes that we taste can dull our sense of taste. ~ As we hunt and chase after a moving target, our minds go wild. ~ So goods that are difficult to get become hurdles in our life journey. ~ For this reason the Sage seeks to fill only the true needs("the needs of the stomach") ~ Rather than to satisfy his senses ("the needs of the eyes"). ~ He gives up the one, ~ And gains the other.

—[12c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ Too much color makes one blind; ~ Too much sound makes one deaf; ~ Too much flavor makes one lose his appetite. ~ Horse racing and hunting makes one's heart wild; ~ Scarce and valuable things makes one want to steal. ~ Therefore, great men made people value basic needs, not luxuries. ~ So, they kept the former and threw away the latter.

—[12c09t] Walter Gorn Old, SHUTTING THE DOORS ~ Light will blind a man, sound will make him deaf, taste will ruin his palate, the chase will make him wild, and precious things will tempt him. ~ Therefore does the wise man provide for the soul and not for the senses. ~ He ignores the one and takes the other with both hands.

—[12c10t] James Legge ~ Colour's five hues from th' eyes their sight will take; ~ Music's five notes the ears as deaf can make; ~ The flavours five deprive the mouth of taste; ~ The chariot course, and the wild hunting waste ~ Make mad the mind; and objects rare and strange, ~ Sought for, men's conduct will to evil change. ~ Therefore the sage seeks to satisfy (the craving of) the belly, and not the (insatiable longing of the) eyes. ~ He puts from him the latter, and prefers to seek the former.

—[12c11t] David Hinton ~ The five colors blind eyes. ~ The five tones deafen ears. ~ The five tastes blur tongues. ~ Fast horses and breathtaking hunts make minds wild and crazy. ~ Things rare and expensive make people lose their way. ~ That's why a sage tends to the belly, not the eye, always ignores that and chooses this.

—[12c12t] Chichung Huang ~ The five colors make people's eyes blind; ~ Galloping and hunting make people's heart go wild; ~ Goods hard to come by make people's acts injurious. ~ The five flavors make people's mouth numb; ~ The five notes make people's ears deaf. ~ Hence, when the sage man ruled, ~ He supported the stomach, but not the eye. ~ Therefore, he abandoned that and chose this.

—[12c13t] Ellen M. —[12c93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Пять цветов глаза ослепляют. ~ Пять звуков уши оглушают. ~ Пять вкусов рот ощущений лишают. ~ Стремительные скачки по полям и пустошам до безумия доводят. ~ Труднодоступные товары препятствуют благим свершениям. ~ Поэтому совершенномудрый заботится о полном животе, а не о том, что приятно для глаза. ~ Отбрасывая то, берет он это.

—[12c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Пять цветов ослепляют человека. ~ Пять звуков оглушают человека. ~ Пять вкусов забивают рот человека. ~ Погоня и охота приводят сердце человека в бешенство. ~ Трудно добываемое богатство вредит человеческим поступкам. ~ Вот почему совершенномудрый человек занят животом (внутренним), а не занят глазами (внешним). ~ Вот почему отбрасывает одно, избирает другое.

—[12c95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Пять цветов притупляют зрение. ~ Пять звуков притупляют слух. ~ Пять вкусовых ощущений притупляют вкус. ~ Быстрая езда и охота волнуют сердце. ~ Драгоценные вещи заставляют человека совершать преступления. ~ Поэтому совершенномудрый стремится к тому, чтобы сделать жизнь сытой, а не к тому, чтобы иметь красивые вещи. ~ Он отказывается от последнего и ограничивается первым.

—[12c96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Пять цветов ослепляют человека. ~ Пять звуков оглушают его. ~ Пять вкусов пресыщают его. ~ Верховая гонка и охота одуряют душу (сердце) человека. ~ Стремление к обладанию редкими драгоценностями влечет человека к преступлению. ~ Отсюда святой муж делает исключительно нравственное, а не для глаз. ~ Поэтому он удаляется от того и приближается к этому.

— [12c97t] В. В. Малявин ~ От пяти цветов у людей слепнут глаза. ~ От пяти звуков у людей глухнут уши. ~ От пяти ароматов люди не чувствуют вкуса. ~ Тот, кто гонится во весь опор за добычей, теряет разум. ~ Редкостные товары портят людские нравы. ~ Вот почему премудрый человек ~ Служит утробе и не служит глазам ~ И потому отвергает то и берет это.

— [12c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Как раз из-за пяти цветов человеческие глаза и слепнут. ~ Как раз из-за пяти звуков человеческие уши и глухнут. ~ Как раз из-за пяти вкусов рот человеческий и теряет способность восприятия вкусовых ощущений. ~ Как раз из-за азарта гонок и пыла охоты в человеческом сердце и возникает безумие. ~ Как раз из-за трудно достающихся товаров и возникают помехи в движениях человека. ~ Это дает: ~ Человек мудрости осуществляет внутренними органами; не осуществляет глазами. ~ Причинность: ~ Отбрасывает то, берет это.

— [13c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ "Regard favor and disgrace with alarm." ~ "Respect great distress as you do your own person." ~ What do I mean when I say "Regard favor and disgrace with alarm"? ~ Favor is inferior. ~ If you get it - be alarmed! ~ If you lose it - be alarmed! ~ This is what I mean when I say "Regard favor and disgrace with alarm." ~ What do I mean when I say "Respect great distress as you do your own person"? ~ The reason why I have great distress ~ Is that I have a body. ~ If I had no body, what distress would I have? ~ Therefore, to one who values acting for himself over acting on behalf of the world, ~ You can entrust the world. ~ And to one who in being parsimonious regards his person as equal to the world, ~ You can turn over the world.

— [13c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ "WELCOME disgrace as a pleasant surprise. ~ Prize calamities as your own body." ~ Why should we "welcome disgrace as a pleasant surprise"? ~ Because a lowly state is a boon: ~ Getting it is a pleasant surprise, ~ And so is losing it! ~ That is why we should "welcome disgrace as a pleasant surprise." ~ Why should we "prize calamities as our own body"? ~ Because our body is the very source of our calamities. ~ If we have no body, what calamities can we have? ~ Hence, only he who is willing to give his body for the sake of the world is fit to be entrusted with the world. ~ Only he who can do it with love is worthy of being the steward of the world.

— [13c03t] D. C. Lau ~ Favour and disgrace are things that startle; ~ High rank is, like one's body, a source of great trouble. ~ What is meant by saying favour and disgrace are things that startle? ~ Favour when it is bestowed on a subject serves to startle as much as when it is withdrawn. ~ This is what is meant by saying that favour and disgrace are things that startle. ~ What is meant by saying that high rank is, like one's body, a source of great trouble? ~ The reason I have great trouble is that I have a body. ~ When I no longer have a body, what trouble have I? ~ Hence he who values his body more than dominion over the empire can be entrusted with the empire. ~ He who loves his body more than dominion over the empire can be given the custody of the empire.

— [13c04t] R. L. Wing ~ There is alarm in both favor and disgrace. ~ Esteem and fear are identified with the self. ~ What is the meaning of "alarm in both favor and disgrace?" ~ Favor ascends; disgrace descends. ~ To attain them brings alarm. ~ To lose them brings alarm. ~ That is the meaning of "alarm in both favor and disgrace." ~ What is the meaning of "esteem and fear are identified with the self?" ~ The reason for our fear is the presence of our self. ~ When we are selfless, What is there to fear? ~ Therefore those who esteem the world as self ~ Will be committed to the world. ~ Those who love the world as self ~ Will be entrusted with the world.

— [13c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ (People) love vanity so much as to be easily alarmed, ~ And they consider the great trouble (vanity) as precious as their lives. ~ What does it mean "to love vanity so much as to be easily alarmed"? ~ Vanity is inferior in itself. ~ (And yet people) are pleasantly surprised when they receive it, ~ And also frightened when they lose it. ~ This is what it means "to love vanity so much as to be easily alarmed." ~ What does it mean "to consider the great trouble as precious as their lives"? ~ The reason why I have the great trouble (vanity) is that I have a body. ~ If I have no body, What trouble could I have? ~ Therefore only those who value themselves above the world can undertake its important task. ~ Only those who love themselves above the world can be entrusted with its important task.

—[13c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ Accept disgrace willingly. ~ Accept misfortune as the human condition. ~ What do you mean by "Accept disgrace willingly"? ~ Accept being unimportant. ~ Do not be concerned with loss or gain. ~ This is called "accepting disgrace willingly." ~ What do you mean by "Accept misfortune as the human condition"? ~ Misfortune comes from having a body. ~ Without a body, how could there be misfortune? ~ Surrender yourself humbly; then you can be trusted to care for all things. ~ Love the world as your own self; then you can truly care for all things.

—[13c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ When the emperor bestows his favors, one feels wary; ~ When the emperor unleashes his anguish, one also feels wary. ~ In the same light we should be wary of our body. ~ Why is it that favor, or anguish from the emperor makes us wary? ~ Because we are under him, it is natural that we are wary when we gain or lose his favor. ~ Why is it that we should be wary of our bodies? ~ If we own our body, it is natural that we are wary if something should happen to our bodies. ~ If we disown our bodies, there will be nothing to fear! ~ We should give our bodies up to the world, ~ As if they could be entrusted to all under heaven. ~ Love is based on giving our bodies up to the world, ~ As if they could be entrusted to all under heaven.

—[13c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ Mundane people say: "Patronage and insults are shocking; ~ Be extremely careful of big disasters that can fall on you." ~ What is "Patronage and insults are shocking"? ~ They believe that patronage is great and insults are horrible. ~ Therefore, when they receive patronage, they are shocked and delighted; ~ When they receive insults, they are shocked and frightened. ~ So they say, "Patronage and insults are shocking." ~ How can we comment on "Be extremely careful of big disasters that can fall on you"? ~ Disaster can fall on me only when I think of myself. ~ If I do not think about myself, what am I afraid of? ~ Therefore, those who value giving themselves to society the most can govern society. ~ Those who devote themselves to society can take care of society.

—[13c09t] Walter Gorn Old, PREVENTING A FALL ~ Honour and shame are the same as fear. ~ Fortune and disaster are the same as the person. ~ What is said of honour and shame is this: shame is abasement, which is feared whether it be absent or present. ~ So dignity and shame are inseparable from the fear which both occasion. ~ What is said of fortune and disaster is this: fortune and disaster are things which befall the person. ~ So without personality how should I suffer disaster or the reverse? ~ Therefore by the accident of good fortune a man may rule the world for a time. ~ But by virtue of love he may rule the world for ever.

—[13c10t] James Legge ~ Favour and disgrace would seem equally to be feared; ~ honour and great calamity, to be regarded as personal conditions (of the same kind). ~ What is meant by speaking thus of favour and disgrace? ~ Disgrace is being in a low position (after the enjoyment of favour). ~ The getting that (favour) leads to the apprehension (of losing it), and the losing it leads to the fear of (still greater calamity): ~ - this is what is meant by saying that favour and disgrace would seem equally to be feared. ~ And what is meant by saying that honour and great calamity are to be (similarly) regarded as personal conditions? ~ What makes me liable to great calamity is my having the body (which I call myself); ~ if I had not the body, what great calamity could come to me? ~ Therefore he who would administer the kingdom, honouring it as he honours his own person, may be employed to govern it, ~ and he who would administer it with the love which he bears to his own person may be entrusted with it.

—[13c11t] David Hinton ~ Honor is a contagion deep as fear, renown a calamity profound as self. ~ Why do I call honor a contagion deep as fear? ~ Honor always dwindles away, so earning it fills us with fear and losing it fills us with fear. ~ And why do I call renown a calamity profound as self? ~ We only know calamity because we have these selves. ~ If we didn't have selves what calamity could touch us? ~ When all beneath heaven is your self in renown you trust yourself to all beneath heaven, ~ and when all beneath heaven is your self in love you dwell throughout all beneath heaven.

—[13c12t] Chichung Huang ~ "People cherish humiliations like surprises; ~ They treasure great calamities like their lives." ~ What is meant by ~ "People cherish humiliations like surprises"? ~ Humiliations are degrading, ~ Yet they receive one like a surprise; ~ Lose one like a surprise. ~ This is what is meant by ~ "People cherish humiliations like surprises." ~ What is meant by ~ "They treasure great calamities like their lives"? ~ The reason why I have great calamities ~ Is because I have my life; ~ If I did not have my life, ~ What calamities would I have? ~ Therefore, if you treasure governing your life ~ More than governing the empire, ~ You deserve to be entrusted with the empire; ~ If you grudge using your life ~ To govern the empire, ~ You deserve to be charged with the empire.

—[13c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ Accept honors and disgraces as surprises, ~ Treasure great misfortunes as the body. ~ Why say: "Accept honors and disgraces as surprises"? ~ Honors elevate (shang), ~ Disgraces depress (hsia). ~ One receives them surprised, ~ Loses them surprised. ~ Thus: "Accept honors and disgraces as surprises." ~ Why say: "Treasure great misfortunes as the body"? ~ I have great misfortunes, ~ Because I have a body. ~ If I don't have a body, ~ What misfortunes do I have? ~ Therefore treasure the body as the world, ~ As if the body can be entrusted to the world. ~ Love the body as the world, ~ As if the body can be entrusted to the world.

—[13c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ Either to be honored or to be insulted are equally startling; ~ The fear of having disaster befallen upon one's physical self is the most appalling [distress]. ~ Why did I say that [when a person] was in the situation of receiving either honor or insult are coequally startling? ~ When one was honored, one felt being elevated and filled with excitement; ~ When one was insulted, one felt being knocked down and was wrapped in depression; ~ Receiving honor, as well as losing honor, were both associated with [emotional] agitation; ~ Therefore they are both startling. ~ Why the fear of disaster befalling upon one's body (physical self) is the mostly appalling fright? ~ The reason I, a person, who is vulnerable to disaster is because I have this physical body; ~ If I do not have a body, how then can disaster possibly take place in me? ~ Accordingly: ~ Only the individual, who values the welfare of the world, to the extent that he would even sacrifice his body (physical self) for it, is qualified to be enthroned with the trusteeship of the world; ~ Only the individual, who loves the world more than his physical self, deserves to be entrusted with the responsibility of the world.

—[13c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ "Welcome disgrace as a fright. Prize calamities as your own body." ~ Why do we say "welcome disgrace as a fright"? ~ Welcome denotes "in the low place": Getting "welcome" is a fright, and so is losing it! ~ That is why we say "welcome disgrace as a fright". ~ Why do we say "prize calamity as your own self"? ~ Because our self is the very source of our calamity. ~ If we have no self, what calamities can we have? ~ Hence, only he who is willing to give his self for the sake of the world is fit to be entrusted with the world. ~ Only he who can love to give his self for the sake of the world is worthy of being the steward of the world.

—[13c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ The honor and the disgrace are like emotional impacts. ~ The disaster is regarded as the threat to life. ~ What does it mean by "The honor and the disgrace are like emotional impacts?" ~ The honor is awarded to subordinates. ~ When the honor is obtained, people are thrilled; ~ when the honor is lost, people are depressed. ~ So they are emotionally impacted. ~ What does it mean by "The disaster is regarded as the threat to life?" ~ The reason we feel threatened because we care too much about ourselves. ~ If we are selfless, who can threaten us? ~ To those who can sacrifice themselves for the world, we can trust them with the world. ~ To those who love the people more than themselves, we can handle the ruling power.

—[13c17t] Arthur Waley ~ 'Favour and disgrace goad as it were to madness; high rank hurts keenly as our bodies hurt.' ~ What does it mean to say that favour and disgrace goad as it were to madness? ~ It means that when a ruler's subjects get it they turn distraught, when they lose it they turn distraught. ~ That is what is meant by saying favour and disgrace goad as it were to madness. ~ What does it mean to say that high rank hurts keenly as our bodies hurt? ~ The only reason that we suffer hurt is that we have bodies; if we had no bodies, how could we suffer? ~ Therefore we may accept the saying: ~ 'He who in dealing with the empire regards his high rank as though it were his body is the best person to be entrusted with rule; he who in dealing with the empire loves his subjects as one should love one's body is the best person to whom one can commit the empire.'

—[13c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ Favor and disgrace are enough cause for alarm, and self-importance is a great calamity that can cost one his person. ~ What is meant by "favor and disgrace are enough cause for alarm"? ~ Favor, when it is had by an inferior, is as alarming as when it is lost by him. ~ This is what is meant by "favor and disgrace are enough cause for alarm." ~ What is meant by self-importance being "a great calamity that can cost one his person"? ~ The reason I suffer such a great calamity is that I am bound by my own person. ~ When I am no longer bound by my own person, ~ What calamity could befall me? ~ Therefore, because such a one values his own person as much as anything under Heaven, he may be entrusted with all under Heaven. ~ Because such a one cherishes his own person as much as anything under Heaven, he may have all under Heaven rendered to his care.

—[13c19t] Lin Yutang ~ PRAISE AND BLAME ~ "Favor and disgrace cause one dismay; ~ What we value and what we fear are within our Self." ~ What does this mean: ~ "Favor and disgrace cause one dismay?" ~ Those who receive a favor from above ~ Are dismayed when they receive it, ~ And dismayed when they lose it. ~ What does this mean: ~ "What we value and what we fear are within our Self?" ~ We have fears because we have a self. ~ When we do not regard that self as self, ~ What have we to fear? ~ Therefore he who values the world as his self ~ May then be entrusted with the government of the world; ~ And he who loves the world as his self - ~ The world may then be entrusted to his care.

—[13c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ "Being favored is so disgraceful that it startles, ~ Being honored is an affliction as great as one's body." ~ What is the meaning of "Being favored is so disgraceful that it startles"? ~ Favor is debasing; ~ To find it is startling, ~ To lose it is startling. ~ This is the meaning of "Being favored is so disgraceful that it startles." ~ What is the meaning of "Being honored is an affliction as great as one's body"? ~ The reason I suffer great afflictions is because I have a body; ~ If I had no body, what affliction could I suffer? ~ Therefore, ~ When a man puts more emphasis on caring for his body than on caring for all under heaven, ~ then all under heaven can be entrusted to him. ~ When a man is sparing of his body in caring for all under heaven, ~ then all under heaven can be delivered to him.

—[13c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ Both favor and disgrace bring fear. ~ Great trouble comes from having a body. ~ What is meant by: ~ "Both favor and disgrace bring fear"? ~ Favor leads to a fear of losing it and disgrace leads to a fear of greater trouble. ~ What is meant by: ~ "Great trouble comes from having a body"? ~ The reason you have trouble is that you are self-conscious. ~ No trouble can befall a self-free person. ~

Therefore, surrender your self-interest. ~ Love others as much as you love yourself. ~ Then you can be entrusted with all things under heaven.

—[13c22t] David H. Li ~ Receiving favor and receiving disgrace are both causes for concern, ~ more so than being visited by a catastrophic disease. ~ Why are favors and disgraces causes for concern? ~ Favor is beneath one. ~ Receiving it is a cause for concern; losing it is a cause for concern. ~ Why [favors and disgraces] are more a cause for concern than being visited by a catastrophic disease? ~ When I have a catastrophic disease, ~ it is inflicted upon my body. ~ When I am beyond my body, how can I be visited by diseases? ~ Thus, ~ when one values one's body for the good of the world, ~ one may be consigned with the world's care. ~ When one treasures one's body for the good of the world, ~ one may be vested with the world's care.

—[13c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ Honor and disgrace both startle people. ~ Undue significance is attached to such tribulations ~ as though they were matters of life and death. ~ Honor and disgrace both startle people, ~ Because honor means higher and disgrace means lower in the opinion of others. ~ Hence, ~ they become startled with pleasure when honor is given, ~ And they become startled with displeasure when honor is taken away. ~ Undue significance is attached to such tribulations ~ as though they were matters of life and death, ~ For people think the physical self is real. ~ If people realize the unreality of the physical self, ~ How can they attach significance to such tribulations as honor or disgrace? ~ Therefore, ~ only one who values the world as oneself is fit to tend the world; ~ Only one who loves the world as oneself can be entrusted with the care of the world.

—[13c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ "Honor and disgrace are like fear. ~ Fortune and disaster are like our body." ~ What does "Honor and disgrace are like fear" mean? ~ Honor is located in a high place, and disgrace is located in a low place. ~ When you have them, it is as if you are in a state of fear, and when you no longer have them, it is also as if you are in a state of fear. ~ Therefore, honor and disgrace are like fear. ~ What does "Fortune and disaster are like our body" mean? ~ We have fortune and disaster because we have a body. ~ When we do not have a body, how can fortune and disaster affect us? ~ Therefore, the person who relates to the world like he relates to the good fortune of his body can rule the world. ~ The world can be safely entrusted to the person who loves it like he loves his body.

—[13c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ Most people fret about themselves and their status, but you don't have to do this. ~ What is success and what is failure? ~ If you have prestige and favour, ~ all you worry about is that it'll get taken away. ~ And if you have a lowly place, ~ you are still basically afraid. ~ So both, at the root, make for fear. ~ What does it mean that success is a problem? ~ It means people are too bound up in themselves. ~ If they weren't so self-obsessed they'd have no need to be worried. ~ If you can put yourself aside - ~ then you can do things for the whole of the world. ~ And if you love the world, like this - ~ then you are ready to serve it.

—[13c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ Honor and disgrace are both startling. ~ It is like cherishing great trouble (vanity) as one's life and body. ~ What is meant by saying that honor and disgrace are startling? ~ Honor itself, though mean, gives pleasant surprise to those who obtain it ~ As well as startles them when they lose it. ~ What is meant by saying that it is like cherishing great trouble as one's life and body? ~ Because my life and body is the very source of great trouble. ~ If I have no body and life, ~ What trouble can I suffer? ~ Thus he who can value the empire as he values his own life and body ~ Can be entrusted with the care of the empire. ~ Thus he who can cherish the empire as he cherishes his own life and body ~ Can be entrusted with the care of the empire.

—[13c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ Accept favour and disgrace as a threat that troubles the body like a disease. ~

What does it mean to accept favour and disgrace as a threat? ~ Everyone seeks to be favoured. ~ No one seeks to be disgraced. ~ When one receives it, it causes alarm. ~ When one loses it, it causes alarm. ~ Therefore favour and disgrace are both threatening. ~ What does it mean that the disease troubles one's body? ~ One suffers from the disease because one treasures one's body. ~ If one does not love one's body, one will no longer suffer from the disease. ~ Therefore ~ entrust the land under Heaven to the one who does not treasure his body, ~ sanction the land under Heaven to the one who does not love his body. ~ He who does not love even his own body will not treasure rulership, and so he will truly care for all things. — [13c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ Favor is invited and disgrace is feared, ~ As if they are a disastrous matter of life and death. ~ One is surprised when favor is bestowed. ~ One is again surprised when favor is lost ~ Or when one is afflicted with disgrace. ~ But why could they mean so much to us? ~ I would say I can have disasters ~ Only because I treasure my own life too much. ~ But if I live beyond my physical existence, ~ What disaster can matter to me? ~ Therefore, we should value our own life only to the extent ~ That we are supporting the world, ~ And love our physical existence only to the extent ~ That the world has been entrusted to us.

— [13c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ Honor And Disgrace ~ Lao Tze says, ~ Honor and disgrace alike give rise to fear, ~ because this is the fear that the great calamity might fall upon the corporeal self. ~ What is honor? ~ And what is disgrace? ~ Honor means that he who was low before has been promoted. ~ Since he has been promoted, he is afraid of losing his promotion, which is disgrace. ~ Thus he who has been promoted lives in fear that he may be degraded. ~ And he who has been degraded is haunted by the dread that his degradation may last forever. ~ That is why honor and disgrace alike give rise to fear. ~ What is the meaning of fearing the great calamity coming upon the corporeal self? ~ How we can sense that the great calamity is due to the fact that we inherit corporeal self. ~ If we don't inherit the corporeal self, what kind of calamity can afflict us? ~ Therefore, ~ one who has regard for his personal health is more important than he who governs the world, and is eligible to be trusted with the world; ~ one who loves himself should be put before he who governs the world, and is qualified to be handed over the world.

— [13c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ 'Favour and disgrace are like fear; fortune and disaster are like our body.' ~ What does it mean by 'Favour and disgrace are like fear'? ~ Favour is in a higher place, and disgrace in a lower place. ~ When you win them you are like being in fear, and when you lose them you are also like being in fear. ~ So favour and disgrace are like fear. ~ What does it mean by 'Fortune and disaster are like our body'? ~ We have fortune and disaster because we have a body. ~ When we have no body, how can fortune or disaster befall us? ~ Therefore he who regards the world as he does the fortune of his own body can govern the world. ~ He who loves the world as he does his own body can be entrusted with the world.

— [13c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ Favor and disgrace are likely to cause fear. ~ Highly respect great trouble as one respects his own body. ~ What is meant by "favor and disgrace are likely to cause fear"? ~ Favor is for the inferior: ~ Obtaining it, one will fear it. ~ Losing it, one will fear it. ~ This means that "favor and disgrace are likely to cause fear." ~ What is meant by "highly respecting great trouble as one respects his own body"? ~ "I have great trouble because I have a body; ~ When I no longer have a body, how can I have trouble?" ~ Therefore, one who respects himself for the world can be lodged with it; ~ One who loves himself for the world can be entrusted with it.

— [13c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ "Favor and disgrace: this means being upset, ~ high rank does great damage to your self." ~ What does it mean, "favor and disgrace: this means being upset"? ~ Favor is degrading: ~ Gaining it you will be upset, ~ losing it you will be upset. ~ This is what it means, "favor and disgrace: this means being upset." ~ What does it mean, "high rank does great damage to your self"? ~ What is the source of the great damage done me? ~ It is because I have a self. ~ If I had no self, what damage could be done me?

~ This is what it means, "high rank does great damage to your self." ~ Yes: ~ A valuing of one's self, ~ that regards the self the same as the world - ~ this means one can be entrusted with the world. ~ A loving of one's self, ~ that regards the self the same as the world - ~ this means one can be given the world.

—[13c33t] Cheng Lin ~ Honour and disgrace are alike a cause of excitement. ~ The great trouble of man lies in the love for self. ~ What is meant by saying that honour and disgrace are alike a cause of excitement? ~ Man prefers honour to disgrace. ~ When he has the one, he becomes excited; ~ when he loses the other, he becomes excited. ~ This means that honour and disgrace are alike a cause of excitement. ~ What is meant by saying that the great trouble of man lies in the love for self? ~ Man is beset with great trouble because of his consciousness of self. ~ If he is selfless, how can there be any trouble? ~ Wherefore, if a man esteems himself only as much as he esteems the whole world, he will find security therein. ~ If a man loves the world as much as he loves himself, he will find security therein.

—[13c34t] Yi Wu ~ Favor is like disgrace, which startles us. ~ Big troubles should be treated as seriously as our bodies. ~ What is meant by, "Favor is like disgrace, which startles us"? ~ Favor is lowly. ~ Getting it startles us; ~ Losing it startles us; ~ Thus, favor is like disgrace, which startles us. ~ What is meant by, "Big troubles are treated as seriously as our bodies"? ~ The reason that we have big troubles is that we possess bodies. ~ If we did not possess bodies, what troubles could we have? ~ Therefore, ~ only the man who values himself for the sake of the world ~ is worthy of being entrusted with the world; ~ only the man who loves himself for the sake of the world ~ is worthy of being relied on by the world.

—[13c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ Whether you are exalted or disgraced, you are uneasy. ~ It is because you are fearful of imminent disaster. ~ Why should you be uneasy when you are exalted or disgraced? ~ Being exalted, you feel proud and elated. ~ In disgrace, you feel shameful and miserable. ~ Gaining honour, you fear losing it. ~ Losing honour, you suffer severe humiliation. ~ This is why you feel terribly uneasy when you are exalted or disgraced. ~ Why is there a fear of imminent disaster? ~ The fear exists because you are constantly worrying about when disaster will strike you. ~ If you can forget about yourself, then there is no fear. ~ However, if you manage the country with the same consideration as you have for yourself, ~ Then you can be entrusted for the job. ~ If you rule the country in the same manner as you love yourself, ~ You deserve to be the trustee of the nation.

—[13c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ Favor and disgrace are both causes of shock. ~ When one is favored, one is shocked. ~ When one is disgraced, one is also shocked. ~ That is because people forget the unadorned plainness of universal life. ~ If they knew this clearly, then what is meant by saying that favor and disgrace are both causes of shock? ~ Favor is no higher than disgrace. ~ What is meant by saying that the greatest trouble is the strong sense of individual self that people carry in all circumstances? ~ People are beset with great trouble because they define their lives so narrowly. ~ If they forsake their narrow sense of self and live wholly, then what can they call trouble? ~ Therefore, only one who dedicates himself to the wholeness of the world is fit to tend the world. ~ Only one who relinquishes the self can be entrusted with responsibility for the life of the world.

—[13c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ Honor and dishonor both move us ~ Because we are troubled by having a self. ~ Why do we say that honor and dishonor move us? ~ Because honor lifts us upward ~ And dishonor lowers us downward, ~ Thus, when we are honored we are moved. ~ When we are dishonored we are also moved. ~ That is why honor and dishonor are both said to move us. ~ Why do we say that the great trouble is having a self? ~ Because we have great trouble simply because we have a self. ~ If we are selfless, then where is the trouble? ~ If we identify our self with the world, ~ Then within our self there is the world. ~ If we love the world as we love our self, ~ Then within our self there is only the world.

—[13c38t] Henry Wei ~ Abhorrence of shame ~ Yen Ch'ih ~ Favor and disgrace both seem startling, ~ Honor is great trouble if identified with the self. ~ What does it mean by saying ~ That favor and disgrace both seem startling? ~ Favor descends from superior to inferior. ~ The recipient seems startled upon getting it; ~ He seems no less startled upon losing it. ~ This is what it means by saying ~ That favor and disgrace both seem startling. ~ What does it mean by saying ~ That honor is great trouble if identified with the self? ~ The reason why I have great trouble ~ Is that I have a self; ~ If I am selfless and unselfish, ~ What trouble do I have? ~ Therefore, he who feels honored ~ In offering himself for the world, ~ Can be assigned the rule of the world; ~ He who loves to offer himself for the world, ~ Can be trusted with the world.

—[13c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ "Be alarmed by favor and disgrace; ~ High rank brings you great misfortune, as if your own body." ~ What is the meaning of "Be alarmed by favor and disgrace"? ~ Regard favor as low. ~ Be alarmed to receive it; ~ Be alarmed to lose it. ~ This is the meaning of "Be alarmed by favor and disgrace." ~ What is the meaning of "High rank brings you great misfortune, as if your own body"? ~ My reason for having great misfortune ~ Is my having a body. ~ If I had no body, ~ What misfortune would I have? ~ Therefore, if a man values the care of his body above ruling all under Heaven, ~ He may be given all under Heaven. ~ If a man cherishes his body more than ruling all under Heaven, ~ All under Heaven may be entrusted to him.

—[13c40t] Tao Huang ~ Favor and disgrace surprise the most. ~ Value the trouble as you do the body. ~ Why do "favor and disgrace surprise the most"? ~ Favor enhances only the inferior, ~ Receiving it is a surprise, ~ And losing it is also a surprise. ~ This is why "favor and disgrace surprise the most." ~ Why to "value the trouble as you do the body"? ~ It is only because I have a body that I have trouble. ~ If I did not have a body, where would the trouble be? ~ So, if you value the world as you do the body, ~ You can be entrusted with the world; ~ If you love the body as you love the beauty of the world, ~ You can be responsible for the world.

—[13c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ Yet, honor and dishonor cause the same excitement. ~ Pleasure and worry affect the same body. ~ What does it mean by "honor and dishonor cause the same excitement"? ~ People look up to honor and look down upon dishonor. ~ They are excited when they get the honor; ~ they also are excited when they lose the honor. ~ What does it mean by "the great worry of man is because of love for self"? ~ The reason that we have worry is because we have ourselves. ~ If we could forget ourselves, what else remains to be our worry? ~ Hence, if one loves the world as much as himself, he may be able to rule the world. ~ If one treasures the world as much as himself, he may be trusted with the world.

—[13c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ Be apprehensive when receiving favor or disgrace. ~ Regard great trouble as seriously as you regard your body. ~ What is meant by being apprehensive when receiving favor or disgrace? ~ Favor is considered inferior. ~ Be apprehensive when you receive them and also be apprehensive when you lose them. ~ This is what is meant by being apprehensive when receiving favor or disgrace. ~ What does it mean to regard great trouble as seriously as you regard the body? ~ The reason why I have great trouble is that I have a body. ~ If I have no body, ~ What trouble could I have? ~ Therefore: ~ He who values the world as his body may be entrusted with the empire. ~ He who loves the world as his body may be entrusted with the empire.

—[13c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Благоволение сменяется позором наподобие того, как конь трепещет. ~ В знатности, как в нашем теле, заключено великое несчастье. ~ Что подразумеваю, когда говорю: ~ благоволение сменяется позором наподобие того, как конь трепещет? ~ Благоволение проявляют к низшим. ~ При обретении его они походят на вострепетавшего коня и походят на вострепетавшего коня, когда лишаются благоволения. ~ В этом смысл высказывания: ~ благоволение сменяется позором наподобие того, как конь трепещет. ~ Что значит в знатности, как в нашем теле, заключено великое несчастье? ~ Я потому страдаю от великого несчастья, что у меня есть тело. ~ Но разве испытаю я несчастье, если у меня не будет тела? ~ Кто своим телом станет Поднебесной, когда знатен, тому можно ее поручить. ~ Кто своим телом станет Поднебесной, будучи любимцем, тому можно ее вверить.

— [13c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Слава и позор подобны страху. ~ Ценить своё тело - то же самое, что ценить величайшие несчастья. ~ Что значит: "Слава и позор подобны страху?" ~ Даже при малейшей славе, достигая её - страшатся, утрачивая - страшатся тоже. ~ Это и значит: "Слава и позор подобны страху." ~ Что значит: "Ценить своё тело - то же самое, что ценить величайшие несчастья?" ~ Причина, по которой я сталкиваюсь с величайшими несчастьями, заключена в том, что я имею тело. ~ Если бы я не имел тела, откуда же взяться несчастьям? ~ Поэтому, тому, кто ценит Поднебесную больше, чем себя, может быть доверена Поднебесная. ~ Тот, кто любит Поднебесную больше, чем себя, встретит поддержку Поднебесной.

— [13c93t] Е. А. Торчинов ~ В почете быть столь же страшно, сколь и быть в позоре. ~ Быть почитаемым такая же беда, как обладать телесной самостью. ~ Почему так говорят о почестях и о позоре? ~ Позор нас унижает, ну а почести мы со страхом принимаем и со страхом же теряем. ~ А почему быть почитаемым такая же беда, как обладать телесной самостью? ~ Я потому в беде великой пребываю, что телом-самостью я обладаю. ~ И если б телом-самостью не обладал, то разве б были беды у меня? ~ Поэтому коль человек заботится о теле-самости своей, как о Поднебесной всей, ему и Поднебесная доверится не медля. ~ И если человек дорожит телом-самостью своей, как Поднебесной всей, его признает всякий в Поднебесной.

— [13c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Любовь и бесчестье подобны страху. ~ Почтение и величие приносят страдание, подобно телу. ~ Что значит "любовь и бесчестье подобны страху"? ~ Любовь идет от низов, ее обретают со страхом, ее и теряют со страхом. ~ Вот что значит "любовь и бесчестье подобны страху". ~ Что значит "почтение и величие приносят страдание, подобно телу"? ~ Я потому испытываю большие страдания, что имею тело. ~ Если бы у меня не было тела, разве я испытывал бы какие-либо страдания? ~ Вот почему, тому, кто ценит тело так же, как Поднебесную, ~ пожалуй, можно доверить Поднебесную. ~ Кто любит тело так же, как Поднебесную, ~ на того, пожалуй, можно возложить Поднебесную.

— [13c95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Слава и позор подобны страху. ~ Знатность подобна великому несчастью в жизни. ~ Что значит, слава и позор подобны страху? ~ Это значит, что нижестоящие люди приобретают славу со страхом и теряют ее также со страхом. ~ Это и называется - слава и позор подобны страху. ~ Что значит, знатность подобна великому несчастью в жизни? ~ Это значит, что я имею великое несчастье, потому что я [дорожу] самим собой. ~ Когда я не буду дорожить самим собой, тогда у меня не будет и несчастья. ~ Поэтому знатный, самоотверженно служа людям, может жить среди них. ~ Гуманный, самоотверженно служа людям, может находиться среди них.

— [13c96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Почесть и позор от сильных мира (для мудреца) одинаково странны. ~ Собственное тело тяготит его, как великое бремя. ~ Что значит: почесть и позор от сильных мира одинаково странны (для мудреца)? ~ Почесть от сильных мира - унижение (для мудреца), поэтому, когда она достанется (ему), то (он) относится к ней, как к совершенно призрачной; ~ когда она потеряется, то также к ней относится как к презренной. ~ Вот это-то и есть: к почести и позору от сильных мира относиться как к призрачному. ~ Что значит: собственное тело тяготит его (мудреца), как великое бремя? ~ Я имею потому великую печаль, что имею тело. ~ Когда я буду лишен тела, то не буду иметь никакой печали. ~ Поэтому когда мудрец боится управлять вселенной, то ему можно поручить ее; ~ когда он сожалеет, что управляет вселенной, то ему можно отдать ее.

— [13c97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Милость бесчестит: ее опасайся. ~ Цени великое несчастье как самого себя. ~ Что значит "милость бесчестит: ее опасайся"? ~ Милость для нас - унижение. ~ Бойся, когда ее получаешь, ~ Бойся, когда ее теряешь. ~ Вот что значит "милость бесчестит: ее опасайся". ~ Что значит "цени несчастье как самого себя"? ~ Оттого, что у меня есть "я", у меня есть и несчастье. ~ Не будь у меня моего "я", могу ли я быть несчастлив? ~ Поистине: тому, кто ценит себя больше мира, ~ Можно вверить мир. ~ Тому, кто любит себя, как мир, ~ Можно вручить мир.

— [13c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ И к почестям, и к позору относись как к тревожному предупреждению. ~ Цени большую беду как собственное тело. ~ Что значит: и к почестям, и к позору относиться как к тревожному предупреждению? ~ Почести соответствуют движению вверх. ~ Позор соответствует движению вниз. ~ Обретению их сопутствует тревога. ~ Потере их сопутствует тревога. ~ Это определяется: ~ И к почестям, и к позору относись как к тревожному предупреждению. ~ Что значит: ценить большую беду как собственное тело? ~ Потому для твоей сущности может быть большая беда, что сущность осуществляет наличие тела. ~ И если бы у сущности отсутствовало тело, то откуда бы взялась беда? ~ Причинность: ~ Когда через придавание большого значения собственному телу осуществляешь действия в Поднебесной, тогда можно доверять Поднебесную. ~ Когда через любовь к своему телу осуществляешь действия в Поднебесной, тогда можно поручить Поднебесную.

—[14c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ You look at it and it is not seen, ~ It is called the Formless. ~ You listen to it and it is not heard, ~ It is called the Soundless. ~ You grasp it and it is not to be held, ~ It is called the Intangible. ~ These three cannot be further inquired into. ~ It is the One in reality. ~ Its upper side is not bright, ~ Its underside is not dark, ~ Infinite and boundless, it is hardly namable, ~ It returns to a state with no shape or image. ~ This is called the shapeless shape, the bodiless image, ~ It is called the Vague and Elusive. ~ While meeting it, you cannot see its head, ~ While following it, you fail to see its back. ~ To hold on to the Tao of old in order to harness the things at present, ~ To be able to know the primeval beginning, ~ - This is called the law of Tao.

—[14c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ Look, it cannot be seen - it is beyond form. ~ Listen, it cannot be heard - it is beyond sound. ~ Grasp, it cannot be held - it is intangible. ~ These three are indefinable; ~ Therefore they are joined in one. ~ From above it is not bright; ~ From below it is not dark: ~ An unbroken thread beyond description. ~ It returns to nothingness. ~ The form of the formless, ~ The image of the imageless, ~ It is called indefinable and beyond imagination. ~ Stand before it and there is no beginning. ~ Follow it and there is no end. ~ Stay with the ancient Tao, ~ Move with the present. ~ Knowing the ancient beginning is the essence of Tao.

—[14c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ When we cast our eyes upon it yet cannot see it, ~ We call it yi (literally "flat", "peaceful", or "delighted") ~ When we turn our ears to it yet cannot hear it, ~ We call it xi (literally "rarefied") ~ When we stretch our hands to reach it yet cannot touch it, ~ We call it wei (literally "infinitesimally small") ~ Since we cannot distinguish these three, we equate them as one. ~ Its upper side does not dazzle like strong light. ~ Its under side does not dim like darkness. ~ It is beyond description, ~ And easily confused as nothing. ~ Its shape is shapeless. ~ Its appearance is that of nothing, ~ We call it the "as if." ~ When we greet it, we cannot see its face. ~ When we follow it, we cannot see its back. ~ (Since reality is impossible to track down) ~ I should only follow the Path walked by the ancient Sages. ~ That is how I can deal with situations of the now. ~ Knowing to follow the way of the ancient masters, ~ Can already be called following the Way.

—[14c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ If you look at it but cannot see it, this is called YI. ~ If you listen to it but cannot hear it, this is called XI. ~ If you touch it but cannot feel it, this is called WEI. ~ These three things cannot be fully understood. ~ Therefore, they are mixed into one thing: the DAO. ~ Its top is not bright, its bottom is not dark; ~ It is so elusive it cannot be described. ~ It is not a physical entity, ~ Having a shape that is shapeless and an image without an object. ~ This is why it is so elusive and dynamic. ~ When you look at the front, it has no beginning. ~ When you look behind, it has no end. ~ It allows you to apply the real knowledge of the past to the present. ~ Therefore, if you understand the real knowledge of the past, ~ You understand the principles of the DAO.

—[14c09t] Walter Gorn Old, PRAISING THE VOID ~ I.e. Plainness is that which cannot be seen by looking at it. ~ He. Stillness is that which cannot be heard by listening to it. ~ We. Rareness is that which cannot be felt by handling it. ~ These, being indiscernible, may be regarded as an unity - I H W, Tao. ~ It is not bright above nor dark beneath. ~ Infinite in operation, it is yet without name. ~ Issuing forth it enters into Itself. ~ This is the appearance of the Non-Apparent, the form of the Non-Existent. ~ This is the unfathomable mystery. ~ Going before, its face is not seen; following after, its back is not observed. ~ Yet to regulate one's life by the ancient knowledge of Tao is to have found the path.

—[14c10t] James Legge ~ We look at it, and we do not see it, and we name it 'the Equable.' ~ We listen to it, and we do not hear it, and we name it 'the Inaudible.' ~ We try to grasp it, and do not get hold of it, and we name it 'the Subtle.' ~ With these three qualities, it cannot be made the subject of description; ~ and hence we blend them together and obtain The One. ~ Its upper part is not bright, and its lower part is not obscure. ~ Ceaseless in its action, it yet cannot be named, and then it again returns and becomes nothing. ~ This is called the Form of the Formless, and the Semblance of the Invisible; ~ this is called the Fleeting and Indeterminable. ~ We meet it and do not see its Front; ~ we follow it, and do not see its Back. ~ When we can lay hold of the Tao of old to direct the things of the present day, and are able to know it as it was of old in the beginning, this is called (unwinding) the clue of Tao.

—[14c11t] David Hinton ~ Looked at but never seen, it takes the name invisible. ~ Listened to but never heard, it takes the name ethereal. ~ Held tight but never felt, it takes the name gossamer. ~ You can't unravel these three ~ blurred so utterly they've become one, ~ rising without radiance and setting without darkness, ~ braided together beyond name, woven back always and forever into nothing: ~ this is called formless form or nothing's image, called spectral confusion, ~ something you meet without seeing a front and follow without seeing a back. ~ Abiding in the ancient Way ~ to master what has now come to be ~ and fathom its ancient source: ~ this is called thread of the Way.

—[14c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ [How do we determine the existence of things?] ~ When we exerted to look, but could not see any trace, ~ we described whatever it was as invisible; ~ When we listened attentively, but could not hear anything, ~ we named it as inaudible; ~ When we tried hard to grope, but could not grasp anything, ~ we depicted whatever it was as intangible. ~ When these three processes [of identification] could not yield any more evidences [of their perceptibility], ~ they were confused as one and same thing, i.e. nothing (having no existence). ~ [Furthermore:] ~ When we strove to look upward [for higher canons of Tao], we discovered that we cannot elucidate it [with any perfection]; ~ When we exerted to look downward [for worldly manifestation of Tao], we realized that we cannot scrutinize it [thoroughly]; ~ Constantly, it moved and changed boundlessly that hardly any of our descriptions was felicitous; ~ Subsequently, it was again [conveniently] grouped under the category "nothing" (devoid of existence). ~ [After much probing, the best we can describe is:] ~ If it (Tao) has some form (shape) that, however, can not be depicted [with felicity] by any of us (the searchers); ~ It has [anyhow] some image (phenomenon) that, however, cannot be perceived (formulated) [adequately] by us; ~ [A keen observer can only push to the edge by reporting as follows:] ~ [It is like] A shadowy being glimmers and quivers [and that is all we can perceive]; ~ Even though we have attempted to move to the front of its procession in order to meet it head on, we were still unable see its beginning; ~ We had also tried to follow it from behind, we were similarly unable to find its end. ~ [Nevertheless:] ~ If we would hold on to the venerable ways we have inherited, we could maneuver through present existence [sensibly]; ~ If we have succeeded to ascertain how and why the venerable ways were launched, then we are on our way to know the outline of Tao.

—[14c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ Look at it but you cannot see it; its name is formless. ~ Listen to it but you cannot hear it; its name is soundless. ~ Grasp it but you cannot get it; its name is incorporeal. ~ These three attributes are unfathomable; therefore they mingle into one. ~ Its upper side is not bright; its under side not dim. ~ It continues endlessly, it is unnamable. ~ Until it returns beyond the realm of things, it is called the formless form, the non-material image; it is called the vague. ~ Confront it and you do not see its face! ~ Follow it and you do not see its back! ~ He who keeps with this timeless Way can dominate present events. ~ To know the timeless origin is to go into the Way.

—[14c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ Tao cannot be seen, cannot be heard, and cannot be grasped. ~ We cannot detect them with our senses. ~ Therefore, they form an entirety of Tao. ~ It is neither too bright above, nor is it too dark below. ~ It exists everywhere and yet cannot be pointed out. ~ So it is ultimately abstract. ~ It is a state without concrete constitution; it is an image without concrete shape. ~ So it is evasive. ~ When you look at it, you cannot see the beginning; when you follow it, you cannot see the end. ~ Using the time-tested Tao, we can handle the present problems. ~ Therefore, those who understand Tao understand the laws of the universe.

—[14c17t] Arthur Waley ~ Because the eye gazes but can catch no glimpse of it, ~ It is called elusive. ~ Because the ear listens but cannot hear it, ~ It is called the rarefied. ~ Because the hand feels for it but cannot find it, ~ It is called the infinitesimal. ~ These three, because they cannot be further scrutinized, ~ Blend into one. ~ Its rising brings no light; ~ Its sinking, no darkness. ~ Endless the series of things without name ~ On the way back to where there is nothing. ~ They are called shapeless shapes; ~ Forms without form; ~ Are called vague semblances. ~ Go towards them, and you can see no front; ~ Go after them, and you see no rear. ~ Yet by seizing on the Way that was ~ You can ride the things that are now. ~ For to know what once there was, in the Beginning, ~ This is called the essence of the Way.

—[14c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ When we look for it but see it not, we call it the invisible. ~ When we listen for it but hear it not, we call it the inaudible. ~ When we try to touch it but find it not, we call it the imperceptible. ~ Because these three aspects of it are impossible to probe, it remains a single amorphous unity. ~ Its risings cast no light, and its settings occasion no dark. ~ On and on it goes, unnamable, always reverting to nothingness. ~ This we refer to as the shape of that which has no shape, the image of that which has no physical existence. ~ This we refer to as dim and dark. ~ Try to meet it, but you will not see its head. ~ Try to follow it, but you will not see its tail, so hold on to the Dao of old to preside over what exists now. ~ It is possible to know how things were at the beginning of time. ~ This we refer to as holding the thread of the Dao.

—[14c19t] Lin Yutang ~ PREHISTORIC ORIGINS ~ Looked at, but cannot be seen - ~ That is called the Invisible (yi). ~ Listened to, but cannot be heard - ~ That is called the Inaudible (hsi). ~ Grasped at, but cannot be touched - ~ That is called the Intangible (wei). ~ These three elude all our inquiries ~ And hence blend and become One. ~ Not by its rising, is there light, ~ Nor by its sinking, is there darkness. ~ Unceasing, continuous, ~ It cannot be defined, ~ And reverts again to the realm of nothingness. ~ That is why it is called the Form of the Formless, ~ The Image of Nothingness. ~ That is why it is called the Elusive: ~ Meet it and you do not see its face; ~ Follow it and you do not see its back. ~ He who holds fast to the Tao of old ~ In order to manage the affairs of Now ~ Is able to know the Primeval Beginnings ~ Which are the continuity of Tao.

—[14c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ Looked at but not seen, it is thus called the invisible, ~ Listened to but not heard, it is thus called the inaudible, ~ Reached for but not grasped, it is thus called the intangible: ~ These three are beyond the reach of sense and reason, ~ Yet, in the moment of cosmic union, ~ They merge in spiritual awareness as the Universal One. ~ There is no above that is bright, nor below that is dark, ~ But only the infinite, forever indefinable, always reverting to nothingness. ~ Therefore, ~ it is called form of the formless, image of the imageless. ~ And it is known as the amorphous. ~ Confronting it, no head is seen from the front. ~ Following it, no rear is seen from behind. ~ Whereby one lives in the present in accordance with the Tao Eternal, ~ Thereby one comes to know the beginning of time. ~ This is called the Universal Law of the Tao.

—[14c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ What we look at and do not see is called simplicity. ~ What we listen to and do not hear is called rarity. ~ What we clasp and do not catch is called delicateness. ~ These three cannot be discerned, ~ So they unite to become one. ~ When it is revealed, it does not dazzle, ~ When it is concealed, it is not dark, ~ When it is infinite, it is not defined. ~ It attains the non-existent. ~ Its name is the form of the formless ~ And its image is that which does not have an image. ~ It is mysterious. ~ Meet it, and you will not be able to see its face, ~ Follow it, and you will not be able to see its back. ~ By adhering to the ancient Tao, ~ You will be master of the essence of the present ~ And you will be aware of the origin of the past. ~ That is the clue to the Tao.

—[14c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ When you gaze at something ~ but see - nothing; ~ When you listen for a sound ~ but cannot hear it; ~ When you try to grasp it ~ and find it has no substance ~ - then these three things ~ That go beyond your mind ~ Are moulded together in the One. ~ Its surface doesn't shine, but nor is its base dull. ~ Given this, it is only knowable as no-thing. ~ Confront it - it has no head; ~ Come behind it, and it has no tail ... ~ If people could follow the ancient way, then they would be masters of the moment. ~ And if you know this way ~ then you have seen the timeless way of the Tao.

—[14c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ What cannot be seen is called "Yi" (without colour); ~ What cannot be heard is called "Xi" (without sound); ~ What cannot be touched is called "Wei" (without shape); ~ These three things can be in no way defined, ~ So they are combined into one. ~ Above it there is no light; ~ Below it there is no darkness; ~ So vague as to defy any description. ~ It is categorized as the Nothingness, ~ And is called the shape without shape as well as the image without substance. ~ It is hence named as "huhuang" (vague and dimly visible). ~ Facing it, you cannot see its front; ~ Following it, you cannot see its back. ~ To control the present Being (substance) by employing the Tao of ancient time, ~ One knows the beginning of the universe. ~ And this is called the law of the Tao.

—[14c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ That which cannot be seen is called invisible. ~ That which cannot be heard is called inaudible. ~ That which cannot be held is called intangible. ~ These three cannot be defined, therefore they are merged as one. ~ Look at its highest part - it is not bright. ~ Look at its lowest part - it is not dark. ~ It never ends and it cannot be named. ~ It returns to nothingness. ~ Therefore it is called the shape without shape and the substance without substance. ~ It is called indefinable. ~ One approaches it but cannot see its beginning. ~ One follows it but cannot see its end. ~ Hold fast to the original path in order to control the realm of the present. ~ To know the ancient origin is the discipline of Tao.

—[14c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ What you look at but can not see is called "formless." ~ What you listen to but can not hear is called "soundless." ~ What you grasp at but can not get is called "traceless." ~ Those three are an inseparable puzzle. ~ One can't know where it begins and where it ends. ~ Continuous and nameless, it returns to nothingness. ~ It is formless shape, imageless image, invisible vision. ~ One tries to meet it, but can see no head. ~ One tries to follow it, but can see no end. ~ In the domain of the Way, the past shapes the present, ~ And being able to feel the past is abiding by the Way.

—[14c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ Invisible, Inaudible, And Intangible ~ Lao Tze says, ~ Something which we look at, and cannot see, shall be called 'invisible'. ~ Something to which we listen, and cannot hear, shall be called 'inaudible'. ~ Something which we seize, and cannot grasp, shall be called 'intangible'. ~ These things are not available to be researched for realization when taken singly; ~ hence when we unite them again, we obtain the true one. ~ Its upper part is not bright, and its lower part is not obscure. ~ It works in its way perpetually without an end, but we can't know its motive. ~ Then this can be traced in the state of nothingness. ~ This is called the form of formlessness, and semblance of nothingness; ~ this is called the fleet of indeterminable. ~ We can neither retrace to see its beginning, nor can we expect to see its end. ~ When we hold the primordial Tao, we can rule today's being. ~ Since we can know the beginning of Heaven and Earth, we know the outline of the Tao.

—[14c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ That which we look at and cannot see is called plainness. ~ That which we listen to and cannot hear is called rareness. ~ That which we grope for and cannot get is called minuteness. ~ These three cannot be closely examined; ~ So they blend into One. ~ Revealed, it is not dazzling; ~ Hidden, it is not dark. ~ Infinite, it cannot be defined. ~ It goes back to non-existence. ~ It is called the form of the formless, ~ And the image of non-existence. ~ It is called mystery. ~ Meet it, you cannot see its face; ~ Follow it, you cannot see its back. ~ By adhering to the Tao of the past ~ You will master the existence of the present ~ And be able to know the origin of the past. ~ This is called the clue of Tao.

—[14c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ Looked at, it cannot be seen; ~ it is called colorless. ~ Listened to, it cannot be heard; ~ it is called soundless. ~ Grasped, it cannot be obtained; ~ it is called formless. ~ These three cannot be investigated further, ~ so they merge together to make one. ~ The upper part is not bright; ~ The lower part is not dark. ~ So subtle, it cannot be named, ~ But returns to nothingness. ~ This is called the shape without shape, ~ the image without image. ~ This is called indistinct: ~ confronting it, one cannot see the head; ~ following it, one cannot see the back. ~ Grasp the Ancient Tao to manage present existence. ~ Thus we may know the beginning of the Ancient. ~ This is called the record of Tao.

—[14c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ "Look for It, you won't see It: It is called 'fleeting'. ~ Listen for It, you won't hear It: It is called 'thin'. ~ Grasp at It, you can't get It: It is called 'subtle'." ~ These three lines are about something that evades scrutiny. ~ Yes, in it everything blends and becomes one. ~ Its top is not bright, ~ Its underside is not dim. ~ Always unnameable, It turns back to nothingness. ~ This is the shape of something shapeless, ~ the form of a nothing, ~ this is elusive and evasive. ~ Encountering It, you won't see the front; ~ following It, you won't see Its back. ~ Keep to the Tao of the ancients, ~ and so manage things happening today. ~ The ability to know the ancient sources, ~ this is the main thread of Tao.

—[14c33t] Cheng Lin ~ That which cannot be seen is formless. ~ That which cannot be heard is noiseless. ~ That which cannot be touched is bodiless. ~ These three cannot be examined in detail for they really constitute one indivisible whole. ~ This indivisible whole (Truth) does not appear bright when viewed at the summit, or dark when viewed at the nadir. ~ It is imperceptible and indescribable. ~ It is always changing, and reverting to the state of Nothingness. ~ It is formless, shapeless, vague, and indefinite. ~ Pacing it, one cannot see its head; pursuing it, one cannot see its tail. ~ Abide by this primordial Truth, and the States of today can be ruled. ~ Know the primary conditions, and you know the principles of Truth.

—[14c34t] Yi Wu ~ Looking at it, one cannot see it; ~ it is named the invisible. ~ Listening to it, one cannot hear it; ~ it is named the inaudible. ~ Grasping at it, one cannot get it; ~ it is named the immaterial. ~ These three cannot be inquired into; ~ therefore, they are blended into one. ~ Above it, there is no light; ~ below it, there is no darkness. ~ Continually! ~ Infinitely! ~ Unnameable, it returns again to the no-thingness. ~ This is called the form of the formless, the image of nothingness. ~ This is called the vague, the elusive. ~ Meeting it, one does not see its face; ~ Following it, one does not see its back. ~ If one holds to the Way of ancient times, ~ one can manage existence in the present. ~ That one can know the origin, ~ is called the record of the Way.

—[14c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ That which cannot be seen is called Yi. ~ That which cannot be heard is Xi. ~ That which cannot be touched is Wei. ~ All these three qualities can hardly be analysed. ~ When amalgamated into one, ~ Its upper limit is not radiant, ~ And its lower limit is not dull. ~ It is as nebulous as it is indescribable. ~ Eventually it approaches to nothingness. ~ This is why it is called the formless form, or the immaterial material. ~ This is why it is called the illusory. ~ Try to meet it head-on, and you cannot see its face. ~ Try to follow it from behind, and you cannot see its back. ~ Following the way of ancient Dao, ~ You will be able to manage your affairs with great aplomb. ~ To be able to understand ancient Dao ~ Is to truly appreciate the immutable principles of Dao.

—[14c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ Look at it, but you cannot see it. ~ Because it is formless, you call it invisible. ~ Listen to it, but you cannot hear it. ~ Because it is soundless, you call it inaudible. ~ Grasp it, but it is beyond your reach. ~ Because it is subtle, you call it intangible. ~ These three are indescribable and imperceptible, ~ but in the mystical moment you see it, hear it and grasp it, ~ the Unseen, Unheard and Unreachable presents itself as the indefinable essence. ~ Confront it, and you do not see its face. ~ Follow it, and you do not see its back. ~ It does not appear bright when viewed at the zenith, ~ nor does it appear dark when viewed at the nadir. ~ There is nothing that can make this subtle essence of the universe distinct. ~ When you try to make it clear to yourself, it evasively reverts to Nothingness. ~ You may call it the Form of the Formless or the Image of the Imageless. ~ Yet the elusive, subtle essence remains nameless. ~ If you hope to meet it, ~ it has no part you can call front. ~ If you hope to follow it, ~ it has no place you can call behind. ~ Yet it can be observed in the constant regularity of the universe. ~ The constancy of the universe of antiquity is the constancy of the present time. ~ If one knows the Primal Beginning, one may thus know the truth of the universal subtle Way.

—[14c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ Gaze at it; there is nothing to see. ~ It is called the formless. ~ Heed it; there is nothing to hear. ~ It is called the soundless. ~ Grasp it; there is nothing to hold on to. ~ It is called the immaterial. ~ We cannot inquire into these three, ~ Hence, they interfuse into one. ~ Above, it is not light. ~ Below, it is not dark. ~ Invisible, it cannot be called by any name. ~ It returns again to nothingness. ~ Thus, we call it the form of the formless ~ The image of the imageless. ~ It is the evasive. ~ Approach it; you cannot see its face. ~ Go after it; you cannot see its back. ~ Adhere to the Tao of the remote past, ~ And apply it to the present. ~ This will enable you to understand the primordial beginning. ~ This is the essential Tao.

—[14c38t] Henry Wei ~ In Praise of the Mysteries ~ Tsan Hsuan ~ What is invisible when looked at is called yi; ~ What is inaudible when listened to is called hsi; ~ What is elusive when grabbed at is called wei. ~ These three are not amenable to investigation; ~ Therefore, they mingle as One. ~ On rising, the One does not become bright; ~ On falling, it does not become dark. ~ Unnameable it goes on and on, ~ And again reverts to Non-Being. ~ This is called shape of the shapeless, ~ And form of the formless. ~ This is called winking-waning, as in a dream. ~ On greeting it, one cannot see its front; ~ On following it, one cannot see its back. ~ Taking hold of the Tao of antiquity ~ To cope with the problems of the present ~ Could make one know the ancient origins. ~ This is called the unbroken strand of Tao.

—[14c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ You look at it but don't see it. ~ So you name it the Invisible. ~ You listen to it but don't hear it. ~ So you name it the Inaudible. ~ You grasp at it but don't touch it. ~ So you name it the Intangible. ~ These three ~ Are beyond scrutiny. ~ Therefore, blend them into one. ~ No brightness above it, ~ No darkness below it - ~ Boundless, it cannot be named. ~ Return to the objectless object. ~ It is called the shapeless shape - ~ The formless form. ~ It is called the vague and dim. ~ You meet it but don't see its head. ~ You follow it but don't see its back. ~ Hold on to the Tao of old, ~ And thereby ride the being of now. ~ Know the old beginning, ~ Which is called the thread of Tao.

—[14c40t] Tao Huang ~ Look for it and it can not be seen, it is called invisible; ~ Listen to it and it can not be heard, it is called inaudible; ~ Reach for it and it can not be touched, it is called intangible. ~ These three are beyond reckoning, so ~ When these three merge, they are One. ~ As for this One, ~ There is nothing above it remaining to be accounted for, ~ There is nothing below it that has been excluded. ~ Ever searching for it, it is beyond naming. ~ It returns to no-thing. ~ Its state is described as no state, ~ Its form is described as formless. ~ It is called the vision beyond focus. ~ Follow after it, and it proves endless. ~ Go before it, and no beginning can be found. ~ Employ the Tao of today in order to manage today's affairs and to know the ancient past. ~ This is called the principle of Tao.

—[14c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ Look at it, but it cannot be seen, it is called "the shapeless". ~ Listen to it, but it cannot be heard, it is called "the soundless". ~ Grasp it, but it cannot be held, it is called "the bodyless". ~ These three characteristics are incomprehensible, yet they uniquely constitute the oneness of Dao. ~ Look upward, it is not clear. ~ Look downward, it is not dim. ~ Continuously, continuously! ~ We are unable to trace it's original name because it returns to the state of Unknown existence. ~ It is called "the formless form" and "the imageless image". ~ That is why it is called "the indistinct and elusive". ~ To embrace Dao from ancient times is to know the original causes of the past in order to control what is going on in the present. ~ This is called "the Law of Dao".

—[14c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ We look at it and do not see it; ~ Its name is The Invisible. ~ We listen to it and do not hear it; ~ Its name is The Inaudible. ~ We touch it and do not find it; ~ Its name is The Subtle (formless). ~ These three cannot be further inquired into, ~ And hence merge into one. ~ Going up high, it is not bright, and coming down low, it is not dark. ~ Infinite and boundless, it cannot be given any name; ~ It reverts to nothingness. ~ This is called shape without shape, ~ Form without objects. ~ It is The Vague and Elusive. ~ Meet it and you will not see its head. ~ Follow it and you will not see its back. ~ Hold on to the Tao of old in order to master the things of the present. ~ From this one may know the primeval beginning (of the universe). ~ This is called the bond of Tao.

—[14c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ На что гляжу, но не могу увидеть, называю ровным; ~ что слушаю, но не могу услышать, называю редким; ~ что пробую схватить, но никак не удается, называю крошечным. ~ Эти три расследовать нельзя, и потому создам из них одно, смешав. ~ Что у него вверху, то не блестит, а что внизу, то не тускнеет; ~ оно бесконечно и ему нельзя дать имени. ~ Все время возвращается к отсутствию вещей. ~ Это вид невидного, образ отсутствия вещей. ~ Оно расплывчато, неясно. ~ При встрече с ним не видят его спереди, а следуя за ним, не видят сзади. ~ Владеют Дао древности, чтобы править нынешним наличием; ~ в способности знать древнее начало заключена разгадка Дао.

—[14c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Глядим на него и не видим. ~ Зовём это заурядным. ~ Слушаем его и не слышим. ~ Зовём это редким. ~ Пытаемся коснуться его и не достигаем. ~ Зовём это мельчайшим. ~ Эти три ипостаси невозможно разделить, ибо смешаны они и являют собой Единое. ~ Его верхняя часть не источает света. ~ Его нижняя часть не окутана мраком. ~ Едва различимое, его нельзя даже поименовать. ~ Оно возвращается к тому, что не имеет сущности. ~ Это зовётся формой, не имеющей форм; ~ образом, не имеющим сущности. ~ Это зовётся расплывчато-туманным. ~ Встретившись с ним, не увидим его начала. ~ Следуя за ним, не увидим его тыльной стороны. ~ Придерживайся пути древности, дабы контролировать дела сегодняшние. ~ Способность познать изначальную древность и зовётся принципом Дао.

—[14c93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Смотрю на него и не вижу - называю его тончайшим. ~ Слушаю его и не слышу - называю его тишайшим. ~ Ловлю его, но схватить не могу - неуловимым его нареку. ~ Триаду эту словами объяснить не дано: хаотична она и едина. ~ Ее верх не освещен, ее низ не затемнен. ~ Тянется-вьется, но нельзя ее назвать; ~ вновь возвращается к отсутствию сущего она. ~ Поэтому говорят: безвидный облик, невещный образ. ~ Поэтому говорят: туманное и смутное. ~ Не вижу начала, когда ей навстречу иду, не вижу конца, когда следом за ней спешу. ~ Держусь за древний Путь-Дао и так управляю сущим ныне. ~ Могу постичь древнее первоначало и устоями Дао-Пути его называю.

— [14c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Смотрю на него - не вижу, именем называю "невидимый". ~ Слушаю его - не слышу, именем называю "беззвучный". ~ Ловлю его - не обретаю, именем называю "сокрытый". ~ Эти три нельзя разграничить, потому как смешаны и образуют одно-единое. ~ Его верх не светлый, его низ не темный, непрерывно вьется, [его] невозможно наименовать. ~ [Оно] нашло пристанище в невещественном. ~ Это и есть изображение без изображения, образ без плоти. ~ Это и есть туманная смесь. ~ Иду навстречу ему - не вижу его лица (голова). ~ Следую за ним - не вижу его спины (хвоста). ~ Только неуклонно следуя древнему Дао, чтобы править ныне существующим, можно познать древнее начало. ~ Это и есть уток (путеводная нить) Дао.

— [14c95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Смотрю на него и не вижу, а поэтому называю его невидимым. ~ Слушаю его и не слышу, поэтому называю его неслышимым. ~ Пытаюсь схватить его и не достигаю, поэтому называю его мельчайшим. ~ Не надо стремиться узнать об источнике этого, потому что это едино. ~ Его верх не освещен, его низ не затемнен. ~ Оно бесконечно и не может быть названо. ~ Оно снова возвращается к небытию. ~ И вот называют его формой без форм, образом без существа. ~ Поэтому называют его неясным и туманным. ~ Встречаюсь с ним и не вижу лица его, следую за ним и не вижу спины его. ~ Придерживаясь древнего дао, чтобы овладеть существующими вещами, можно познать древнее начало. ~ Это называется принципом дао.

— [14c96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ (Предмет, на который) мы смотрим, но не видим, называется бесцветным. ~ (Звук, который) мы слушаем, но не слышим, - беззвучным. ~ (Предмет, который) мы хватаем, но не можем захватить, - мельчайшим. ~ Эти три (предмета) неисследимы, поэтому когда они смешаются между собой, то соединяются в одно. ~ Верх не ясен, низ не темен. ~ О, бесконечное! ~ Его нельзя назвать именем. ~ Оно существует, но возвращается к небытию. ~ Оно называется формой (или видом) бесформенной. ~ Оно также называется неопределенным. ~ Встречаясь с ним, не видать лица его, следуя же за ним, не видать спины его. ~ Посредством древнего Тао можно управлять жизнью настоящего времени. ~ Исследовать происхождение всего (или начало древности) называется нитью Тао.

— [14c97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Смотрю на него и не вижу: называю его глубочайшим. ~ Вслушиваюсь в него и не слышу: называю его тишайшим. ~ Касаюсь его и не могу ухватить: называю его мельчайшим. ~ Эти три невозможно определить, ~ Посему я смешиваю их и рассматриваю как одно. ~ [Это одно] вверху не светло, внизу не темно, ~ Тянется без конца и без края, нельзя дать ему имя. ~ И вновь возвращается туда, где нет вещей. ~ Оно зовется бесформенной формой, невещественным образом, ~ Оно зовется туманным и смутным. ~ Встречаешь его - не видишь его главы, ~ Провожаешь его - не видишь его спины. ~ Держаться Пути древних, ~ Чтобы повелевать ныне сущим, ~ И знать Перводанное Начало - ~ Вот что такое основа и нить Пути.

— [14c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Смотришь на него, не видя. ~ Имя назови: "Рассеянное". ~ Слушаешь его, не слыша. ~ Имя назови: "Разреженное". ~ Ухватываешь его, не удерживая. ~ Имя назови: "Тончайшее". ~ Эту троицу нельзя определить, задавая вопросы. ~ Причинность: ~ Смешиваясь, осуществляют единое. ~ При движении вверх оно не светлое. ~ При движении вниз оно не темное. ~ Как ускользающая нить. ~ Нельзя его определить именем. ~ Повторяется возвращение в состояние отсутствия вещей. ~ Это определяется: ~ Трепетное и мерцающее. ~ Движешься ему навстречу, не видя его главы. ~ Следуешь за ним, не видя его спины. ~ Путь древности применяй для контроля наличия данного момента. ~ Будь способен знать начало древности. ~ Это определяют: ~ Путеводная нить.

— [15c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ The one who was skilled at practicing the Way in antiquity, ~ Was subtle and profound, mysterious and penetratingly wise. ~ His depth cannot be known. ~ It is only because he cannot be known ~ That therefore were I forced to describe him I'd say: ~ Hesitant was he! Like someone crossing a river in winter. ~ Undecided was he! As though in fear of his neighbors on all four sides. ~ Solemn and polite was he! Like a guest. ~ Scattered and dispersed was he! Like ice as it melts. ~ Genuine, unformed was he! Like uncarved wood. ~ Merged, undifferentiated was he! Like muddy water. ~ Broad and expansive was he! Like a valley. ~ If you take muddy water and still it, it gradually becomes clear. ~ If you bring something to rest in order to move it, it gradually comes alive. ~ {The one who} preserves this Way does not desire to be full; ~ Therefore he can wear out with no need to be renewed.

—[15c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ THE ancient adepts of the Tao were subtle and flexible, profound and comprehensive. ~ Their minds were too deep to be fathomed. ~ Because they are unfathomable, ~ One can only describe them vaguely by their appearance. ~ Hesitant like one wading a stream in winter; ~ Timid like one afraid of his neighbours on all sides; ~ Cautious and courteous like a guest; ~ Yielding like ice on the point of melting; ~ Simple like an uncarved block; ~ Hollow like a cave; ~ Confused like a muddy pool; ~ And yet who else could quietly and gradually evolve from the muddy to the clear? ~ Who else could slowly but steadily move from the inert to the living? ~ He who keeps the Tao does not want to be full. ~ But precisely because he is never full, ~ He can always remain like a hidden sprout, ~ And does not rush to early ripening.

—[15c03t] D. C. Lau ~ Of old he who was well versed in the way ~ Was minutely subtle, mysteriously comprehending, ~ And too profound to be known. ~ It is because he could not be known ~ That he can only be given a makeshift description: ~ Tentative, as if fording a river in winter, ~ Hesitant, as if in fear of his neighbours; ~ Formal like a guest; ~ Falling apart like thawing ice; ~ Thick like the uncarved block; ~ Vacant like a valley; ~ Murky like muddy water. ~ Who can be muddy and yet, settling, slowly become limpid? ~ Who can be at rest and yet, stirring, slowly come to life? ~ He who holds fast to this way ~ Desires not to be full. ~ It is because he is not full ~ That he can be worn and yet newly made.

—[15c04t] R. L. Wing ~ Those skillful in the ancient Tao Are subtly ingenious and profoundly intuitive. ~ They are so deep they cannot be recognized. ~ Since, indeed, they cannot be recognized, Their force can be contained. ~ So careful! As if wading a stream in winter. ~ So hesitant! As if respecting all sides in the community. ~ So reserved! As if acting as a guest. ~ So yielding! As if ice about to melt. ~ So candid! As if acting with simplicity. ~ So open! As if acting as a valley. ~ So integrated! As if acting as muddy water. ~ Who can harmonize with muddy water, And gradually arrive at clarity? ~ Who can move with stability, And gradually bring endurance to life? ~ Those who maintain the Tao ~ Do not desire to become full. ~ Indeed, since they are not full, ~ They can be used up and also renewed.

—[15c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ The shi (Knower of Tao) in the old times is subtle, profound and generous, too deep to be understood by the common people. ~ As he is thus beyond people's knowledge, ~ I can only describe him arbitrarily. ~ (He is) cautious beforehand, like wading into a river in winter. ~ (He is) considering repeatedly, like one vigilant when threatened by neighbouring states' attack. ~ (He is) grave and reverent, like a visiting guest. ~ (He is) supple and pliant, like ice which is about to melt. ~ (He is) genuine and plain, like an uncarved block. ~ (He is) open and broad, like a quiet valley. ~ (He is) all-embracing, like a great muddy river. ~ Who can make the muddy water clear? ~ As it quiets down it will become clear. ~ Who can make stillness last? ~ It will gradually lose the peace as change arises. ~ He who preserves this Tao does not wish for overflowing. ~ It is precisely because there is no overflowing that he is able to succeed continually, ~ Though he looks conservative.

—[15c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ The ancient masters were subtle, mysterious, profound, responsive. ~ The depth of their knowledge is unfathomable. ~ Because it is unfathomable, ~ All we can do is describe their appearance. ~ Watchful, like men crossing a winter stream. ~ Alert, like men aware of danger. ~ Courteous, like visiting guests. ~ Yielding, like ice about to melt. ~ Simple, like uncarved blocks of wood. ~ Hollow, like caves. ~ Opaque, like muddy pools. ~ Who can wait quietly while the mud settles? ~ Who can remain still until the moment of action? ~ Observers of the Tao do not seek fulfillment. ~ Not seeking fulfillment, they are not swayed by desire for change.

—[15c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ The masters of the Dao in ancient times ~ had mystical, versatile, and unfathomable understanding. ~ As it is unfathomable, ~ Only a proximate description is possible. ~ They are prepared at all times, ~ as if taking on a river journey in winter. ~ They are alert and watchful, ~ as if they were wary of the surroundings. ~ They are respectful, ~ as if they were the guests of someone. ~ They are accommodating, ~ as if they were ice about to melt. ~ They are unpretentious, ~ as if they were the embodiment of simplicity. ~ They are open-minded, ~ as if they were a hollow valley. ~ They are murky, ~ as if they were a muddy stream, ~ They are unsettled, ~ as if they were an open sea; ~ They never stopped, ~ as if they were the winds of the earth. ~ Is there anyone who can be like ~ a murky stream cleaning up when given a rest? ~ Is there anyone who can be like ~ calm air gathering motion and becoming alive again? ~ The man who shuns full gratification of their desires, ~ is the man who has this ability. ~ He can rejuvenate.

—[15c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ People in the past who practiced the DAO understood the real essence of the world so deeply that the ordinary people could not appreciate them. ~ Because these people cannot be appreciated and understood, ~ I will try to give you a rough sketch of them. ~ They acted very cautiously, like walking on thin ice. ~ They behaved very carefully, like being watched by everybody. ~ They looked very dignified, like going to a banquet. ~ They were very warm and kind, like being able to melt ice. ~ They were very plain, like a block of uncarved wood. ~ They had a very big heart, like a deep valley. ~ They were very tolerant, like a flooding river that contains everything. ~ Who can get clear water from mud by letting the mud settle slowly? ~ Who can create new things gradually from stillness by taking the initiative? ~ These people who kept the DAO were never conceited. ~ Only because they were not conceited, ~ Were they able to create the future while preserving the past.

—[15c09t] Walter Gorn Old, EXHIBITING VIRTUE ~ The ancient wise men were skilful in their mysterious acquaintance with profundities. ~ They were fathomless in their depths; so profound, that I cannot bring them forth to my mind. ~ They were cautious, like one who crosses a swollen river. ~ They were reserved, like one who doubts his fellows. ~ They were watchful, like one who travels abroad. ~ They were retiring, like snow beneath the sun. ~ They were simple, like newly felled timber. ~ They were lowly, like the valley. ~ They were obscure, like muddy water. ~ May not a man take muddy water and make it clear by keeping still? ~ May not a man take a dead thing and make it alive by continuous motion? ~ Those who follow this Tao have no need of replenishing, and being devoid of all properties, they grow old without need of being filled.

—[15c10t] James Legge ~ The skilful masters (of the Tao) in old times, with a subtle and exquisite penetration, comprehended its mysteries, and were deep (also) so as to elude men's knowledge. ~ As they were thus beyond men's knowledge, I will make an effort to describe of what sort they appeared to be. ~ Shrinking looked they like those who wade through a stream in winter; ~ irresolute like those who are afraid of all around them; ~ grave like a guest (in awe of his host); ~ evanescent like ice that is melting away; ~ unpretentious like wood that has not been fashioned into anything; ~ vacant like a valley, ~ and dull like muddy water. ~ Who can (make) the muddy water (clear)? ~ Let it be still, and it will gradually become clear. ~ Who can secure the condition of rest? ~ Let movement go on, and the condition of rest will gradually arise. ~ They who preserve this method of the Tao do not wish to be full (of themselves). ~ It is through their not being full of themselves that they can afford to seem worn and not appear new and complete.

—[15c11t] David Hinton ~ Ancient masters of Way ~ all subtle mystery and dark-enigma vision: ~ they were deep beyond knowing, ~ so deep beyond knowing ~ we can only describe their appearance: ~ perfectly cautious, as if crossing winter streams, ~ and perfectly watchful, as if neighbors threatened; ~ perfectly reserved, as if guests, ~ perfectly expansive, as if ice melting away, ~ and perfectly simple, as if uncarved wood; ~ perfectly empty, as if open valleys, ~ and perfectly shadowy, as if murky water. ~ Who's murky enough to settle slowly into pure clarity, ~ and who still enough to awaken slowly into life? ~ If you nurture this Way, you never crave fullness. ~ Never crave fullness ~ and you'll wear away into completion.

—[15c12t] Chichung Huang ~ In antiquity, he who excelled in implementing the Tao ~ Was minutely discerning and subtly perceptive, ~ Profound beyond recognition. ~ As he was beyond recognition, ~ I reluctantly depict him thus: ~ "Undecided, as if in winter, wading through water; ~ Hesitant, as if fearing the four neighbors; ~ Awe-inspiring, like a guest; ~ Melting, like ice thawing; ~ Simple, like the unhewn log; ~ Turbid, like muddy water; ~ Expansive, like a valley. ~ In muddy water, he stilled it ~ And gradually made it limpid; ~ In comfort, he stirred it ~ And gradually made it vital." ~ Those who treasure this Tao ~ Do not wish to be full, ~ Hence, they can remain ragged and imperfect.

—[15c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ Those in the past who were good at practicing Tao, ~ Were subtle, mysterious, dark, penetrating (wei miao yüan t'ung), ~ Deep and unrecognizable. ~ Because they were unrecognizable, ~ I am forced to describe their appearance (yung). ~ Careful, like crossing a river in winter, ~ Hesitating, like fearing neighbors on four sides, ~ Reverent, like being guests, ~ Dissolving, like ice beginning to melt, ~ Thick, like uncarved wood, ~ Open, like a valley, ~ Chaotic (hun), like murky (cho) water. ~ What can stop the murkiness? ~ Quieting (ching) down, gradually it clarifies (ch'ing). ~ What can keep still for long? ~ Moving, gradually it stirs into life. ~ Those who keep this Tao, ~ Do not want to be filled to the full (ying). ~ Because they are not full, ~ They can renew (hsin) themselves before being worn out (pi).

—[15c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ In old days, excellent scholar-doers were comprehensive and detail-oriented, [for this reason] they could penetrate deeply into mysteries; ~ Their scholarships and attainments were so profound, vast, and subtle that ordinary people had difficulties to evaluate them; ~ Because of this, ordinary people had trouble to make out [the deep implication of] their performances; ~ They thus compulsively depicted them [in their own accustomed ways, which will be exemplified in the succeeding paragraphs]. ~ [In different occasions proficient ancient scholar-doers - men of thought and action - were summarily described as individuals behaved in the following manner:] ~ He was always cautiously prepared as though he was crossing a stream in the Winter time when it was blanketed by a layer of thin ice; ~ He was as worrisome and unassuming of his surroundings as monkeys were [in readiness for unseen future]; ~ He was as restrained and receptive as [an objective reticent] visitor; ~ He was in such readiness to accept changes, that his disposition was like the [fluxing] water which was about to escape from the [rigid] ice; ~ He was as simple and undecorated (unpretentious) as a piece of unprocessed wood; ~ He was as widely open-minded [to new knowledge] as a valley; ~ His demeanor was amiable that he would spontaneously mingle [with people of the world as readily as] dirt would blend and vanish in water. ~ Why did the turbid water, after being left to stand still for a long time, would clear up gradually? ~ [Because the natural tendency of water is to hold still]. ~ Why did the still [clear] water, after long, would progressively turn murky? ~ [Some untraceable activity must have taken place]. ~ A person, who intends to continue on the course of Tao, shall refrain from being contented with whatever vast [knowledge] he has already achieved; ~ Thence, being aware of the fact that his knowledge will never be adequately satisfactory [for advanced comprehensive elucidation of Tao], he would [constantly] discard negative elements and eke out new and better accomplishments.

—[15c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ In ancient times the wise men of the Way were subtle, divine, comprehensive and too profound to be known. ~ Because they are unfathomable, we try to describe their picture as following: ~ Hesitant like one crossing a stream in winter. ~ Timid like one afraid of his neighbors on all sides. ~ Serious like a guest. ~ Thawing like ice on the point of melting. ~ Simple like an uncarved block. ~ Hollow like a cave. ~ Muddled like muddy water. ~ Who knows he is muddled and settles down, then quietly and gradually becomes clear? ~ Who knows to move from inertia and gradually become living? ~ He who keeps the Way does not want to be full. ~ Precisely because he is never full, he can always remain hidden, and does not become new.

—[15c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ In history, those who mastered Tao are extremely knowledgeable with profound expertise. ~ Hence they are hard to describe. ~ Because of this, I can only roughly portray them as follows: ~ Being prudent as if walking across the thin ice of the river, ~ Being alert as if being surrounded with the danger, ~ Being dignified like a guest, ~ Being relaxed as if thawing, ~ Being sincere and natural like uncarved wood, ~ Being open-hearted like valley, ~ Being approachable like the earth, ~ Being broad like ocean, ~ Being active like wind blowing. ~ Can the murkiness be clarified slowly? ~ Can a halt start to move gradually? ~ Those who know Tao would never be complacent. ~ It is because of this they can be refreshing, creative, and innovative.

—[15c17t] Arthur Waley ~ Of old those that were the best officers of Court ~ Had inner natures subtle, abstruse, mysterious, penetrating, ~ Too deep to be understood. ~ And because such men could not be understood ~ I can but tell of them as they appeared to the world: ~ Circumspect they seemed, like one who in winter crosses a stream, ~ Watchful, as one who must meet danger on every side. ~ Ceremonious, as one who pays a visit; ~ Yet yielding, as ice when it begins to melt. ~ Blank, as a piece of uncarved wood; ~ Yet receptive as a hollow in the hills. ~ Murky, as a troubled stream - ~ Which of you can assume such murkiness, to become in the end still and clear? ~ Which of you can make yourself inert, to become in the end full of life and stir? ~ Those who possess this Tao do not try to fill themselves to the brim, ~ And because they do not try to fill themselves to the brim ~ They are like a garment that endures all wear and need never be renewed (?).

—[15c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ In antiquity, he who was good at being a leader was perfectly in step with mystery in all its subtlety and profundity; so recondite was he that it was impossible to understand him. ~ Now, because he defies understanding, all I can do is force a description of what he was like: he seemed hesitant, as one might be when fording a river in winter. ~ He seemed tentative, as one who fears his neighbors on all four sides. ~ He seemed solemn, oh, as if he were the guest. ~ He seemed yielding, oh, just like ice when about to break up. ~ He seemed solid and sturdy, oh, just like an uncarved block of wood. ~ He seemed empty and receptive, oh, just like a valley. ~ He seemed amorphous, oh, just like murky water. ~ Who can take his turbidity and, by stilling it, gradually become clear? ~ Who can take his quietude and, by stirring it long, gradually come alive? ~ One who keeps this Dao does not wish to be filled. ~ For it is only by not getting filled that one can avoid having the cover remade.

—[15c19t] Lin Yutang ~ THE WISE ONES OF OLD ~ The wise ones of old had subtle wisdom and depth of understanding, ~ So profound that they could not be understood. ~ And because they could not be understood, ~ Perforce must they be so described: ~ Cautious, like crossing a wintry stream, ~ Irresolute, like one fearing danger all around, ~ Grave, like one acting as guest, ~ Self-effacing, like ice beginning to melt, ~ Genuine, like a piece of undressed wood, ~ Open-minded, like a valley, ~ And mixing freely, like murky water. ~ Who can find repose in a muddy world? ~ By lying still, it becomes clear. ~ Who can maintain his calm for long? ~ By activity, it comes back to life. ~ He who embraces this Tao ~ Guards against being over-full. ~ Because he guards against being over-full, ~ He is beyond wearing out and renewal.

—[15c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ Those of old who were adept in the Way were subtly profound and mysteriously perceptive, ~ So deep they could not be recognized. ~ Now, ~ Because they could not be recognized, ~ One can describe their appearance only with effort: ~ hesitant, as though crossing a stream in winter; ~ cautious, as though fearful of their neighbors all around; ~ solemn, as though guests in someone else's house; ~ shrinking, as ice when it melts; ~ plain, as an unhewn log; ~ muddled, as turbid waters; ~ expansive, as a broad valley. ~ If turbid waters are stilled, ~ they will gradually become clear; ~ If something inert is set in motion, ~ it will gradually come to life. ~ Those who preserved this Way did not wish to be full. ~ Now, ~ Simply because they did not wish to be full, they could be threadbare and incomplete.

—[15c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ The ancient followers of the Tao were subtle, mysterious, and penetrating. ~ They were too deep to be fathomed. ~ All we can do is describe their appearance. ~ Hesitant, as if crossing a winter stream. ~ Watchful, as if aware of neighbors on all sides. ~ Respectful, like a visiting guest. ~ Yielding, like ice beginning to melt. ~ Simple, like an uncarved block. ~ Open, like a valley. ~ Obscure, like muddy water. ~ Who else can be still and let the muddy water slowly become clear? ~ Who else can remain at rest and slowly come to life? ~ Those who hold fast to the Tao do not try to fill themselves to the brim. ~ Because they do not try to be full they can be worn out and yet ever new.

—[15c22t] David H. Li ~ One who understood Direction in olden days knew the tiniest, appreciated the profoundest, and was deep beyond [our] comprehension. ~ Since such a person is beyond [our] comprehension, he/she can only be described superficially: ~ as deliberate as approaching a deep channel in the winter, ~ as alert as keeping watch over bordering states, ~ as diplomatic as an envoy in presenting, ~ as graceful as ice in slow melting, ~ as simple as a block of uncarved wood, ~ as calm as a valley's mood, ~ as accommodating as muddy water, ~ as expansive as the sea, ~ as unending as the wind. ~ Who can calm the muddy to let it distill? ~ Who can motivate the serene to let it instill? ~ One who understands Direction never fills to the brim. ~ Not filled to the brim, ~ one is at ready to remove the old and substitute it with new.

—[15c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ The embodiment of the Tao Eternal, ~ The ancient masters are wondrously subtle and profoundly penetrating. ~ The depth of their being is unfathomable and beyond comprehension. ~ As their depth is unfathomable and beyond comprehension, ~ Only their appearance can be incompletely described: ~ The master is as alert as a person fording a winter stream, ~ As careful as a person watchful of his surroundings, ~ As respectful as a thoughtful guest, ~ As flowing as melting ice, ~ As plain as an unhewn log, ~ As empty as an open valley, ~ As inclusive as turbid waters. ~ Who could keep still until turbid waters become clear of their own accord? ~ Who could stay calm until still waters become alive of their own accord? ~ Those who embody the Tao do not desire to extend themselves to the fullest. ~ For, the Tao is balance, ~ and there is no fullest, no extreme. ~ Therefore, through balance, they refill their essence and renew their life force forevermore.

—[15c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ Long ago, the man of Tao was learned, incisive, ~ And so profound that it was difficult to comprehend him. ~ Since it is impossible to understand him, I will try to sketch his image: ~ He is cautious, like a person crossing a stream during the winter. ~ He is hesitant, like a person who fears his neighbors. ~ He is modest, like a person who is another's guest. ~ He is unassuming, like ice that slowly melts. ~ He is simple, like a log that has not been carved. ~ He is hollow, like a valley surrounded by mountains. ~ He is dim, like stagnant and murky water. ~ And who is the person who can clear the darkness until it begins to glow? ~ And who is the person who can purify the murky water until it becomes clear? ~ And who is the person who can nudge the stagnant along until it begins to move? ~ The one who follows the principles does not seek fullness. ~ Since he is not full, when he falls, he can renew himself.

—[15c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ In ancient times, the leaders were as subtle as sorcerers. ~ No one knew what they were about to do. ~ How can we describe them to you? ~ They were like soldiers about to cross a cold river, hesitant, watchful and uncertain. ~ They were cautious like people who know there is danger. ~ They were over-polite, like practised guests. ~ They gave way like ice, melting. ~ They were simple like uncarved wood. ~ They were empty like deserted valleys. ~ They were muddy like unreflecting water. ~ The mud will settle, and it is hard to wait for it. ~ But if you can, then you can act. ~ If you follow the Tao without pretension ~ you will never burn yourself out.

—[15c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ Those ancients who were well versed in the Tao ~ Were so subtle, mysterious and profound ~ As to escape understanding. ~ As they were beyond comprehension, ~ The description of them is surely perfunctory; ~ careful as if fording a river barefoot in winter; ~ vigilant and hesitant as if in fear of the attacks from neighbours; ~ formal as if they were guests; ~ polishedly flowing like melting ice; ~ simple and natural like the uncarved block; ~ vacant and deep like a valley; ~ turbid like muddy water; ~ quiet and calm like the great sea; ~ drifting as if they would never stop. ~ Who can end the muddiness ~ And make the muddy settle and gradually become clear? ~ Who can be at rest and yet, stirring, slowly come to life? ~ He who is in possession of this Tao ~ Will not seek completeness. ~ Just because he will not seek completeness, ~ He can be both old and new.

—[15c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ Since ancient times, he who is versed in the Tao has been regarded as subtle, mysterious and obscurely discerning, too profound to be understood. ~ And because he is elusive, one is barely able to describe him. ~ Prudent as if fording a stream in winter. ~ Wary as if in fear of those around him. ~ Formal as if holding a memorial ceremony. ~ He lets his heart yield like melting ice. ~ He keeps his character rough like uncarved wood. ~ He makes his mind empty like a spacious valley. ~ He is opaque like muddy water. ~ There is one who remains still while the mud settles and the water clears itself. ~ There is one who remains quiet and finds that the moment of action arises of its own accord. ~ There is one who follows the Tao and does not seek plenitude simply because he is not fulfilled. ~ In that way he can be named and reach the Tao.

—[15c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ The ancient wise ones seemed unattainably profound. ~ Since they were such, I can describe them only this way: ~ Hesitant as if they were crossing a winter river; ~ Inhibited as if they were afraid of their neighbors; ~ Undisciplined like melting ice on flowing water; ~ Simple-minded like a piece of rough plank; ~ Void like a vast-spreading empty valley; ~ And unenlightened like a muddled pool. ~ If anyone keeps the muddled state still, ~ It will gradually clear up. ~ If anyone keeps it still for long, ~ There will gradually be new production. ~ One who keeps this Way will not try to become filled. ~ Keeping unfilled, one is always ready for new successes.

—[15c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ Tao-practitioner's Manner ~ Lao Tze says, ~ The Tao-practitioners of old times had subtle wisdom and depth of understanding, and could comprehend the will of Heaven. ~ They were so profound that they could not be understood: ~ I will make an effort to describe what sort of men they appeared to be. ~ Cautiously observed, they were like those in enemy territory; ~ dignified like a guest; ~ self-effacing like ice that is melting away; ~ unpretentious like a piece of undressed wood; ~ open-minded like a valley; ~ and mixing freely like turbulent water. ~ Who can make the turbulent water still and let it gradually become clear? ~ Who can settle down the perpetual movement and let the condition of rehabilitation gradually arise? ~ They are those who preserve this Tao guard against overdoing. ~ It is through guarding against overdoing that their previous possessions are not lost, and they will again procure newness.

—[15c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ In old times the perfect man of Tao was subtle, penetrating and so profound that he can hardly be understood. ~ Because he cannot be understood, I shall endeavour to picture him: ~ He is cautious, like one who crosses a stream in winter; ~ He is hesitating, like one who fears his neighbours; ~ He is modest, like one who is a guest; ~ He is yielding, like ice that is going to melt; ~ He is simple, like wood that is not yet wrought; ~ He is vacant, like valleys that are hollow; ~ He is dim, like water that is turbid. ~ Who is able to purify the dark till it becomes slowly light? ~ Who is able to calm the turbid till it slowly clears? ~ Who is able to quicken the stagnant till it slowly makes progress? ~ He who follows these principles does not desire fullness. ~ Because he is not full, therefore when he becomes decayed he can renew.

—[15c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ The Ancients who made themselves the best ~ Were subtle and penetrating ~ And deep beyond knowing. ~ Because they were beyond knowing, ~ we can only try to describe them: ~ Cautious, as if crossing the river in winter. ~ Circumspect, as if afraid of the neighbors on four sides. ~ Dignified, as if a guest. ~ Expansive, as melting ice. ~ Unspoiled, as unhewn wood. ~ Broad, as a valley. ~ Opaque, as turbid puddles. ~ Who can calm the turbid and clear it gradually? ~ Who can stir the inert and bring it gradually to life? ~ One who keeps this Tao does not wish to be filled. ~ And because he is not filled, ~ he can be sheltered and beyond renewal.

—[15c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ The Excellent shih of ancient times: ~ penetrated into the most obscure, the marvelous, the mysterious. ~ They had a depth beyond understanding. ~ They were simply beyond understanding, ~ the appearance of their forceful presence: ~ Cautious, like one crossing a stream in winter; ~ timid, like one who fears the surrounding neighbors; ~ reserved, like guests; ~ yielding, like ice about to melt; ~ unspecified, like the Uncarved Block; ~ all vacant space, like the Valley; ~ everything mixed together, like muddy water. ~ Who is able, as muddy water, ~ by Stilling to slowly become clear? ~ Who is able, at rest, ~ by long drawn-out movement to slowly come to life? ~ Whoever holds onto this Tao ~ does not yearn for solidity. ~ He simply lacks solidity, and so what he is capable of: ~ Remaining concealed, accomplishing nothing new.

—[15c33t] Cheng Lin ~ The ancients who knew how to live according to Truth possessed a subtle and penetrating intelligence. ~ The profundity of their character was immeasurable. ~ As it was immeasurable, we can only give a superficial description of them as follows: ~ They moved about cautiously as though they were fording a large stream of water. ~ They were retiring and hesitant as though they were shy of the men around them. ~ Their demeanour was reverent as though they were meeting honoured guests. ~ They quickly adapted themselves to any circumstance as though they were ice melting before fire. ~ Their manners were simple and artless as though they were unhewn wood. ~ Their minds were expansive and receptive as though they were hollow valley. ~ Their views were impartial and tolerant as though they were turbid puddles. ~ What is it that can end the turbidity of puddles? ~ When there is no disturbance, the impurities gradually settle, and the water becomes clear. ~ What is it that can perpetuate the continuity of things? ~ When there is constant change, life gradually undergoes growth. ~ Those who hold fast to Truth do not desire satiation. ~ Because there is no satiety, life is continually renewing itself.

—[15c34t] Yi Wu ~ In ancient times, the men who cultivated the Way shared its essence, subtlety, mystery, and penetration. ~ They were deep and beyond knowing. ~ Because they were beyond knowing, we try only to describe them: ~ Cautious, as if crossing a river in winter; ~ Hesitant, as if fearing the neighbors on all sides; ~ Serious, as if a guest; ~ Expansive, as if melting ice; ~ Sincere, as if an uncarved block; ~ Vast, as if a valley; ~ Chaotic, as if turbid [water]. ~ Who can stop turbidity, clarifies it gradually through tranquility. ~ Who can create lasting peace, produces it gradually through movement. ~ The men who protect this Way do not want to be too full; ~ only by not being too full can they remain under cover, ~ without new achievements.

—[15c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ In antiquity, a person who followed the way of Dao, ~ Was as enigmatic as he was insightful. ~ He was also inscrutable. ~ Because of his inscrutability, I am compelled to describe his demeanour: ~ He acts cautiously, as if he were wading through a frigid stream in winter. ~ He conducts his affairs prudently, as if he were fearful of the gossiping of his nosy neighbours. ~ His behaviour is as majestic and proper as an honoured guest. ~ His demeanour is as spontaneous as the melting ice. ~ His character is as unsophisticated as a block of raw timber. ~ He is as open-minded as a valley. ~ He is as muddle-headed as a turbid stream. ~ Who can allow the turbid water to precipitate and gradually become clear? ~ Who can agitate the stillness and slowly bring vivacity back again? ~ He who follows the way of Dao does not become swollen-headed. ~ Consequently, he will endure.

—[15c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ The ancient ones who knew how to live with the subtle essence of the universe were gentle and flexible, profound and indistinguishable. ~ They were too deep to be known, thus we can only describe their appearance. ~ They did not rush into anything, ~ as if fording an icy stream in early winter. ~ They were retiring and hesitant, not assertive, ~ as if they were shy of people. ~ They were reverent in demeanor to everyone, ~ as if meeting honored guests. ~ They did not insist on imposing their views on others or interfering in worldly affairs, ~ as if they were passing travelers. ~ They adapted themselves to a circumstance like melting ice. ~ Simple and genuine, they were like virgin timber. ~ Empty and receptive, they were like a huge cave. ~ Comprehensive and unprejudiced, ~ they were equally kind to all things; ~ like the water of a stream flowing down a mountain, they benefitted all things. ~ Who else could move constantly from the gross and heavy to the light and pure? ~ Who else could evolve steadily from the inert and stagnant to everlasting life? ~ Those who hold fast to the subtle essence of the universe do not desire to extend themselves in climax. ~ Because there is no climax to one's extension and expansion, life is continually renewing itself.

—[15c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ In ancient times the best man of Tao was refined and deeply enlightened. ~ His depth can hardly be measured. ~ Because his depth can hardly be measured, ~ I will try to draw a picture of him. ~ Prudent, as if he were wading in a cold stream in the winter; ~ Calm, as if he did not want to disturb his neighbors; ~ Respectful, as if he were a guest; ~ Fluid, as if he were ice melting; ~ Solid, as if he were an uncarved block; ~ Vacant, as if he were a valley; ~ Lacking clear discriminations, as if he were impure; ~ Who is able to gradually reach purity from impurity through quiescence? ~ Who is able to gradually grow lively from motion through motionlessness? ~ One who abides in Tao never desires to reach an extreme. ~ Because he never desires to reach an extreme, ~ He can remain in the old, yet become the new.

—[15c38t] Henry Wei ~ Virtue Revealed ~ Hsien Teh ~ The good scholars of ancient times ~ Were keen, astute, mysterious, and intuitive. ~ They were so profound as to be incomprehensible. ~ Since they show themselves incomprehensible, ~ They must be depicted in some arbitrary way: ~ They were cautious as if fording a stream in winter, ~ Hesitant as if afraid of the neighbors around, ~ Dignified as if in the role of a guest; ~ They were easy-going, like ice about to melt, ~ Unpretentious, like wood in its virgin state, ~ Open-mindful, like a valley, ~ And murky, like turbid water. ~ Who, being like turbid water, can remain calm, ~ So that quiescence will gradually lead to clarity? ~ Who can stay relaxed for a long while, ~ So that an impulse will gradually lead to Life? ~ He who conserves this Tao does not go to the limit. ~ For the reason that he does not go to the limit, ~ He can wear well and does not need renewal.

—[15c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ Of old a man who practiced Tao best ~ Had insight into the subtlest and penetrated into the darkest. ~ His depth was not to be plumbed. ~ Truly, because his depth was not to be plumbed, ~ He could be portrayed only arbitrarily: ~ Hesitant as if crossing a river in winter; ~ Cautious as if fearing all four sides; ~ Inviolable like a guest; ~ Loose like ice about to thaw; ~ Simple like the uncarved block; ~ Empty like a valley; ~ Murky like muddy water. ~ Who can be muddy and yet, keeping still, slowly turn clear? ~ Who can be calm and yet, keeping active, slowly come to life? ~ He who embraces this Tao ~ Never wishes to be full. ~ Truly, because he is never full, ~ He decays yet renews himself.

—[15c40t] Tao Huang ~ The ancient sages of Tao are subtle and mysteriously penetrating. ~ Their depth is beyond the power of will. ~ Because it is beyond the power of will, ~ The most we can do is describe it: ~ Thus, full of care, as one crossing the wintry stream, ~ Attentive, as one cautious of the total environment, ~ Reserved, as one who is a guest, ~ Spread open, as when confronting a marsh, ~ Simple, like uncarved wood, ~ Opaque, like mud, ~ Magnificent, like a valley. ~ From within the murky comes the stillness. ~ The feminine enlivens with her milk. ~ Keeping such a Tao, excess is undesirable. ~ Desiring no excess, work is completed without exhaustion.

—[15c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ The ancient scholar knew how to be perfect: ~ keep himself subtle, wonderful, profound and flexible. ~ He kept his mind so deep that it could not be fathomed! ~ Because it could not be fathomed, it could only be described superficially: ~ Hesitatingly, like one who is crossing a stream in winter; ~ Timidly, like one who is new to his surrounding neighbors; ~ Reservedly, like a new guest; ~ Yieldingly, like ice which is melting; ~ Honest, like Pure Matter; ~ Obscure, like muddy water; ~ and Capacious, like a deep valley. ~ Who can calmly make the muddy (chaotic) clear (orderly)? ~ Who can calmly change the static (matter) into dynamic (force)? ~ To return to Dao is to let the capacity of mind not be over-filled. ~ Only the mind which is not over-filled can renew the old and perfect the new.

—[15c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ Of old those who were the best rulers were subtly mysterious and profoundly penetrating; ~ Too deep to comprehend. ~ And because they cannot be comprehended, ~ I can only describe them arbitrarily: ~ Cautious, like crossing a frozen stream in the winter, ~ Being at a loss, like one fearing danger on all sides, ~ Reserved, like one visiting, ~ Supple and pliant, like ice about to melt, ~ Genuine, like a piece of uncarved wood, ~ Open and broad, like a valley, ~ Merged and undifferentiated, like muddy water. ~ Who can make muddy water gradually clear through tranquility? ~ Who can make the still gradually come to life through activity? ~ He who embraces this Tao does not want to fill himself to overflowing. ~ It is precisely because there is no overflowing that he is beyond wearing out and renewal.

—[15c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Искусные мужи древнего времени были тонки, чудесны, сокровенны, пронизательны. ~ Их глубины не различить. ~ А раз не различить, то опишу их через силу внешне. ~ Они выглядят такими нерешительными, словно зимою переходят реку. ~ И такими неуверенными, словно боятся окружающих соседей. ~ Своей учтивостью напоминают гостя. ~ Расхлябанны, как лед перед началом таяния. ~ Они просты, как деревья обрубков, и просторны, как долина. ~ У них все смешано, словно в грязи. ~ Кто может, успокаиваясь, постепенно добиваться чистоты в грязи? ~ Кто может при посредстве вечного движения постепенно воскрешать в покое? ~ Кто сберегает это Дао, не стремится к полноте; ~ ведь потому лишь, что не полон, он в состоянии, не прибегая к новому, достигнуть совершенства в ветхом.

— [15c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ С древности искусённый муж видел мельчайше-утончённое, проникал в сокровенное и был непостижим в своей глубине. ~ Из-за того, что он непостижим, можно лишь описать его. ~ Он робок, будто переходит реку зимой. ~ Он осмотрителен, словно опасается своих соседей. ~ Он серьёзен, как гость. ~ Он неоформленно-распылён, будто тающий лёд. ~ Он груб, подобно необработанному дереву; ~ пустотен, подобно долине; ~ неясен, словно мутная вода. ~ Кто способен посредством покоя мутное постепенно сделать прозрачным? ~ Кто способен посредством долгого движения постепенно породить к жизни безмятежное? ~ Сберегающий Дао и не стремящийся к избытку. ~ Лишь потому, что он не стремится к избытку, он способен сокрыться, не воплощаясь вновь.

— [15c93t] Е. А. Торчинов ~ Те древние мужи, что Дао-Путь постигли, были таинственны и утонченны, пронизанные Сокровенным. ~ И столь они были глубоки, что распознать их нельзя. ~ Поскольку нельзя распознать, с усилием попробую лишь указать на свойства их обличья: ~ О, они были столь же внимательны, как если бы зимой переходили реку вброд! ~ О, они были столь же осторожны, как если бы опасались соседей со всех четырех сторон! ~ О, они были столь же серьезны, как если бы чинно встречали гостей! ~ О, они были столь же мягки, как лед, что готов распасться! ~ О, они были столь же ровны, как простота необработанного чурбана! ~ О, они были столь же всеобъемлющи, как широкая долина! ~ О, они были столь же мутны, как взбаламученная вода! ~ Кто может мутную воду сделать чистой, когда она отстоится? ~ Кто может оживить покоящееся, приведя его в движение? ~ Блудущий это Дао-Путь не стремится к полноте и избытку. ~ Поскольку он не стремится к полноте и избытку, он всегда остается бедным и не нуждающимся в обновлении и завершении.

— [15c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ В древности те, кто, воплощая доброту (шань), стали учеными мужами (ши), проникли в сокровенно-тайное первоначало. ~ [Они] сокрылись в такой глубине, что [их] невозможно постичь. ~ А так как невозможно постичь, насколько способен, даю их описание в образах: ~ Предусмотрительно-чутки [они], будто зимой переходят реку [по тонкому льду]. ~ Осторожно-расчетливы, будто страшатся соседей со всех четырех сторон. ~ Благоговеино-почтенны они, подобно всеобъемлющему. ~ Светло-блестящи, словно подтаявший лед. ~ Сердечно-естественны, как духовная простота (пу). ~ Открыто-широки, подобно долине. ~ Как перевозданный хаос, они подобны мутному. ~ Любой из них может, будучи мутным, успокоить себя и постепенно очиститься. ~ Любой из них может, будучи спокойным, привести себя в вечное движение и постепенно родиться. ~ Однако тот, кто хранит это Дао, не страдает наполнения. ~ А так как не наполняется, то может сокрыться и заново не рождаться.

— [15c95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ В древности те, кто были способны к учености, знали мельчайшие и тончайшие [вещи]. ~ Но другим их глубина неведома. ~ Поскольку она неведома, [я] произвольно даю [им] описание: ~ они были робкими, как будто переходили зимой поток; ~ они были нерешительными, как будто боялись своих соседей; ~ они были важными, как гости; ~ они были осторожными, как будто переходили по тающему льду; ~ они были простыми подобно неотделанному дереву; ~ они были необъятными подобно долине; ~ они были непроницаемыми подобно мутной воде. ~ Это были те, которые, соблюдая спокойствие, умели грязное сделать чистым. ~ Это были те, которые своим умением сделать долговечное движение спокойным содействовали жизни. ~ Они соблюдали дао и не желали многого. ~ Не желая многого, они ограничивались тем, что существует, и не создавали нового.

— [15c96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Древние, выдававшиеся над толпой люди хорошо знали мельчайшее, чудесное и непостижимое. ~ Они глубоки - постигнуть их невозможно. ~ Они непостижимы, поэтому внешность их была величественная. ~ О, как они медленны, подобно переходящим зимой через реку! ~ О, как они нерешительны, подобно боящимся своих соседей! ~ О, как они осанисты, подобно гостящим в чужом доме! ~ О, как они осторожны, подобно ходящим на тающем льду! ~ О, как они просты, подобно необделанному дереву! ~ О, как они пусты, подобно пустой долине! ~ О, как они мрачны, подобно мутной воде! ~ Кто сумеет остановить их и сделать ясными? ~ Кто же сумеет успокоить их и продлить их тихую жизнь? ~ Исполняющий Тао не желает быть удовлетворенным. ~ Он же не удовлетворяется ничем, поэтому, довольствуясь старым и не обновляясь (душою), достигает совершенства.

— [15c97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Те, кто в древности претворял Путь, ~ Погружались в утонченное и изначальное, сокровенно все проникали. ~ Столь глубоки они были, что познать их нельзя. ~ Оттого, что познать их нельзя, ~ Коли придется описать их облик, скажу: ~ Сосредоточенные! Словно переходят реку в зимнюю пору. ~ Осторожные! Словно опасаются беспокоить соседей. ~ Сдержанные! Словно в гостях. ~ Податливые! Словно тающий на солнце лед. ~ Могучие! Словно один цельный ствол. ~ Все вмещают в себя, словно широкая долина. ~ Все вбирают в себя, словно мутные воды. ~ Если мутной воде дать отстояться, она станет чистой. ~ А то, что долго покоилось, сможет постепенно ожить. ~ Кто хранит этот Путь, не знает пресыщенья. ~ Не пресыщаясь, он лелеет старое и не ищет новых свершений.

— [15c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Воин, осуществляющий совершенствование, в древности находился в состоянии мистического проникновения в мельчайшее и тончайшее, в глубинах, не поддающихся познанию. ~ Поскольку это не поддается познанию, то постараемся описать через образы. ~ В бдительности - будто зимой переходишь поток. ~ В уподоблении - будто боишься соседей с четырех сторон. ~ В строгости - будто гость. ~ В распространении - будто тающий лед. ~ В искренности - будто необработанный кусок дерева. ~ В широте восприимчивости - будто долина. ~ В непроницаемости - будто мутная вода. ~ Кто способен, будучи мутным, стать неподвижным, посредством покоя постепенно очистится. ~ Кто способен, будучи тихим, постепенно переходить к движению, будет плавно жить. ~ Сохраняя этот Путь, не стремись к наполнению. ~ Если только не наполняешь, тогда будешь способен ветшать, не становясь новым.

— [16c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ Take emptiness to the limit; ~ Maintain tranquility in the center. ~ The ten thousand things - side-by-side they arise; ~ And by this I see their return. ~ Things [come forth] in great numbers; ~ Each one returns to its root. ~ This is called tranquility. ~ "Tranquility" - This means to return to your fate. ~ To return to your fate is to be constant; ~ To know the constant is to be wise. ~ Not to know the constant is to be reckless and wild; ~ If you're reckless and wild, your actions will lead to misfortune. ~ To know the constant is to be all-embracing; ~ To be all-embracing is to be impartial; ~ To be impartial is to be kingly; ~ To be kingly is to be [like] Heaven; ~ To be [like] Heaven is to be [one with] the Tao; ~ If you're [one with] the Tao, to the end of your days you'll suffer no harm.

— [16c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ ATTAIN to utmost Emptiness. ~ Cling single-heartedly to interior peace. ~ While all things are stirring together, ~ I only contemplate the Return. ~ For flourishing as they do, ~ Each of them will return to its root. ~ To return to the root is to find peace. ~ To find peace is to fulfill one's destiny. ~ To fulfill one's destiny is to be constant. ~ To know the Constant is called Insight. ~ If one does not know the Constant, ~ One runs blindly into disasters. ~ If one knows the Constant, ~ One can understand and embrace all. ~ If one understands and embraces all, ~ One is capable of doing justice. ~ To be just is to be kingly; ~ To be kingly is to be heavenly; ~ To be heavenly is to be one with the Tao; ~ To be one with the Tao is to abide forever. ~ Such a one will be safe and whole ~ Even after the dissolution of his body.

—[16c03t] D. C. Lau ~ I do my utmost to attain emptiness; ~ I hold firmly to stillness. ~ The myriad creatures all rise together ~ And I watch their return. ~ The teeming creatures ~ All return to their separate roots. ~ Returning to one's roots is known as stillness. ~ This is what is meant by returning to one's destiny. ~ Returning to one's destiny is known as the constant. ~ Knowledge of the constant is known as discernment. ~ Woe to him who wilfully innovates ~ While ignorant of the constant, ~ But should one act from knowledge of the constant ~ One's action will lead to impartiality, ~ Impartiality to kingliness, ~ Kingliness to heaven, ~ Heaven to the way, ~ The way to perpetuity, ~ And to the end of one's days one will meet with no danger.

—[16c04t] R. L. Wing ~ Attain the highest openness; ~ Maintain the deepest harmony. ~ Become a part of All Things; ~ In this way, I perceive the cycles. ~ Indeed, things are numerous; ~ But each cycle merges with the source. ~ Merging with the source is called harmonizing; ~ This is known as the cycle of destiny. ~ The cycle of destiny is called the Absolute; ~ Knowing the Absolute is called insight. ~ To not know the Absolute ~ Is to recklessly become a part of misfortune. ~ To know the Absolute is to be tolerant. ~ What is tolerant becomes impartial; ~ What is impartial becomes powerful; ~ What is powerful becomes natural; ~ What is natural becomes Tao. ~ What has Tao becomes everlasting And free from harm throughout life.

—[16c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ Try the utmost to make the heart vacant, ~ Be sure to hold fast to quietude. ~ All things are growing and developing, ~ And I see thereby their cycles. ~ Though all things flourish with a myriad of variations, ~ Each one will eventually return to its root. ~ This return to its root means "tranquility," ~ It is called "returning to its destiny." ~ "To return to its destiny" is called "the eternal," ~ To know "the eternal" is called "enlightenment." ~ Not to know "the eternal" and to act blindly (will necessarily) result in disaster. ~ Only knowing "the eternal" can one embrace all, ~ Only embracing all can one be impartial. ~ Being impartial means you can be all-encompassing under Heaven, ~ By being all-encompassing under Heaven, you can be one with Nature. ~ Being one with Nature is in accord with Tao, ~ Being in accord with Tao is everlasting, ~ And you can be free from danger throughout your life.

—[16c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ Empty yourself of everything. ~ Let the mind rest at peace. ~ The ten thousand things rise and fall while the Self watches their return. ~ They grow and flourish and then return to the source. ~ Returning to the source is stillness, which is the way of nature. ~ The way of nature is unchanging. ~ Knowing constancy is insight. ~ Not knowing constancy leads to disaster. ~ Knowing constancy, the mind is open. ~ With an open mind, you will be openhearted. ~ Being openhearted, you will act royally. ~ Being royal, you will attain the divine. ~ Being divine, you will be at one with the Tao. ~ Being at one with the Tao is eternal. ~ And though the body dies, the Tao will never pass away.

—[16c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ Be after the Truthfulness of Emptiness; ~ Stick to the absolute stillness of the mind. ~ You will see all the living things around you in a new light. ~ You will observe their real, original faces. ~ All things under heaven with their diversity ~ shall fall back to their proper places and ~ shall rediscover their origins. ~ Going back to one's origin is the same as stilling the mind. ~ It can also be known as the Rediscovery of Life. ~ The Life Rediscovered is the Eternal. ~ Knowing the Eternal is true understanding. ~ One who does not know the Eternal ~ foolishly creates all kinds of ills for oneself. ~ One who knows the Eternal is accommodating and receptive. ~ Being accommodating and receptive is giving up possessiveness. ~ Giving up possessiveness, one becomes kingly and enlightened. ~ To be kingly and enlightened is heavenly; ~ To be heavenly is to follow the Dao. ~ Following the Dao one will become immortal. ~ Such a man will never die even though his body passes away.

—[16c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ Be humble to the utmost and be peaceful wholeheartedly. ~ Everything in the world is functioning, and I see the cycle of life and death. ~ Everything in the world will eventually go back to the root. ~ Going back to the root means peace, or going to destiny. ~ Going to destiny means following nature's way. ~ Understanding nature's way makes your mind clear. ~ If you do not understand nature's way and you violate it, ~ You will meet with disaster. ~ Understanding nature's way makes you tolerant; ~ Tolerance makes you fair, ~ Fairness makes you a good ruler, ~ Being a good ruler makes you conform to nature, ~ Conformity with nature leads you to the DAO. ~ The DAO lets you last long and never be defeated in your lifetime.

—[16c09t] Walter Gorn Old, GOING HOME ~ Having emptied yourself of everything, remain where you are. ~ All things spring forth into activity with one accord, and whither do we see them return? ~ After blossoming for a while, everything dies down to its root. ~ This going back to one's origin is called peace; it is the giving of oneself over to the inevitable. ~ This giving of oneself over to the inevitable is called preservation. ~ He who knows this preservation is called enlightened. ~ He who knows it not continues in misery. ~ He who knows this preservation is great of soul. ~ He who is great of soul is prevailing. ~ Prevailing, he is a king. ~ Being a king, he is celestial. ~ Being celestial, he is of Tao. ~ Being of Tao, he endures for ever; for though his body perish, yet he suffers no hurt.

—[16c10t] James Legge ~ The (state of) vacancy should be brought to the utmost degree, and that of stillness guarded with unwearied vigour. ~ All things alike go through their processes of activity, and (then) we see them return (to their original state). ~ When things (in the vegetable world) have displayed their luxuriant growth, we see each of them return to its root. ~ This returning to their root is what we call the state of stillness; ~ and that stillness may be called a reporting that they have fulfilled their appointed end. ~ The report of that fulfilment is the regular, unchanging rule. ~ To know that unchanging rule is to be intelligent; ~ not to know it leads to wild movements and evil issues. ~ The knowledge of that unchanging rule produces a (grand) capacity and forbearance, and that capacity and forbearance lead to a community (of feeling with all things). ~ From this community of feeling comes a kingliness of character; ~ and he who is king-like goes on to be heaven-like. ~ In that likeness to heaven he possesses the Tao. ~ Possessed of the Tao, he endures long; ~ and to the end of his bodily life, is exempt from all danger of decay.

—[16c11t] David Hinton ~ Inhabit the furthest peripheries of emptiness and abide in the tranquil center. ~ There the ten thousand things arise, and in them I watch the return: ~ all things on and ever on each returning to its root. ~ Returning to the root is called tranquility, ~ tranquility is called returning to the inevitable unfolding of things, ~ returning to the inevitable unfolding of things is called constancy, ~ and to understand constancy is called enlightenment. ~ Without understanding constancy, you stumble deceived. ~ But understanding constancy, you're all-embracing, ~ all-embracing and therefore impartial, ~ impartial and therefore imperial, ~ imperial and therefore heaven, ~ heaven and therefore Way, ~ Way and therefore enduring: ~ self gone, free of danger.

—[16c12t] Chichung Huang ~ Attain emptiness to the utmost; ~ Adhere to stillness indefatigably. ~ The ten thousand things rise everywhere; ~ I thereby observe their revolution. ~ While things grow exuberantly, ~ Each will again revert to its root, ~ Which means stillness; ~ Stillness means reverting to life; ~ Reverting to life is the constant. ~ Knowing the constant is clear-sighted. ~ Not knowing the constant is blind; ~ Acting blindly is disastrous. ~ Knowing the constant leads to all-embracingness; ~ All-embracingness leads to impartiality; ~ Impartiality leads to kingliness; ~ Kingliness leads to heaven; ~ Heaven leads to the Tao; ~ The Tao leads to permanence; ~ A lifetime without peril.

—[16c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ Reach the pole of emptiness (hsü-chi), ~ Abide in genuine quietude (ching). ~ Ten thousand beings flourish together, ~ I am to contemplate (kuan) their return (fu). ~ Now things grow profusely, ~ Each again returns (kuei) to its root. ~ To return to the root is to attain quietude (ching), ~ It is called to recover life (ming). ~ To recover life is to attain the Everlasting (ch'ang), ~ To know the Everlasting (ch'ang) is to be illumined (ming). ~ Not knowing (chih) the Everlasting (ch'ang), ~ One commits evils wantonly. ~ Knowing the Everlasting one becomes all containing (yung). ~ To be all containing is to be public (kung). ~ To be public is to be kingly (wang). ~ To be kingly is to be like heaven. ~ To be like heaven is to be like Tao. ~ To be like Tao is to last long. ~ This is to lose the body without becoming exhausted (pu tai).

—[16c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ [I adopt the following practice for self-improvement:] ~ To strive to be extremely humble and unassuming; ~ To retain Serenity single-mindedly; ~ [Through such effort, I shall be able to maintain a serene state of mind so that] ~ I can observe and judge [most efficiently] the simultaneous unfolding of activities of each and every creature and thing, as well as their recurrences. ~ Each and every innumerable individual living thing will flourish like weeds [every instant]; ~ Each and every [living thing] will eventually return to its root; ~ The returning of an individual to his (its) root is called Serenity; ~ Serenity means to respond to the determining forces (Tao); ~ Responding to the determining forces (Tao) leads to perpetuation; ~ Individuals who know how to perpetuate are brilliant; ~ Individuals who do not know how to perpetuate are prone to rash activities, hence they are doomed. ~ A person who [truly] knows is comprehensive (tolerant); ~ His comprehensiveness will make him an impartial [person]; ~ Impartiality is the essential quality of a [good and proper] king; ~ Kings [of good standing] came with the background of having recognized [the importance of being in harmony with] Heaven; ~ A person who recognizes [the significance of being in harmony with] Heaven is on the right path of Tao; ~ Being on the path of Tao, a person will perpetuate [his existence]; ~ Throughout my life I have never had, and will never have, any doubt about this (the above described progressive stages of existence).

—[16c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ Attain to utmost emptiness. ~ Cling single-heartedly to stillness. ~ While all things are stirring together, I only contemplate the return; all things flourish, but each of them will return to its root. ~ To return to the root is to be still; that is to return to one's destiny. ~ To return to one's destiny is to return to the constant Way. ~ To know the constant Way is called enlightenment. ~ If one does not know the constant Way, one is blind and runs into disasters. ~ If one knows the constant Way, one is all-embracing. ~ If one is all-embracing, one is just. ~ To be just is to be king. ~ King is Heaven. ~ Heaven is the Way. ~ The Way is eternal. ~ It is safe all life.

—[16c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ Without slightest prejudice and being extremely concentrated, one can handle the complex matters even they happen in parallel. ~ Various things have their roots. ~ When the root is found, we reach the goal. ~ This is the law of the nature, i.e. the nature of the universe. ~ It is wise to know the law of the nature. ~ Without the knowing it and act blindly would doom to fail. ~ Knowing the Tao makes people open-minded. ~ Open-mindedness leads to completeness. ~ Completeness is conformed to the nature. ~ Conforming to nature is Tao. ~ Tao means long-lasting. ~ Therefore, those who know Tao would be always successful.

—[16c17t] Arthur Waley ~ Push far enough towards the Void, ~ Hold fast enough to Quietness, ~ And of the ten thousand things none but can be worked on by you. ~ I have beheld them, whither they go back. ~ See, all things howsoever they flourish ~ Return to the root from which they grew. ~ This return to the root is called Quietness; ~ Quietness is called submission to Fate; ~ What has submitted to Fate has become part of the always-so. ~ To know the always-so is to be Illumined; ~ Not to know it, means to go blindly to disaster. ~ He who knows the always-so has room in him for everything; ~ He who has room in him for everything is without prejudice. ~ To be without prejudice is to be kingly; ~ To be kingly is to be of heaven; ~ To be of heaven is to be in Tao. ~ Tao is forever and he that possesses it, ~ Though his body ceases, is not destroyed.

—[16c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ Their attainment of emptiness absolute and their maintenance of quietude guileless, ~ The myriad things interact. ~ I, as such, observe their return. ~ All things flourish, but each reverts to its roots. ~ To return to the root is called "quietude," which means to revert to one's destiny, and reversion to one's destiny is called "constancy." ~ To understand constancy is called "perspicacity." ~ Not to understand constancy results in errant behavior and, with it, misfortune. ~ To understand constancy is to embrace all things. ~ To embrace things is to be impartial. ~ Such impartiality means true kingship. ~ With true kingship, he is one with Heaven. ~ To be one with Heaven means to be one with the Dao. ~ To be one with the Dao is to be everlasting. ~ As long as he lives, no danger shall befall him.

—[16c19t] Lin Yutang ~ KNOWING THE ETERNAL LAW ~ Attain the utmost in Passivity, ~ Hold firm to the basis of Quietude. ~ The myriad things take shape and rise to activity, ~ But I watch them fall back to their repose. ~ Like vegetation that luxuriantly grows ~ But returns to the root (soil) from which it springs. ~ To return to the root is Repose; ~ It is called going back to one's Destiny. ~ Going back to one's Destiny is to find the Eternal Law. ~ To know the Eternal Law is Enlightenment. ~ And not to know the Eternal Law ~ Is to court disaster. ~ He who knows the Eternal Law is tolerant; ~ Being tolerant, he is impartial; ~ Being impartial, he is kingly; ~ Being kingly, he is in accord with Nature; ~ Being in accord with Nature, he is in accord with Tao; ~ Being in accord with Tao, he is eternal, ~ And his whole life is preserved from harm.

—[16c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ Attain utmost emptiness, ~ Maintain utter stillness. ~ The myriad creatures arise side by side, thus I observe their renewal. ~ Heaven's creatures abound, ~ but each returns to its roots, which is called "stillness." ~ This is termed "renewal of fate." ~ Renewal of fate is perpetual - ~ To know the perpetual is to be enlightened; ~ Not to know the perpetual is to be reckless - recklessness breeds evil. ~ To know the perpetual is to be tolerant - ~ tolerance ~ leads to ducal impartiality, ~ ducal impartiality to kingliness, ~ kingliness to heaven, ~ heaven to the Way, ~ the Way to permanence. ~ To the end of his days, ~ he will not be imperiled.

—[16c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ Empty everything out; ~ hold fast to your stillness. ~ Even though all things are stirring together, ~ watch for the movement of return. ~ The ten thousand things flourish and then each returns to the root from which it came. ~ Returning to the root is stillness. ~ Through stillness each fulfills its destiny. ~ That which has fulfilled its destiny becomes part of the Always-so. ~ To be aware of the Always-so is to awaken. ~ Those who innovate while in ignorance of the Always-so move toward disaster. ~ Those who act with awareness of the Always-so embrace all, are not possessed by particular desire and move toward the Tao. ~ Those who are at one with the Tao abide forever. ~ Even after their bodies waste away, ~ they are safe and whole.

—[16c22t] David H. Li ~ Aim at the supreme hollow, reach for the utmost serenity. ~ Matters bloom in myriad diversity. ~ I watch for periodicity. ~ Matters blossom and return to their roots. ~ Returning to roots leads to serenity. ~ Serenity leads to regeneration. ~ Regeneration leads to normalcy. ~ Knowing normalcy leads to comprehension. ~ Not knowing normalcy, indiscretion leads to misfortune. ~ Knowing normalcy is all-accommodating; ~ All-accommodating is non-discriminating. ~ Non-discriminating is all-encompassing. ~ All-encompassing is the cosmos. ~ Cosmos is Direction. ~ Direction is long lasting. ~ [One who follows Direction] is unlikely to encounter danger throughout life.

—[16c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ Attain utmost emptiness, ~ Maintain utter stillness. ~ Then, as ten thousand things arise together, ~ One will witness their returning to the source. ~ Though things abound in the universe, ~ They all return to the source. ~ Returning to the source is called stillness, ~ And stillness is called returning to destiny. ~ To return to destiny is to return to eternity, ~ And to know eternity is called enlightenment. ~ To act unawarely in the nescience of eternity ~ Is to bring disaster to your life. ~ To know eternity is to be all-inclusive, ~ To be all-inclusive is to be impartial, ~ To be impartial is to attain self-mastery, ~ To attain self-mastery is to be Heavenly, ~ And to be Heavenly is to be one with the Tao Eternal. ~ To be one with the Tao Eternal is to enjoy everlasting life, ~ Forever secure even after the enfolding of the physical self.

—[16c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ Devote yourself to the goal of achieving absolute serenity, ~ Aspire to a state of perfect peace. ~ All things come into existence, ~ And we see them return. ~ Look at the things that bloomed and flowered, ~ Each of them returns to its source. ~ The return to the source is called serenity, ~ Which means following destiny, ~ Following destiny is eternal, it is eternity. ~ He who knows eternity is enlightened. ~ He who does not know eternity runs blindly ~ To his pain and suffering. ~ Knowledge of eternity, is all-embracing. ~ Since he embraces everything, he will achieve greatness. ~ Since he grasps greatness, he can attain perfection. ~ When he reaches perfection, he will attain supremacy. ~ When he is supreme, he will come to the Tao. ~ The person who achieves the Tao exists forever. ~ Even if his body decays, he will never perish.

—[16c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ The sage rules from the purest motives ~ Relying wholly on quiet and inner peace. ~ He watches the seasons rise and fall ~ And if he knows how things grow, he knows ~ They are fed by their roots ~ And they return to their roots; ~ To grow and flower and flow. ~ Every thing must have its roots, ~ and the tendrils work quietly underground. ~ This quiet feeding is the Way of Nature. ~ If you understand ch'ang - this principle of nurturing, ~ you can understand everything. ~ Not understanding it will lead you to disaster. ~ If a sage knows this, he can rule ~ And he will do so with patience and justice. ~ Any man can become wise in this ~ And he can walk the Way of Heaven ~ And if you walk that way ~ You will be royal in the mastery ~ Life can end in pain - ~ But if you live like this, ~ under the Tao ~ You will fill your days with breath.

—[16c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ I try my best to be in an extreme emptiness of mind; ~ I try to keep myself in a state of stillness. ~ From the vigorous growth of all things I perceive the way they move in endless cycles. ~ All things, full of vitality, ~ Finally return to their own roots. ~ Returning to roots means stillness, ~ Also means a return to destiny. ~ A return to destiny is known as the law of eternity. ~ To understand the law is known as enlightening. ~ He who is ignorant of the law, if acting rashly, ~ Will be in great trouble. ~ But he who knows the law is tolerant, ~ And the tolerance leads to impartiality; ~ Impartiality to thoroughness; ~ Thoroughness to nature; ~ Nature to the Tao; ~ The Tao to eternity. ~ Thus he will not be endangered all his life.

—[16c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ Do one's best to achieve emptiness. ~ Hold firmly to stillness. ~ All things on earth follow the same cycle. ~ I observe their return. ~ All the teeming creatures return to their roots. ~ Returning to the root is called stillness. ~ Stillness means to return to life. ~ A return to life means constancy. ~ Understanding constancy means enlightenment. ~ Not knowing constancy leads to evil deeds. ~ Knowing constancy is knowing tolerance. ~ Tolerance is impartiality. ~ Impartiality is the skilful exercise of kingship. ~ Kingship is Heaven. ~ Heaven is Tao. ~ Tao is eternity. ~ Until the end of one's own life, one will meet no danger.

—[16c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ When one is extremely stilled and free of vain desires, ~ All things will work together ~ So that one can watch the changes, ~ For all things return to their roots: ~ Their original states without poles. ~ Returning is completing the cycle of life's work. ~ The cycling of life is absolute, ~ Awareness of that absoluteness is wisdom. ~ Without that wisdom, one may do things willfully ~ And may hence meet with an early death. ~ With the wisdom, one can be tolerant. ~ Being tolerant, one can be just to everything.

~ Being just, one can be a wise leader, ~ Being a wise leader, one can fulfill the greatest cause. ~ Being able to fulfill, one is serving the Way. ~ By serving the Way, the cause can last, ~ And will not vanish even after one's death.

—[16c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ Seek The Extremity of The Void ~ Lao Tze says, ~ Whoever seeks the extremity of the void will preserve genuine stillness. ~ When all existence alike goes through the process of transformation, it returns to its original state. ~ All existence is prosperous as prosperous flowers and leaves which finally decay and return to their roots. ~ This returning to their roots is what we call the action of being still; ~ and the action of being still is a response to the rule of relapsing to one's origin. ~ The rule of relapsing to one's origin is the absolute, the unchanging rule. ~ To know that unchanging rule is to be enlightened; ~ to know not the absolute rule leads to haphazard action and evil issues. ~ The knowledge of the absolute and the unchanging rule produces the capacity of inclusiveness, and the capacity of inclusiveness produces the character of justice. ~ The character of justice goes on to become the king-like character. ~ And the king-like character goes on to become the heaven-like character. ~ In that likeness to heaven, such character possesses the Tao. ~ He who possesses the Tao endures for a long time, and the end of his corporeal life is exempt from all danger of decay.

—[16c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ Attain to the goal of absolute vacuity; ~ Keep to the state of perfect peace. ~ All things come into existence, ~ And thence we see them return. ~ Look at the things that have been flourishing; ~ Each goes back to its origin. ~ Going back to the origin is called peace; ~ It means reversion to destiny. ~ Reversion to destiny is called eternity. ~ He who knows eternity is called enlightened. ~ He who does not know eternity is running blindly into miseries. ~ Knowing eternity he is all-embracing. ~ Being all-embracing he can attain magnanimity. ~ Being magnanimous he can attain omnipresence. ~ Being omnipresent he can attain supremacy. ~ Being supreme he can attain Tao. ~ He who attains Tao is everlasting. ~ Though his body may decay he never perishes.

—[16c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ Attain the ultimate emptiness; ~ Maintain the absolute tranquility. ~ All things rise together. ~ And I observe their return ... ~ The multitude of all things return each to their origin. ~ To return to the origin means repose; ~ It means return to their destiny. ~ To return to their destiny means eternity; ~ To know eternity means enlightenment. ~ Not knowing eternity is to do evil things blindly. ~ To know eternity means having capacity. ~ Capacity leads to justice. ~ Justice leads to kingship. ~ Kingship leads to Heaven. ~ Heaven leads to Tao. ~ Tao is everlasting. ~ Thus the entire life will be without danger.

—[16c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ Push Emptiness to the limit, ~ watch over Stillness very firmly. ~ The thousands of things all around are active - ~ I give my attention to Turning Back. ~ Things growing wild as weeds all turn back to the Root. ~ To turn back to The Root is called Stillness. ~ This is 'reporting in', ~ 'reporting in' is becoming Steady. ~ Experiencing Steadiness is Clarity. ~ Not to experience Steadiness, ~ is to be heedless in one's actions - bad luck. ~ Experiencing Steadiness, ~ then one is all-embracing; ~ all-embracing, then an impartial Prince; ~ Prince, then King; ~ King, then Heaven; ~ Heaven, then Tao; ~ Tao, then one lasts very long. ~ As to destroying the self, ~ there will be nothing to fear.

—[16c33t] Cheng Lin ~ When one has attained the utmost humility and abided in the state of extreme quiescence, he can observe the cycle of changes in the simultaneous growth of all animate creation. ~ Things appear multitudinous and varied, but eventually they all return to the common root. ~ When they revert to the common root, there is quiescence. ~ The state of quiescence is called the fulfilment of destiny. ~ The fulfilment of destiny is called normalcy. ~ The knowledge of normalcy is called enlightenment. ~ The ignorance of normalcy causes haphazard action, and brings about calamities. ~ Knowing normalcy, a man becomes perspicacious. ~ Being perspicacious, he becomes altruistic, supreme, celestial, true, and everlasting. ~ Throughout his life nothing can do him harm.

—[16c34t] Yi Wu ~ Practice emptiness to its ultimate. ~ Maintain tranquility sincerely. ~ All things rise together; ~ I only contemplate their return. ~ All things flourish; ~ Each returns to its root. ~ To return to the root is tranquility; ~ It means to return to life. ~ To return to life is constancy; ~ To know constancy is enlightenment. ~ One who does not know constancy acts blindly and is in danger. ~ Knowing constancy, one's mind embraces all. ~ Embracing all, one treats all things equally. ~ Treating all things equally, one is kingly. ~ Being kingly, one is in accord with Heaven. ~ In accord with Heaven, one attains the Way. ~ Attaining the Way, one lives long. ~ One's entire life is without danger.

—[16c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ I strenuously try to banish all errant thoughts from my mind, and assiduously attempt to maintain quietude. ~ Henceforth, while everything continues to develop and evolve, I silently watch its natural transformation. ~ Although there are multifarious things in the world, ~ Each and every one will go back to where it came from. ~ Returning back to where it came from is called 'jing'. ~ It is also called 'back to destiny'. ~ 'Back to destiny' is the eternal law. ~ You have insightful wisdom if you understand this eternal law. ~ Unable to grasp this will bring about calamity. ~ Knowing this, you will have great understanding. ~ Having great understanding will make you impartial. ~ Being impartial, you generally facilitate others to fulfil their potential. (accomplishment) ~ Accomplishment is in accordance with the law of nature. ~ The law of nature is called Dao. ~ Dao is everlasting. ~ Following the way of Dao, your whole life will be free from danger.

—[16c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ Attain the utmost unoccupiedness. ~ Maintain the utmost stillness, ~ and do not interfere with all the things that rush together in activity and grow luxuriantly. ~ Then you can see how living things flourish and renew themselves. ~ Yet, they all must return to the root again, each to its simple source. ~ Knowing to return to the root is to be refreshed. ~ This is called subtle revitalization. ~ To restore one's vitality is to constantly renew oneself. ~ To know constant renewal is to have achieved clarity. ~ If one does not know constant self renewal and thus acts foolishly, ~ disaster will soon occur. ~ Knowing constancy in renewing oneself, ~ one can extend the duration of one's life. ~ If one can deeply understand the extension of life's duration, ~ one is able to contain all things within oneself. ~ To be all-inclusive is to be impartial. ~ To be impartial is to realize the positive, creative virtues of Heaven. ~ To be Heavenly is to be one with the subtle essence of the universe. ~ To be one with the subtle essence of the universe is to enjoy everlasting life. ~ Such a one will be preserved, even after the dissolution of his physical body.

—[16c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ Contemplate the ultimate void. ~ Remain truly in quiescence. ~ All things are together in action, ~ But I look into their non-action. ~ Things are unceasingly moving and restless, ~ Yet each one is proceeding back to the origin. ~ Proceeding back to the origin is quiescence. ~ To be in quiescence is to return to the destiny of being. ~ The destiny of being is reality. ~ To understand reality is to be enlightened. ~ Not to understand it, and to act wrongly, leads to disaster. ~ Reality is all-embracing. ~ To be all-embracing is to be selfless. ~ To be selfless is to be all-pervading. ~ To be all-pervading is to be transcendent. ~ To be transcendent is to attain Tao. ~ To attain Tao is to be everlasting. ~ Even when the body dies, it is not the end.

—[16c38t] Henry Wei ~ Return to the Root ~ Kuei Ken ~ Empty the mind to the utmost extent. ~ Maintain quiescence with the whole being. ~ The ten thousand things are growing with one impulse, ~ Yet I can discern their cyclic return. ~ Luxuriant indeed are the growing things; ~ Yet each again will return to the root. ~ Returning to the root means quiescence; ~ Quiescence means renewal of life; ~ Renewal of life means in tune with the Immutable. ~ Knowing the Immutable brings enlightenment. ~ Not knowing the Immutable causes disaster. ~ Knowing the Immutable, one will be broad-minded; ~ Being broad-minded, one will be impartial; ~ Being impartial, one will be kingly; ~ Being kingly, one will attain the Divine; ~ Attaining the Divine, one will merge with Tao, ~ And become immortal and imperishable, ~ Even after the disappearance of the body.

—[16c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ Attain the utmost emptiness, ~ Hold fast to stillness. ~ The ten thousand things rise together; ~ I see them return. ~ All things flourish; ~ Each reverts to its root. ~ Reverting to the root is called stillness. ~ It means submission to fate. ~ Submission to fate is called [submission to] the constant. ~ To know the constant is called enlightenment. ~ If you do not know the constant, ~ You act blindly, ruining yourself. ~ Knowing the constant, you will be all-embracing. ~ All-embracing, hence impartial; ~ Impartial, hence king; ~ King, hence Heaven; ~ Heaven, hence Tao; ~ Tao, hence long-lasting. ~ Thus, you will be free of danger until the end of your life.

—[16c40t] Tao Huang ~ Reaching the ultimate emptiness, ~ Concentrating on the central stillness, ~ All things work together. ~ From this I observe their returning. ~ All things under heaven flourish in their vitality, ~ Yet each returns to its own root. ~ This is stillness. ~ Stillness means returning to its destiny. ~ Returning to its destiny is steadfastness. ~ To know steadfastness means enlightenment. ~ Not to know steadfastness is to act forcefully. ~ Acting forcefully brings disaster. ~ Knowing the steadfast implies acceptance. ~ Acceptance is impartial. ~ Impartial is regal. ~ Regal is heaven. ~ Heaven is Tao. ~ Tao is beyond danger even when the body perishes.

—[16c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ To have the greatest capacity of mind, keep it quiet and patient, ~ All things are resolved in order, ~ In order to understand the merit of Return. ~ While individual things are growing simultaneously yet all of them will return eventually to the original root (Pure Matter). ~ To return toward the original root is to see the static phenomenon. ~ To see the static phenomenon is to know the original order. ~ To know the original order is to know the eternal law. ~ If one does not know the eternal law and acts only by means of trial and error he will end in disaster. ~ By knowing the eternal law one can have capacity; ~ by having capacity one can be impartial; ~ by being impartial one can be perfect; ~ being perfect one can be superior; ~ by being superior one can be eternal; ~ and by being eternal one can approach Dao. ~ There will be no discontinuation of life, even though a human body will die.

—[16c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ Attain complete vacuity. ~ Maintain steadfast quietude. ~ All things come into being, ~ And I see thereby their return. ~ All things flourish, ~ But each one returns to its root. ~ This return to its root means tranquility. ~ It is called returning to its destiny. ~ To return to destiny is called the eternal (Tao). ~ To know the eternal is called enlightenment. ~ Not to know the eternal is to act blindly to result in disaster. ~ He who knows the eternal is all-embracing. ~ Being all-embracing, he is impartial. ~ Being impartial, he is kingly (universal). ~ Being kingly, he is one with Nature. ~ Being one with Nature, he is in accord with Tao. ~ Being in accord with Tao, he is everlasting ~ And is free from danger throughout his lifetime.

—[16c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ В пределе достижения пустоты неколебимо сберегается покой. ~ В возрастании десяти тысяч вещей я зрю их возвращение. ~ Вещей несметно много, и каждая возвращается к своему корню. ~ Возвращение к корню называется покоем. ~ Это означает возвращение к судьбе. ~ Возвращение к судьбе делает незыблемым, ~ знание незыблемого называется просветом. ~ В незнании незыблемого - зло бессмысленного становления. ~ Знание незыблемого емко, в емком общее, общее есть царь, царь - это Небо, Небо означает Дао, а если - Дао, значит, вечен и в безопасности всю жизнь.

—[16c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Достигая предельной пустоты, я сохраняю полный покой. ~ Мириады вещей возникают вместе, я же взираю на их возвращение. ~ Из множества вещей каждая восходит к своему корню. ~ Возвращение к корню назову умиротворением. ~ Это то, что зовётся возвращением к судьбе. ~ Возвращение к судьбе назову постоянством. ~ Познавшего постоянство назову просветлённым. ~ Не познавший постоянства творит зло и коварен. ~ Тот, кто познал постоянство, - всеобъемлющ. ~ Всеобъемлющий беспристрастен, беспристрастный становится государем, государь единится с Небом, Небо единится с Дао. ~ Дао единится с вечностью. ~ Достигший этого до конца дней своих не встретит опасностей.

— [16с93т] Е. А. Торчинов ~ Достигнув предела пустоты, блюдя покой и умиротворение, взирая на взаимопорождение сущего, я буду созерцать лишь постоянное его возвращение. ~ Все сущее в движении, то возникая, то снова уходя. ~ Но каждое из множества существ стремится неизменно к корню своему, а возвращение к корню я назову покоем. ~ Покой я назову возвратом к жизненности изначальной судьбы. ~ Возврат к жизненности назову я постоянством. ~ Знание постоянства назову я просветленной мудростью. ~ Тот, кто не знает постоянства, живет во мраке заблуждений и творит порочные дела. ~ Но постоянство знающий обширно всеохватен. ~ И эту всеохватность назову я всеобщностью. ~ Тот, кто обрел сию всеобщность, достоин быть царем. ~ А царственный по праву обретает Небо, а Небо обретает Дао-Путь. ~ А Дао-Путь - он вековечен. ~ Тот, кто стал к сей вековечности причастен, до самой смерти не узнает никаких несчастий.

— [16с94т] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Достиг предела пустоты, сохраняю покой и (душевную) чистоту. ~ Вещи попарно творятся, а я созерцаю их возвращение. ~ Вещей многое множество, но каждая возвращается к их общему корню. ~ Возвращение к корню называю покоем, ~ покой называю судьбой возвращения; ~ судьбу возвращения называю постоянством. ~ Знание постоянства называю просветленностью. ~ Незнание постоянства называю безрассудством, творящим зло. ~ Знающий постоянство всеобъемлющ. ~ Всеобъемлющий и есть гун-правитель. ~ Гун-правитель и есть Ван-царь. ~ Ван-царь и есть Небо. ~ Небо и есть Дао. ~ Дао и есть вечность. ~ Бестелесное не истощается.

— [16с95т] Ян Хин-шун ~ Нужно сделать [свое сердце] предельно беспристрастным, твердо сохранять покой, и тогда все вещи будут изменяться сами собой, а нам останется лишь созерцать их возвращение. ~ [В мире] - большое разнообразие вещей, но [все они] возвращаются к своему началу. ~ Возвращение к началу называется покоем, а покой называется возвращением к сущности. ~ Возвращение к сущности называется постоянством. ~ Знание постоянства называется [достижением] ясности, а незнание постоянства приводит к беспорядку и [в результате] к злу. ~ Знающий постоянство становится совершенным; ~ тот, кто достиг совершенства, становится справедливым; ~ тот, кто обрел справедливость, становится государем. ~ Тот, кто становится государем, следует небу. ~ Тот, кто следует небу, следует дао. ~ Тот, кто следует дао, вечен и до конца жизни [такой государь] не будет подвергаться опасности.

— [16с96т] Д. П. Конисси ~ Когда пустота будет доведена до последнего предела, то будет глубочайший покой. ~ Всякая вещь растёт, в чем я вижу возвращение (или круговорот). ~ Правда, вещи чрезвычайно разнообразны, но все они возвращаются к своему началу. ~ Возвращение вещей к своему началу и есть покой. ~ Покой и есть возвращение к жизни. ~ Возвращение к жизни и есть постоянство. ~ Знающий постоянство (или вечность) - мудрец. ~ Незнающий постоянства будет действовать по своему произволу, поэтому он призывает к себе беду. ~ Знающий постоянство имеет всеобъемлющую душу. ~ Имеющий всеобъемлющую душу будет правосуден. ~ Правосудный будет царем. ~ Кто царь, тот соединяется с Небом. ~ Кто соединен с Небом, тот будет подобен Тао, которое существует от вечности. ~ Тело его погибнет (умрет, когда настанет время), но (дух его) никогда не уничтожится.

— [16c97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Дойди в пустоте до предела. ~ Блюда покой со всем тщанием. ~ Все вещи в мире возникают совместно, ~ Я так прозреваю их возврат. ~ Вещи являются без порядка, без счета, ~ И каждая возвращается к своему корню. ~ Возвращение к корню - это покой, ~ Покой - это возвращение к судьбе. ~ Возвращение к судьбе - это постоянство, ~ Знание постоянства - это просветленность, ~ А не знать постоянства - значит слепотой навлечь беду. ~ Кто знает постоянство, тот все вместит в себя; ~ Кто все вместит в себя, тот беспристрастен. ~ Кто беспристрастен, тот царствен, ~ Кто царствен, тот подобен Небу. ~ Кто подобен Небу, тот претворяет Путь. ~ Кто претворяет Путь, ~ Тот пребудет долго ~ И до конца дней избегнет вреда.

— [16c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Стремись к пределу пустоты. ~ Старайся удерживать состояние покоя. ~ Мириады сущностей действуют одновременно. ~ Моя сущность - для того, чтобы созерцать возвращение. ~ Ведь сущностей беспорядочно много, а каждая возвращается, приходя к своему корню. ~ Приход к корню выражается покоем. ~ Покой выражается возвращением судьбы. ~ Возвращение судьбы выражается постоянством. ~ Знание постоянства выражается просветлением. ~ Не зная постоянства, суетишься, создавая неудачи. ~ Осознание постоянства делает восприимчивым. ~ Восприимчивость ведет к способности быть справедливым. ~ Если справедлив, то можешь быть правителем. ~ Будучи правителем, общаешься с Небом. ~ Сообщаясь с Небом, приходишь к Пути. ~ Двигаясь по Пути, способен бесконечно длить. ~ Тело исчезнет, а не погибнешь.

— [17c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ With the highest [kind of rulers], those below simply know they exist. ~ With those one step down - they love and praise them. ~ With those one further step down - they fear them. ~ And with those at the bottom - they ridicule and insult them. ~ When trust is insufficient, there will be no trust [in return]. ~ Hesitant, undecided! Like this is his respect for speaking. ~ He completes his tasks and finishes his affairs, ~ Yet the common people say, "These things all happened by nature."

— [17c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ THE highest type of ruler is one of whose existence the people are barely aware. ~ Next comes one whom they love and praise. ~ Next comes one whom they fear. ~ Next comes one whom they despise and defy. ~ When you are lacking in faith, ~ Others will be unfaithful to you. ~ The Sage is self-effacing and scanty of words. ~ When his task is accomplished and things have been completed, ~ All the people say, "We ourselves have achieved it!"

— [17c03t] D. C. Lau ~ The best of all rulers is but a shadowy presence to his subjects. ~ Next comes the ruler they love and praise; ~ Next comes one they fear; ~ Next comes one with whom they take liberties. ~ When there is not enough faith, there is lack of good faith. ~ Hesitant, he does not utter words lightly. ~ When his task is accomplished and his work done ~ The people all say, 'It happened to us naturally.'

— [17c04t] R. L. Wing ~ Superior leaders are those whose existence is merely known; ~ The next best are loved and honored; The next are respected; ~ And the next are ridiculed. ~ Those who lack belief ~ Will not in turn be believed. ~ But when the command comes from afar ~ And the work is done, the goal achieved, ~ The people say, "We did it naturally."

— [17c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ The best rulers are those about whom people know nothing but their existence. ~ The next best are those whom people love and praise, ~ The next are those whom people fear, ~ The next are those whom people despise. ~ Only when one is not faithworthy, will faithless events take place! ~ So idle, (the best rulers) seldom issue any orders. ~ When some affairs are accomplished, ~ All common people will say "We are in ourselves."

— [17c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ The very highest is barely known by men. ~ Then comes that which they know and love, ~ Then that which is feared, ~ Then that which is despised. ~ He who does not trust enough will not be trusted. ~ When actions are performed ~ Without unnecessary speech, ~ People say, "We did it!"

—[17c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ The Supreme stays with the one who is least clever. ~ Others, who merely pays tribute to the Supreme verbally, ~ stay further away from the Supreme. ~ Still others, who fear the Supreme, ~ are more distant from the Supreme. ~ Still others, who live in defilement of the Supreme, ~ are the worst. ~ There are people who believe inadequately. ~ There are people who do not believe at all. ~ Take things easy and spare your words. ~ When what needs done gets done ~ People will say "How natural and easy it is!"

—[17c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ The best ruler, the people do not feel his presence. ~ The second best, the people love and praise him. ~ The third best, the people fear him. ~ The worst, the people insult him. ~ If a ruler does not fully trust his people, ~ The people will not trust him. ~ A good ruler lets his people be free and rarely gives orders. ~ So, when things are accomplished, the people say, ~ "This is what we are suppose to do."

—[17c09t] Walter Gorn Old, BEING NATURAL ~ In the first age of mankind the people recognised their superiors. ~ In the second age they served and flattered them. ~ In the third age they feared them. ~ In the fourth age they despised them. ~ Where faith is lacking it does not inspire confidence. ~ How careful they were in their expressions! ~ When they had done a good thing they would say, "How very natural we are!"

—[17c10t] James Legge ~ In the highest antiquity, (the people) did not know that there were (their rulers). ~ In the next age they loved them and praised them. ~ In the next they feared them; in the next they despised them. ~ Thus it was that when faith (in the Tao) was deficient (in the rulers) a want of faith in them ensued (in the people). ~ How irresolute did those (earliest rulers) appear, showing (by their reticence) the importance which they set upon their words! ~ Their work was done and their undertakings were successful, while the people all said, 'We are as we are, of ourselves!'

—[17c11t] David Hinton ~ The loftiest ruler is barely known among those below. ~ Next comes a ruler people love and praise. ~ After that, one they fear, and then one they despise. ~ If you don't stand sincere by your words ~ how sincere can the people be? ~ Take great care over words, treasure them, ~ and when the hundred-fold people see ~ your work succeed in all they do ~ they'll say it's just occurrence appearing of itself.

—[17c12t] Chichung Huang ~ The supreme sovereign - the people barely knew he was there; ~ The next - they loved and praised him; ~ The next - they feared him; ~ The lowest - they despised him. ~ Only when his trust became deficient ~ Was there distrust. ~ Hesitant, he grudged his words; ~ Merits scored, affairs accomplished, ~ The hundred family names said: "That's the way things are with us."

—[17c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ The best government, the people know it is just there. ~ The next best, they love and praise it. ~ The next, they fear it. ~ The next, they revile against it. ~ When you don't trust (hsin) [the people] enough, ~ Then they are untrustworthy (pu hsin). ~ Quiet, why value words (yen)? ~ Work is accomplished, things are done. ~ People all say that I am natural (tzu-jan).

—[17c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ The best leaders were those whose dependents were not even aware of their existences [since they were free from the feeling of insecurity, they did not bother to seek recognition of their authority]; ~ Next were leaders who were loved by their people, [for they enjoyed to be recognized, as evidenced by their people's appreciation and love]; ~ Come next to it were leaders who loved to receive flatterings from their underlings, [because their attentiveness assured them of their power]; ~ Further down next [close to the bottom] were leaders who would intimidate their subordinates, [for they took pleasure out of displaying their control over others]; ~ The poorest leaders were those who were even insulted by their subjects, [because they were recognizable only as leaders through status quo, and people fan out their frustrations through their slurs]. ~ When there are not adequate evidences for credibility, distrust will grow; ~ [A ruler] should be pensive and refrain from announcing promises [which are not backed by comprehensive consideration and serious commitment]; ~ Thus when the deeds are accomplished successfully, people will construe that my performances were impelled by natural forces [which carries the most trustworthy fairness].

—[17c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ The best ruler is one of whose existence the people are barely aware. ~ Next comes one whom they love and praise. ~ Next comes one whom they fear. ~ Next comes one whom they despise and defy. ~ When sincerity is not enough, there is lack of faith. ~ With the ruler who is cautious and scanty of words, when his work is done and things are accomplished, all the people say, "We ourselves have naturally achieved it!"

—[17c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ The best government is one in which its citizens are unaware of its existence. ~ The next best rewards the citizens so that they are loyal. ~ A worse one, make the citizens fear. ~ The worst causes them to rebel. ~ Because such rulers lose credibility therefore people no longer trust them. ~ Take it easy and never abuse the power. ~ This will make rulers more successful and satisfied. ~ In turn, the citizen would praise such rulers who make them at ease.

—[17c17t] Arthur Waley ~ Of the highest the people merely know that such a one exists; ~ The next they draw near to and praise. ~ The next they shrink from, intimidated; but revile. ~ Truly, 'It is by not believing people that you turn them into liars'. ~ But from the Sage it is so hard at any price to get a single word, ~ That when his task is accomplished, his work done, ~ Throughout the country every one says 'It happened of its own accord'.

—[17c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ The "very highest" by those below is just known to exist. ~ The next is he who is a parent to them, in whom they rejoice. ~ The next is he whom they fear. ~ The next is he whom they treat with contempt. ~ If one fails to have trust, a corresponding lack of trust in him occurs. ~ He takes his time, oh, as he weighs his words carefully. ~ And, when success is had and the task accomplished, the common folk all say, "We just live naturally."

—[17c19t] Lin Yutang ~ RULERS ~ Of the best rulers ~ The people (only) know that they exist; ~ The next best they love and praise; ~ The next they fear; ~ And the next they revile. ~ When they do not command the people's faith, ~ Some will lose faith in them, ~ And then they resort to oaths! ~ But (of the best) when their task is accomplished, their work done, ~ The people all remark, "We have done it ourselves."

—[17c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ Preeminent is one whose subjects barely know he exists; ~ The next is one to whom they feel close and praise; ~ The next is one whom they fear; ~ The lowest is one whom they despise. ~ When the ruler's trust is wanting, ~ there will be no trust in him. ~ Cautious, he values his words. ~ When his work is completed and his affairs finished, ~ the common people say, "We are like this by ourselves."

—[17c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ The best leader is one whose existence is barely known by the people. ~ Next comes one whom they love and praise. ~ Next comes one they fear. ~ Next comes one they defy. ~ If you do not trust enough, you will not be trusted. ~ True Persons do not offer words lightly. ~ When their task is accomplished and their work is completed, ~ the people say, "It happened to us naturally."

—[17c22t] David H. Li ~ At the highest level, one is unseen. ~ At the next level, one is liked and praised. ~ At the next level, one is feared. ~ At the next level, one is ridiculed. ~ One lacking in trustworthiness loses the [populace's] trust. ~ Carefree, one values one's words. ~ With work accomplished and business done, the gentry say: "We do this naturally."

—[17c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ The supreme leader is one whose existence is barely known. ~ Next best is one who is loved and praised. ~ Next is one who is feared. ~ The last is one who is contemned. ~ No trust will ever be accorded to a leader who lacks integrity. ~ Therefore, with deep commitment, ~ Honor your words and trust the words of others. ~ Then, when the work is done and success achieved, ~ The people will say, "We did it ourselves."

—[17c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ The greatest rulers are the ones whose existence the people do not notice at all, ~ The rulers who are inferior to them are the ones whom the people honor and praise, ~ And inferior to those are the ones of whom they are afraid, ~ And inferior to those are the ones whom they despise. ~ When there is a lack of faith in the ruler, ~ No one believes in his rule. ~ Now, learn how much importance must be attributed to words.

—[17c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ The highest form of government ~ Is what people hardly even realize is there. ~ Next is that of the sage ~ Who is seen, and loved, and respected. ~ Next down is the dictatorship ~ That thrives on oppression and terror - ~ And the last is that of those who lie ~ And end up despised and rejected. ~ The sage says little - ~ and does not tie the people down; ~ And the people stay happy ~ Believing that what happens ~ happens, naturally.

—[17c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ The best ruler is unknown to his subjects; ~ Next comes the ruler loved and praised; ~ Next comes the ruler being feared; ~ Next comes the ruler disdained. ~ The lack of faith on the part of the ruler ~ Leads to the lack of confidence in him on the part of the people. ~ The best ruler is leisurely and carefree, seldom issuing orders. ~ When the state affairs are properly dealt with, ~ The people all say, "It should have happened to us like this."

—[17c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ The best rulers are those whom the people barely know exist. ~ The next best are those whom the people love and praise. ~ Then there are those whom the people fear and despise. ~ If they do not rule the country with faith, the people will not respond to them with trust. ~ The best rulers do not need to rule the people with words. ~ If they have accomplished their task, the people will be ruled automatically.

—[17c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ The best king rules so that people know that "there is a king." ~ The less wise king rules so that he is praised and loved. ~ The still less wise king rules so that he is feared. ~ The worst king rules so that he is cursed. ~ He who abides by nothing, ~ Who rules by saying and doing nothing misleading, ~ Achieves such political success that people all think ~ They are just following their own nature.

—[17c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ The Ancient Government ~ Lao Tze says, ~ In the highest antiquity, people only knew that there were rulers. ~ Next were those they loved and praised. ~ Then there were those they feared. ~ And finally there were those they despised. ~ Thus it was when the ruler was deficient in the Tao faith that his people ensured him with want of faith. ~ How irresolute are those who appreciate reticence. ~ Although the work was completed and the undertaking successful, all the people would say, 'it happened to us naturally.'

—[17c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ The great rulers - the people do not notice their existence; ~ The lesser ones - they attach to and praise them; ~ The still lesser ones - they fear them; ~ The still lesser ones - they despise them. ~ For where faith is lacking, ~ It cannot be met by faith. ~ Now how much importance must be attributed to words!

—[17c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ Of the best, the people barely know of his existence. ~ Of the next best, the people love and praise him. ~ Of the next one, the people are afraid of him. ~ And of the next, the people despise him. ~ He who does not trust others enough will not be trusted by them. ~ Therefore, hesitating, one should carefully choose his words. ~ When he accomplishes his task and the things get done, ~ The people all say: "We have done it by ourselves."

—[17c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ The greatest ruler: those under him only know he exists; ~ the next best kind: they love and praise him; ~ the next: they are in awe of him; ~ the next: they despise him. ~ When sincerity does not suffice, ~ it was not sincerity. ~ ("Reticent - he is sparing with words.") ~ He achieves successes, ~ he accomplishes his tasks, ~ and the hundred clans all say: ~ "We are just being natural."

—[17c33t] Cheng Lin ~ Under the highest type of ruler, the subjects are hardly aware of his existence. ~ Under the next type of ruler, the subjects love his government. ~ Under the still next type of ruler, the subjects praise his government. ~ Under the still next type of ruler, the subjects stand in awe of his government. ~ Under the still next type of ruler, the subjects despise his government. ~ When one fails to inspire confidence, there must be cause for distrust. ~ Be quiet! ~ How can speech be of any avail! ~ When there are successes and achievements, the people believe that these are the natural results.

—[17c34t] Yi Wu ~ The best ruler: the people merely know he exists. ~ Next best: the people love and praise him. ~ Next: the people fear him. ~ Lowest: the people despise him. ~ Because he does not trust enough, ~ he will not be trusted by others. ~ Silent, the best ruler values his words. ~ When he has achieved merit and completed his works, ~ the people all say, "We did it ourselves."

—[17c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ People take the great ruler for granted and are oblivious to his presence. ~ The good ruler is loved and acclaimed by his subjects. ~ The mediocre ruler is universally feared. ~ The bad ruler is generally despised; ~ Because he lacks credibility, the subjects do not trust him. ~ On the other hand, the great ruler seldom issues orders. ~ Yet he appears to accomplish everything effortlessly. ~ To his subjects everything he does is just a natural occurrence.

—[17c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ High beings of deep universal virtue work unassertively. ~ They help all people, ~ yet people are barely aware of their existence. ~ Leaders of great achievement earn the friendship and praise of people. ~ Leaders of great strength make people afraid. ~ People despise and defy a leader who is untrustworthy. ~ One cannot inspire confidence in people through words alone; ~ it must be accompanied by correct deeds. ~ When one of subtle virtue has accomplished his task, all the people will say: ~ "It is we ourselves who made it so."

—[17c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ The best leader is one whom no one knows. ~ The next best is one who is intimate with the people and is flattered by them. ~ The next is one who is feared by the people. ~ The next is one who is held in contempt by the people. ~ Therefore, when one's sincerity is not sufficient, one does not have the confidence of the people. ~ Be cautious! and spare words. ~ Then when work is done and things are accomplished, ~ People will say that things happened by themselves.

—[17c38t] Henry Wei ~ The Atmosphere of Simplicity ~ Ch'un Feng ~ The best rulers are not known to the people; ~ Then come those who are loved and praised; ~ Then those who are held in awe; ~ And lastly those who are despised. ~ When one's faith is inadequate, ~ It will not evoke faith from other people. ~ (Wise rulers) are wary and treasure their words. ~ When their task is accomplished and their work done, ~ All the people would say: ~ "We did it of our free will."

—[17c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ Of the rulers, the best is one of whose existence his people are [merely] aware; ~ Next comes one whom they love and praise; ~ Next comes one whom they fear; ~ Next comes one whom they despise. ~ When you don't trust them, ~ They will not trust you. ~ Calm, I rarely speak. ~ Yet the task is accomplished; ~ The people call me tzu-jan.

—[18c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ When the inner truth of the Tao is lost, ~ The outer code of morality comes into being. ~ When cleverness reigns in the world, ~ Hypocrisy becomes rampant; ~ When discord arises in the family, ~ Filiality is emphasized; ~ When chaos befalls the nation, ~ Respect is accorded to loyal subjects alone.

—[18c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ When the great Tao is lost, justice, righteousness and good will spring forth. ~ When wisdom and cunning emerge, hypocrisy raises its head. ~ When family ties are no longer harmonious, honoring parents and caring for children still remain. ~ When a nation is in a state of confusion and disorder, patriotism becomes evident. ~ When Tao is present, equilibrium is present. ~ When Tao is lost, the differences between things emerge.

—[18c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ When the Great Tao is lost sight of - ~ Then people have to try to be kind and gentle. ~ They try to compensate by being clever ~ But this only breeds hypocrisy and sleight-of-hand. ~ When families fall out ~ relationships sour into useless formality. ~ When the nation is misled and in chaos ministers mouth empty promises.

—[18c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ The advocating of benevolence and rectitude ~ Stems from the disuse of the great Tao. ~ The great hypocrisy ~ Follows the emergence of cleverness and wisdom. ~ Filiality and benevolence come ~ Along with the family feud. ~ The loyal subjects show themselves ~ When the state is in great disorder.

—[18c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ When the Tao disappears, humanity and justice will appear by themselves. ~ When intelligence appears, falsity will appear too. ~ When relatives fall into disharmony, filial piety and kindheartedness will appear. ~ When the country falls into chaos, official loyalists will appear.

—[18c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ When the Way is lost ~ There needs to be grace and kindness. ~ When sophisticated knowledge is produced ~ There must be falsehood. ~ When relatives turn rude to each other, ~ There must be filial piety. ~ When a country is in chaos, ~ There will appear loyalty.

—[18c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ The Tao Is Not In Use ~ Lao Tze says, ~ When the great Tao is not in use, benevolence and righteousness come into vogue. ~ When wisdom and shrewdness appear, there ensues great hypocrisy. ~ When six kinships no longer live at peace, filial piety and lenity find their manifestation. ~ When the state falls into chaos, loyal ministers appear.

—[18c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ When the great Tao is lost, spring forth benevolence and righteousness. ~ When wisdom and sagacity arise, there are great hypocrites. ~ When family relations are no longer harmonious, we have filial children and devoted parents. ~ When a nation is in confusion and disorder, patriots are recognized. ~ Where Tao is, equilibrium is. ~ When Tao is lost, out come all the differences of things.

—[18c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ When the Great Tao is abandoned, ~ There are human-heartedness and righteousness; ~ When knowledge and wisdom arise, ~ There is great hypocrisy; ~ When the six relations are not in accord, ~ There are filial piety and paternal affection; ~ When a country is in disorder, ~ There are loyal ministers.

—[18c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ When Great Tao vanished ~ we got 'Goodness and Morality'. ~ When 'Wisdom and Know-how' arose ~ we got the Great Shams. ~ When the six family relationships fell into disharmony ~ we got 'Respect and Caring'. ~ When the states and the great families became all benighted and disordered ~ we got 'Loyal Subjects'.

—[18c33t] Cheng Lin ~ When the great Truth is abandoned, the teachings of benevolence and righteousness become fashionable. ~ When wit and cunning are highly esteemed, the adepts in hypocrisy become fashionable. ~ When discord reigns in the family, the teachings of filial piety and fraternal love become fashionable. ~ When chaos prevails in the country, the loyal ministers become fashionable.

—[18c34t] Yi Wu ~ When the great Way was abandoned, ~ Humanity and righteousness appeared. ~ When the intelligent and knowledgeable arose, ~ Great hypocrisy appeared. ~ When the six relationships were not in harmony, ~ Filial piety and paternalistic kindness appeared. ~ When the state was in chaos and disorder, ~ Loyal ministers appeared.

—[18c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ When the great Dao is in decline, ~ Benevolence and loyalty appear. ~ As wisdom arises, so does hypocrisy. ~ Only in a feuding family do filial piety and parental doting become conspicuous. ~ Loyal ministers emerge whenever the country is in chaos.

—[18c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ When humankind strayed from the natural way of life, ~ relative social disciplines began to appear. ~ When intelligence and cleverness of mind are admired, ~ great hypocrisy is born. ~ When disharmony manifested in family relations, ~ children who respected their parents and parents who loved their children became rare examples. ~ When chaos prevailed in the country, ~ only a few loyal ministers were recognized. ~ Let all people return to their true nature. ~ Love, kindness, wisdom, family harmony, and loyalty should not be taught one by one, ~ separately from an honest life. ~ Then, once again, people will regain the natural virtue of wholeness. ~ The world will be naturally ordered. ~ There will be no one who singly and cunningly works for personal interest alone.

—[18c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ As soon as the great Tao is cast aside, ~ There prevails the teaching of benevolence and righteousness. ~ As soon as intellection and prudence are esteemed, ~ There is produced the great falsehood. ~ As soon as the members of a family are no longer at peace, ~ There is a demand for filial piety and love. ~ As soon as a nation is in confusion and rebellion, ~ There is a claim for loyal officers.

—[18c38t] Henry Wei ~ Social Decadence ~ Su Po ~ The Great Tao having been abandoned, ~ There arise benevolence and righteousness. ~ With the emergence of wit and wisdom, ~ There comes into being monstrous hypocrisy. ~ When the six relatives fail to live in harmony, ~ There arise filial piety and parental love. ~ When the state falls into darkness and disorder, ~ There come into existence loyal ministers.

—[18c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ When the great Tao is abandoned, ~ You have humaneness and righteousness. ~ When wisdom appears, ~ You have great falsehood. ~ When the six relations are in disharmony, ~ You have filial piety and parental love. ~ When the state is in disorder, ~ You have loyal ministers.

—[18c40t] Tao Huang ~ When the Great Tao is abandoned, ~ There is benevolence and righteousness. ~ When intelligence arises, ~ There is a great deal of manipulation. ~ When there is disharmony in the family, ~ There comes about filial piety. ~ When the country is in big trouble, ~ There arises patriotism.

—[18c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ When the superior Dao was lost, benevolence and righteousness were created. ~ When intelligence and skills prevailed, superior hypocrisy was displayed. ~ When family relations were not in harmony, filial piety and parental kindness were encouraged. ~ When a country was in disorder and justice failed, loyalty and reliability were required.

—[18c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ When the great Tao declined, ~ The doctrine of humanity and righteousness arose. ~ When knowledge and wisdom appeared, ~ There emerged great hypocrisy. ~ When the six family relationships are not in harmony, ~ There will be the advocacy of filial piety and deep love to children. ~ When a country is in disorder, ~ There will be the praise of loyal ministers.

— [18с96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Когда великое Тао будет покинуто, то появится истинная человечность и справедливость. ~ Когда широко будет распространена мудрость, то появится великая печаль. ~ Когда шесть ближайших родственников находятся в раздоре, то является почитание родителей и любовь к детям. ~ Когда в государстве царит усобица, то являются верные слуги.

— [18с97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Когда Великий Путь в упадке, являются "человечность" и "долг". ~ Когда возникают суемудрие и многознайство, является великая ложь. ~ Когда среди родичей нет согласия, являются почтительность и любовь. ~ Когда государство во мраке и в смуте, являются "преданные подданные".

— [18с98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Исчезает великий Путь - появляется контактность и осознание. ~ Уходят мудрые и знающие - появляется большая искусственность. ~ Нет гармонии в шести родственных связях - появляется сыновья почтительность и братская любовь. ~ Смута и хаос в государстве и семьях - появляются верные слуги.

— [19с01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ Eliminate sageliness, throw away knowledge, ~ And the people will benefit a hundredfold. ~ Eliminate humanity, throw away righteousness, ~ And the people will return to filial piety and compassion. ~ Eliminate craftiness, throw away profit, ~ Then we will have no robbers and thieves. ~ These three sayings - ~ Regarded as a text are not yet complete. ~ Thus, we must see to it that they have the following appended: ~ Manifest plainness and embrace the genuine; ~ Lessen {self-interest} and make few your desires; ~ Eliminate learning and have no undue concern.

— [19с02t] John C. H. Wu ~ DROP wisdom, abandon cleverness, ~ And the people will be benefited a hundredfold. ~ Drop humanity, abandon justice, ~ And the people will return to their natural affections. ~ Drop shrewdness, abandon sharpness, ~ And robbers and thieves will cease to be. ~ These three are the criss-cross of Tao, ~ And are not sufficient in themselves. ~ Therefore, they should be subordinated ~ To a Higher principle: ~ See the Simple and embrace the Primal, ~ Diminish the self and curb the desires!

— [19c03t] D. C. Lau ~ Exterminate the sage, discard the wise, ~ And the people will benefit a hundredfold; ~ Exterminate benevolence, discard rectitude, ~ And the people will again be filial; ~ Exterminate ingenuity, discard profit, ~ And there will be no more thieves and bandits. ~ These three, being false adornments, are not enough ~ And the people must have something to which they can attach themselves: ~ Exhibit the unadorned and embrace the uncarved block, ~ Have little thought of self and as few desires as possible.
— [19c04t] R. L. Wing ~ Discard the sacred, abandon strategies; ~ The people will benefit a hundredfold. ~ Discard philanthropy, abandon morality; ~ The people will return to natural love. ~ Discard cleverness, abandon the acquisitive; ~ The thieves will exist no longer. ~ However, if these three passages are inadequate, Adhere to these principles: ~ Perceive purity; Embrace simplicity; Reduce self-interest; Limit desires.

— [19c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ Only when sages and wisdom are discarded, can the people benefit; ~ Only when benevolence and righteousness are discarded, can the people return to filial piety and parental affection; ~ Only when skill and profit are discarded, can there be thieves and robbers no more. ~ These three (negative principles) are, however, inadequate as a doctrine. ~ Therefore (as a positive instruction) we shall put people's understanding under this (guidance): ~ Manifest plainness, embrace simplicity, reduce selfishness, and hold few desires.

— [19c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ Give up sainthood, renounce wisdom, ~ And it will be a hundred times better for everyone. ~ Give up kindness, renounce morality, ~ And men will rediscover filial piety and love. ~ Give up ingenuity, renounce profit, ~ And bandits and thieves will disappear. ~ These three are outward forms alone; they are not sufficient in themselves. ~ It is more important ~ To see the simplicity, ~ To realize one's true nature, ~ To cast off selfishness ~ And temper desire.

— [19c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ When we stop talking about the Sages ~ and simply banish contrivance and clever reasoning ~ That is the time people will really benefit greatly. ~ When we stop talking about kindness and fairness ~ That is the time people rediscover their natural filial piety and their parental instincts. ~ When people forget about their clever ways and the pursuit of ease and comfort, ~ There will be no more thieves. ~ I cannot say adequately about these three things, ~ So I will add: ~ See simplicity; ~ Espouse simplicity; ~ Reduce your wild thoughts; ~ Reduce your desires. ~ When you have learnt how not to learn, ~ You will be free from worries.

— [19c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ Get rid of the government and laws, and people will benefit a hundred times more. ~ Get rid of charity and righteousness, and people will return to the original human love. ~ Get rid of cleverness and materialism, and there will be no thieves and robbers. ~ In order to govern a country, it is not enough to just get rid of these three things; ~ Also let the people be simple on the outside and plain on the inside, selfless and desireless.

— [19c09t] Walter Gorn Old, REVERTING TO NATURE ~ By giving up their self-righteousness and abandoning their wisdom the people would be immensely improved. ~ Forsaking Charity and Duty to the neighbour, they might revert to their natural relations. ~ Abandoning excellence and foregoing gain, the people would have no more thieves. ~ The cultivation of these three things has been a failure, therefore should they go back whence they came. ~ As for you, do you come forth in your natural simplicity, lay hold on verities, restrain selfishness, and rid yourself of ambition.

— [19c10t] James Legge ~ If we could renounce our sages and discard our wisdom, it would be better for the people a hundredfold. ~ If we could renounce our benevolence and discard our righteousness, the people would again become filial and kindly. ~ If we could renounce our artful contrivances and discard our (scheming for) gain, there would be no thieves nor robbers. ~ Those three methods (of government) ~ Thought olden ways in elegance did fail ~ And made these names their want of worth to veil; ~ But simple views, and courses plain and true ~ Would selfish ends and many lusts eschew.

—[19c11t] David Hinton ~ If you give up sagehood and abandon wisdom people will profit a hundred times over. ~ If you give up Humanity and abandon Duty people will return to obedience and kindness. ~ If you give up ingenuity and abandon profit bandits and thieves will roam no more. ~ But these three ~ are mere refinements, nowhere near enough. ~ They depend on something more: ~ observe origin's weave, ~ embrace uncarved simplicity, ~ self nearly forgotten, ~ desires rare.

—[19c12t] Chichung Huang ~ Eliminate sageness, abandon craft, ~ And the people shall benefit a hundredfold; ~ Eliminate humanity, abandon righteousness, ~ And the people shall revert to filial piety and parental love; ~ Eliminate adroitness, abandon profit, ~ And robbers and thieves there shall be none. ~ These three remarks are considered rhetorically inadequate, ~ Therefore, let us put them where they belong: ~ "Display the undyed silk and embrace the unhewn log; ~ Diminish selfishness and reduce lusts; ~ Eliminate learning and dispense with anxiety."

—[19c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ Eliminate sagacity (sheng), discard knowledge (chih), ~ People will be profited (li) a hundredfold. ~ Eliminate humanity (jen), discard righteousness (i), ~ People will again practice filial piety and parental love. ~ Abolish artistry (ch'iao), discard profit-seeking (li), ~ Robbers and thieves shall disappear. ~ These three pairs adorn (wen) what is deficient (pu tsu). ~ Therefore, let there be the advice: ~ Look to the undyed silk, hold on to the uncarved wood (p'u), ~ Reduce your sense of self (szu) and lessen your desires (yü).

—[19c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ If all the sapient and know-it-all intellectuals are banished, people will be benefited hundredfold; ~ If so-called humanitarianism and righteousness [which are currently twisted by sophistry] are abandoned, people will return to [the simple genuine] filial piety and parental benignancy; ~ If cunningness and profit-seeking are deterred, robbers and thieves will not have a chance to flourish; ~ However, the discussion on these three issues here is not adequate, I shall further exemplify them elsewhere. ~ [A proper leader would lead,] ~ By streamlining the social [structure], so people would adhere to Simplicity; ~ By reducing private possession [of goods], so people are discouraged [to indulge in selfish] desires; ~ By renouncing [sophists'] studies, so people would not be tantalized [by ostentatious studies].

—[19c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ Drop sagacity, abandon intellection, and the people will be benefited a hundredfold. ~ Drop benevolence, abandon righteousness, and the people will return to filial piety and paternal kindness. ~ Drop shrewdness, abandon profit, and robbers and thieves will cease to be. ~ These three, being external adornments, are not enough. ~ Therefore, there must have something to which the people attach themselves: see the pure, embrace the unadorned, diminish the self and curb the desires.

—[19c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ Don't devise tricks to rule people and people will benefit enormously. ~ Don't artificially set the rules for family relations and people will return to their nature of loving each other. ~ Don't reward cleverness and profit, the robberies and the thefts will disappear. ~ The three measures stated above are not enough. ~ We must fill people's mind with frugality, honesty, selflessness, and abstinence.

—[19c17t] Arthur Waley ~ Banish wisdom, discard knowledge, ~ And the people will be benefited a hundredfold. ~ Banish human kindness, discard morality, ~ And the people will be dutiful and compassionate. ~ Banish skill, discard profit, ~ And thieves and robbers will disappear. ~ If when these three things are done they find life too plain and unadorned, ~ Then let them have accessories; ~ Give them Simplicity to look at, the Uncarved Block to hold, ~ Give them selflessness and fewness of desires.

—[19c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ Repudiate sagehood and discard wisdom, and the people would benefit a hundredfold. ~ Repudiate benevolence and discard righteousness, and the people would again be obedient and kind to each other. ~ Repudiate cleverness and discard sharpness, and thieves and robbers would not exist. ~ As for these three pairs of terms, ~ Because they serve as mere decoration, ~ Give people the chance to identify with something else: ~ Exemplify simplicity, embrace the uncarved block ~ Curtail self-interest, and have few desires.

— [19c19t] Lin Yutang ~ REALIZE THE SIMPLE SELF ~ Banish wisdom, discard knowledge, ~ And the people shall profit a hundredfold; ~ Banish "humanity," discard "justice," ~ And the people shall recover love of their kin; ~ Banish cunning, discard "utility," ~ And the thieves and brigands shall disappear. ~ As these three touch the externals and are inadequate; ~ The people have need of what they can depend upon: ~ Reveal thy simple self, ~ Embrace thy original nature, ~ Check thy selfishness, ~ Curtail thy desires.

— [19c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ "Abolish sagehood and abandon cunning, the people will benefit a hundredfold; ~ Abolish humaneness and abandon righteousness, the people will once again be filial and kind; ~ Abolish cleverness and abandon profit, bandits and thieves will be no more." ~ These three statements are inadequate as a civilizing doctrine; ~ Therefore, ~ Let something be added to them: ~ Evince the plainness of undyed silk, ~ Embrace the simplicity of the unhewn log; ~ Lessen selfishness, ~ Diminish desires; ~ Abolish learning ~ and you will be without worries.

— [19c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ Stop being learned and your troubles will end. ~ Give up wisdom, discard cleverness, ~ and the people will benefit a hundredfold. ~ Give up benevolence, discard moral judgments, and the people will rediscover natural compassion. ~ Give up shrewdness, discard gain, and thieves and robbers will disappear. ~ These three false adornments are not enough to live by. ~ They must give way to something more solid. ~ Look for what is simple and hold onto the Uncarved Block. ~ Diminish thoughts of self and restrain desires.

— [19c22t] David H. Li ~ Renounce saintliness, shun cleverness - let the populace be better off by a hundredfold. ~ Renounce nobleness, shun righteousness - let the populace return to filiality and parental love. ~ Renounce scheming, shun profiteering - let robbers and thieves vanish. ~ The three are inadequate formulation. ~ Better channel [the populace] to Direction. ~ Welcome purity, embrace simplicity; ~ Minimize self-interest, reduce desire. ~ Renounce learning, eliminate apprehension.

— [19c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ Abandon the relative notions of holiness and wisdom, ~ And people will benefit a hundred-fold. ~ Abandon the outer codes of benevolence and rectitude, ~ And people will return to natural filiality and kindness; ~ Abandon the unbalanced acts of cleverness and profiteering, ~ And there will be no robbers or thieves. ~ By looking within, ~ Evince the inner self, ~ Embrace the unadorned truth; ~ Diminish the outer self, ~ Demolish the phantasmic desire. ~ Abandon the external search for knowledge, ~ Abolish the internal worry for illusory matters.

— [19c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ Abandon learning, ~ And grief and sorrow will no longer be known. ~ Abandon learned volumes, cast off wisdom, ~ And people will be one hundred times better off. ~ Abandon righteousness, cast off justice, ~ And people will return to filial duty and birthing offspring. ~ Abandon cunning, cast off avarice, ~ And bandits and thieves will disappear from the earth. ~ These four principles, even if they form the foundation of human culture, are not sufficient. ~ Therefore, here are principles to which people can adhere: ~ Show integrity, adhere to simplicity, ~ Restrain selfishness, curtail lusts.

— [19c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ If the sage could abandon his wisdom and skill, ~ Then everyone would be a hundred times better off. ~ If the sage could let go of holding the scales, ~ Then everyone would flow in the web of harmony ... ~ And if the sage can give up looking to gain, ~ Then there will be no theft or exploitation. ~ Now while these three things are important they are not enough: ~ The people themselves need to learn simplicity. ~ They shouldn't need to know more than they do, ~ And should have as few things as possible.

—[19c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ Discard cleverness and wisdom ~ And the people will benefit themselves a hundredfold; ~ Discard benevolence and rectitude ~ And the people will again become filial and loyal; ~ Discard ingenuity and profit ~ And theft will no longer exist. ~ It is not enough to have these points as governing principles, ~ So the people must be made subject to the following: ~ Keep being simple in nature and mind, ~ Discard selfishness and weaken desires, ~ Discard cultural knowledge and worries will disappear.

—[19c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ Eliminate the virtuous man, discard the wise, and the people will benefit a hundredfold. ~ Eliminate the goodhearted, discard justice, and the people will fulfil their filial duty with kindness. ~ Eliminate skilled workmen, discard profit, and the thief will not appear. ~ These three exist only as superficial forms. ~ Therefore this is the teaching to the people: ~ Embrace the simple, ~ hold the unadorned, ~ remove selfishness, ~ reduce desire.

—[19c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ Advocate no sage knowledge, ~ And people can benefit one hundred times as much. ~ Advocate no public welfare, ~ And people will turn to good and kindly feelings again. ~ Advocate no art and profit, ~ And people will not commit theft. ~ Those three are just roughly relegated ~ And cannot be fully clarified through words: ~ The best policy is to strive for simplicity, ~ To reduce selfish desires, ~ And to apply no confusing knowledge.

—[19c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ Realize The Simple Self ~ Lao Tze says, ~ If sanctified tenets can be renounced, and craftiness given up, people will thus profit hundredfold. ~ If worship of benevolence can be renounced, and adoration of righteousness given up, people will resume filial piety and lenience. ~ If artful contrivance and scheming for gain can be given up, there will be no thieves or robbers. ~ These three epigrams may not be enough for guidance. ~ I'd bid even more as: ~ Sight the simplicity, arms enfold plain and true, extinguish selfish mind and eschew lust.

—[19c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ Do away with learning, and grief will not be known. ~ Do away with sageness and eject wisdom, and the people will be more benefited a hundred times. ~ Do away with benevolence and eject righteousness, and the people will return to filial duty and parental love. ~ Do away with artifice and eject gains, and there will be no robbers and thieves. ~ These four, if we consider them as culture, are not sufficient. ~ Therefore let there be what the people can resort to: ~ Appear in plainness and hold to simplicity; ~ Restrain selfishness and curtail desires.

—[19c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ Banish sagacity; forsake wisdom. ~ The people will benefit a hundredfold. ~ Banish human-heartedness; forsake righteousness. ~ The people will recover filial piety and paternal affection. ~ Banish craftiness; forsake profit. ~ Thieves and robbers will no longer exist. ~ Those three are superficial and inadequate. ~ Hence the people need something to abide by: ~ Discern plainness. ~ Embrace simplicity. ~ Reduce selfishness. ~ Restrain desires.

—[19c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ Discard "Wisdom", throw away "Knowledge" - ~ the people will benefit a hundredfold. ~ Discard "Goodness", throw away "Morality" - ~ the people will turn back to respect and caring. ~ Discard "Skill", throw away "Profit" - ~ robbers and thieves will disappear. ~ Taking these three lines as your text - ~ this is not sufficient. ~ Give them something to fasten on to: ~ Pay attention to the Raw, ~ embrace the Uncarved, ~ discount your personal interests, ~ make your desires few.

—[19c33t] Cheng Lin ~ Banish the witty and cunning, and the people will be benefited a hundred-fold. ~ Cease the teaching of benevolence and righteousness, and the people will again become filial and fraternal. ~ Discard deceit and greed, and the people will cease to rob one another. ~ The above three are based on artifice, and are insufficient for good government. ~ Hence the people should be asked to do the following:

~ Cherish simplicity and honesty. ~ Banish selfishness and desires. ~ Discard learning and fears.

— [19c34t] Yi Wu ~ Transcend sagacity and abandon intellect; ~ The people will be benefited a hundredfold.
~ Transcend humanity and abandon righteousness; ~ The people will return to filial piety and paternal kindness. ~ Transcend craftiness and abandon profit; ~ Robbers and thieves no longer will exist. ~ These three are but ornaments, and inadequate; ~ Therefore, they should be subordinated. ~ Appear plain and embrace simplicity; ~ Reduce selfishness and restrain desires.

— [19c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ If you discard sagacity and wisdom, ~ The populace will be better off a hundredfold. ~ If you get rid of benevolence and righteousness, ~ Filial piety and doting affection will return. ~ If you dispense with ingenuity and profiteering, ~ There will be no thieves. ~ All these attributes are mere superficialities. ~ They are not substantial enough to run the country. ~ There are other ways: ~ Outwardly, be simple; and inwardly, you should maintain your pristine sincerity. ~ You should not be selfish or avaricious.

— [19c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ Abandon the separate concepts of holiness and unholiness. ~ Then all people will be benefitted a hundredfold. ~ Abandon the separate concepts of justice and humanism, ~ and all people will return to a natural state of harmony. ~ Abandon the cunning and cleverness of the mind, ~ and people will cease to rob and deceive one another. ~ These things are based on artifice and are thus inadequate to express the natural virtue of wholeness. ~ Hence, return to the true self to embrace only the one, unadorned nature. ~ Refine personal preference and desire. ~ End the endless search for segmented, intellectual knowledge, ~ and set your mind above worry and vexation. ~ In this way, one may restore one's unity with the perfection of one great universal life.

— [19c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ Let the people be free from discernment and relinquish intellection, ~ Then they will be many times better off. ~ Stop the teaching of benevolence and get rid of the claim of justice, ~ Then the people will love each other once more. ~ Cease the teaching of cleverness and give up profit, ~ Then there will be no more stealing and fraud. ~ Discernment and intellection, benevolence and justice, cleverness and profit are nothing but outward refinements. ~ Hence we must seek something other than these. ~ Reveal simplicity, ~ Hold to one's original nature, ~ Rid one's self of selfishness, ~ Cast away covetousness, ~ Eliminate artificial learning and one will be free from anxieties.

— [19c38t] Henry Wei ~ Return to Innocence ~ Huan Ch'un ~ Forswear wisdom, discard knowledge, ~ And the people will gain a hundredfold. ~ Forswear benevolence, discard righteousness, ~ And the people will recover filial and parental love. ~ Forswear skill, discard profit, ~ And thieves and robbers will not appear. ~ These three steps are inadequate for culture. ~ They, therefore, have to encompass some others, ~ Such as:
~ Display plainness, embrace simplicity, ~ Reduce selfishness, and decrease desires.

— [19c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ Banish sagehood and wisdom, ~ And the people will benefit a hundredfold. ~ Banish humaneness and righteousness, ~ And the people will return to filial piety and parental love. ~ Banish cleverness and profit, ~ And there will be no more thieves and robbers. ~ These three ~ I take to be insufficient as maxims. ~ Therefore, let them be attached to the following: ~ Display plainness and embrace the uncarved block, ~ Diminish the self and reduce desires.

— [19c40t] Tao Huang ~ Get rid of wisdom, abandon intelligence, and ~ People will benefit a hundredfold. ~ Get rid of benevolence, abandon justice, and ~ People will return to filial piety and kindness. ~ Get rid of skill, abandon profit, and ~ Thieves will disappear. ~ These three are inadequate. ~ So just let things be. ~ Observe the plain and embrace the simple. ~ Do not think much and do not desire much, ~ Get rid of learning and worry will disappear.

— [19c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ Abandon sagacity and drop intelligence, the welfare of people can be increased hundredfold; ~ abandon benevolence and drop righteousness, the people will rejoice in filial piety and parental love; ~ abandon crafts and profits, robbers and thieves will cease to exist. ~ These three are remedies for artificial civilization. ~ They can never bring about satisfaction: ~ people should be led to, where they belong - The Nature. ~ He stopped research, reduced desires, sought plainness, and embraced original simplicity.

— [19c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ Abandon sageliness and discard wisdom; ~ Then the people will benefit a hundredfold. ~ Abandon humanity and discard righteousness; ~ Then the people will return to filial piety and deep love. ~ Abandon skill and discard profit; ~ Then there will be no thieves or robbers. ~ However, these three things are ornaments (wen) and are not adequate. ~ Therefore let people hold on to these: ~ Manifest plainness, ~ Embrace simplicity, ~ Reduce selfishness, ~ Have few desires.

— [19c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Когда отринут мудрость и отбросят знания, от этого народу польза возрастет во много раз. ~ Когда отринут человечность и отбросят справедливость, в народе воцарятся вновь сыновья почтительность с родительской любовью. ~ Когда отринут изощренность и отбросят выгоду, то воры и разбойники переведутся. ~ Эти три дают лишь лоск и не годятся, ~ поэтому проникнись главным: будь безыскусен, неразлучен с первоизданым, уменьши свое личное, умерь желания.

— [19c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Устрани учения - и не будет более забот. ~ Устрани мудрецов и отвергни мудрость - и выгода народу возрастет стократно. ~ Устрани гуманность, отвергни справедливость - и народ вернется к сыновней почтительности и добрым делам. ~ Устрани хитроумие, отвергни выгоду - и не будет более воров и бандитов. ~ Эти три [начала] обманчиво приукрашены и не обладают достаточностью. ~ Поэтому надо сделать так, чтобы люди принадлежали к тем, кто прозревает неприукрашенное и объемлет простоту, мало думает о себе и уменьшает свои желания.

— [19c93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Отсеките гуманность, отбросьте справедливость - и народ к сыновней почтительности и материнской любви вернется вновь! ~ Отсеките изощренность, отбросьте выгоду - и воры и разбойники исчезнут! ~ С триадой этой не дано высокому покончить просвещению. ~ Поэтому указываю, что ведет к избавлению: ~ Смотрите на безыскусственную чистоту и обнимите первоизданную простоту. ~ Умеряйте себялюбие, искореняйте страсти.

— [19c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Когда отбросят мудрость, забудут умничанье, ~ народу польза во сто крат. ~ Когда отбросят Жэнь (Человеколюбие), забудут И (Долг), ~ народ возвратится к [естественной] сыновней почтительности и отцовской любви. ~ Когда отбросят искусность, забудут выгоду, ~ не будет воров и разбойников. ~ Эти три появляются от недостатка культуры (вэнь). ~ Поэтому владейте тем, что дано. ~ Внешне выглядите скромно, внутри сохраняйте первоизданную духовную простоту, будьте бескорыстны и бесстрастны.

— [19c95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Когда будут устранены мудрствование и ученость, народ будет счастливее во сто крат; ~ когда будут устранены "человеколюбие" и "справедливость", народ возвратится к сыновней почтительности и отцовской любви; ~ когда будут уничтожены хитрость и нажива, исчезнут воры и разбойники. ~ Все эти три вещи [происходят] от недостатка знаний. ~ Поэтому нужно указывать людям, что они должны быть простыми и скромными, уменьшать личные [желания] и освобождаться от страстей.

— [19c96t] Д. П. Коисси ~ Когда оставлены святость и мудрость, то польза народа увеличится во сто раз. ~ Когда оставлены человеколюбие и справедливость, то дети будут почитать своих родителей, а родители будут любить своих детей. ~ Когда покинуты всякого рода лукавство и выгоды, то воров не будет. ~ Одной только внешностью достигнуть этих трех (пунктов) невозможно. ~ Для этого необходимо быть более простым и менее способным и бесстрастным.

— [19c97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Устраните "мудрость", отбросьте "разумность", ~ И польза людям будет стократная. ~ Устраните "человечность", отбросьте "справедливость", ~ И люди вернутся к почитанию и любви. ~ Устраните ловкость, не ищите выгоды, ~ И в мире не станет воров и разбойников. ~ Три эти суждения не открывают всей истины, ~ Посему добавлю кое-что сюда относящееся: ~ Будь безыскусен, храни первоизданную цельность; ~ Избавляйся от себялюбия, не угождай желанием.

— [19c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Избавьтесь от мудрости, отбросьте знания. ~ Народ выгадает во сто крат. ~ Избавьтесь от контактности, отбросьте осознание-долг. ~ Народ вернется к сыновей почтительности и братской любви. ~ Избавьтесь от умений, откажитесь от выгоды. ~ Больше не будет воров и разбойников. ~ Этой триады недостаточно, чтобы создать текст. ~ Причинность: ~ Можно свести к следующим установкам: ~ Проявляй простоту некрашеного холста. ~ Содержи в себе безыскусность необделанного куска дерева. ~ Уменьшай корысть. ~ Ограничивай желанья.

— [20c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ Agreement and angry rejection; ~ How great is the difference between them? ~ Beautiful and ugly; ~ What's it like - the difference between them? ~ The one who is feared by others, ~ Must also because of this fear other men. ~ Wild, unrestrained! It will never come to an end! ~ The multitudes are peaceful and happy; ~ Like climbing a terrace in springtime to feast at the t'ai-lao sacrifice. ~ But I'm tranquil and quiet - not yet having given any sign. ~ Like a child who has not yet smiled. ~ Tired and exhausted - as though I have no place to return. ~ The multitudes all have a surplus. ~ I alone seem to be lacking. ~ Mine is the mind of a fool - ignorant and stupid! ~ The common people see things clearly; ~ I alone am in the dark. ~ The common people discriminate and make fine distinctions; ~ I alone am muddled and confused. ~ Formless am I! Like the ocean; ~ Shapeless am I! As though I have nothing in which I can rest. ~ The masses all have their reasons [for acting]; ~ I alone am stupid and obstinate like a rustic. ~ But my desires alone differ from those of others - ~ For I value drawing sustenance from the Mother.

— [20c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ HAVE done with learning, ~ And you will have no more vexation. ~ How great is the difference between "eh" and "o"? ~ What is the distinction between "good" and "evil"? ~ Must I fear what others fear? ~ What abysmal nonsense this is! ~ All men are joyous and beaming, ~ As though feasting upon a sacrificial ox, ~ As though mounting the Spring Terrace; ~ I alone am placid and give no sign, ~ Like a babe which has not yet smiled. ~ I alone am forlorn as one who has no home to return to. ~ All men have enough and to spare: ~ I alone appear to possess nothing. ~ What a fool I am! ~ What a muddled mind I have! ~ All men are bright, bright: ~ I alone am dim, dim. ~ All men are sharp, sharp: ~ I alone am mum, mum! ~ Bland like the ocean, ~ Aimless like the wafting gale. ~ All men settle down in their grooves: ~ I alone am stubborn and remain outside. ~ But wherein I am most different from others is ~ In knowing to take sustenance from my Mother!

— [20c03t] D. C. Lau ~ Exterminate learning and there will no longer be worries. ~ Between yea and nay ~ How much difference is there? ~ Between good and evil ~ How great is the distance? ~ What others fear ~ One must also fear. ~ And wax without having reached the limit. ~ The multitude are joyous ~ As if partaking of the {t'ai lao} offering ~ Or going up to a terrace in spring. ~ I alone am inactive and reveal no signs, ~ Like a baby that has not yet learned to smile, ~ Listless as though with no home to go back to. ~ The multitude all have more than enough. ~ I alone seem to be in want. ~ My mind is that of a fool - how blank! ~ Vulgar people are clear. ~ I alone am drowsy. ~ Vulgar people are alert. ~ I alone am muddled. ~ Calm like the sea; ~ Like a high wind that never ceases. ~ The multitude all have a purpose. ~ I alone am foolish and uncouth. ~ I alone am different from others ~ And value being fed by the mother.

—[20c04t] R. L. —[20c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ Abandon learning and there will be no sorrow. ~ How much difference is there between approval and denouncement? ~ How much difference is there between good and evil? ~ What others fear cannot but be feared. ~ It has been so from times of old and the practice doesn't seem to end. ~ The multitude are so merry, as though going for a great banquet or ascending a height with a broad view in springtime. ~ I alone am indifferent, with no concern, like an infant that cannot laugh, wearied, indeed, as if I have no home to go to. ~ The multitude all have more than enough, ~ I alone seem to lack everything. ~ My mind is that of a stupid man totally in a muddle. ~ Common people are so brilliant, ~ I alone seem to be in the dark. ~ Common people are so demanding, ~ I alone seem to be tolerant: so broad as the boundless sea, so vigorous as the untiring blowing wind. ~ The multitude have their ability, ~ I alone seem to be clumsy and incapable. ~ I alone differ from others, essentially because I have acquired Tao.

—[20c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ Give up learning, and put an end to your troubles. ~ Is there a difference between yes and no? ~ Is there a difference between good and evil? ~ Must I fear what others fear? What nonsense! ~ Other people are contented, enjoying the sacrificial feast of the ox. ~ In spring some go to the park, and climb the terrace, ~ But I alone am drifting, not knowing where I am. ~ Like a newborn babe before it learns to smile, ~ I am alone, without a place to go. ~ Others have more than they need, but I alone have nothing. ~ I am a fool. Oh, yes! I am confused. ~ Other men are clear and bright, ~ But I alone am dim and weak. ~ Other men are sharp and clever, ~ But I alone am dull and stupid. ~ Oh, I drift like the waves of the sea, ~ Without direction, like the restless wind. ~ Everyone else is busy, ~ But I alone am aimless and depressed. ~ I am different. ~ I am nourished by the great mother.

—[20c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ What is the difference between saying yes because you agree and saying yes because you want to please? ~ What is the difference between good and evil? ~ When everybody avoids something, ~ Does it mean it must be avoided? ~ How ridiculous all this is! ~ This mode of thinking takes one far from the ultimate Truth! ~ The crowds are busily involved with their daily routines. ~ As if they are attending a feast, ~ or walking up a beautiful terrace in Spring. ~ I alone am deserted. ~ The future seems unknown, ~ Just as an infant's future is unknown. ~ I appear to be tired in a directionless journey. ~ When everybody appears to have more than enough ~ I alone seem like someone who has lost everything. ~ Is my mind that of a fool? ~ People in their mundane worlds look bright. ~ I on the other hand look dull. ~ People in the mundane worlds look clever, ~ I on the other hand look boring. ~ My mind is unsettled like the open sea and ever restless like the wind. ~ Everyone has his properties and status. ~ I alone look poor and lonely. ~ I am different from the crowd. ~ I alone value drawing my nutrients from Mother.

—[20c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ Whether people listen to me or ignore me, what difference does it make? ~ Whether people treat me well or not well, what difference does it make? ~ Although things that others are afraid of I have to be afraid of too, ~ How big the difference is between them and me! ~ When everyone is excited, like going to a festival or spring outing, ~ Only I am quiet, like nothing has happened. ~ I am like a newborn infant that does not know how to laugh, ~ Bored and tired, that has no home to return to. ~ When everyone has so much excess energy, only I am left behind. ~ I have a fool's heart, so dumb! ~ Everyone seems bright, only I am dull. ~ Everyone seems to know everything, only I am confused. ~ My heart spreads like an endless ocean. ~ My mind wanders like a boundless wind. ~ Everyone seems competent, only I am slow and stupid. ~ I am so different from the others, because I am devoted to the DAO.

—[20c09t] Walter Gorn Old, HOLDING ALOOF ~ Dispense with your learning and save yourselves anxiety; the difference between certainly and perhaps is not much after all. ~ Do they help us to distinguish between good and evil? for one must always be careful of distinctions! ~ Alas! but the people will never be free from their folly. ~ They are filled with ambition, as the stallion ox is filled with lust. ~ I am singular in my bashfulness, I am devoid of ambition, I am undeveloped as a little child. ~ I am but a waif, a stray, a child without a home. ~ All others have an excess of good things, but I am as one abandoned. ~ How foolish and simple am I! I am bewildered. ~ Everyone sparkles with intelligence, I am alone in my obscurity. ~ The people are full of discernment; I alone am dull. ~ I am tossed about like the ocean; I roll and am never at rest. ~ Everyone has something to do; I alone am incapable and without merit. ~ I alone am estranged from the people, but I glory on the breast of my mother!

—[20c10t] James Legge ~ When we renounce learning we have no troubles. ~ The (ready) 'yes,' and (flattering) 'yea;' - ~ Small is the difference they display. ~ But mark their issues, good and ill; - ~ What space the gulf between shall fill? ~ What all men fear is indeed to be feared; ~ but how wide and without end is the range of questions (asking to be discussed)! ~ The multitude of men look satisfied and pleased; ~ as if enjoying a full banquet, as if mounted on a tower in spring. ~ I alone seem listless and still, my desires having as yet given no indication of their presence. ~ I am like an infant which has not yet smiled. ~ I look dejected and forlorn, as if I had no home to go to. ~ The multitude of men all have enough and to spare. ~ I alone seem to have lost everything. ~ My mind is that of a stupid man; ~ I am in a state of chaos. ~ Ordinary men look bright and intelligent, while I alone seem to be benighted. ~ They look full of discrimination, while I alone am dull and confused. ~ I seem to be carried about as on the sea, drifting as if I had nowhere to rest. ~ All men have their spheres of action, while I alone seem dull and incapable, like a rude borderer. ~ (Thus) I alone am different from other men, but I value the nursing-mother (the Tao).

—[20c11t] David Hinton ~ If you give up learning, troubles end. ~ How much difference is there between yes and no? ~ And is there a difference between lovely and ugly? ~ If we can't stop fearing ~ those things people fear, ~ it's pure confusion, never-ending confusion. ~ People all radiate such joy, ~ happily offering a sacrificial ox ~ or climbing a tower in spring. ~ But I go nowhere and reveal nothing, ~ like a newborn child who has yet to smile, ~ aimless and worn out ~ as if the way home were lost. ~ People all have enough and more. ~ But I'm abandoned and destitute, ~ an absolute simpleton, this mind of mine so utterly ~ muddled and blank. ~ Others are bright and clear: ~ I'm dark and murky. ~ Others are confident and effective: ~ I'm pensive and withdrawn, ~ uneasy as boundless seas ~ or perennial mountain winds. ~ People all have a purpose in life, ~ but I'm inept, thoroughly useless and backward. ~ I'll never be like other people: ~ I keep to the nurturing mother.

—[20c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ Abandon learning, there will be no worry! ~ What is the real meaning between Yes and No? ~ What is the clear distinction between good and bad? ~ What all men fear, one has to fear. ~ Most people are busy, busy and never know where to stop. ~ Most people are happy-go-lucky, as though they are attending a great feast or as though they are ascending a tower for sight-seeing in spring time. ~ My desire has not yet even started, like an infant who has not yet become a child. ~ They are rushing and rushing, and never know where to rest. ~ Most people desire more; ~ I alone prefer less. ~ I am simple, ~ Pure and calm. ~ Most people feel bright, bright; ~ I alone seem to be dull. ~ Most people are searching, searching; ~ I alone keep quiet, quiet. ~ Like a calm ocean moving without end. ~ Most people feel that they have merits; ~ I alone feel myself useless and worthless. ~ I alone am different from others and still prefer to drink mother's milk.

—[20c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ Abandon learning and there will be no sorrow. ~ How much difference is there between "Yes, sir," and "Of course not"? ~ How much difference is there between "good" and "evil"? ~ What people dread, do not fail to dread. ~ But, alas, how confused, and the end is not yet. ~ The multitude are merry, as though feasting on a day of sacrifice. ~ Or like ascending a tower in the springtime. ~ I alone am inert, showing no sign (of desires), ~ Like an infant that has not yet smiled. ~ Wearied, indeed, I seem to be without a home. ~ The multitude all possess more than enough. ~ I alone seem to have lost all. ~ Mine is indeed the mind of an ignorant man, ~ Indiscriminate and dull! ~ Common folks are indeed brilliant; ~ I alone seem to be in the dark. ~ Common folks see differences and are clear-cut; ~ I alone make no distinctions. ~ I seem drifting as the sea; ~ Like the wind blowing about, seemingly without destination. ~ The multitude all have a purpose; ~ I alone seem to be stubborn and rustic. ~ I alone differ from others, ~ And value drawing sustenance from Mother (Tao).

—[20c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Не ведаешь заботы, когда перестаешь учиться. ~ Как мала разница между словами "да" и "ладно"! ~ И как же связаны между собой прекрасное и безобразное! ~ Чего страшатся люди, не может не страшить. ~ Какое запустение! ~ Нет этому конца! ~ Толпа находится в веселье, словно на пиру или на празднике весны. ~ Один я только пребываю безучастным и ни в чем себя не проявляю, ~ как новорожденный, который еще не научился улыбаться. ~ Я выгляжу понурым как бездомный. ~ В толпе у каждого имеется какой-либо излишек, и лишь у одного меня - словно все утеряно. ~ Какое сердце у меня, глупца! ~ В нем столько безрассудности! ~ Обыденные люди отличаются понятливостью, один я только ничего не смыслю. ~ Обыденные люди дотошно во всем разбираются, один только я остаюсь невеждой. ~ Какое у меня спокойствие! ~ Оно напоминает океан. ~ Несусь как ветер в вышине! ~ Словно не могу нигде остановиться! ~ Каждый из толпы находит себе применение, один я являюсь ни на что не годным неучем. ~ В отличие от остальных людей, я дорожу лишь тем, чтобы меня кормила грудью мать.

—[20c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Велика ли разница между одобрением и хулой? ~ Велико ли расстояние между добром и злом? ~ Того, чего боятся люди, нельзя не бояться. ~ Пустынное! Оно не имеет границ. ~ Все люди радостны, будто захвачены праздником императорского угощения или прогулкой по весенним террасам. ~ Лишь я один безразличен и не подаю знаков, будто младенец, который ещё не научился улыбаться; ~ утомлённый, словно странник, не имеющий дома, куда бы мог возвратиться. ~ Люди всё имеют с избытком, лишь я один подобен отказавшемуся ото всего. ~ У меня сердце невежды - столь замутнено! ~ Простые люди пресветло-светлы, лишь я один погружён во тьму. ~ Простые люди пречисто-чисты, лишь я один невежественно-безыскусен, ~ безграничен, словно море, ~ неуправим, будто яростный ветер. ~ Все люди знают об использовании, но я один глуп и ограничен. ~ Лишь я один отличаюсь от других и ценю матерь Благости.

—[20c93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Отбросьте ученость, и не будете знать печали. ~ "О да!" и "конечно нет" далеко ли друг от друга отстоят? ~ Ну а добро и зло друг от друга отстоят далеко ли? ~ Тот, кого люди боятся, сам не может людей не бояться. ~ О как все это путано и неясно, и конца ему не видно! ~ Все люди радостны-радостны, как будто они в ритуале участвуют жертвенном, как будто весенней порой на башню они восходят. ~ О! Только лишь я один спокоен-безгласен, подобно младенцу, еще не узнавшему детства. ~ О! Я весь обвит-перевязан, и мне некуда возвращаться. ~ У всех людей как будто излишек, лишь у меня одного как будто бы недостаток. ~ О! Так ведь я разум глупца! ~ О! Во мне все смешано-перемешано. ~ Все люди светлы-светлы, я один темен. ~ Все люди отчетливочетки, я один скрыт и неявен. ~ О! Я колыхаюсь, как море. ~ О! Я парю в пространстве, и мне негде остановиться. ~ Все люди к чему-то стремятся, а я один остаюсь простец простецом. ~ О! Я обширен и глубок, как море. ~ Как ураган, в пространстве ношусь, и мне негде остановиться! ~ Я один отличаюсь от людей тем, что ценю мать-кормилицу.

— [20с94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Отбросишь ученье, исчезнет и скорбь. ~ Насколько здесь одно отлично от другого? ~ Настолько ровно, насколько зло расходуется с добром! ~ То, чего люди боятся, нельзя не бояться. ~ О ширь пустотная, без края и без центра! ~ Среди людей согласие, веселье, как будто делают Великое заклятье в день наступления весны, когда она в свои владенья входит. ~ Один лишь я сокрыт в тиши без всяких признаков живого, подобный эмбриону, еще не ставшему ребенком. ~ В усталости скитаюсь по простору, как будто некуда пристать. ~ У всех людей достаток неизбывный, один лишь я как тот, кто все отверг. ~ Я сердце глупого. ~ О тьма космической утробы! ~ Миряне все сиянием полны, один лишь я во мраке мрачном. ~ Миряне любознательны в исканьях, один лишь я в безумной тьме. ~ [Вокруг] то безмятежность, которая подобна глади океана, ~ то ветра смерч, который не дает волнам остановиться. ~ В толпах людей везде есть применение разумным силам, ~ лишь я наивной глупостью подобен дикарю. ~ От всех других я отличаюсь тем, что Мать кормящую ценю.

— [20с95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Когда будет уничтожена ученость, тогда не будет и печали. ~ Как ничтожна разница между обещанием и лестью и как велика разница между добром и злом! ~ Надо избегать того, чего люди боятся. ~ О! Как хаотичен [мир], где все еще не установлен порядок. ~ Все люди радостны, как будто присутствуют на торжественном угощении или празднуют наступление весны. ~ Только я один спокоен и не выставляю себя на свет. ~ Я подобен ребенку, который не явился в мир. ~ О! Я несусь! ~ Кажется, нет места, где мог бы остановиться. ~ Все люди полны желаний, только я один подобен тому, кто отказался от всего. ~ Я сердце глупого человека. ~ О, как оно пусто! ~ Все люди полны света. ~ Только я один подобен тому, кто погружен во мрак. ~ Все люди пытливы, только я один равнодушен. ~ Я подобен тому, кто несется в мирском просторе и не знает, где ему остановиться. ~ Все люди проявляют свою способность, и только я один похож на глупого и низкого. ~ Только я один отличаюсь от других тем, что вижу основу в еде.

— [20с96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Когда уничтожено будет учение, то печали не будет. ~ Как велика разница между простым и сложным! ~ Как велика разница между добром и злом! ~ Необходимо бояться того, чего люди боятся. ~ О, дико! еще далеко до середины. ~ Многие держат себя важно, словно получают жертвенное мясо, словно весной восходят на башню. ~ О, как я прост! ~ Во мне нет ничего определенного, как в младенце, еще не достигшем детства. ~ Я как будто несусь, но не знаю куда и где останавлиюсь. ~ Многие люди богаты, но я ничего не имею, как будто все потерял. ~ Я прост, как душа глупого человека, но люди света блестят. ~ Я один темен, но люди света просвещены. ~ Я один страдаю душевно; ~ волнуюсь, как море; ~ блуждаю и не знаю, где остановиться. ~ Многие люди делают то, к чему способны, но я один глуп и мужиковат. ~ Я один отличаюсь от других тем, что люблю питаться у матери.

— [20с97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Отбрось ученость, и не будешь знать печали. ~ "Конечно!" и "Ладно!" - далеки друг от друга? ~ Красота и уродство - что их разделяет? ~ Страхи людские - нельзя их не страшиться. ~ Темное! Пустынное! Не достать его дна! ~ Все люди исполнены радости, ~ Словно празднуют великую жертву или весной восходят на башню. ~ Я один спокоен, ничем не выдаю себя, как младенец, еще не улыбнувшийся, ~ Бессильно влачащийся путник - и некуда возвращаться! ~ Все вокруг имеют в избытке, ~ Я один как будто лишен всего. ~ У меня сердце глупца - смутное, простодушное! ~ Обыкновенные люди так скоры на суд, ~ Я один пребываю в неведении. ~

Обыкновенные люди судят так тщательно, ~ Я один отрешен и бездумен. ~ Покоен в волнении!
Словно великое море. ~ Мчусь привольно! Словно нет мне пристанища. ~ У обыкновенных людей на все есть причина, ~ Я один прост и прям, словно неуч. ~ Я один не таков, как другие, ~ Потому что умею кормиться от Матери.

проявлений. ~ Подобен ребенку, который еще не начал и улыбаться. ~ Утомленно скитаюсь, будто некуда мне вернуться. ~ У человека толпы - всегда есть избыток. ~ А я - один, как будто утратил. ~ Я
- глупость в человеческом сердце. ~ Непроницаемость тьмы. ~ Обычные люди светом сияют. ~ Я - один. ~ Сумрачно-мрачный. ~ Обычные люди всматриваются-внимают. ~ Я - один. ~ Скучный и хмурый. ~ Бесформенность - это напоминание о море. ~ Ветра круговорот - это напоминание об отсутствии остановки. ~ У человека толпы всегда есть мотивы. ~ Лишь я - один. ~ Тупой и грубый. ~ Я - один. ~ Отличаюсь от человека ~ и питаю в первую очередь то, что меня порождает.

—[21c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ The character of great virtue follows alone from the Way. ~ As for the nature of the Way - it's shapeless and formless. ~ Formless! Shapeless! Inside there are images. ~ Shapeless!
Formless! Inside there are things. ~ Hidden! Obscure! Inside there are essences. ~ These essences are very real; ~ Inside them is the proof. ~ From the present back to the past, ~ Its name has never gone away. ~ It is by this that we comply with the father of the multitude [of things]. ~ How do I know that the father of the multitude is so? ~ By this.

—[21c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ IT lies in the nature of Grand Virtue ~ To follow the Tao and the Tao alone. ~
Now what is the Tao? ~ It is Something elusive and evasive. ~ Evasive and elusive! ~ And yet It contains within Itself a Form. ~ Elusive and evasive! ~ And yet It contains within Itself a Substance. ~ Shadowy and dim! ~ And yet It contains within Itself a Core of Vitality. ~ The Core of Vitality is very real, ~ It contains within Itself an unfailing Sincerity. ~ Throughout the ages Its Name has been preserved ~ In order to recall the Beginning of all things. ~ How do I know the ways of all things at the Beginning? ~ By what is within me.

—[21c03t] D. C. Lau ~ In his every movement a man of great virtue ~ Follows the way and the way only. ~ As a thing the way is ~ Shadowy and indistinct. ~ Indistinct and shadowy, ~ Yet within it is an image; ~ Shadowy and indistinct, ~ Yet within it is a substance. ~ Dim and dark, ~ Yet within it is an essence. ~ This essence is quite genuine ~ And within it is something that can be tested. ~ From the present back to antiquity, ~ Its name never deserted it. ~ It serves as a means for inspecting the fathers of the multitude. ~
How do I know that the fathers of the multitude are like that? ~ By means of this.

—[21c04t] R. L. Wing ~ The natural expression of Power ~ Proceeds only through the Tao. ~ The Tao acts through Natural Law; ~ So formless, so intangible. ~ Intangible, formless! ~ At its center appears the Image.
~ Formless, intangible! ~ At its center appears Natural Law. ~ Obscure, mysterious! ~ At its center appears the Life Force. ~ The Life Force is very real; ~ At its center appears truth. ~ From ancient times to the present, ~ Its name ever remains, ~ Through the experience of the Collective Origin. ~ How do I know the way of the Collective Origin? ~ Through this.

—[21c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ The content of the great "De" (Virtue) is in conformity with Tao. ~ The thing that is called Tao has no definite form. ~ So vague and elusive is it, ~ Yet in it the image appears. ~ So elusive and vague is it, ~ Yet in it the real exists. ~ So profound and obscure is it, ~ Yet in it the subtle essence was contained. ~ The essence is very concrete, and very real. ~ From the old time till now, its name stands unworn, by which we may know the beginning of all things. ~ How do I know their beginnings? ~ Only by this (nature of Tao).

—[21c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ The greatest Virtue is to follow Tao and Tao alone. ~ The Tao is elusive and intangible. ~ Oh, it is intangible and elusive, and yet within is image. ~ Oh, it is elusive and intangible, and yet within is form. ~ Oh, it is dim and dark, and yet within is essence. ~ This essence is very real, and therein lies faith. ~ From the very beginning until now its name has never been forgotten. ~ Thus I perceive the creation. ~ How do I know the ways of creation? ~ Because of this.

—[21c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ To tell the virtuous from all the others. ~ You only need one criterion: does he follow the Dao? ~ The substance of the Dao is impalpable and intractable. ~ While it is impalpable and intractable, ~ It manifests itself in the phenomenal world, ~ And it is not without substance. ~ While it is shadowy and empty, ~ It shows itself in the spiritual realm. ~ The spiritual essence of the Dao is both truthful and dependable. ~ From the ancient times till now ~ The name of the Dao has persisted, ~ And it has pleased the wise masters. ~ How do I know about these wise masters? ~ I use the criterion mentioned above.

—[21c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ Only the DAO has the behavior of the most magnificent DE. ~ The DAO looks elusive and vague. ~ It seems abstract, but it has the world as its foundation. ~ It appears intangible and far away, but it contains the basic elements of the world. ~ These elements are present everywhere, making its existence known. ~ From the beginning to the present, the name of the DAO has always existed, ~ Experiencing all generations. ~ How do I know everything in the past? Because I know the DAO.

—[21c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE EMPTY SOURCE ~ The greatest virtue is in simply following Tao, the intangible, inscrutable. ~ Inscrutable, intangible, and yet containing forms. ~ Intangible, inscrutable, and yet containing things. ~ Profound and obscure, but having an essence, a veritable essence in which is consistence. ~ From eternity until now its nature has remained unchanged. ~ It inheres in all things from their beginnings. ~ How do I know of the origin of things? ~ I know by Tao.

—[21c10t] James Legge ~ The grandest forms of active force ~ From Tao come, their only source. ~ Who can of Tao the nature tell? ~ Our sight it flies, our touch as well. ~ Eluding sight, eluding touch, ~ The forms of things all in it crouch; ~ Eluding touch, eluding sight, ~ There are their semblances, all right. ~ Profound it is, dark and obscure; ~ Things' essences all there endure. ~ Those essences the truth enfold ~ Of what, when seen, shall then be told. ~ Now it is so; 'twas so of old. ~ Its name - what passes not away; ~ So, in their beautiful array, ~ Things form and never know decay. ~ How know I that it is so with all the beauties of existing things? ~ By this (nature of the Tao).

—[21c11t] David Hinton ~ The nature of great Integrity is to follow Way absolutely. ~ Becoming things, Way appears vague and hazy. ~ All hazy and impossibly vague it harbors the mind's images. ~ All vague and impossibly hazy it harbors the world's things. ~ All hidden and impossibly dark it harbors the subtle essence, ~ and being an essence so real it harbors the sincerity of facts. ~ Never, not since the beginning - its renown has never been far off. ~ Through it we witness all origins. ~ And how can we ever know the form of all origins? ~ Through this.

—[21c12t] Chichung Huang ~ The manifestations of grand virtue ~ Follow only the Tao. ~ The Tao is something ~ Faint and dim: ~ Dim and faint, ~ Therein lies an image; ~ Faint and dim, ~ Therein lies substance. ~ Deep and remote, ~ Therein lies quintessence. ~ Its quintessence is most genuine, ~ Therein lies truthfulness. ~ From the present to antiquity, ~ Its name has never vanished, ~ Whereby I trace back to

~ The father of the multitude. ~ How do I know ~ What the father of the multitude was like? ~ From this.
—[21c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ The features (yung) of the vast (k'ung) Te, ~ Follows entirely (wei) from Tao. ~ Tao as a thing, ~ Is entirely illusive (huang) and evasive (hu). ~ Evasive and illusive, ~ In it there is image (hsiang). ~ Illusive and evasive, ~ In it there is thinghood (wu). ~ Dark and dim, ~ In it there is life seed (ching). ~ Its life seed being very genuine (chen), ~ In it there is growth power (hsin). ~ As it is today, so it was in the days of old (ku), ~ Its name goes not away (ch'ü), ~ So that we may survey (yüeh) the origins of the many (chung fu). ~ How do I know that the origins of the many are such? ~ Because of this.

—[21c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ The containment (holding capacity) of the great Te is patterned after [the containment of] Tao [i.e. vastly immense]. ~ [The following experience was shared by people who had searched Tao in the darkness of ignorance:] ~ The physical manifestation of Tao [was like a shadow which] shimmers and vibrates [in front of us]; ~ Nevertheless beneath this evasive [emanation we could tell that] there was some concrete [form]; ~ Underlying this elusive shadow there was some [discernible] phenomenon [that can be construed]; ~ Lying deeply and obscurely beneath this phenomenon is something quintessential [that can be conjectured]; ~ This something quintessential is very real that it yields trustworthy results; ~ From ancient time until today the above description (name) has had never been refuted [successfully]; ~ This kind of descriptions were found in classics handed down by our forefathers; ~ On what account did I know that the description [of Tao] in ancient classics are the best elucidation of [Tao we have so far]? ~ I based my conclusion through my own personal confirmations of accounts (explication) given by our forefathers in venerable documents.

—[21c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ Great Virtue shows itself only in following the Way. ~ The Way is something elusive and evasive. ~ Elusive and evasive, and yet it contains within itself an image. ~ Elusive and evasive, and yet it contains within itself a substance. ~ Unfathomable and hidden, and yet it contains within itself an essence. ~ The essence is very real, and contains within itself an unfailing sincerity. ~ Throughout the ages its name has been preserved because through it we see the beginning of all things. ~ How do I know the beginning of all things? ~ Through it.

—[21c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ The state of the world follows the Tao. ~ What is Tao? ~ It is intangible. ~ Foggily and hazily there appears to be an image. ~ Hazily and foggily there seems to be an object. ~ Distantly and elusively it emerges over there. ~ It is the truth. ~ It is believable. ~ From ancient time, it has been there; everything is following it. ~ How do I know it is so? ~ From everything that is observable.

—[21c17t] Arthur Waley ~ Such the scope of the All-pervading Power ~ That it alone can act through the Way. ~ For the Way is a thing impalpable, incommensurable. ~ Incommensurable, impalpable. ~ Yet latent in it are forms; ~ Impalpable, incommensurable ~ Yet within it are entities. ~ Shadowy it is and dim; ~ Yet within it there is a force, ~ A force that though rarefied ~ Is none the less efficacious. ~ From the time of old till now ~ Its charge has not departed ~ But cheers onward the many warriors. ~ How do I know that the many warriors are so? ~ Through this.

—[21c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ A capacity for the virtue of emptiness, this alone allows conformance with the Dao. ~ The Dao as such is but dim, is but dark. ~ Dark, oh, dim, oh, but within it some image is there. ~ Dim, oh, dark, oh, but within it something is there. ~ Abstruse, oh, indistinct, oh, but within it the essence of things is there. ~ Its essence is most authentic, for within it authentication occurs. ~ From antiquity until now, its name has never been revoked. ~ We use it to convey what the father of everything is. ~ How do I know that the father of everything is so? ~ It is by this.

—[21c19t] Lin Yutang ~ MANIFESTATIONS OF TAO ~ The marks of great Character ~ Follow alone from the Tao. ~ The thing that is called Tao ~ Is elusive, evasive. ~ Evasive, elusive, ~ Yet latent in it are forms. ~

Elusive, evasive, ~ Yet latent in it are objects. ~ Dark and dim, ~ Yet latent in it is the life-force. ~ The life-force being very true, ~ Latent in it are evidences. ~ From the days of old till now ~ Its Named (manifested forms) have never ceased, ~ By which we may view the Father of All Things. ~ How do I know the shape of Father of All Things? ~ Through These!

—[21c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ The appearance of grand integrity is that it follows the Way alone. ~ The Way objectified is blurred and nebulous. ~ How nebulous and blurred! ~ Yet within it there are images. ~ How blurred and nebulous! ~ Yet within it there are objects. ~ How cavernous and dark! ~ Yet within it there is an essence. ~ Its essence is quite real; ~ Within it there are tokens. ~ From the present back to the past, ~ Its name has been imperishable. ~ Through it we conform to the father of the masses. ~ How do I know what the father of the masses is like? ~ Through this.

—[21c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ The Great Virtue is to follow the Tao and only the Tao. ~ The Tao is shadowy and intangible. ~ Intangible and evasive, and yet within it is a form. ~ Evasive and intangible, and yet within it is a substance. ~ Shadowy and dark, and yet within it is a vital force. ~ This vital force is real and can be relied upon. ~ From ancient times to the present the Tao's instructions have not been forgotten. ~ Through it can be perceived the beginning of the story of life. ~ How do I know how it was at the beginning of the story of life? ~ Because of what is within me.

—[21c22t] David H. Li ~ The Grand Virtue's complexion resembles that of Direction. ~ Direction, as a matter substantive, ~ is sometimes indistinct and other times elusive. ~ Elusive and indistinct, there is image within; ~ Indistinct and elusive, there is matter within. ~ Minuscule and mysterious, there are particles within; ~ These particles are real; there is reality within. ~ From the present back to the past, its name is never unacknowledged; ~ it is the foundation of all matters. ~ How do I know that it is the foundation of all matters? ~ Through Direction.

—[21c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ The outer expression of great virtue ~ follows the inner subtlety of the Tao. ~ Yet, ~ the inner subtlety of the Tao ~ is altogether elusive and ineffable. ~ Elusive and ineffable, yet there arises some image within; ~ Ineffable and elusive, yet there exists some thing within; ~ Cavernous and dark, yet there is some essence within; ~ This essence is entirely real; in it is Kosmic Integrity. ~ Hitherto, the name of Kosmic Integrity has endured, ~ And remains the Principle of Kosmic Creation and Decreation. ~ By what means do I know the Principle of Kosmic Creation and Decreation? ~ By means of Kosmic Integrity itself.

—[21c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ The manifestation of the great virtue is to follow the way of the Tao. ~ Tao is a thing that is invisible, inaccessible. ~ Inaccessible, invisible, and yet it has image and form. ~ Cloudy and obscure, but there is essence in it, ~ And this essence is absolute truth, and there is belief in it. ~ From ancient times until now, it has not lost its nameless name, ~ Through it the source of all things has passed. ~ How do I know that the source of all things is in it? ~ From the Tao.

—[21c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ The Body of The Tao is a mist beyond your eyes ~ Tao of No Body, and yet within it is All Creation. ~ Like a seed in the dark, and a dim light ~ And from it, comes everything. ~ Root, stem, leaf ... its essence is in everything. ~ Everything is born from this Tao ~ I say so, and I can prove it! ~ From the beginning of time until now the Tao is eternal because it is Creation. ~ How do I know the Tao is the root of all being? ~ Because ~ I know this.

—[21c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ The forms of the great the Teh (virtue) ~ Exclusively depend on the Tao. ~ The Tao as a thing ~ Is vague and indefinite. ~ Vague and indefinite, ~ It presents images; ~ Indefinite and vague, ~ It embodies substance. ~ Distant and dark, ~ It embraces semen-like essence. ~ The essence is a genuine existence ~ That can be tested as true. ~ From ancient times to now, ~ Its name has always been accepted, ~ And with which, the beginning of all things can be surveyed. ~ How do I know the initial state of all things? ~ By means of the Tao.

—[21c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ A virtuous person comes into being only according to the Tao. ~ Tao is something which is obscure and indistinct. ~ Indistinct and obscure - ~ yet there is an appearance. ~ Obscure and indistinct - ~ yet there is a substance. ~ Vague and dim - ~ yet there is an essence within it. ~ This essence is genuine. ~ There is truth within it. ~ Since ancient times until now, its name never forsaken, it stands there to guard all the good deeds. ~ How do I know all the good deeds are guarded by this Tao? ~ I know.

—[21c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ To one who keeps the Way, nature bestows its richest gifts. ~ The working of the Way cannot be clearly stated, ~ But one can find an image in its vagueness, ~ Substance in its obscurity, ~ Essence in its vast, uncertain expanse, ~ And confirmable manifestations of that essence. ~ What existed at the earliest beginning ~ Is existing now, in the developments of all beings, ~ And that is what helps me to know the nature of all things.

—[21c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ The Tao Never Leaves This World ~ Lao Tze says, ~ The great Teh is comprehensive, and it follows the ways of the Tao. ~ The Tao is that which is vague and uncertain. ~ Within the vague and uncertain, there are pictures. ~ Within the vague and uncertain, there is substance. ~ Feeble and unclear as it is, there is spirit within. ~ The spirit is genuine, with credibility within. ~ From ancient times until now, the Tao has never left this world; it lives with and looks after all things. ~ How do I know the Tao lives with all things? ~ From their daily conduct I know.

—[21c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ The great virtue as manifested is but following Tao. ~ Tao is a thing that is both invisible and intangible. ~ Intangible and invisible, yet there are forms in it; ~ Invisible and intangible, yet there is substance in it; ~ Subtle and obscure, there is essence in it; ~ This essence being invariably true, there is faith in it. ~ From of old till now, it has never lost its (nameless) name, ~ Through which the origin of all things has passed. ~ How do I know that it is so with the origin of all things? ~ By this (Tao).

—[21c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ The feature of great virtue is to follow only Tao. ~ Tao is something elusive and vague! ~ Though vague and elusive, in it is the image. ~ Though elusive and vague, in it is the substance. ~ Obscure and dim, in it is the spirit. ~ The spirit is truly genuine; in it is credibility. ~ From ancient times until now, ~ Its name has never disappeared. ~ By this the beginning of all things is known. ~ How can I know the beginning of all things? ~ By this.

—[21c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ The impression made by magnificent Te ~ comes only from Tao. ~ Tao is a something ~ but elusive, but evasive. ~ Evasive, elusive, ~ inside it lies the mind's true form. ~ Elusive, evasive, ~ inside it lies something substantial. ~ Shadowy, dim. ~ Inside it lies vital energy. ~ This energy is very strong, ~ inside it lies true genuineness. ~ From ancient times until today ~ Its name has not been forgotten ~ allowing us to see the beginnings of everything. ~ How do I recognize the form of the beginnings of everything? ~ By this.

—[21c33t] Cheng Lin ~ The conduct of those who have attained perfection is always in accordance with the way of Truth. ~ Truth is vague and intangible. ~ Though vague and intangible, within it there is substance. ~ Though vague and intangible, within it there is form. ~ Though distant and vacuous, within it there is essence. ~ Its essence is real, and its validity can be proven. ~ It has existed from the earliest time, and only its name is new. ~ It is the primary origin of the whole of creation.

—[21c34t] Yi Wu ~ The attitude of grand virtue is to follow only the Way. ~ The Way is like something elusive and evasive. ~ Within it there is image, evasive and elusive. ~ Within it there is matter, elusive and evasive. ~ Within it there is essence, dim and dark. ~ The essence is very real, ~ Within it there is evidence of reality. ~ From ancient times to now, ~ Its name has not disappeared. ~ By it one can see the source of all things. ~ How could I know the source of all things? ~ By this.

—[21c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ The demeanour of a man of great virtue is consistent with the way of Dao. ~ Dao, as an entity, is not tangible. ~ Though it is intangible, it appears to have some image. ~ Although it appears nebulous, it has some form. ~ Though inscrutable and indistinct, it appears to have some vitality. ~ This vitality is as real as it is creditable. ~ From antiquity until now, Dao has always existed. ~ Through following the way of Dao, one tries to understand the beginning of the world. ~ To understand the beginning of the universe is from the study of Dao.

—[21c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ One of deep virtue cherishes the subtle essence of the universe. ~ The subtle essence of the universe is elusive and evasive. ~ Though it is elusive and evasive, ~ it unveils itself as images and forms. ~ Evasive and elusive, ~ it discloses itself as indefinable substance. ~ Shadowy and indistinct, ~ it reveals itself as impalpable subtle essence. ~ This essence is so subtle, and yet so real. ~ It is the subtle origin of the whole of creation and non-creation. ~ It existed prior to the beginning of time as the single deep and subtle reality of the universe. ~ It brings all into being.

—[21c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ That which is inherent in the great attainment (void) is the echo of Tao. ~ That which is Tao is indistinct and ineffable. ~ Ineffable and indistinct, yet therein are forms. ~ Indistinct and ineffable, yet therein are objects. ~ Unfathomable and invisible, yet therein are essences. ~ The essence is indeed genuine, therein is the vivid reality. ~ From ancient times until the present, the name of Tao has never ceased to exist. ~ Through it we see the beginning of all things. ~ How do we understand the beginning of all things? ~ It is through this.

—[21c38t] Henry Wei ~ Hollow Heart ~ Hsu Hsin ~ The inherent quality of Grand Virtue (Teh) ~ Always conforms only to Tao. ~ Tao is something dreamily winking and waning. ~ Waning, winking, it embodies forms; ~ Winking, waning, it embodies things. ~ It may seem receding afar and darkening, ~ Yet within it there is an essence. ~ This essence is very real. ~ Inside is something invariably vital. ~ From hoary antiquity to the present time, ~ Its effect has never gone awry, ~ And serves as witness to the Creator of all things. ~ How do I know the way of the Creator? ~ Through this (witness).

—[21c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ The look of the great Te ~ Follows from Tao alone. ~ It is Tao embodied. ~ How vague and dim it is! ~ Vague and dim - ~ In it are forms. ~ Vague and dim - ~ In it are things. ~ Deep and dark - ~ In it is the vital essence, ~ Which is most real. ~ In it is evidence. ~ From the time of old till today, ~ Its name has never departed. ~ By it you view the beginning of all. ~ How do I know the shape of the beginning of all? ~ By this.

—[21c40t] Tao Huang ~ The marks of profound action follow only from the Tao. ~ The substance of Tao is boundless and unfathomable. ~ Unfathomable and boundless, ~ In its center there is form; ~ Boundless and unfathomable, ~ In its center there is an object; ~ Embryonic and dark, ~ In its center there is essence; ~ The essence is very pure, ~ In its center there is trust. ~ From now to the days of old, ~ Its name never dies, ~ Because it creates all things in their beginning. ~ How do I know the source of all beginnings? ~ From this.

—[21c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ The capacity of Grand Virtues is obtained only by following Dao. ~ Dao is a matter, even though it is indistinct and elusive. ~ It is elusive and indistinct, yet within it All Images are formed; ~ It is indistinct and elusive, yet within it All Things are created; ~ It is shadowy and obscure, yet within it All Vitalities are produced. ~ It's own vitality is real and valid. ~ Throughout the past and present the name of Dao has never been dropped. ~ It observes All Origins. ~ How do we know that All Origins are so? ~ By these observations.

—[21c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ The all-embracing quality of the great virtue follows alone from the Tao. ~ The thing that is called Tao is eluding and vague. ~ Vague and eluding, there is in it the form. ~ Eluding and vague, in it are things. ~ Deep and obscure, in it is the essence. ~ The essence is very real, in it are evidences. ~ From the time of old until now, its name (manifestations) ever remains. ~ By which we may see the beginning of all things. ~ How do I know that the beginnings of all things are so? ~ Through this (Tao).

—[21c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Все вмещается великой добродетелью, и в этом она следует лишь Дао. ~ Дао в смысле вещи всецело смутно и расплывчато. ~ И в нем, таком смутном и расплывчатом, есть образы! ~ И в нем, таком расплывчатом и смутном, есть вещи! ~ И в нем, таком глубоком и неясном, есть сгущенность! ~ Его сгущенность обладает высшей подлинностью. ~ В нем все является реальным. ~ Издревле и доныне не исчезает его имя. ~ Так оно собирает множество великих. ~ Откуда мне известно, каким видом обладает множество великих? ~ Отсюда.

—[21c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Облик великой Благости проистекает из Дао. ~ В вещах Дао неразличимо-туманно. ~ Неразличимо-туманное! Но в нём заключены образы. ~ Туманно-неразличимое! Но оно объемлет вещи. ~ Отдалённое и тёмное! Но оно содержит семя. ~ Семя это истинное, ибо оно освящено искренностью. ~ С древности и до наших дней имя его не высказано. ~ Оно известно как отец мириад созданий. ~ Откуда я знаю, что форма отца созданий такова? ~ Из него же самого.

—[21c93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Из пустоты Блага-Дэ Путь-Дао исходит вовне. ~ Дао - вещь такая: неясная и смутная, безликая и туманная. ~ О неясная! ~ О смутная! ~ В твоём средоточии есть образы. ~ О безликая! ~ О туманная! ~ В твоём средоточии есть вещи. ~ О загадочная! ~ О темная! ~ В твоём средоточии есть суть энергии жизни. ~ Эта суть энергии жизни предельно истинна, в её средоточии сокрыто доверие. ~ С древности и доныне не исчезало её имя и с помощью его обзираю все множество множеств сущего. ~ Но откуда мне известно, что множество множеств сущего таково? ~ Из этого.

—[21c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Насыщенность пустого Дэ совпадает только с Дао. ~ Дао есть нечто туманное, неразличимое! ~ О, неразличимое! ~ О, туманное! ~ Внутри Его содержатся образы. ~ О, туманное! ~ О, неразличимое! ~ Внутри Его содержатся вещи. ~ О, глубокое! ~ О, сокровенное! ~ Внутри Его содержится семя-энергия (цзин). ~ Это семя-энергия в высшей степени подлинно, в нём содержится вера-доверие (синь). ~ С древности и поныне Его имя не исчезает, в Нем вижу Отца всего тварного. ~ Откуда я знаю, что Отец всего тварного таков? ~ Из того, что сказано.

—[21c95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Содержание великого Дэ подчиняется только дао. ~ Дао бестелесно. ~ Дао туманно и неопределенно. ~ Однако в его туманности и неопределенности содержатся образы. ~ Оно туманно и неопределенно. ~ Однако в его туманности и неопределенности скрыты вещи. ~ Оно глубоко и темно. ~ Однако в его глубине и темноте скрыты тончайшие частицы. ~ Эти тончайшие частицы обладают высшей действительностью и достоверностью. ~ С древних времен до наших дней его имя не исчезает. ~ Только следуя ему, можно познать начало всех вещей. ~ Каким образом мы познаем начало всех вещей? ~ Только благодаря ему.

—[21c96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Высоконравственный повинуется только одному Тао. ~ Сущность Тао похожа на блеск света. ~ О, неуловим блеск света! но в нем есть изображение. ~ О, как он блестит! ~ Он решительно неуловим, но в нем есть вещество. ~ О, как призрачно и непостижимо (Тао)! ~ В нем есть сущность, которая достоверна. ~ От древности до ныне имя (его) никогда не исчезало. ~ Я обзрел многие начала, но не знаю, отчего такие начала, а не иные.

—[21c97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Сила всевмещающего совершенства исходит единственно от Пути. ~ Путь же вот что такое: туманное, смутное. ~ О, смутное! О, туманное! А в нем есть образы! ~ О, туманное! О, смутное! А в нем есть нечто! ~ О, сокрытое! О, темное! А в нем есть семена. ~ Эти семена такие подлинны! Они дают уверенность. ~ С древности и поныне имя его не преходит, ~ Благодаря ему опознаем величие превращений. ~ Откуда я знаю, что таково величие всех превращений? ~ Благодаря этому.

—[21c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Всеобъемлющий характер Потенции пространства определяется лишь тем, что вытекает из Пути. ~ Путь реализуется в вещах лишь как мерцание, лишь как трепетание. ~ Вот трепетание, вот мерцание. ~ А в сердцевине - наличие образа. ~ Вот мерцание, вот трепетание. ~ А в сердцевине - наличие вещи. ~ Вот мрак, вот тьма. ~ А в сердцевине - наличие семени. ~ Его семя является совершенно сущим. ~ А в сердцевине - наличие веры. ~ С древности до современности имя его не исчезает. ~ Тем самым он проявляется как прародитель множеств. ~ Откуда же известно сущности моей, что таковым является прародитель множеств? ~ Через это.

—[22c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ Bent over, you'll be preserved whole; ~ When twisted, you'll be upright; ~ When hollowed out, you'll be full; ~ When worn out, you'll be renewed; ~ When you have little, you'll attain [much]; ~ With much, you'll be confused. ~ Therefore the Sage holds on to the One and in this way becomes the shepherd of the world. ~ He does not show himself off; therefore he becomes prominent. ~ He does not put himself on display; therefore he brightly shines. ~ He does not brag about himself; therefore he receives credit. ~ He does not praise his own deeds; therefore he can long endure. ~ It is only because he does not compete that, therefore, no one is able to compete with him. ~ The so-called "Bent over you'll be preserved whole" of the ancients ~ Was an expression that was really close to it! ~ Truly "wholeness" will belong to him.

—[22c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ BEND and you will be whole. ~ Curl and you will be straight. ~ Keep empty and you will be filled. ~ Grow old and you will be renewed. ~ Have little and you will gain. ~ Have much and you will be confused. ~ Therefore, the Sage embraces the One, ~ And becomes a Pattern to all under Heaven. ~ He does not make a show of himself, ~ Hence he shines; ~ Does not justify himself, ~ Hence he becomes known; ~ Does not boast of his ability, ~ Hence he gets his credit; ~ Does not brandish his success, ~ Hence he endures; ~ Does not compete with anyone, ~ Hence no one can compete with him. ~ Indeed, the ancient saying: "Bend and you will remain whole" is no idle word. ~ Nay, if you have really attained wholeness, everything will flock to you.

—[22c03t] D. C. Lau ~ Bowed down then preserved; ~ Bent then straight; ~ Hollow then full; ~ Worn then new; ~ A little then benefited; ~ A lot then perplexed. ~ Therefore the sage embraces the One and is a model for the empire. ~ He does not show himself, and so is conspicuous; ~ He does not consider himself right, and so is illustrious; ~ He does not brag, and so has merit; ~ He does not boast, and so endures. ~ It is because he does not contend that no one in the empire is in a position to contend with him. ~ The way the ancients had it, 'Bowed down then preserved', is no empty saying. ~ Truly it enables one to be preserved to the end.

—[22c04t] R. L. Wing ~ What is curved becomes whole; ~ What is crooked becomes straight. ~ What is deep becomes filled; ~ What is exhausted becomes refreshed. ~ What is small becomes attainable; ~ What is excessive becomes confused. ~ Thus Evolved Individuals hold to the One And regard the world as their Pattern. ~ They do not display themselves; ~ Therefore they are illuminated. ~ They do not define themselves; ~ Therefore they are distinguished. ~ They do not make claims; ~ Therefore they are credited. ~ They do not boast; ~ Therefore they advance. ~ Since, indeed, they do not compete, The world cannot compete with them. ~ That ancient saying: "What is curved becomes whole" - Are these empty words? ~ To become whole, Turn within.

—[22c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ To yield is yet to be preserved wholly, ~ To be bent is yet to become straight, ~ To be hollow is yet to be filled up, ~ To be worn out is yet to be renewed, ~ To have little (knowledge) is yet to gain, ~ To have much (knowledge) is yet to be perplexed. ~ Therefore the sage takes Tao (the One) as the instrument to observe destiny under Heaven? ~ He does not merely rely on his own eyes, ~ Therefore he is wise and penetrating; ~ He does not consider himself always in the right, ~ Therefore he is able to tell right from wrong; ~ He does not boast of himself, ~ Therefore he is given credit; ~ He does not think himself superior, ~ Therefore he is qualified for leadership. ~ It is precisely because he does not compete that nobody under Heaven could compete with him. ~ How could such old sayings be false as "to yield is yet to be preserved wholly"? ~ Truly they will preserve people well.

—[22c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ Yield and overcome; ~ Bend and be straight; ~ Empty and be full; ~ Wear out and be new; ~ Have little and gain; ~ Have much and be confused. ~ Therefore wise men embrace the one ~ And set an example to all. ~ Not putting on a display, ~ They shine forth. ~ Not justifying themselves, ~ They are distinguished. ~ Not boasting, ~ They receive recognition. ~ Not bragging, ~ They never falter. ~ They do not quarrel, ~ So no one quarrels with them. ~ Therefore the ancients say, "Yield and overcome." ~ Is that an empty saying? ~ Be really whole, ~ And all things will come to you.

—[22c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ When something is bent, it is ready to be put straight; ~ When someone is wronged, one is ready to be redressed; ~ When a container is empty, it is ready to be filled; ~ When something gets old, it is ready to be renewed; ~ When you have just a little, you are ready to get more; ~ When you have got a lot, you are ready to be confused. ~ For this reason the Sage espouses one universal formula. ~ Do not be prejudiced by your own views, and you will see; ~ Do not think that you are right, and you will know the truth; ~ Do not boast about your achievements, and you will achieve; ~ Do not be self-contented; and you will grow. ~ Because (in-seeking growth) one never need to struggle or to contest with others, ~ One will never need to fear that one's achievements will be contested away by others. ~ The ancient saying that "When something is bent it is ready to be straightened" certainly is not idle talk. ~ To be whole, just follow the one formula.

—[22c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ If you can bear unfairness, you can make yourself a complete person. ~ If you can bear overbending, you can be straightened out. ~ If you can bear the old, you can gain the new. ~ When you have too little, you will gain; ~ When you have too much, you will lose. ~ Therefore, the great men kept the DAO and made themselves the models for the world. ~ They were not stubborn, so they knew the right and the wrong. ~ They were not narrow-minded, so everyone accepted their opinions. ~ They did not show off, so everyone recognized their accomplishments. ~ They were not conceited, so they were able to lead the people. ~ Only because they did not fight for the credit, was no one able to claim it. ~ Is the old saying "bearing the unfairness makes you a complete man" an empty joke? ~ No, because it is completely consistent with the DAO.

—[22c09t] Walter Gorn Old, INCREASING THE SMALL ~ Whosoever adapteth himself shall be preserved to the end. ~ Whosoever bendeth himself shall be straightened. ~ Whosoever emptieth himself shall be filled. ~ Whosoever weareth himself away shall be renewed. ~ Whosoever humbleth himself shall be exalted. ~ Whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased. ~ Therefore doth the Sage cling to simplicity, and is an example to all men. ~ He is not ostentatious, and therefore he shines. ~ He is not egotistic, and therefore he is praised. ~ He is not vain, and therefore he is esteemed. ~ He is not haughty, and therefore he is honoured. ~ And because he does not compete with others, no man is his enemy. ~ The ancient maxim, "Whosoever adapteth himself shall be preserved to the end," verily it is no idle saying. ~ Without doubt he shall go back to his Home in peace.

—[22c10t] James Legge ~ The partial becomes complete; ~ the crooked, straight; ~ the empty, full; ~ the worn out, new. ~ He whose (desires) are few gets them; ~ he whose (desires) are many goes astray. ~ Therefore the sage holds in his embrace the one thing (of humility), and manifests it to all the world. ~ He is free from self-display, and therefore he shines; ~ from self-assertion, and therefore he is distinguished; ~ from self-boasting, and therefore his merit is acknowledged; ~ from self-complacency, and therefore he acquires superiority. ~ It is because he is thus free from striving that therefore no one in the world is able to strive with him. ~ That saying of the ancients that 'the partial becomes complete' was not vainly spoken: ~ - all real completion is comprehended under it.

—[22c11t] David Hinton ~ In yielding is completion. ~ In bent is straight. ~ In hollow is full. ~ In exhaustion is renewal. ~ In little is contentment. ~ In much is confusion. ~ This is how a sage embraces primal unity as the measure of all beneath heaven. ~ Give up self-reflection ~ and you're soon enlightened. ~ Give up self-definition ~ and you're soon apparent. ~ Give up self-promotion ~ and you're soon proverbial. ~ Give up self-esteem ~ and you're soon perennial. ~ Simply give up contention ~ and soon nothing in all beneath heaven contends with you. ~ It was hardly empty talk ~ when the ancients declared ~ In yielding is completion. ~ Once you perfect completion ~ you've returned home to it all.

—[22c12t] Chichung Huang ~ "Incomplete shall be complete; ~ Bent shall be straight; ~ Hollow shall be full; ~ Worn shall be new; ~ Little shall gain; ~ Much shall delude." ~ Hence, the sage man ~ Took hold of One to serve ~ As shepherd over all under heaven: ~ He did not look at himself, ~ Therefore, illustrious; ~ He did not parade himself, ~ Therefore, clear-sighted; ~ He did not brag about himself, ~ Therefore, meritorious; ~ He was not conceited, ~ Therefore, long-enduring. ~ It is precisely because he did not contend ~ That none could with him contend. ~ The ancient saying: ~ "Incomplete shall be complete" ~ Is it mere words? ~ Truly, it shall end up complete.

—[22c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ Bent, thus (tse) preserved whole, ~ Unjustly accused, thus exonerated (chih), ~ Hollow, thus filled (ying), ~ Battered (pi), thus renewed, ~ Scanty, thus receiving (te), ~ Much, thus perplexed. ~ Therefore the sage embraces the One (pao i). ~ He becomes the model (shih) of the world. ~ Not self-seeing, hence he is enlightened (ming). ~ Not self-justifying, hence he is outstanding. ~ Not showing off (fa) his deeds, hence he is meritorious. ~ Not boasting (ching) of himself, hence he leads (chang). ~ Because he is not contentious (pu cheng), ~ Hence no one under heaven can contend with him. ~ What the ancients say: "Bent, thus preserved whole," ~ Are these empty words? ~ Be preserved whole and return (kuei).

—[22c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ [The working of Tao is to bring forth the ultimate fairness, so any individual could act in harmony with Tao by performing the following tasks:] ~ By assisting the wronged [person] to achieve full justice [through rectification]; ~ Through helping the twisted [people] to go straight; ~ Through sustaining the needy (in the manner of filling out potholes when needed); ~ Through shoring up (revigorating) the old and deteriorated [vitality]; ~ Through strengthening the underprivileged with the obtainment (of essentials); ~ Through halting [those who already have] too much until they cease and desist. ~ By doing so, a Sage exemplifies to the world how to strive for Oneness (equal opportunity for all). ~ A person who refrains from being self-opinionated is brilliant; ~ A person who is not self-righteous is extraordinary; ~ A person who is not self-promoting is genuinely distinguished; ~ A person who is not self-conceit is outstanding; ~ It is due to the fact that a Sage [, i.e. a person with the above described virtue,] does not rival people [for fame, honor, and profit] that people of the world can not strive against him; ~ Is the ancient saying that Tao had helped the wronged person to achieve full justice through rectification an empty talk? ~ Accordingly, if one is thoroughly sincere, he will succeed in whatever he endeavors.

—[22c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ Bent but then whole. ~ Curled but then straight. ~ Empty but then full. ~ Worn but then new. ~ Little but then gain. ~ Much but then doubtful. ~ Therefore, the sage embraces the One, and becomes an example for the world. ~ He does not make a show of himself, hence he shines. ~ He does not justify himself, hence he becomes known. ~ He does not boast of his ability, hence he gets his credit. ~ He does not brandish his success, hence he endures. ~ He does not compete with anyone, hence no one can compete with him. ~ Indeed, the ancient saying "Bent but then whole" is not an empty word. ~ If you have really attained wholeness, everyone will flock to you.

—[22c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ Malleability preserves entirety. ~ Mistakes teach lessons. ~ Empty containers can be filled. ~ Breakages cause replacement. ~ Less makes success. ~ Much leads to confusion. ~ Thus the sage believes Tao is the only law of the universe. ~ He does not brag himself so he can be held in great respect. ~ He does not assume he is always right so he can be unbiased. ~ He does not exaggerate so he can be right. ~ He is not vainglorious so he can keep making progress. ~ If you do not compete, then no one can compete with you in the world. ~ So how can the old saying, such as 'Malleability preserves entirety', be not without truth? ~ They all return to Tao.

—[22c17t] Arthur Waley ~ "To remain whole, be twisted!" ~ To become straight, let yourself be bent. ~ To become full, be hollow. ~ Be tattered, that you may be renewed. ~ Those that have little, may get more, ~ Those that have much, are but perplexed. ~ Therefore the Sage ~ Clasps the Primal Unity, ~ Testing by it everything under heaven. ~ He does not show himself; therefore he is seen everywhere. ~ He does not define himself, therefore he is distinct. ~ He does not boast of what he will do, therefore he succeeds. ~ He is not proud of his work, and therefore it endures. ~ He does not contend, ~ And for that very reason no one under heaven can contend with him. ~ So then we see that the ancient saying "To remain whole, be twisted!" was no idle word; for true wholeness can only be achieved by return.

—[22c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ Stepping aside keeps one's wholeness intact. ~ Bending makes one straight. ~ Being empty makes one full. ~ Being worn out keeps one new. ~ Having little gives one access. ~ Having much leads one astray. ~ In this way, the sage embraces the One and becomes a model for all under Heaven. ~ He does not flaunt himself, thus he shines. ~ He does not insist that he is right, thus his rightness is manifest. ~ He does not boast about himself, thus his merit is acknowledged. ~ He avoids self-importance, thus he long endures. ~ It is because he does not contend that none among all under Heaven can contend with him. ~ As the ancient saying has it, "Stepping aside keeps one's wholeness intact." ~ How could this ever be an empty saying! ~ Truly, such a one will revert to it [nonexistence] with his wholeness intact.

—[22c19t] Lin Yutang ~ FUTILITY OF CONTENTION ~ To yield is to be preserved whole. ~ To be bent is to become straight. ~ To be hollow is to be filled. ~ To be tattered is to be renewed. ~ To be in want is to possess. ~ To have plenty is to be confused. ~ Therefore the Sage embraces the One, ~ And becomes the model of the world. ~ He does not reveal himself, ~ And is therefore luminous. ~ He does not justify himself, ~ And is therefore far-famed. ~ He does not boast of himself, ~ And therefore people give him credit. ~ He does not pride himself, ~ And is therefore the chief among men. ~ It is because he does not contend ~ That no one in the world can contend against him. ~ Is it not indeed true, as the ancients say, ~ "To yield is to be preserved whole?" ~ Thus he is preserved and the world does him homage.

—[22c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ If it ~ Is bent, it will be preserved intact; ~ Is crooked, it will be straightened; ~ Is sunken, it will be filled; ~ Is worn-out, it will be renewed; ~ Has little, it will gain; ~ Has much, it will be confused. ~ For these reasons, ~ The sage holds on to unity and serves as the shepherd of all under heaven. ~ He is not self-absorbed, therefore he shines forth; ~ He is not self-revealing, therefore he is distinguished; ~ He is not self-assertive, therefore he has merit; ~ He does not praise himself, therefore he is long-lasting. ~

Now, ~ Simply because he does not compete, ~ No one can compete with him. ~ The old saying about the bent being preserved intact is indeed close to the mark! ~ Truly, he shall be returned intact.

—[22c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ Yield and overcome; ~ bend and be straight. ~ Empty out and be full; ~ wear out and be renewed. ~ Have little and gain; ~ have much and be confused. ~ Therefore, ~ the True Person embraces the One and becomes a model for all. ~ Do not look only at yourself, ~ and you will see much. ~ Do not justify yourself, ~ and you will be distinguished. ~ Do not brag, ~ and you will have merit. ~ Do not be prideful, ~ and your work will endure. ~ It is because you do not strive ~ that no one under heaven can strive with you. ~ The saying of the Old Ones, "Yield and Overcome," is not an empty phrase. ~ True wholeness is achieved by blending with life.

—[22c22t] David H. Li ~ Accommodate and be whole, bend and be straight; ~ Keep low and be fulfilled, replace old and be new; ~ Seek little and gain, seek plenty and be bewildered. ~ Thus, the sage embraces One to set an example for the people of the world. ~ Not self-touting, one shines; ~ Not self-justifying, one reassures; ~ Not self-aggrandizing, one accomplishes; ~ Not self-serving, one endures. ~ When one is not in competition, people in the world cannot engage him/her in competition. ~ Is the old saying "Accommodate and be whole" but empty words? ~ It can be realized fully.

—[22c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ To yield is to prevail; ~ To bend is to straighten; ~ To be hollow is to be full; ~ To die is to regenerate. ~ To have little is to receive much; ~ To have much is to be confused. ~ Wherefore, ~ The sage embraces the complementary oneness of existence, ~ And sets an exemplary pattern for the rest of the world. ~ He does not display his ability, ~ Therefore his being shines forth. ~ He is not self-righteous, ~ Therefore he becomes distinguished. ~ He does not take credit, ~ Therefore he becomes recognized. ~ He is not self-important, ~ Therefore he is made a leader. ~ He does not contend with the world, ~ Therefore the world does not contend with him. ~ The old admonition that "to yield is to prevail" is not an empty adage. ~ Truly, to yield is to prevail, and in prevailing, one returns to oneness.

—[22c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ Be modest, and you will remain whole. ~ Be bent, and you will remain straight. ~ Be empty, and you will remain full. ~ Be worn out, and you will remain new. ~ The one who has little will receive. ~ The one who has a lot will be enslaved. ~ Therefore the sage guards the one, ~ And becomes a paradigm for the world. ~ He does not expose himself, therefore he shines. ~ He does not make a good name for himself, therefore he is known. ~ He does not praise himself, therefore he is dear to everyone. ~ He does not glorify himself, therefore his name is on everyone's lips. ~ And since he does not compete at all, ~ There is no one in the world who can compete with him. ~ The ancient ones said: ~ Be modest, and you will remain whole. ~ Can these be meaningless words? ~ Indeed, he will return home whole.

—[22c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ Learn to yield and be soft ~ If you want to survive. ~ Learn to bow ~ And you will stand in your full height. ~ Learn to empty yourself ~ and be filled by the Tao ~ ... the way a valley empties itself into a river. ~ Use up all you are ~ And then you can be made new. ~ Learn to have nothing ~ And you will have everything. ~ Sages always act like this, and are ~ Children of the Tao. ~ Never trying to impress, their being shines forth ~ Never saying 'this is it', people see what the truth is - ~ Never boasting, they leave the space they can be valued in ~ And never claiming to be who they are, people can see them ~ And since they never argue, no one argues with them either ... ~ So the ancient ones say 'Bend, and you will rule'. ~ Is this a lie? ~ You'll find it is true. ~ Be true to yourself, and all will go well with you.

—[22c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ Bow down and you are preserved; ~ Bend and you can be straight; ~ Hollow, then full; ~ Worn, then new; ~ Seek a little and you get a lot; ~ Seek a lot and you get perplexed. ~ Thus the sage adheres to this One principle (Tao) ~ And regards it as the pattern of all things. ~ Show off yourself not and you become conspicuous; ~ Regard yourself not as infallible and you become illustrious; ~ Brag about yourself not and you gain achievement; ~ Boast of yourself not and you become a head. ~ One does not contend with others, ~ So nobody in the world can win him in contention. ~ The ancients' saying "Bow down and you are preserved" ~ Is surely not an empty saying, ~ Which can be really proved effective. —[22c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ The tortured will seek for the snug. ~ The bent will seek for the straight. ~ The hollow will seek for the full. ~ The worn will seek for the new. ~ The minor will seek for the major. ~ The affluent will seek for the perplexed. ~ Therefore the virtuous man considers unity as the only model for the world. ~ He does not flaunt himself, therefore he is brilliant. ~ He does not consider himself right, therefore he is incontestable. ~ He does not require his fame, therefore he is meritorious. ~ He does not stick to his own knowledge, therefore he grows. ~ Only because he does not fight can no one under Heaven fight with him. ~ The ancient saying 'The tortured will be made snug' is very well put. ~ It truly enables one to preserve the unity.

—[22c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ What is adaptable can remain whole. ~ What is bendable can be straight. ~ What is empty can be replenished. ~ What is used can be renewed. ~ One is satisfied when one gets barely enough. ~ One is overburdened when one gets too much. ~ Therefore, ~ The wise keeps the humblest life style ~ As a basic model for the world. ~ Unoccupied with one's own views, one is objective. ~ Unoccupied with one's own merits, one is recommended. ~ Unoccupied with one's own deeds, one is successful. ~ Unoccupied with one's own superiority, one is obeyed. ~ One gets the most if one gets nothing for one's self. ~ The old saying about flexibility holds true. ~ One sticks to it heart and soul, and it will work.

—[22c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ Futility of Contention ~ Lao Tze says, ~ Be bendable, you will assure wholeness. ~ Be wronged, you will be proven right. ~ Be empty, you will be filled. ~ Be worn out, you will be renewed. ~ The scanty deserves to gain. ~ The superfluous becomes lost. ~ Thus the sage insists on recommending the true one for the world to model after. ~ A man sees clearly, because he doesn't claim self-righteousness. ~ A man gets credit because he doesn't boast his merit. ~ A man has longevity because he doesn't claim importance. ~ Therefore I say that whosoever gives up a contest, there will be no one who can compete with him. ~ The ancient epigram goes like this: ~ Be bendable, you will assure the wholeness. ~ Is this an airy saying? ~ Actually, this saying has already preserved many men.

—[22c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ 'Be humble, and you will remain entire.' ~ Be bent, and you will remain straight. ~ Be vacant, and you will remain full. ~ Be worn, and you will remain new. ~ He who has little will receive. ~ He who has much will be embarrassed. ~ Therefore the Sage keeps to One and becomes the standard for the world. ~ He does not display himself; therefore he shines. ~ He does not approve himself; therefore he is noted. ~ He does not praise himself; therefore he has merit. ~ He does not glory in himself; therefore he excels. ~ And because he does not compete; therefore no one in the world can compete with him. ~ The ancient saying 'Be humble and you will remain entire' ~ Can this be regarded as mere empty words? ~ Indeed he shall return home entire.

—[22c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ To yield is to have the whole. ~ To be crooked is to be straightened. ~ To be hollow is to be filled. ~ To be worn out is to be renewed. ~ To have a little is to get more. ~ To have a lot is to be confused. ~ Therefore the Sage sets an example for the world ~ By embracing the One. ~ By not insisting on his view, he may become enlightened. ~ By not being self-righteous, he may become illustrious. ~ By not boasting, he may receive credit. ~ By not being arrogant, he may last long. ~ And just because he does not compete, the entire world cannot compete with him. ~ The Ancients say: "to yield is to have the whole." ~ Are these merely words? ~ Truly the whole will return to him.

—[22c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ "Bent - then mature." ~ Compromised - then upright, ~ Empty - then solid, ~ old and spent - then young and sprightly. ~ A little - then a gain, ~ a lot - then confusing. ~ And so the Wise Person: ~ Embraces The One Thing, ~ and becomes the Shepherd of the World. ~ He does not show off, so he shines; ~ he does not promote himself, so he becomes famous; ~ he does not boast of himself, so he gets the credit; ~ he does not glorify himself, so he becomes leader. ~ He just does not contend ~ and so no one can contend with him. ~ What the ancients said: "bent - then mature", ~ is this an empty saying? ~ This is true maturity, turn back to it.

—[22c33t] Cheng Lin ~ The imperfect becomes perfect. ~ The old becomes new. ~ The crooked becomes straight. ~ The empty becomes full. ~ Loss means gain. ~ Plenitude means confusion. ~ Wherefore, the Sage holds fast to Truth and thereby sets an example for the world. ~ Because he is not self-complacent, he becomes enlightened. ~ Because he is not self-important, he becomes illustrious. ~ Because he is not self-conceited, he becomes successful. ~ Because he is not self-assertive, he becomes supreme. ~ Because he himself does not strive for superiority, there is none in the world who can contend with his superiority. ~ There is an old saying: ~ "The imperfect becomes perfect." ~ How true are these words! ~ In order to revert to the whole, one must abide by what is normal and natural.

—[22c34t] Yi Wu ~ To bend is to be whole. ~ To crook is to be straightened. ~ To be hollow is to be filled. ~ To be worn out is to be renewed. ~ To have little is to gain more. ~ To wish for more is to be confused. ~ Therefore, the sage embraces oneness to become the pattern for the world. ~ By not being self-opinionated, he becomes enlightened. ~ By not being self-righteous, he becomes manifest. ~ By not being self-glorified, he has merit. ~ By not being self-satisfied, he develops well. ~ He alone does not compete with anyone; ~ so, no one can compete with him. ~ Is the ancient saying, "To bend is to be whole", an idle word? ~ Truly, the whole will return to him.

—[22c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ To preserve your life, you have to be pliable. ~ That which is bent will soon be straightened. ~ The lowest ground will be filled by water. ~ Old and tattered things will soon be replaced. ~ To gain real insights, you must be focused. ~ Dealing with too many things concurrently can only lead to confusion. ~ The sage embraces the essence of Dao. ~ He thus sets an example for others to follow. ~ Not trying to be prominent is why he is famous. ~ Not pretending to be a know-all is why he is distinguished. ~ Not wanting to claim credit is why he is acclaimed. ~ Not bragging about his ability is why he has advanced. ~ Because he is not contending, no one can compete with him. ~ The ancient saying that to be pliable is to preserve oneself is not just empty rhetoric. ~ It is through following the way of Dao that self-preservation is assured.

—[22c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ The yielding are preserved whole. ~ The crooked become straight. ~ The empty become filled. ~ The depleted are renewed. ~ What has little will gain. ~ What has much will become confused. ~ Therefore, one with a whole mind holds fast to the one essence and thereby becomes an example to the rest of the world. ~ Because he does not flaunt his brightness, ~ he becomes enlightened. ~ Because he is not self-important, ~ he becomes illustrious. ~ Because he does not boast of his accomplishments, ~ he becomes successful. ~ Because he is not self-assertive, ~ he becomes supreme. ~ Because he does not strive for superiority, ~ there is no one in the world who can contend with his superiority. ~ Indeed, the ancient teaching that "the yielding are preserved whole" is no empty saying. ~ Truly, they are preserved whole in order to attain one universal life.

—[22c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ To bend is to maintain integrity. ~ To deviate is to be direct. ~ To be concave is to be convex. ~ To be exhausted is to be rejuvenated. ~ To be wanting is to be endowed. ~ To have much is to be deprived. ~ Therefore, the wise identifies opposites as one, ~ And sets an example for the world. ~ He remains in concealment and spontaneously is unconcealed. ~ He does not assert himself, therefore he is eminent. ~ He does not claim credit, therefore he receives credit. ~ He is not vain, therefore he is the best. ~ Because he does not oppose anyone in the world, no one can oppose him. ~ Thus, the ancient saying "to bend is to maintain integrity" is the word of truth. ~ Indeed, integrity is attributed to this. ~ Through no words, ~ It takes place by itself.

—[22c38t] Henry Wei ~ Strength to the Humble ~ I Ch'ien ~ To be crooked is to become perfect; ~ To be bent is to become straight; ~ To be hollow is to become full; ~ To be worn out is to be renewed; ~ To have little is to receive more; ~ To have plenty is to be perplexed. ~ Therefore, the Sage embraces the One, ~ And serves as model for the world. ~ As he does not like to show off, he is enlightened; ~ As he is not prone to be self-righteous, he is distinguished; ~ As he does not blow his own horn, he acquires merit; ~ As he does not extol himself, he is fit to be a leader. ~ And it is precisely because he does not contend, ~ That no one under heaven can contend with him. ~ The ancient saying "To be crooked is to become perfect" ~ Surely is not an empty remark. ~ The world goes to him who is truly perfect.

—[22c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ To yield is to remain whole; ~ To bend is to get up straight; ~ To be hollow is to be full; ~ To decay is to renew; ~ To be small is to gain; ~ To have many is to be perplexed. ~ Therefore the sage, ~ Embracing the One, becomes the model for all under Heaven. ~ He does not show himself, therefore his presence is bright. ~ He does not claim to be right, therefore his virtue shines. ~ He is not boastful of his act, therefore his merit is great. ~ He is not conceited, therefore he is long-lasting. ~ Only because he does not contend, ~ No one under Heaven can contend with him. ~ Can the old saying "To yield is to remain whole" ~ Be an empty phrase? ~ Truly, he remains whole, and the world returns to him.

—[22c40t] Tao Huang ~ Yield, and retain integrity. ~ In the depths of whirling, there is stillness. ~ The hollow enables the plentiful. ~ The old gives way to the new. ~ The small allows for increase. ~ Excess breeds confusion. ~ Therefore the sage holds oneness as the shepherd of the world. ~ He who does not display himself is seen. ~ He who does not justify himself is understood. ~ He who does not lash out succeeds. ~ He who does not build himself up endures. ~ Therefore, ~ Only the spirit of noncompetition makes things noncompetitive. ~ So the old saying, "yield, and retain integrity," is but a few words, ~ But when rightly understood, integrity returns.

—[22c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ Through tolerance can perfection be attained. ~ By "indirect way" can "direct way" be reached. ~ Through lowness can highness be maintained. ~ Through old fashion can new fashion be created. ~ By "have less" can "have more" be possible. ~ By having plenty only confusion will result. ~ Hence one who does not show off is enlightened. ~ One who does not boast of himself has merit. ~ One who does not claim credit for himself is popular. ~ One who does not brandish his success thus leads all. ~ Because of non-struggle, therefore there is nothing under heaven which can struggle with him. ~ The ancient saying: ~ "Through tolerance can perfection be attained." ~ Is it an empty talk? ~ Thus, if one attains perfection everything under heaven will follow him.

—[22c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ To yield is to be preserved whole. ~ To be bent is to become straight. ~ To be empty is to be full. ~ To be worn out is to be renewed. ~ To have little is to possess. ~ To have plenty is to be perplexed. ~ Therefore the sage embraces the One ~ And becomes the model of the world. ~ He does not show himself, therefore he is luminous. ~ He does not justify himself, therefore he becomes prominent. ~ He does not boast of himself, therefore he is given credit. ~ He does not brag, therefore he can endure for long. ~ It is precisely because he does not compete that the world cannot compete with him. ~ Is the ancient saying, "To yield is to be preserved whole," empty words? ~ Truly he will be preserved and (prominence and credit) will come to him.

—[22c91t] И. И. Семененко ~ Изогнутое цело, ~ кривое прямо, ~ пустое полно, ~ ветхое ново, ~ в малом обретают, ~ при многом заблуждаются. ~ Поэтому Премудрый человек держит в объятиях единое и в этом выступает образцом для Поднебесной. ~ Себя не видит и поэтому находится в просвете; ~ не считает себя правым и поэтому заметен; ~ не хвастается и поэтому заслужен; ~ не зазнается и поэтому всех старше. ~ Он не соперничает и поэтому никто не может с ним соперничать. ~ Разве не имеют смысла сказанные в древности слова о том, что изогнутое цело? ~ К истинно целому и возвращаются.

—[22с92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Склоняясь, сохраняем целостность. ~ Сгибаемся, затем распрямляемся. ~ Опустошаемся, затем наполняемся. ~ Стареем, чтобы потом обновиться. ~ Уменьшаем, дабы затем достичь завершения. ~ Увеличиваем - и становимся жертвой заблуждения. ~ Таким образом, мудрецы объемлели Единое, делая его принципом Поднебесной; ~ не показывали себя и потому были разумны; ~ не считали себя правыми, потому их правота была очевидна; ~ не превозносили себя, потому достигали успеха; ~ не хвастали, потому могли прожить долго. ~ И лишь потому, что они ни с кем не соперничали, никто в Поднебесной не мог соперничать с ними. ~ Фраза древних: "Склоняясь, сохраняем целостность", - разве это пустые слова? ~ Достигший целостности, вернется к этому.

—[22с93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Если нечто ущербно, то оно обретет целостность. ~ Если нечто согнуто, то оно выпрямится. ~ Если нечто пусто, то оно наполнится. ~ Если нечто одряхлело, то оно обновится. ~ Если чего-то недостаток, то будет прибавлено, ~ Если что-то в избытке, то наступит смятение. ~ Поэтому совершенный мудрец объемлет Одно и становится образцом для Поднебесной. ~ Он не поглощен сам собой и потому умудренно-просветлен. ~ Он не превозносит сам себя и потому прославлен. ~ Он сам ни на кого не нападает и потому свершает подвиги. ~ Он не занимается самовосхвалением и потому долговечен. ~ Ведь поскольку он не враждует ни с кем, с ним также никто не враждует. ~ Древние говорили: "Если нечто ущербно, то оно обретет целостность", - разве это пустые слова? ~ Когда целостность удастся обрести, существо возвращается к этому Дао-Пути.

—[22с94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Если есть ущербное, то есть и целостное. ~ Если есть кривое, то есть и прямое. ~ Если есть пустое, то есть и полное. ~ Если есть старое, то есть и новое. ~ Если есть недостаток, то есть и достаток, ~ Если есть большее, то есть и меньшее. ~ Вот почему совершенномудрый человек берет одно-единое за образец для Поднебесной. ~ Не выставляет себя эрудитом, поэтому просветлен. ~ Не считает себя правым, поэтому просвещен. ~ Не прославляет себя, поэтому доблестен. ~ Не восхваляет себя, поэтому главенствует. ~ Поскольку не соперничает, постольку и в Поднебесной нет таких, кто мог бы с ним соперничать. ~ В древности говорили: "Если есть ущербное, то есть и целостное". ~ Разве это пустые слова! ~ Поэтому искренне приемли совершенную целостность и возвращайся к ней.

—[22с95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ В древности говорили: ~ "Ущербное становится совершенным, ~ кривое - прямым, ~ пустое - наполненным, ~ ветхое сменяется новым; ~ стремясь к малому, достигаешь многого; ~ стремление получить многое ведет к заблуждениям". ~ Поэтому совершенномудрый внемлет этому поучению, коему необходимо следовать в Поднебесной. ~ Совершенномудрый исходит не только из того, что сам видит, поэтому может видеть ясно; ~ он не считает правым только себя, поэтому может обладать истиной; ~ он не прославляет себя, поэтому имеет заслуженную славу; ~ он не возвышает себя, поэтому он старший среди других. ~ Он ничему не противоборствует, поэтому он непобедим в Поднебесной. ~ Слова древних: "Ущербное становится совершенным..." - разве это пустые слова? ~ Они действительно указывают человеку путь к [истинному] совершенству.

—[22c96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Из несовершенного происходит цельное. ~ Из кривого - прямое. ~ Из углубленного - гладкое. ~ Из старого - новое. ~ Если не много, то легко приобрести, а если много, то легко запутаться. ~ Поэтому святой муж имеет только одно, но он делается примером для всего мира. ~ Он открыто не объявляет своих мыслей, поэтому он никогда не заблуждается (ясен). ~ Он никогда не выставляет себя, поэтому он всегда известен. ~ Он сам никогда не воюет, поэтому имеет заслуги. ~ Ничем он не гордится, поэтому он превозносится. ~ Ни с кем он не ссорится, поэтому вся вселенная никогда не сопротивляется ему. ~ Отсюда высказанные древними слова "из несовершенного происходит совершенное, из кривого - прямое" можно ли назвать живым изречением?

—[22c97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Что скривилось - тому быть целым. ~ Что согнулось - тому быть прямым. ~ Порожнему - быть полным. ~ Ветхому - новым быть. ~ Кто имеет мало, получит много. ~ Кто имеет много, тот слеп. ~ Вот почему премудрый держится за Единое ~ И так становится мерилем мира. ~ Не имеет "своего взгляда" и потому просветлен. ~ Не имеет "своего мнения" и потому всем светит. ~ Не рвется вперед и потому имеет заслуги. ~ Не хвалит себя и потому живет долго. ~ Он ни с кем не соперничает, и никто в мире не соперничает с ним. ~ Поговорка древних: "Кривому - быть целым" разве пустые слова? ~ Быть воистину целым только ему дано.

—[22c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ От ущербности проходят к целостности. ~ От кривды приходят к правде. ~ От пустоты приходят к наполненности. ~ От ветхости приходят к новому. ~ От уменьшения происходит обретение. ~ От умножения происходят сомнения. ~ Это дает: ~ Человек мудрости, охватывая единое, становится моделью Поднебесной. ~ Не выставляет себя, потому ясен. ~ Не утверждает себя, потому четок. ~ Не гордится собой, потому имеет заслуги. ~ Не превозносит себя, потому существует долго. ~ И именно потому, что не соперничает, поэтому никто в Поднебесной не способен вступить с ним в отношения соперничества. ~ Разве древнее высказывание: "От ущербности приходят к целостности" - это пустые слова? ~ Ведь все сходится в том, кто обладает действительной целостностью.

—[23c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ To rarely speak - such is [the way of] Nature. ~ Fierce winds don't last the whole morning; ~ Torrential rains don't last the whole day. ~ Who makes these things? ~ If even Heaven and Earth can't make these last long - ~ How much the more is this true for man?! ~ Therefore, one who devotes himself to the Way is one with the Way; ~ One who [devotes himself to] Virtue is one with that Virtue; ~ And one who [devotes himself to] losing is one with that loss. ~ To the one who is one with Virtue, the Way also gives Virtue; ~ While for the one who is one with his loss, the Way also disregards him.

—[23c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ ONLY simple and quiet words will ripen of themselves. ~ For a whirlwind does not last a whole morning, ~ Nor does a sudden shower last a whole day. ~ Who is their author? Heaven-and-Earth! ~ Even Heaven-and-Earth cannot make such violent things last long; ~ How much truer is it of the rash endeavours of men? ~ Hence, he who cultivates the Tao is one with the Tao; ~ He who practices Virtue is one with Virtue; ~ And he who courts after Loss is one with Loss. ~ To be one with the Tao is to be a welcome accession to the Tao; ~ To be one with Virtue is to be a welcome accession to Virtue; ~ To be one with Loss is to be a welcome accession to Loss. ~ Deficiency of faith on your part ~ Entails faithlessness on the part of others.

—[23c03t] D. C. Lau ~ To use words but rarely ~ Is to be natural. ~ Hence a gusty wind cannot last all morning, and a sudden downpour cannot last all day. ~ Who is it that produces these? Heaven and earth. ~ If even heaven and earth cannot go on for ever, much less can man. ~ That is why one follows the way. ~ A man of the way conforms to the way; ~ A man of virtue conforms to virtue; ~ A man of loss conforms to loss. ~ He who conforms to the way is gladly accepted by the way; ~ He who conforms to virtue is gladly accepted by virtue; ~ He who conforms to loss is gladly accepted by loss. ~ When there is not enough faith, there is lack of good faith.

—[23c04t] R. L. Wing ~ Nature rarely speaks. ~ Hence the whirlwind does not last a whole morning, ~ Nor the sudden rainstorm last a whole day. ~ What causes these? ~ Heaven and Earth. ~ If Heaven and Earth cannot make them long lasting, ~ How much less so can humans? ~ Thus, those who cultivate the Tao ~ Identify with the Tao. ~ Those who cultivate Power ~ Identify with Power. ~ Those who cultivate failure ~ Identify with failure. ~ Those who identify with the Tao ~ Are likewise welcomed by the Tao. ~ Those who identify with Power ~ Are likewise welcomed by Power. ~ Those who identify with failure ~ Are likewise welcomed by failure. ~ Those who lack belief ~ Will not in turn be believed.

—[23c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ Saying few words fits in with Nature. ~ Therefore a whirlwind does not last a whole morning, ~ Nor does a rainstorm last a whole day. ~ Whoever makes them like this? ~ It is Heaven and Earth. ~ If (the fierce force of) Heaven and Earth cannot last long, ~ How much less man? ~ Therefore he who follows Tao (should know:) ~ The seeker of Tao is identified with Tao, ~ The seeker of De is identified with De, ~ He who seeks the loss (of Tao) is identified with loss. ~ He who is identified with Tao - ~ Tao is also happy to have him. ~ He who is identified with De - ~ De is also happy to have him. ~ He who is identified with the loss - ~ The loss is also happy to have him. ~ Only when one has no faith will faithless events take place.

—[23c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ To talk little is natural. ~ High winds do not last all morning. ~ Heavy rain does not last all day. ~ Why is this? Heaven and earth! ~ If heaven and earth cannot make things eternal, ~ How is it possible for man? ~ He who follows the Tao ~ Is at one with the Tao. ~ He who is virtuous ~ Experiences Virtue. ~ He who loses the way ~ Feels lost. ~ When you are at one with the Tao, ~ The Tao welcomes you. ~ When you are at one with Virtue, ~ The Virtue is always there. ~ When you are at one with loss, ~ The loss is experienced willingly. ~ He who does not trust enough ~ Will not be trusted.

—[23c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ To live with sparse words is to live with nature. ~ Occasional winds and showers will not last through the day. ~ Who is responsible for this result? ~ Heaven and earth. ~ Even heaven and earth take breaks. ~ So certainly should men. ~ (Why should anyone then talk too much?) ~ (Rather than just talk) ~ Those who follow the way will find the way. ~ Those who live virtuously will have a virtuous life. ~ Those who live not seeking the way will lose the way. ~ For those who seek the way, the way will seek them out. ~ For those who seek virtue, virtue will seek them out. ~ For those who do not find the way, ~ The way will not find them either. ~ Some people do not believe adequately. ~ Some people do not believe at all.

—[23c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ Talking little is the way of nature. ~ A blustering wind cannot last a whole morning; ~ A downpour cannot last a whole day. ~ Who can control this? Only nature. ~ Even nature cannot make a storm last long, so how can people? ~ Therefore, one who believes in the DAO receives the DAO, ~ One who pursues the DE has the DE, ~ One who does not believe in anything is lost. ~ The one who gets the DAO will receive the blessings of the DAO, ~ The one who has the DE will receive the blessings of the DE, ~ The one who is lost will receive nothing. ~ If you do not have faith in the DAO, the DAO will not have faith in you.

—[23c09t] Walter Gorn Old, NON-IDENTIFICATION ~ Moderate your speech, and preserve yourself. ~ A hurricane will not outlast the morning, a heavy rain will not outlast the day. ~ Who have the power to make these things but Heaven and Earth? ~ And if Heaven and Earth cannot continue them long, how shall a man do so? ~ If a man accords with Tao in all things, he is identified with Tao by that agreement. ~ A virtuous man is identified with virtue, a vicious man is identified with vice. ~ Whoever is identified with Tao, him do the Taoists receive with gladness. ~ Whoever is identified with virtue, him do the virtuous receive with gladness. ~ But whoever is identified with vice, him do the vicious gladly serve with vice. ~ For wherever confidence is lacking, it is not met with trust.

—[23c10t] James Legge ~ Abstaining from speech marks him who is obeying the spontaneity of his nature. ~ A violent wind does not last for a whole morning; ~ a sudden rain does not last for the whole day. ~ To whom is it that these (two) things are owing? ~ To Heaven and Earth. ~ If Heaven and Earth cannot make such (spasmodic) actings last long, how much less can man! ~ Therefore when one is making the Tao his business, those who are also pursuing it, agree with him in it, and those who are making the manifestation of its course their object agree with him in that; ~ while even those who are failing in both these things agree with him where they fail. ~ Hence, those with whom he agrees as to the Tao have the happiness of attaining to it; ~ those with whom he agrees as to its manifestation have the happiness of attaining to it; ~ and those with whom he agrees in their failure have also the happiness of attaining (to the Tao). ~ (But) when there is not faith sufficient (on his part), a want of faith (in him) ensues (on the part of the others).

—[23c11t] David Hinton ~ Keeping words spare: occurrence appearing of itself. ~ Wild winds never last all morning ~ and fierce rains never last all day. ~ Who conjures such things if not heaven and earth, ~ and if heaven and earth can't make things last, ~ why should we humans try? ~ That's why masters devote themselves to Way. ~ To master Way is to become Way, ~ to master gain is to become gain, ~ to master loss is to become loss. ~ And whatever becomes Way, Way welcomes joyfully, ~ whatever becomes gain, gain welcomes joyfully, ~ whatever becomes loss, loss welcomes joyfully. ~ If you don't stand sincere by your words how sincere can the people be?

—[23c12t] Chichung Huang ~ Speechlessness conforms to the way things are. ~ A turbulent wind does not last a whole morning; ~ A torrential rain does not last a whole day. ~ Who does these? ~ Heaven and earth. ~ Even heaven and earth cannot last long, ~ How can man? ~ Therefore, he who pursues the Tao ~ Identifies with the Tao; ~ He who pursues virtue identifies with virtue; ~ He who pursues loss identifies with loss. ~ He who identifies with virtue - ~ The Tao, too, shall requite him with favor; ~ He who identifies with loss - ~ The Tao, too, shall requite him with loss.

—[23c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ Nature speaks (yen) little. ~ Hence a squall lasts not a whole morning, ~ A rainstorm continues not a whole day. ~ What causes (wei) these? ~ Heaven and earth. ~ Even [the actions of] heaven and earth do not last long, ~ How much less [the works] of humans? ~ Therefore one who follows Tao identifies with Tao, ~ One who follows te (nature) identifies with te (nature). ~ One who follows shih (loss) identifies with shih. ~ One who identifies with Tao is glad to be with Tao. ~ One who identifies with te is glad to be with te. ~ One who identifies with shih is glad to be with shih. ~ When you don't trust (hsin) (the people) enough, ~ Then they are untrustworthy (pu hsin).

—[23c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ Taciturnity is the way of Nature! ~ No whirlwind has lasted longer than the entire morning, ~ No thunderstorm has lasted longer than one full day; ~ These exemplifies that violence would not be sustained for a long period even by Nature, ~ How then can human [society] endure violence? ~ Accordingly: ~ People who are aspired to Tao shall associate with [people who are already on the path of questing for] Tao; ~ People who seek Te shall join [people who are committed to cultivating] Te; People who are losers [of Tao and Te] shall associate with losers; ~ People who are aspired to Tao shall be embraced by [people who are already on the path for] Tao; ~ People who seek Te shall be received warmly by [people who have already committed to pursuing] Te; ~ People who are lost will also be hailed by people of his kind, i.e. losers.

—[23c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ Few words fit Nature. ~ For a whirlwind does not last a whole morning, nor does a sudden shower last a whole day. ~ Who is their author? ~ Heaven and earth. ~ Even Heaven and earth cannot make their things last long; how is it possible for the works of men? ~ Hence, he who cultivates the Way is one with the Way; he who practices Virtue is one with Virtue; and he who loses the Way is one with Loss. ~ To be one with the Way: the Way welcomes it. ~ To be one with Virtue: Virtue welcomes it. ~ To be one with Loss: Loss welcomes it. ~ If it is not enough to get faith, there is no faith.

—[23c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ Preaching less conforms to the natural way. ~ A squall rarely lasts a whole morning. ~ A downpour rarely continues all the day. ~ Who makes the wind and rain? ~ It is the nature. ~ If the nature cannot have long-lasting stamina, how can people? ~ Therefore, those who follow Tao live with Tao. ~ Those who follow Te live with Te. ~ Those who follow nothing live with nothing. ~ Those who live with Tao are happy with Tao. ~ Those who live with Te are happy with Te. ~ Those who live with nothing abandon Tao. ~ There are people who are not whole-heartedly Tao-believer. ~ There are people who do not believe in Tao at all.

—[23c17t] Arthur Waley ~ To be always talking is against nature. ~ For the same reason a hurricane never lasts a whole morning, nor a rain-storm all day. ~ Who is it that makes the wind and rain? ~ It is Heaven-and-Earth. ~ And if even Heaven-and-Earth cannot blow or pour for long, how much less in his utterance should man? ~ Truly, ~ if one uses the Way as one's instrument, the results will be like the Way; ~ if one uses the 'power' as one's instrument, the results will be like the power; ~ if one uses what is the reverse of the 'power', the results will be the reverse of the 'power'. ~ For to those who have conformed themselves to the Way, the Way readily lends its power. ~ To those who have conformed themselves to the power, the power readily lends more power. ~ While to those who conform themselves to inefficacy, inefficacy readily lends its ineffectiveness. ~ 'It is by not believing in people that you turn them into liars'.

—[23c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ The "inaudible" is a way of referring to the Natural. ~ Thus a whirlwind does not last an entire morning, and a rainstorm does not last an entire day. ~ What is it that causes them? ~ It is Heaven and Earth. ~ If even Heaven and Earth cannot make them last long, how much less can man? ~ Thus, to undertake things in accordance with the Dao, the man of Dao becomes one with the Dao. ~ The man of virtue becomes one with virtue. ~ The man of failure becomes one with failure. ~ He who becomes one with virtue, the Dao also endows with virtue; ~ he who becomes one with failure, the Dao also endows with failure. ~ If one fails to have trust, a corresponding lack of trust in him occurs.

—[23c19t] Lin Yutang ~ IDENTIFICATION WITH TAO ~ Nature says few words: ~ Hence it is that a squall lasts not a whole morning, ~ A rainstorm continues not a whole day. ~ Where do they come from? ~ From Nature. ~ Even Nature does not last long (in its utterances), ~ How much less should human beings? ~ Therefore it is that: ~ He who follows the Tao is identified with the Tao. ~ He who follows Character (Teh) is identified with Character. ~ He who abandons (Tao) is identified with abandonment (of Tao). ~ He who is identified with Tao - ~ Tao is also glad to welcome him. ~ He who is identified with Character - ~ Character is also glad to welcome him. ~ He who is identified with abandonment - ~ Abandonment is also glad to welcome him. ~ He who has not enough faith ~ Will not be able to command faith from others.

—[23c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ To be sparing of speech is natural. ~ A whirlwind does not last the whole morning, ~ A downpour does not last the whole day. ~ Who causes them? ~ If even heaven and earth cannot cause them to persist, how much less can human beings? ~ Therefore, ~ In pursuing his affairs, ~ a man of the Way identifies with the Way, ~ a man of integrity identifies with integrity, ~ a man who fails identifies with failure. ~ To him who identifies with integrity, the Way awards integrity; ~ To him who identifies with failure, the Way awards failure.

—[23c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ To talk little is to follow nature. ~ A whirlwind does not last all morning. ~ A sudden shower does not last all day. ~ Who produces these things? ~ Heaven and earth! ~ Even heaven and earth cannot make wild things last long. ~ How then can people hope to do so? ~ People of the Tao ~ conform to the Tao. ~ People of Virtue ~ conform to Virtue. ~ People who lose the way ~ conform to the loss. ~ Those who conform to the Tao ~ are welcomed into the Tao. ~ Those who conform to Virtue ~ are welcomed into Virtue. ~ Those who conform to the loss ~ are welcomed into the loss. ~ Those who do not trust enough will not be trusted.

—[23c22t] David H. Li ~ To be reticent is natural. ~ Thus, a whirlwind does not last all morning, ~ a downpour does not last all day. ~ Why is this so? ~ Because this is the universe. ~ Even the universe cannot sustain; can humans? ~ Thus, one who follows Direction manages with Direction, ~ One who follows virtue manages with virtue, ~ One who does not follow Direction nor virtue manages with neither ~ Direction nor virtue. ~ One who manages with Direction is welcome by those with Direction, ~ One who manages with virtue is welcome by those with virtue, ~ One who manages with neither Direction nor virtue is welcome by those without Direction or virtue. ~ One lacking in trustworthiness loses [the populace's] trust.

—[23c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ To be silent is natural, for silence alone endures in Nature. ~ A whirlwind does not last the whole morning; ~ Nor does a downpour last the whole day. ~ Nature cannot make her commotion last; ~ Nor can human beings make their commotion last. ~ Therefore, in enduring silence, without commotion, ~ The master creates harmony with all humanity, ~ Sharing the experience of the Tao with those who embody the Tao; ~ Sharing the experience of virtue with those who practice virtue; ~ Sharing the experience of loss with those who lose virtue. ~ Thereby, in sharing the experience, ~ Those who embody the Tao enjoy his company; ~ Those who practice virtue enjoy his company; ~ Those who lose virtue enjoy his company. ~ The master is silent, for he knows the Tao and trusts the universe. ~ Therefore, be silent, then you will be enduring; ~ Trust, then you will be trusted.

—[23c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ It is natural to be frugal with words. ~ A gale will not blow for an entire morning; ~ Pelting rain will not fall for a whole day. ~ Who causes all those? ~ Heaven and earth. ~ If (the fruit of) heaven and earth cannot last forever, ~ How can man? ~ The person who follows the Tao, ~ Is identified with the Tao. ~ The person who adheres to virtue, ~ Is identified with virtue. ~ The person who adheres to vice, ~ Is identified with vice. ~ When a person follows the Tao, ~ The Tao looks kindly upon him. ~ When the person adheres to virtue, ~ Virtue welcomes him. ~ When the person adheres to vice, ~ Vice opens its door to him.

—[23c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ It is a natural thing to talk sparingly. ~ And surely, this is right - because even a great wind and lashing rain do not go on forever. ~ It is naturally so. ~ Both Heaven and Earth know it. ~ And if neither can hold on to such an outpouring for long what makes people think they can? ~ If you follow the Tao, ~ all you do will belong to it. ~ If you act with Virtue, ~ all you do will have its power. ~ If you lose these - ~ then every way you will be lost. ~ If you go the Way of Tao, it can only be with you. ~ If you go the Way of Virtue, its purity will sustain you. ~ But if you go the way of loss, then that will be your name; ~ And if you cannot trust, no one will trust you.

—[23c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ To be taciturn is in accordance with nature, ~ So much as a wanton wind ~ Does not last all morning, ~ And a sudden rain does not last all day. ~ Who makes it? ~ Heaven and earth. ~ If heaven and earth cannot make it last long, ~ How can man? ~ So a man of Tao conforms to the Tao; ~ A man of Teh to the Teh; ~ A man of having neither to the principle of losing both above. ~ He who conforms to the Tao is readily received by the Tao; ~ He who conforms to the Teh is readily received by the Teh; ~ He who conforms to the principle of losing both above is readily discarded by the principle of loss. ~ The lack of faith on the part of the ruler ~ Leads to the lack of confidence in him on the part of the people. —[23c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ Nature speaks rarely. ~ A stormy wind cannot blow for the whole morning, a passing heavy shower cannot fall for the whole day. ~ Even Heaven and Earth cannot show their sudden power for ever - much less can men. ~ That is the reason why one who follows the Tao ~ accords the Tao with the Tao, ~ accords the virtue with the virtue, ~ accords the loss with the loss. ~ He who accords with the Tao is gladly accepted by the Tao. ~ He who accords with the virtue is gladly accepted by the virtue. ~ He who accords with the loss is gladly accepted by the loss. ~ When there isn't enough faith from he who leads the people, the people who follow him will not have good faith.

—[23c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ The ruler by nature says few words. ~ A sudden wind cannot last the whole morning. ~ A sudden rain cannot last the whole day. ~ Who produces them? ~ Heaven and Earth. ~ Since even Heaven and Earth cannot start a lasting cause, ~ How can mankind achieve that? ~ Therefore, ~ Those choosing the Way identify themselves with the Way, ~ Those choosing uses identify themselves with using, ~ And those choosing losses identify themselves with losing. ~ One identified with the Way is gladly provided by the Way. ~ One identified with using is gladly provided with uses. ~ One identified with losing suffers from the loss of the Way. ~ One who does not believe will find one's self not believed.

—[23c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ Be Less, This Is The Spontaneous Rule ~ Lao Tze says, ~ Be less, this is the spontaneous rule. ~ Hence a gusty wind does not persist through all morning. ~ A sudden downpour does not persist through a whole day. ~ Who makes them so? ~ The Heaven and the Earth. ~ Even the Heaven and the Earth don't like to perform a long work, what more can be expected from men? ~ Thus, ~ Whoever devotes himself to the Tao will know the Tao's essence. ~ Whoever devotes himself to the Teh will know the Teh's essence. ~ Whoever devotes to the loss will know the loss's essence. ~ Whoever matches the Tao's essence will find pleasure in the Tao. ~ Whoever matches the Teh's essence will find pleasure in the Teh. ~ Whoever matches the loss will find pleasure in the loss. ~ Those men who can't believe what I said already have disbelieving hearts.

—[23c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ To be sparing of words is natural. ~ A violent wind cannot last a whole morning; pelting rain cannot last a whole day. ~ Who have made these things but heaven and earth? ~ Inasmuch as heaven and earth cannot last for ever, how can man? ~ He who engages himself in Tao is identified with Tao. ~ He who engages himself in virtue is identified with virtue. ~ He who engages himself in abandonment is identified with abandonment. ~ Identified with Tao he will be well received by Tao. ~ Identified with virtue he will be well received by virtue. ~ Identified with abandonment he will be well received by abandonment.

—[23c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ To spare words is to be natural. ~ Therefore a whirlwind does not last all morning, ~ And a sudden shower does not last all day. ~ Who causes this? ~ Heaven and earth. ~ If even Heaven and earth cannot last long, ~ What can man do? ~ Therefore one dealing with Tao will resemble Tao. ~ Dealing with virtue, one will resemble virtue. ~ Dealing with loss, one will resemble loss. ~ If one resembles Tao, Tao is pleased to accept him. ~ If one resembles virtue, virtue is pleased to accept him. ~ If one resembles loss, loss is also pleased to accept him. ~ By not having enough credibility, ~ One will not be trusted [by others].

—[23c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ Speaking little is what is natural. ~ Yes: ~ A whirlwind does not blow a whole morning, ~ a downpour does not fall a whole day. ~ And who causes these things? ~ Heaven and Earth. ~ If even Heaven and Earth cannot make things last very long, ~ how much less can man. ~ Yes: ~ One devoted to Tao: ~ Is a Tao man, merges with Tao; ~ is a Te man, merges with Te; ~ is a man left out, merges with What Is Left Out. ~ One who merges with Tao, Tao welcomes him; ~ one who merges with Te, Te welcomes him; ~ one who merges with What Is Left Out, What Is Left Out welcomes him. ~ When sincerity does not suffice, ~ it was not sincerity.

—[23c33t] Cheng Lin ~ Boisterous gales do not continue unabated from morn till eve. ~ Torrential rainfalls do not continue unabated throughout the day and night. ~ Who is it that produces these phenomena? ~ Heaven and earth. ~ Since these phenomena cannot last for ever, how much less can the work of man! ~ Those who follow the way of Truth will meet in Truth. ~ Those who follow the way of virtue will meet in virtue. ~ Those who follow the way of Heaven will meet in Heaven. ~ Those who meet in Truth become one with Truth, and they rejoice in it. ~ Those who meet in virtue become virtuous, and they rejoice in it. ~ Those who meet in Heaven become heavenly, and they rejoice in it.

—[23c34t] Yi Wu ~ Nature rarely speaks. ~ So, a whirlwind does not last all morning, ~ Nor does a sudden shower last the whole day. ~ Who causes these? Heaven and earth. ~ If what Heaven and earth do cannot last long, ~ What can man do? ~ Therefore, one who follows the Way is in accord with the Way. ~ One who practices virtue is in accord with virtue. ~ One who loses is in accord with loss. ~ To be in accord with the Way is to be accepted gladly by the Way. ~ To be in accord with virtue is to be accepted gladly by virtue. ~ To be in accord with loss is to be accepted gladly by loss. ~ When a man is not sincere enough ~ He will not be trusted.

—[23c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ To be reticent is consistent with the law of nature. ~ Usually the hurricane does not last more than half a day. ~ And torrential rain does not pour for a whole day. ~ The wind and rain are the result of the forces of nature. ~ Even the forces of nature do not endure for long, ~ So how can human efforts ever match that of nature? ~ Those devoted to Dao will follow Dao, and those devoted to De will follow De. ~ On the contrary, those who go against Dao will manifest it in their behaviours. ~ Following the path of Dao, Dao is glad to accept you. ~ Following the path of De, De is pleased to welcome you. ~ Following the alternative path, the alternative entity is also happy to receive you. ~ If the people in power have no credibility, then the ordinary people will not trust them.

—[23c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ The utterance of the universal subtle law is too loud to be audible. ~ Look at this: a squall does not last the whole morning, nor does a torrential shower last the whole day. ~ What determines this? ~ Even Nature cannot make such violence last for long. ~ How long, then, can the violent actions of human beings last? ~ Hence, one who follows gentleness becomes one with universal truth. ~ One who follows wholeness becomes one with universal virtue. ~ One who separates himself from universal nature and from universal virtue becomes separate and lost. ~ When one is one with universal nature, ~ universal nature is one with him. ~ When one is one with universal virtue, ~ universal virtue is one with him. ~ When one deviates from universal nature, ~ deviation keeps him from universal nature. ~ If one does not know and believe that the subtle law manifests in his own life, ~ how can he have faith that it pervades the entire universe?

—[23c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ Nature rarely expresses itself in words. ~ When a hurricane occurs, it does not last all morning. ~ Neither does a heavy shower last the whole day. ~ These are actions of heaven and earth. ~ Thus, even heaven and earth cannot maintain their actions for long. ~ How can man? ~ Therefore, the learner of Tao identifies with Tao. ~ When one achieves it, one identifies with one's achievement. ~ When one loses it, one identifies with one's losing. ~ When man identifies with achievement, achievement also willingly identifies with man. ~ When man identifies with losing, losing willingly identifies with man. ~ If one does not believe enough in this identity, then it will not take place.

—[23c38t] Henry Wei ~ Emptiness and Non-Being ~ Hsu Wu ~ Nature is brief in its speech. ~ Thus a tempest does not last a whole morning, ~ Nor does a rainstorm last a whole day. ~ What is it that causes the wind and rain? ~ It is Heaven and Earth. ~ Even Heaven and Earth cannot be long in their outbursts. ~ How much the less can man in his! ~ Therefore, in the pursuit of Tao, ~ Those tending toward Tao will identify with Tao; ~ Those tending toward virtue will identify with virtue; ~ Those tending toward failure will identify with failure. ~ To those identified with Tao, ~ Tao will gladly extend welcome; ~ To those identified with virtue, ~ Virtue will gladly extend welcome; ~ To those identified with failure, ~ Failure will gladly extend welcome. ~ When one's own faith is inadequate, ~ It will not evoke faith from other people.

—[23c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ Tzu-jan rarely speaks. ~ Therefore no windstorm lasts all morning; ~ No rainstorm lasts all day. ~ Who causes these things? ~ Heaven and Earth. ~ If even Heaven and Earth can cause nothing to last forever, ~ How could man? ~ Therefore those who follow Tao ~ Are one with Tao. ~ Those who attain Te are one with Te; ~ Those who lose [Te] are one with the loss. ~ When a man is one with Tao, ~ Tao also rejoices at gaining him; ~ When a man is one with Te, ~ Te also rejoices at gaining him; ~ When a man is one with the loss, ~ The loss also rejoices at gaining him. ~ When you don't trust others, ~ They will not trust you.

—[23c40t] Tao Huang ~ Natural speech consists of few words. ~ Gusty winds do not last all morning, ~ Cloudbursts do not last all day. ~ What makes this so? ~ Heaven and earth will not last forever, ~ How could a human being last! ~ So the person who works according to Tao unites with Tao. ~ In the same way he unites with action. ~ In the same way he unites with loss. ~ Uniting with action, the Tao becomes action. ~ Uniting with loss, the Tao becomes loss.

—[23c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ Let us observe nature: ~ A heavy rain can hardly outlast the morning; ~ a violent hurricane can hardly outlast the day. ~ Who is responsible for this? ~ The Heaven and the earth - the Nature. ~ If the Heaven and the earth however can not make things great and lasting, how could a man expect to do even more? ~ Thus one who practices Dao is in accord with Dao. ~ One who is in accord with virtues thus attains virtues. ~ One who is not in accord with Dao loses Dao. ~ One who is not in accord with virtues loses virtues. ~ Truth alone is not enough, nevertheless some truth is not true.

—[23c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ Nature says few words. ~ For the same reason a whirlwind does not last a whole morning. ~ Nor does a rainstorm last a whole day. ~ What causes them? ~ It is Heaven and Earth (Nature). ~ If even Heaven and Earth cannot make them last long, ~ How much less can man? ~ Therefore he who follows Tao is identified with Tao. ~ He who follows virtue is identified with virtue. ~ He who abandons (Tao) is identified with the abandonment (of Tao). ~ He who is identified with Tao - Tao is also happy to have him. ~ He who is identified with virtue - virtue is also happy to have him. ~ And he who is identified with the abandonment (of Tao) - the abandonment (of Tao) is also happy to abandon him. ~ It is only when one does not have enough faith in others that others will have no faith in him.

—[23c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ То слово самотно, что редко. ~ Поэтому-то вихрь не буйствует все утро, ливень не хлещет целый день. ~ Кто это делает? ~ Небо и Земля. ~ Коль даже Небо и Земля ничего не в силах делать вечно, то человек тем паче. ~ Поэтому и предаются Дао. ~ У кого Дао, тот ему тождествен; ~ добродетельный тождествен добродетели, ~ утративший тождествен утрате. ~ Кто отождествляет себя с Дао, того Дао тоже обретает с радостью; ~ кто отождествляет себя с добродетелью, того добродетель тоже обретает с радостью; ~ кто делает себя тождественным утрате, того утрата тоже обретает с радостью. ~ Кто не способен доверять другим, тому не доверяют.

—[23c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Редко пользоваться словами - значит следовать естественности. ~ Поэтому резкий ветер не может длиться всё утро, а проливной дождь не может хлестать весь день. ~ Кто делает всё это? Небо и Земля. ~ Если даже Небо и Земля не могут сделать что-то вечным, так что же требовать от человека?! ~ Поэтому он действует через Дао. ~ Действующий через Дао тождественен с Дао. ~ Обретший Благость тождественен с Благостью. ~ Утрачивающий тождественен с утратой. ~ Тожественный с Дао - радостно принимается Дао, ~ Тожественный с Благостью - радостно принимается Благостью. ~ Тожественный с утратой - радостно принимается утратой. ~ Тот, в ком недостаточно искренности, встретится с неискренностью.

— [23с93t] Е. А. Торчинов ~ Тот, кто мало говорит, естественности следует. ~ Ураган не свирепствует целое утро, ливень не льет весь день напролет. ~ Кто сделал так? ~ Небо и Земля. ~ Уж если Небо и Земля не могут сделать долговечным то, что ими же самими порождено, то что уж говорить о человеке! ~ Поэтому те люди, что все свои дела отдали Дао, - едины с Дао! ~ Те, что отдали все Благу-Дэ, - едины с Благом-Дэ! ~ Но те, кто посвятили все лишь гибели, - те с гибелью едины! ~ Когда некто един с Дао, Дао само радуется, обретя его. ~ Когда некто един с Благом, Благо тоже радуется, обретя его. ~ Когда некто един с гибелью, гибель тоже радуется, обретя его. ~ Когда человек не верен слову, то ему не станут верить!

— [23с94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Примолкни и следуй естественности. ~ Ведь порывистый ветер не дует все утро, ливневый дождь не льет весь день. ~ Тот, кто посылает их, - Небо и Земля. ~ Но Небо и Земля и те не могут делать это вечно, так куда уж человеку равняться с ними. ~ Вот почему: ~ тот, кто ведет дела в соответствии с Дао, тождествен Дао. ~ [Тот, кто ведет дела в соответствии] с Дэ, тождествен Дэ. ~ [Тот, кто ведет дела в соответствии] с утратой, тождествен утрате. ~ Того, кто тождествен Дао, Дао с радостью принимает его. ~ Того, кто тождествен Дэ, Дэ с радостью принимает его. ~ Того, кто тождествен утрате, утрата с радостью принимает его. ~ "Недоверие питает неверие".

— [23с95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Нужно меньше говорить, следовать естественности. ~ Быстрый ветер не продолжается все утро, сильный дождь не продержится весь день. ~ Кто делает все это? ~ Небо и земля. ~ Даже небо и земля не могут сделать что-либо долговечным, тем более человек. ~ Поэтому он служит дао. ~ Кто [служит] дао, тот тождествен дао. ~ Кто [служит] дэ, тот тождествен дэ. ~ Тот, кто теряет, тождествен потере. ~ Тот, кто тождествен дао, приобретает дао. ~ Тот, кто тождествен дэ, приобретает дэ. ~ Тот, кто тождествен потере, приобретает потерянное. ~ Только сомнения порождают неверие.

— [23с96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Редкие слова заключают в себе самые достоверные мысли. ~ Редкие изречения сами собою правдивы. ~ Утренний сильный ветер не продолжается до полудня; сильный дождь не продолжается целый день. ~ Ни небо, ни земля вечно существовать не могут. ~ Тем более человек. ~ Живущий и поступающий по Тао равен ему; ~ нравственный человек равен добродетели; ~ потерявший все равен потере. ~ Тао любит находить равное себе; ~ нравственный - равное себе; ~ потерявший - также равное себе. ~ Где вера слаба, там не будет веры.

— [23с97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Неслышное веление - то, что таково само собой. ~ Сильный ветер не продержится все утро. ~ Внезапный ливень не продержится весь день. ~ Кто создает их? Небо и Земля. ~ Даже Небу и Земле не сотворить ничего долговечного, ~ Тем менее это доступно человеку! ~ Посему тот, кто предан Пути, един с Путем. ~ Тот, кто предан совершенству, един с Совершенством. ~ А тот, кто предан утрате, един с утратой. ~ Того, кто един с Путем, Путь тоже принимает. ~ Тому, кто един с Совершенством, Путь дает Совершенство, ~ А того, кто един с утратой, Путь тоже теряет. ~ Лишь тому, кто недостаточно доверяет другим, ~ Тоже не будет доверия.

— [23с98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Разреженность в словах - это самопроизвольная естественность. ~

Ураганный ветер не длится все утро. ~ Проливной дождь не идет до конца дня. ~ Кто осуществляет это? ~ Небо-Земля. ~ Даже Небо-Земля не способны сделать их долгими. ~ Что уж тут сравнивать с человеком? ~ Причинность: ~ Если в ситуациях действуешь, исходя из Пути, тогда отождествляешься с Путем. ~ Если действуешь, исходя из Потенции, тогда отождествляешься с Потенцией. ~ Если действуешь, исходя из потери, тогда отождествляешься с потерей. ~ Когда отождествляешься с Путем, тогда и Путь, радуется, обретая тебя. ~ Когда отождествляешься с Потенцией, тогда и Потенция радуется, обретая тебя. ~ Когда отождествляешься с потерей, тогда и потеря радуется, обретая тебя. ~ Если в тебе недостаточно веры, то бытие не верит в тебя.

—[24c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ One who boasts is not established; ~ One who shows himself off does not become prominent; ~ One who puts himself on display does not brightly shine; ~ One who brags about himself gets no credit; ~ One who praises himself does not long endure. ~ In the Way, such things are called: ~ "Surplus food and redundant action." ~ And with things - there are those who hate them. ~ Therefore, the one with the Way in them does not dwell.

—[24c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ ONE on tip-toe cannot stand. ~ One astride cannot walk. ~ One who displays himself does not shine. ~ One who justifies himself has no glory. ~ One who boasts of his own ability has no merit. ~ One who parades his own success will not endure. ~ In Tao these things are called "unwanted food and extraneous growths," ~ Which are loathed by all things. ~ Hence, a man of Tao does not set his heart upon them.

—[24c03t] D. C. Lau ~ He who tiptoes cannot stand; he who strides cannot walk. ~ He who shows himself is not conspicuous; ~ He who considers himself right is not illustrious; ~ He who brags will have no merit; ~ He who boasts will not endure. ~ From the point of view of the way these are 'excessive food and useless excrescences'. ~ As there are Things that detest them, he who has the way does not abide in them.

—[24c04t] R. L. Wing ~ Those who are on tiptoe cannot stand firm. ~ Those who straddle cannot walk. ~ Those who display themselves cannot illuminate. ~ Those who define themselves cannot be distinguished. ~ Those who make claims can have no credit. ~ Those who boast cannot advance. ~ To those who stay with the Tao, ~ These are like excess food and redundant actions ~ And are contrary to Natural Law. ~ Thus those who possess the Tao turn away.

—[24c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ He who wants to stand higher on tiptoe is not steady; ~ He who wants to double his step is unable to hasten; ~ He who only rests on his own eyes cannot see clearly; ~ He who considers himself always in the right cannot tell right from wrong; ~ He who boasts himself will be given no credit; ~ He who considers himself superior is not qualified for leadership. ~ From the point of Tao, (all these) are nothing but remnants of food and tumours of action, which all creatures detest. ~ Therefore those who possess Tao will stay away from them.

—[24c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ He who stands on tiptoe is not steady. ~ He who strides cannot maintain the pace. ~ He who makes a show is not enlightened. ~ He who is self-righteous is not respected. ~ He who boasts achieves nothing. ~ He who brags will not endure. ~ According to followers of the Tao, "These are extra food and unnecessary luggage." ~ They do not bring happiness. ~ Therefore followers of the Tao avoid them.

—[24c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ He who stands on tip-toe cannot really stand. ~ He who takes big strides cannot really walk. ~ He who sees only through his own point of view cannot see clearly. ~ He who thinks he is always right will not see the truth. ~ He who boasts of his own achievements will achieve nothing, ~ He who is self-contented will not grow. ~ Such people to the Dao are like those who eat too much or do too much, ~ They will be fed up with what they eat or what they do. ~ Hence those who follow the Dao will not fall into the "too much" mode.

—[24c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ You cannot stand firm by standing on tiptoes. ~ You cannot go far by taking big steps. ~ If you are stubborn, you cannot know the right and the wrong. ~ If you are narrow-minded, no one will accept your opinions. ~ If you show off, no one will recognize your accomplishments. ~ If you are conceited, you will not be able to lead the people. ~ Speaking in terms of the DAO, these are useless extras that are very annoying. ~ Therefore, one who practices the DAO never behaves like this.

—[24c09t] Walter Gorn Old, UNDESIRABLE HONOURS ~ By standing on tiptoe one cannot keep still. ~ Astride of one's fellow one cannot progress. ~ By displaying oneself one does not shine. ~ By self-approbation one is not esteemed. ~ In self-praise there is no merit. ~ He who exalts himself does not stand high. ~ Such things are to Tao what refuse and excreta are to the body. ~ They are everywhere detested. ~ Therefore the man of Tao will not abide with them.

—[24c10t] James Legge ~ He who stands on his tiptoes does not stand firm; ~ he who stretches his legs does not walk (easily). ~ (So), he who displays himself does not shine; ~ he who asserts his own views is not distinguished; ~ he who vaunts himself does not find his merit acknowledged; ~ he who is self-conceited has no superiority allowed to him. ~ Such conditions, viewed from the standpoint of the Tao, are like remnants of food, or a tumour on the body, which all dislike. ~ Hence those who pursue (the course) of the Tao do not adopt and allow them.

—[24c11t] David Hinton ~ Stretch onto tiptoes and you never stand firm. ~ Hurry long strides and you never travel far. ~ Keep up self-reflection ~ and you'll never be enlightened. ~ Keep up self-definition ~ and you'll never be apparent. ~ Keep up self-promotion ~ and you'll never be proverbial. ~ Keep up self-esteem ~ and you'll never be perennial. ~ Travelers of the Way call such striving too much food and useless baggage. ~ Things may not all despise such striving, but a master of the Way stays clear of it.

—[24c12t] Chichung Huang ~ He who boasts cannot stand; ~ He who looks at himself is not illustrious; ~ He who parades himself is not clear-sighted; ~ He who brags about himself has no merit; ~ He who is conceited does not last long. ~ These, according to the Tao, are ~ Leftover food and improper deeds ~ Which people all loathe. ~ Therefore, he who possesses the Tao ~ Does not accumulate.

—[24c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ One who tiptoes cannot stand. ~ One who straddles cannot walk. ~ One who sees himself is not enlightened (ming). ~ One who justifies himself is not outstanding. ~ One who shows off (fa) his deeds is not meritorious. ~ One who boasts (ching) of himself does not lead (chang). ~ These to a Taoist are called: ~ Excess nature (yü te) and superfluous actions (shui hsing), ~ Avoided (o) even by things. ~ Therefore the Taoist does not indulge (ch'u) in them.

—[24c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ A person who tiptoes will not be able to stand [steadily after a short while]; ~ A person who bestrides will not [be able to] walk [a long distance in the same manner]; ~ [Therefore:] ~ A person who is self-opinionated is not [truly] brilliant; ~ A person who is self-righteous is not [truly] outstanding; ~ A person who is self-conceited is not [truly] superior. ~ One of the old-timers on the trail of Tao said: ~ "[Even] Animals dislike over-eating and [carrying out] the excessive physical activities which serve no [significant] purpose." ~ Therefore one who pursues Tao would not commit himself [to any kind of excessiveness] either.

—[24c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ One on tip-toe cannot stand. ~ One astride cannot walk. ~ One who displays himself does not shine. ~ One who justifies himself has no glory. ~ One who boasts of his own work has no merit. ~ One who is proud of himself will not endure. ~ From the point of view of the Way, these things are called "unwanted food and extraneous growths," which are loathed by all things. ~ Hence, a man of the Way does not set his heart upon them.

—[24c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ On tiptoes, one cannot stand steadily. ~ Astride, one cannot walk ahead. ~ Those who brag about themselves cannot be held in great respect. ~ Those who assume they are always right cannot be outstanding. ~ Those who go to the extreme cannot achieve goals. ~ Those who are vainglorious cannot keep making progress. ~ This is Tao. ~ Those behaviors, like leftover food or an overweight person, are unattractive to everyone. ~ Thus Tao followers avoid them.

—[24c17t] Arthur Waley ~ 'He who stands on tip-toe, does not stand firm; ~ He who takes the longest strides, does not walk the fastest.' ~ He who does his own looking sees little, ~ He who defines himself is not therefore distinct. ~ He who boasts of what he will do succeeds in nothing; ~ He who is proud of his work, achieves nothing that endures. ~ Of these, from the standpoint of the Way, it is said: ~ 'Pass round superfluous dishes to those that have already had enough, ~ And no creature but will reject them in disgust.' ~ That is why he that possesses Tao does not linger.

—[24c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ One up on tiptoes does not stand firm. ~ One who takes big strides does not move. ~ One who flaunts himself does not shine. ~ One who insists that he is right is not commended. ~ One who boasts about himself has no acknowledged merit. ~ One filled with self-importance does not last long. ~ In respect to the Dao, we can say about such behavior, too much food is an excrescence making the rounds. ~ The people always hate this, so one who has the Dao has nothing to do with it.

—[24c19t] Lin Yutang ~ THE DREGS AND TUMORS OF VIRTUE ~ He who stands on tiptoe does not stand (firm); ~ He who strains his strides does not walk (well); ~ He who reveals himself is not luminous; ~ He who justifies himself is not far-famed; ~ He who boasts of himself is not given credit; ~ He who prides himself is not chief among men. ~ These in the eyes of Tao ~ Are called "the dregs and tumors of Virtue," ~ Which are things of disgust. ~ Therefore the man of Tao spurns them.

—[24c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ Who is puffed up cannot stand, ~ Who is self-absorbed has no distinction, ~ Who is self-revealing does not shine, ~ Who is self-assertive has no merit, ~ Who is self-praising does not last long. ~ As for the Way, we may say these are "excess provisions and extra baggage." ~ Creation abhors such extravagances. ~ Therefore, ~ One who aspires to the Way, does not abide in them.

—[24c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ The person on tiptoe is not steady. ~ The person with legs astride cannot walk. ~ Those who look only at themselves see little. ~ Those who justify themselves are not distinguished. ~ Those who brag have no merit. ~ The work of prideful people will not endure. ~ From the standpoint of the Tao, ~ these things are "excessive food and tumors of the body." ~ As they bring sickness, ~ followers of the Tao do not linger around them.

—[24c22t] David H. Li ~ One who tiptoes to stand taller does not stand firm; ~ One who strides to walk faster does not walk long; ~ One who self-touts does not shine; ~ One who self-justifies does not reassure; ~ One who self-aggrandizes does not accomplish; ~ One who self-serves does not endure. ~ They, in relation to Direction, are the equivalent of leftover food and excess fat. ~ They are unattractive; ~ they are not held by those with Direction.

—[24c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ A man who tiptoes cannot stand. ~ A man who straddles cannot walk. ~ A man who flaunts himself cannot shine. ~ A man who is self-righteous is not respected. ~ A man who is self-boasting is not acknowledged. ~ A man who is self-conceited is not promoted. ~ From the viewpoint of the Tao, ~ These behaviors are like excess food and excrescent flesh. ~ Creation abhors such imbalance, ~ And thus the man of the Tao does not abide in them.

—[24c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ A person who stands on tiptoe cannot stand firmly on his feet. ~ A person who spreads his legs cannot walk steadily. ~ A person who displays himself cannot shine (like a star in the sky). ~ A person who praises himself will not be praised by others. ~ A person who glorifies himself will not be famous. ~ A person who makes himself mighty cannot excel. ~ All these, in comparison to the Tao, are called: ~ "A surfeit of food and an excess of action." ~ They will be tiresome to everyone in other things, too. ~ Therefore, the man of Tao is not found in their company. ~ All these are examples of living in a way that goes against nature.

—[24c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ A man on tiptoe can't walk easily. ~ The man who strides on ahead is bound to tire. ~ The kind of person who always insists on his way of seeing things can never learn anything from anyone. ~ Those who always want to be seen will never help others to be. ~ The showman is never secretly respected by anyone. ~ People like these, say the Wise Ones are as useless as the left-over food at a feast: ~ No true follower can relate to them.

—[24c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ He who stands on tiptoes cannot stand well; ~ He who walks with great strides cannot walk well; ~ He who shows off himself cannot become conspicuous; ~ He who regards himself infallible cannot become illustrious; ~ He who brags about himself cannot gain achievement; ~ He who boasts of himself cannot become a head. ~ From the point of view of the Tao, ~ These behaviours are like leftover food and superfluous excrescence, ~ So disgusting that a man of Tao ~ Never behaves like that.

—[24c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ He who tiptoes cannot stand. ~ He who strides cannot walk. ~ He who sees only himself is not enlightened. ~ He who is self-righteous is not notable. ~ He who boasts about himself will have no merit. ~ He who praises himself will have no improvement. ~ The way he takes the Tao, as if eating with a full stomach and moving with excess baggage, will be disliked. ~ Therefore he who follows the Tao will not abide this.

—[24c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ A long stander would not stand on tiptoe. ~ A far walker would not walk with long strides. ~ A wise observer would not observe self-preoccupations. ~ A true celebrity would not brag about self. ~ A successful doer would not show off his/her deeds. ~ A good ruler would not look superior to others. ~ It is the Way that is enabling and disabling. ~ Eating too much will result in obesity in form, ~ Which is avoided even by the public, ~ And is therefore not preferred by Way servers.

—[24c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ Those Which Are Against The Tao ~ Lao Tze says, ~ He who stands on tiptoe can't persist long. ~ He who walks by striding can't go far. ~ He who sees everything in his eyes can never be shrewd. ~ He who claims self-righteousness will never be exalted by others. ~ He who steals others' feats for himself is a worthless person. ~ He who boasts of his merit can't enjoy a long life. ~ Viewed from the Tao's standpoint, these men are like remains of a meal, or a tumor on the body, which no one would like. ~ Hence, a Tao-practician should not become one of them.

—[24c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ A man on tiptoe cannot stand firm; ~ A man astride cannot walk on; ~ A man who displays himself cannot shine; ~ A man who approves himself cannot be noted; ~ A man who praises himself cannot have merit; ~ A man who glories in himself cannot excel: ~ These, when compared with Tao, are called: ~ 'Excess in food and overdoing in action.' ~ Even in other things, mostly, they are rejected; ~ Therefore the man of Tao does not stay with them.

—[24c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ Those who rise on tiptoe cannot stand. ~ Those who stride cannot walk. ~ Those who hold to their views cannot be enlightened. ~ Those who are self-righteous cannot shine. ~ Those who boast cannot receive credit. ~ Those who are arrogant cannot last long. ~ In the light of Tao, they are like left-over food and burdensome wens, ~ Even despised by all creatures. ~ So those with Tao do not want to stay with them.

—[24c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ "A person on tiptoe is not firmly planted, ~ a person in a rush will not go far." ~ One who shows off will not shine, ~ one who promotes himself won't become famous, ~ one who boasts of himself will get no credit, ~ one who glorifies himself will not become leader. ~ In Tao, this is called 'stuffing oneself, 'overdoing it'. ~ Things seem to detest this, ~ so the ambitious man does not dwell here.

—[24c33t] Cheng Lin ~ Those who raise themselves on tiptoe cannot stand firm; ~ those who walk with long steps cannot travel far. ~ Those who are self-complacent are not enlightened. ~ Those who are self-important are not illustrious. ~ Those who are self-conceited are not successful. ~ Those who are self-assertive are not supreme. ~ Those who abide by Truth say: ~ "When one has a surplus of food and an excess of clothing, he causes envy in other men. ~ Therefore, the followers of Truth eschew these."

—[24c34t] Yi Wu ~ One who is on tiptoe cannot stand. ~ One who strides cannot walk. ~ One who is self-opinionated is not enlightened. ~ One who is self-righteous is not brightened. ~ One who is self-glorified is without merit. ~ One who is self-satisfied cannot develop. ~ To the Way, all of them are known as ~ "Unwanted food and useless actions." ~ They may be despised by all things; ~ Therefore, one who practices the Way does not dwell on them.

—[24c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ He who stands tiptoed will soon fall over. ~ He who walks with huge strides will not go very far. ~ By trying to show off, you will not be eminent. ~ By acting like a know-all, you will not be distinguished. ~ If you brag about your success, you will end up with no credit. ~ If you are conceited, you will not make any further advancement. ~ From the perspective of Dao, ~ Even animals will find all extravagant deeds disgusting. ~ He who follows the path of Dao does not subscribe to these actions.

—[24c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ One who stands on tiptoe cannot stand firmly. ~ One who strides cannot walk far. ~ One who flaunts himself is not illumined. ~ One who insists that he is right is self-righteous. ~ One who boasts of his accomplishments undoes his merit. ~ One who takes pride in himself impedes his own growth. ~ These things are normally detested by people who nurture virtue and the truthfulness of life, ~ for they do not set their eyes and hearts upon anything that is equal to "the greed for excessive food which fosters morbid growth." ~ Thus, such things are not agreeable to them.

—[24c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ To lift the heel is not to stand. ~ To take long strides is not to walk. ~ To show off is not to shine. ~ To insist that one is right is not to be distinct. ~ To claim credit is to have no credit. ~ To be proud of oneself is not to be the best. ~ From the point of view of Tao, all of these are extras which things themselves do not like. ~ Therefore, the man of Tao does not abide with them.

—[24c38t] Henry Wei ~ Bitter Favors ~ K'u En ~ He who stands on tip-toe will totter; ~ He who takes long strides is a poor walker. ~ He who likes to show off is not enlightened; ~ He who is prone to be self-righteous is not distinguished; ~ He who blows his own horn will acquire no merit; ~ He who extols himself is not fit to be a leader. ~ From the standpoint of Tao, it can be said: ~ "Eating excessive food or to walk with a burden ~ May be disgusting to creatures." ~ People possessed of Tao, therefore, reject them.

—[24c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ He who tiptoes cannot remain standing; ~ He who strides cannot travel; ~ He who shows himself has no bright presence; ~ He who claims to be right does not shine; ~ The boastful have no merit; ~ The conceited do not last long. ~ From Tao's standpoint ~ Such things may be called excess food and superfluous action. ~ Creatures abhor them. ~ Therefore the man of Tao stays away from them.

—[24c40t] Tao Huang ~ Those who boast of themselves lose their stance. ~ He who displays himself is not seen. ~ He who justifies himself is not understood. ~ He who lashes out does not succeed. ~ He who builds himself up does not endure. ~ In the sense of Tao, ~ This is said to be eating too much and acting too much. ~ It results in disgust. ~ Those who desire will not endure.

—[24c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ One on tiptoe can not stand well. ~ One with hard breathing can not live long. ~ One astride can not walk well. ~ A self-displayer is not enlightened. ~ A self-asserter is not popular. ~ A self-approver has no merit. ~ A self-boaster can not lead. ~ From the point of view of Dao this is called "surfeit of food and a tumour on the body". ~ It is hated by everything! ~ Thus a man of Dao will never resort to it.

— [24c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ He who stands on tiptoe is not steady. ~ He who strides forward does not go. ~ He who shows himself is not luminous. ~ He who justifies himself is not prominent. ~ He who boasts of himself is not given credit. ~ He who brags does not endure for long. ~ From the point of view of Tao, these are like remnants of food and tumors of action, ~ Which all creatures detest. ~ Therefore those who possess Tao turn away from them.

— [24c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Долго на носках не устоять, далеко широким шагом не пройти. ~ Кто себя видит, тот не ведает просвета; ~ кто считает себя правым, не заметен; ~ кто хвастается, не заслужен; ~ кто зазнается, тот других не старше. ~ У кого Дао, тот этого не делает, ибо такое поведение, согласно Дао, равняется тому, когда переедают или впустую ходят, а этого не любит, кажется, никто.

— [24c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Стоящему на цыпочках долго не простоять. ~ Идущему большими шагами далеко не уйти. ~ Демонстрирующий себя - не просветлен. ~ Считающий себя правым - не очевиден. ~ Кичащийся собой не имеет заслуг. ~ Заносчивому не стать властителем. ~ Рассуждая с позиций Дао, про это говорят: "Излишество в пище и непристойность в поступках в сочетании с вещами несут вред". ~ Поэтому, обладающий Дао, свободен от пребывания в этом.

— [24c93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Стоящий на кончиках пальцев долго не простоит, ~ Оставляющий отчетливые следы далеко не уйдет. ~ Поглощенный сам собой не станет умудренно-просветленным, ~ Превозносящий сам себя не будет подлинно прославлен, ~ Нападающему на всех не дано свершить великий подвиг, ~ Самовосхваляющийся не станет долговечным. ~ Ну а для Дао это все - протухшая еда и тягостная ноша. ~ Все сущее такие нравы ненавидит. ~ Поэтому обретший Дао-Путь так не живет.

— [24c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Вставший на цыпочки не устоит прямо. ~ Сдвинувший ноги не тронется с места. ~ Кто выставляет себя эрудитом, не просветлен. ~ Кто считает себя правым, не просвещен. ~ Кто прославляет себя, не доблестен. ~ Кто восхваляет себя, не главенствует. ~ Все это, с позиции Дао, зовется избытком достатка и поведением раба. ~ Всяк ненавидит таких. ~ Поэтому тот, кто обладает Дао, с такими рядом не живет.

— [24c95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Кто поднялся на цыпочки, не может [долго] стоять. ~ Кто делает большие шаги, не может [долго] идти. ~ Кто сам себя выставляет на свет, тот не блестит. ~ Кто сам себя восхваляет, тот не добудет славы. ~ Кто нападает, не достигает успеха. ~ Кто сам себя возвышает, не может стать старшим среди других. ~ Если исходить из дао, все это называется лишним желанием и бесполезным поведением. ~ Таких ненавидят все существа. ~ Поэтому человек, обладающий дао, не делает этого.

— [24c96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Сухоногий не может встать. ~ Сидящий не может ходить. ~ Кто думает, что постиг все, тот ничего не знает. ~ Кто доволен самим собою, тот не может прославиться. ~ Кто хвастается, тот не может иметь заслуги. ~ Кто горд, тот не может возвыситься. ~ Такие люди, с точки зрения Тао, называются питающимися излишеством и творящими напрасное. ~ Поэтому когда они находят Тао, то оставаться в нем решительно не могут.

— [24c97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Кто встал на цыпочки, долго не простоит. ~ Кто широко шагает, далеко не уйдет. ~ Кто имеет свой взгляд, немного сможет понять. ~ Кто имеет свою правду, немногих сможет убедить. ~ Кто рвется вперед, славы не стяжает. ~ Кто радуется за себя, долго не проживет. ~ Для Пути это только "лишнее угощение, напрасное хождение". ~ Для людей это только повод для ненависти. ~ Посему претворяющий Путь так не поступает.

— [24c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ На цыпочках не простоишь. ~ Широко расставив ноги, не пойдешь. ~

Выставляя себя, не будешь ясен. ~ Утверждая себя, не будешь четок. ~ Гордясь собой, не будешь иметь заслуги. ~ Превознося себя, не сможешь просуществовать долго. ~ В пространстве Пути это называется избытком в пище и лишними движениями. ~ Всем сущностям от этого только зло. ~ Причинность: ~ При наличии Пути не застаиваются.

—[25c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ There was something formed out of chaos, ~ That was born before Heaven and Earth. ~ Quiet and still! Pure and deep! ~ It stands on its own and doesn't change. ~ It can be regarded as the mother of Heaven and Earth. ~ I do not yet know its name: ~ I "style" it "the Way." ~ Were I forced to give it a name, I would call it "the Great." ~ "Great" means "to depart"; ~ "To depart" means "to be far away"; ~ And "to be far away" means "to return." ~ The Way is great; ~ Heaven is great; ~ Earth is great; ~ And the king is also great. ~ In the country there are four greats, and the king occupies one place among them. ~ Man models himself on the Earth; ~ The Earth models itself on Heaven; ~ Heaven models itself on the Way; ~ And the Way models itself on that which is so on its own.

—[25c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ THERE was Something undefined and yet complete in itself, ~ Born before Heaven-and-Earth. ~ Silent and boundless, ~ Standing alone without change, ~ Yet pervading all without fail, ~ It may be regarded as the Mother of the world. ~ I do not know its name; ~ I style it "Tao"; ~ And, in the absence of a better word, call it "The Great." ~ To be great is to go on, ~ To go on is to be far, ~ To be far is to return. ~ Hence, "Tao is great, ~ Heaven is great, ~ Earth is great, ~ King is great." ~ Thus, the king is one of the great four in the Universe. ~ Man follows the ways of the Earth. ~ The Earth follows the ways of Heaven, ~ Heaven follows the ways of Tao, ~ Tao follows its own ways.

—[25c03t] D. C. Lau ~ There is a thing confusedly formed, ~ Born before heaven and earth. ~ Silent and void ~ It stands alone and does not change, ~ Goes round and does not weary. ~ It is capable of being the mother of the world. ~ I know not its name ~ So I style it 'the way'. ~ I give it the makeshift name of 'the great'. ~ Being great, it is further described as receding, ~ Receding, it is described as far away, ~ Being far away, it is described as turning back. ~ Hence the way is great; ~ Heaven is great; ~ Earth is great; ~ And the king is also great. ~ Within the realm there are four things that are great, ~ And the king counts as one. ~ Man models himself on earth, ~ Earth on heaven, ~ Heaven on the way, ~ And the way on that which is naturally so.

—[25c04t] R. L. Wing ~ There was something in a state of fusion Before Heaven and Earth were born. ~ Silent, vast, Independent, and unchanging; Working everywhere, tirelessly; ~ It can be regarded as Mother of the world. ~ I do not know its name; ~ The word I say is Tao. ~ Forced to give it a name, ~ I say Great. ~ Great means continuing. ~ Continuing means going far. ~ Going far means returning. ~ Therefore the Tao is Great. ~ Heaven and Earth are Great. ~ A leader is likewise Great. ~ In the universe there are four Greatnesses, ~ And leadership is one of them. ~ Humans are modeled on the earth. ~ The earth is modeled on heaven. ~ Heaven is modeled on the Tao. ~ The Tao is modeled on nature.

—[25c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ There was something undifferentiated and yet complete, which existed before Heaven and Earth. ~ Soundless and formless, it depends upon nothing external, operating in a circular motion ceaselessly. ~ It may be considered the root (Mother) of all beings under Heaven. ~ I don't know its name, ~ And call it Tao. ~ Inadequately giving it another name, I call it the Great. ~ The Great moves on, ~ The moving-on becomes remote, ~ The remote returns to the original point. ~ Therefore Tao is great, ~ Heaven is great, ~ Earth is great, ~ And Man is also great. ~ There are four great things in the universe, ~ And Man is one of them. ~ Man follows the way of Earth, ~ Earth follows the way of Heaven, ~ Heaven follows the way of Tao, ~ Tao follows the way of itself.

—[25c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ Something mysteriously formed, ~ Born before heaven and earth. ~ In the silence and the void, ~ Standing alone and unchanging, ~ Ever present and in motion. ~ Perhaps it is the mother of ten thousand things. ~ I do not know its name. ~ Call it Tao. ~ For lack of a better word, I call it great. ~ Being great, it flows. ~ It flows far away. ~ Having gone far, it returns. ~ Therefore, "Tao is great; ~ Heaven is great; ~ Earth is great; ~ The king is also great." ~ These are the four great powers of the universe, ~ And the king is one of them. ~ Man follows earth. ~ Earth follows heaven. ~ Heaven follows the Tao. ~ Tao follows what is natural.

—[25c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ In the beginning, before the formation of heaven and earth, ~ Something had already existed amid the confusion. ~ This lonely existence was totally independent of anything else, ~ And it would not change, ~ It only moved in its own way tirelessly. ~ Only it could have been the mother of heaven and earth. ~ I do not know its name, ~ I would just call it "the Dao." ~ I could also call it "the great something." ~ This great something has now about disappeared from the world as we know it. ~ It has been getting more and more remote from us. ~ It has become more and more contrary from the world as we know it. ~ The Dao is great, ~ Heaven is great, ~ Earth is great, ~ The man who knows the Dao (the Way) is great. ~ In the domain we know there are four "greats." ~ The man who knows the Dao is one of them. ~ The great man emulates the great Earth. ~ The great earth emulates the great Heaven, ~ The great heaven emulates the great Dao. ~ The great Dao emulates the great Nature.

—[25c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ It started in chaos, before the heavens and the earth existed. ~ It makes no sound and has no shape, ~ But it is independent and never changes. ~ It is always functioning and never stops, ~ So it can be the root of the world. ~ I do not know its name, so I name it the DAO, ~ And I will also call it the BIG. ~ BIG means broad, broad means far-reaching, ~ Far-reaching means everywhere. ~ Therefore, the DAO is BIG, the heavens is BIG, ~ The earth is BIG, and people are BIG, too. ~ The universe has four BIGs, and people are only one of them. ~ People follow the earth, the earth follows the heavens, ~ The heavens follows the DAO, and the DAO follows nature.

—[25c09t] Walter Gorn Old, APPREHENDING THE VOID ~ Before Heaven and Earth existed there was in Nature a primordial substance. ~ It was serene, it was fathomless. ~ It was self-existent, it was homogeneous. ~ It was omnipresent, nor suffered any limitation. ~ It is to be regarded as the universal mother. ~ I do not know its name, but I call it Tao. ~ If forced to qualify it, I call it the boundless. ~ Being boundless, I call it the inconceivable. ~ Being inscrutable, I call it the inaccessible. ~ Being inaccessible, I call it the omnipresent. ~ Tao is supreme, Heaven is supreme, Earth is supreme, the King is supreme. ~ There are in the universe four kinds of supremacy, and their rulership is one. ~ Man is ruled by the Earth, the Earth is ruled by Heaven, Heaven is ruled by Tao, and Tao is ruled by itself.

—[25c10t] James Legge ~ There was something undefined and complete, coming into existence before Heaven and Earth. ~ How still it was and formless, standing alone, and undergoing no change, reaching everywhere and in no danger (of being exhausted)! ~ It may be regarded as the Mother of all things. ~ I do not know its name, and I give it the designation of the Tao (the Way or Course). ~ Making an effort (further) to give it a name I call it The Great. ~ Great, it passes on (in constant flow). ~ Passing on, it becomes remote. ~ Having become remote, it returns. ~ Therefore the Tao is great; ~ Heaven is great; ~ Earth is great; ~ and the (sage) king is also great. ~ In the universe there are four that are great, and the (sage) king is one of them. ~ Man takes his law from the Earth; ~ the Earth takes its law from Heaven; ~ Heaven takes its law from the Tao. ~ The law of the Tao is its being what it is.

—[25c11t] David Hinton ~ There was something all murky shadow, born before heaven and earth: ~ o such utter silence, utter emptiness. ~ Isolate and changeless, ~ it moves everywhere without fail: ~ picture the mother of all beneath heaven. ~ I don't know its name. ~ I'll call it Way, ~ and if I must name it

Vast. ~ Vast means it's passing beyond, ~ passing beyond means it's gone far away, ~ and gone far away means it's come back. ~ Because Way is vast ~ heaven is vast, ~ earth is vast, ~ and the true emperor too is vast. ~ In this realm, there are four vast things, ~ and the true emperor is one of them. ~ Human abides by earth. ~ Earth abides by heaven. ~ Heaven abides by Way. ~ Way abides by occurrence appearing of itself. —[25c12t] Chichung Huang ~ There was something ~ That into an indistinguishable mass had wrought itself, ~ Born before heaven and earth. ~ Desolate and formless, ~ It stood alone, unchanging, ~ And may be regarded as ~ The mother of heaven and earth. ~ Not knowing its name, ~ I gave it the alias "Tao," ~ And reluctantly named it "vast." ~ Vast and moving; ~ Moving and far-reaching; ~ Far-reaching and reverting. ~ The Tao is vast; ~ Heaven is vast; ~ Earth is vast; ~ The king is also vast. ~ In the empire, there are four vasts, ~ And the king constitutes one. ~ Man imitates earth; ~ Earth imitates heaven; ~ Heaven imitates the Tao; ~ The Tao imitates the way things are.

—[25c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ There was something nebulous existing (yu wu hun ch'eng), ~ Born before heaven and earth. ~ Silent, empty, ~ Standing alone (tu), altering not (pu kai), ~ Moving cyclically without becoming exhausted (pu tai), ~ Which may be called the mother of all under heaven. ~ I know not its name, ~ I give its alias (tzu), Tao. ~ If forced to picture it, ~ I say it is "great" (ta). ~ To say it is "great" is to say it is "moving away" (shih), ~ To say it is "moving away" is to say it is "far away" (yüan), ~ To say it is "far away" is to say it is "returning" (fan). ~ Therefore Tao is great, ~ Heaven is great, ~ Earth is great, ~ The king is also great. ~ In the realm there are four greats, ~ And the king is one of them. ~ Humans follow (fa) earth, ~ Earth follows heaven, ~ Heaven follows Tao, ~ Tao follows self-becoming (tzu-jan).

—[25c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ Prior to the coming-into-being of Heaven-Earth, there was the existence of something that was [highly and immensely] commixed; ~ It was completely silent and void; ~ It was self-contained and unalterable; ~ It rotated sweepingly and ceaselessly; ~ Perhaps it was the Mother (origin) of the world. ~ I do not know how to describe it; ~ I use the character "Tao" to name it and describe it perforce as "great" (big); ~ "Great" means that it had spreaded out so vastly that it disappeared in somewhere beyond our observation; ~ It is described as "moving away towards the beyond" because wherever it went to was immeasurably remote; ~ It is depicted as remote means [that after it completes its course] it will move back to us. ~ Accordingly: ~ Tao is great; ~ Universe (Heaven) is great; ~ Earth is great; ~ Kingliness (authentic) is also great; ~ There are four greatness within the realm we are confined to, and [authentic] kingliness is one of them! ~ Human beings live by the Laws of Earth (world); ~ The Laws of Earth (world) subordinates to the Laws of Universe; ~ Universe is governed by the maxims of Tao; ~ Tao, per se, is self-subsistent and self-contained.

—[25c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ There was something chaotic and yet complete in itself, born before Heaven and Earth. ~ Silent and empty, standing alone and unchanging, pervading everywhere and inexhaustible, it may be regarded as the mother of the world. ~ I do not know its name, so I simply call it "the Way". ~ I reluctantly call it "the great." ~ To be great is to go on. ~ To go on is to go far. ~ To go far is to return. ~ Hence, "The Way is great. Heaven is great. Earth is great. Man is great." Thus, man is one of the great four in the universe. ~ Man follows Earth, Earth follows Heaven, Heaven follows the Way, the Way follows Nature.

—[25c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ There had been a chaotic object before the universe was born. ~ It is quiet and intangible. ~ It stays alone without changing. ~ It moves around without stopping. ~ It may be the mother of the universe. ~ I do not know the object's name. ~ I have attempted to designate it Tao, and to call it great. ~ The great constantly moves. ~ Constantly moving it reaches far. ~ Far-reaching causes it to return. ~ Therefore, Tao is great, the heaven is great, the earth is great, and the human is also great. ~ There are four greats in the universe, and the human is one of them. ~ The human follows the earth, the earth follows the heaven, the heaven follows Tao, and Tao goes naturally.

—[25c17t] Arthur Waley ~ There was something formless yet complete, ~ That existed before heaven and earth; ~ Without sound, without substance, ~ Dependent on nothing, unchanging, ~ All pervading, unending. ~ One may think of it as the mother of all things under heaven. ~ Its true name we do not know; ~ 'Way' is the by-name that we give it. ~ Were I forced to say to what class of things it belongs I should call it Great (ta). ~ Now ta also means passing on, ~ And passing on means going Far Away, ~ And going far away means returning. ~ Thus just as Tao has 'this greatness' and as earth has it and as heaven has it, so may the ruler also have it. ~ Thus 'within the realm there are four portions of greatness', and one belongs to the king. ~ The ways of men are conditioned by those of earth. ~ The ways of earth, by those of heaven. ~ The ways of heaven by those of Tao, and the ways of Tao by the Self-so.

—[25c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ There is something, amorphous and complete, that was born before Heaven and Earth. ~ Obscure, oh, and, immaterial, oh, it stands alone, unchanged. ~ It operates everywhere but stays free from danger, thus we may consider it the mother of all under Heaven. ~ We do not know its name ~ So style it "Dao" [Way]. ~ Forced to give it a name, we call it "great." ~ "Great" refers to the way it goes forth. ~ "Goes forth" describes how it is far-reaching, and "far-reaching" describes its reflexivity. ~ Thus the Dao is great, Heaven is great, Earth is great, and the king is also great. ~ Within the realm of existence there are the four greats, ~ And the king has title to one of these. ~ Man takes his models from Earth; ~ Earth takes its models from Heaven; ~ Heaven takes its models from the Dao; ~ and the Dao takes its models from the Natural.

—[25c19t] Lin Yutang ~ THE FOUR ETERNAL MODELS ~ Before the Heaven and Earth existed ~ There was something nebulous: ~ Silent, isolated, ~ Standing alone, changing not, ~ Eternally revolving without fail, ~ Worthy to be the Mother of All Things. ~ I do not know its name ~ And address it as Tao. ~ If forced to give it a name, ~ I shall call it "Great." ~ Being great implies reaching out in space, ~ Reaching out in space implies far-reaching, ~ Far-reaching implies reversion to the original point. ~ Therefore: ~ Tao is Great, ~ The Heaven is great, ~ The Earth is great, ~ The King is also great. ~ These are the Great Four in the universe, ~ And the King is one of them. ~ Man models himself after the Earth; ~ The Earth models itself after Heaven; ~ The Heaven models itself after Tao; ~ Tao models itself after Nature.

—[25c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ There was something featureless yet complete, ~ born before heaven and earth; ~ Silent - amorphous - it stood alone and unchanging. ~ We may regard it as the mother of heaven and earth. ~ Not knowing its name, ~ I style it the "Way." ~ If forced to give it a name, ~ I would call it "great." ~ Being great implies flowing ever onward, ~ Flowing ever onward implies far-reaching, ~ Far-reaching implies reversal. ~ The Way is great, ~ Heaven is great, ~ Earth is great, ~ The king, too, is great. ~ Within the realm there are four greats, and the king is one among them. ~ Man patterns himself on earth, ~ Earth patterns itself on heaven, ~ Heaven patterns itself on the Way, ~ The Way patterns itself on nature.

—[25c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ Something formless yet complete, ~ existing before heaven and earth. ~ Silent and limitless, ~ it stands alone and does not change. ~ Reaching everywhere, it does not tire. ~ Perhaps it is the Mother of all things under heaven. ~ I do not know its name ~ so I call it "Tao." ~ When I have to describe it I call it "great." ~ Being great it flows. ~ It flows far away. ~ Having gone far away, it returns. ~ Therefore, ~ the Tao is great. ~ Heaven is great. ~ Earth is great. ~ People are also great. ~ Thus, ~ people constitute one of the four great things of the universe. ~ People conform to the earth. ~ The earth conforms to heaven. ~ Heaven conforms to the Tao. ~ The Tao conforms to its own nature.

—[25c22t] David H. Li ~ A matter is molded; ~ it comes into being before the universe, noiseless and formless. ~ It stands by itself, unwaveringly; ~ it is in motion, unendingly. ~ It may be the Mother to the universe. ~ I do not know its name. ~ Tentatively, [I] label it Direction and call it Grand. ~ Grand is unending motion; ~ unending motion is far-reaching; ~ Far-reaching is periodicity. ~ Thus, ~ Direction is grand, ~ the cosmos is grand, ~ the earth is grand, ~ the human is also grand. ~ There are four Grands in the universe, and the human is one of them. ~ The human follows the earth, ~ The earth follows the cosmos, ~ The cosmos follows Direction, ~ Direction follows Nature.

—[25c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ Before the birth of Heaven and Earth is Being, formless yet complete. ~ Silent and still, ~ All one and unchanging, all present and unending, ~ It may be regarded as the Matrix of the Universe. ~ Its true name is unknown, ~ So we call it by its alias, the Tao, ~ And name it by its designation, the Great. ~ Being great, it extends without limit, ~ Extending without limit, it is far-reaching, ~ Being far-reaching, it returns to itself. ~ The Tao is great, ~ Heaven is great, ~ Earth is great, ~ And Man is also great. ~ These are the four greatnesses of the Kosmos, ~ And of them Man is one. ~ Man patterns after Earth, ~ Earth patterns after Heaven, ~ Heaven patterns after the Tao, ~ And the Tao patterns after that which is natural.

—[25c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ There is something that is overt and hidden, ~ That exists beyond heaven and earth. ~ Formless, motionless, ~ It stands alone, forever, it does not change, ~ It exists in every place, it never tires. ~ It can be called "Mother of the universe," ~ Because I don't know its name. ~ If I am compelled to call it by a name, ~ I will call it Tao, "all-embracing." ~ "All-embracing" exists forever, ~ "All-embracing" is far-reaching, ~ "All-embracing" returns to every beginning. ~ Therefore Tao is "all-embracing," ~ Heaven is "all-embracing," ~ Earth is "all-embracing," ~ Man is "all-embracing." ~ In the universe, four things are "all-embracing," ~ And man is one of them. ~ Man adheres to the laws of earth, ~ Earth adheres to the laws of heaven, ~ Heaven adheres to the laws of Tao, ~ Tao adheres to the laws of its nature.

—[25c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ Before the world was ~ And the sky was filled with stars ... ~ There was a strange, unfathomable Body. ~ This Being, this Body is silent and beyond all substance and sensing. ~ It stretches beyond everything spanning the empyrean. ~ It has always been here, and it always will be. ~ Everything comes from it, and then it is the Mother of Everything. ~ I do not know its name. ~ So I call it TAO. ~ I am loath to call it 'greater than everything', but it is. ~ And being greater, it infuses all things moving far out and returning to the Source. ~ Tao is Great, ~ Tao, the Great! ~ It is greater than Heaven, ~ Greater than the Earth - ~ Greater than the king. ~ These are the four great things, and the ruler is the least of them. ~ Humanity is schooled by the Earth, ~ Earth is taught by Heaven, ~ And Heaven is guided by the Tao. ~ And the Tao goes with what is absolutely natural.

—[25c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ There is a thing integratedly formed ~ And born earlier than heaven and earth. ~ Silent and empty, ~ It relies on nothing, ~ Moving around for ever. ~ We may regard it as the mother of all things. ~ I do not know its name, ~ So I name it as the Tao, ~ And further name it as the Great. ~ The Great is moving forward without stopping, ~ Extending to the remotest distance, ~ And then returning to where it was. ~ That is why I say ~ The Tao is Great; ~ Heaven is Great; ~ Earth is Great; ~ And man is also Great. ~ There are four things that are Great, ~ Of them man is one. ~ Man takes earth as his model; ~ Earth takes heaven as its model; ~ Heaven takes the Tao as its model; ~ The Tao takes what is natural as its model.

—[25c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ There is matter formed of confusion, born earlier than Heaven and Earth. ~ In the silence and the void it stands alone and does not change. ~ It turns around without worry. ~ It is capable of being the mother of all creatures under Heaven. ~ I do not know its name, but call it Tao. ~ It is compelled to be named 'great'. ~ 'Great' means passing away, ~ passing away means far away, ~ far away means returning. ~ That is why the Tao is great. ~ Heaven is great. ~ Earth is great. ~ The emperor is great. ~ Within the realm there are four great things; the emperor is one of the four. ~ Human beings follow the Earth. ~ The Earth follows Heaven. ~ Heaven follows the Tao. ~ The Tao follows Nature.

—[25c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ There is a mixture of substances ~ That is born before Heaven and Earth. ~ Quiet, far and wide, it turns round and round by itself. ~ It can be taken as the mother of Heaven and Earth. ~ I don't know what its name is, ~ But for the purpose here, let's call it the Way ~ And describe it as "big." ~ By "big," I mean it is the most expansive. ~ What is expansive extends the farthest. ~ What goes farthest will turn round. ~ Therefore, the Way is big, ~ The heaven is big, ~ The earth is big, ~ And mankind is big. ~ In the universe, there are four big growth domains, ~ With mankind being one of them. ~ Mankind's nature is determined by Earth, ~ Earth's nature is determined by Heaven, ~ Heaven's nature is determined by the Way. ~ And the Way, being the biggest of all, ~ Copies its own growth nature.

—[25c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ The Four Eternal Models ~ Lao Tze says, ~ There was something nebulous and complete which came into existence before the Heaven and the Earth. ~ It was soundless and formless, stood alone, and would not change, reached everywhere and was in no danger of being exhausted. ~ It is capable of being the mother of the world. ~ I do not know its name, and I give it the designation of the Tao, and it is further described as the great. ~ Being great it receded. ~ Receding, it became remote. ~ Having become remote, it turns back. ~ Therefore, ~ the Tao is great, ~ the Heaven is great, ~ the Earth is great, ~ and the Kingship is also great. ~ In the universe there are four elements that are great, and the Mankind is one of them. ~ The Mankind takes his law from the Earth, ~ the Earth takes its law from the Heaven, ~ and the Heaven takes its law from the Tao. ~ The law of the Tao is its being what it is.

—[25c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ There is a thing inherent and natural, ~ Which existed before heaven and earth. ~ Motionless and fathomless, ~ It stands alone and never changes; ~ It pervades everywhere and never becomes exhausted. ~ It may be regarded as the Mother of the Universe. ~ I do not know its name. ~ If I am forced to give it a name, ~ I call it Tao, and I name it as supreme. ~ Supreme means going on; ~ Going on means going far; ~ Going far means returning. ~ Therefore Tao is supreme; heaven is supreme; earth is supreme; and man is also supreme. ~ There are in the universe four things supreme, and man is one of them. ~ Man follows the laws of earth; ~ Earth follows the laws of heaven; ~ Heaven follows the laws of Tao; ~ Tao follows the laws of its intrinsic nature.

—[25c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ There is a thing formed in chaos ~ Existing before Heaven and Earth. ~ Silent and solitary, it stands alone, unchanging. ~ It goes around without peril. ~ It may be the Mother of the world. ~ Not knowing its name, I can only style it Tao. ~ With reluctance, I would call it Great. ~ Great means out-going. ~ Out-going means far-reaching. ~ Far-reaching means returning. ~ Therefore, Tao is great. ~ Heaven is great. ~ Earth is great. ~ The king is great. ~ In the universe, there are four great things, ~ and the king is one of them. ~ Man abides by earth, ~ Earth abides by heaven, ~ Heaven abides by Tao, ~ Tao abides by nature.

—[25c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ There was a chaotic something, yet lacking nothing, ~ born before Heaven and Earth. ~ Alone. ~ Still. ~ Standing alone, unchanging. ~ Revolving, endlessly. ~ It can be thought of as Mother of the World. ~ I do not know its name, ~ one can call it 'Tao'. ~ The name of its powerful presence: ~ One can call it 'The Great One'. ~ Great means going forth, ~ going forth means going far away, ~ going far away means turning back. ~ Yes: ~ Tao is great, ~ Heaven is great, ~ Earth is great, ~ (the king is also great, ~ In the universe there are four great ones, and the king takes his place as one of them). ~ Earth gives the rule for people, ~ Heaven gives the rule for Earth, ~ Tao gives the rule for Heaven, ~ the rule for Tao: things as they are.

—[25c33t] Cheng Lin ~ There is something evolved from chaos, which was born before heaven and earth. ~ It is inaudible and invisible. ~ It is independent and immutable. ~ It is all-pervasive and ceaseless. ~ It may be regarded as the mother of heaven and earth. ~ I do not know its name and call it Truth or Daw. ~ If I must describe it, I will say that it is great, active, far-reaching, and cyclical in its motion. ~ Thus Truth is great, heaven is great, earth is great, and the king is also great. ~ Within the universe there are four great ones, and the king is one of them. ~ The king must follow the examples of earth, heaven, Truth, and Nature.

—[25c34t] Yi Wu ~ There was something formed in chaos; ~ It existed before heaven and earth. ~ Still and solitary, ~ It alone stands without change. ~ It is all-pervasive without being exhausted. ~ It may be the mother of the world. ~ I do not know its name, but name it the Way. ~ With reluctance, I call it Great. ~ Great means on-going; ~ On-going means far-reaching; ~ Far-reaching means reversing; ~ Therefore, the Way is great. ~ Heaven is great; ~ Earth is great; ~ The king also is great. ~ In this realm there are four great things, ~ And the king is one of them. ~ Man follows Earth; ~ Earth follows Heaven; ~ Heaven follows the Way; ~ The Way follows its nature.

—[25c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ There is an admixture, ~ Which existed before heaven and earth. ~ As silent as it is nebulous, ~ It exists alone and it is permanent. ~ It moves around a circle unceasingly. ~ It is the mother of the universe. ~ I do not know its name and I have decided to call it Dao. ~ Arbitrarily, I describe it as great. ~ So great that it begins to permeate everywhere. ~ Permeating outwards, it goes farther and farther away. ~ Nevertheless, it will soon return to its original state again. ~ Therefore, Dao is great. ~ Heaven is great. ~ Earth is great. ~ Humanity is great. ~ In the universe, humanity is one of the four greats. ~ Man models earth; ~ Earth models heaven; ~ Heaven models Dao. ~ And Dao models nature.

—[25c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ Before Heaven and Earth are born, there is something formless and complete in itself. ~ Impalpable and everlasting, ~ silent and undisturbed, ~ standing alone and unchanging, ~ it exercises itself gently, ~ and generates itself inexhaustively in all dimensions. ~ It may be regarded as the Mother of all things. ~ Far beyond humankind's relative conception, ~ it cannot be referred to by a specific name, ~ yet it may be identified as the subtle essence of the universe. ~ In the absence of an accurate word, ~ I shall call it "the Great." ~ Being great, it extends itself without limit. ~ Extending itself without limit, it is far-reaching. ~ Being far-reaching, it ultimately reverts to itself, ~ returning to its self-sufficient origin. ~ Indeed, it had never really left itself! ~ This indefinable subtle energy flow is truly the greatest of all. ~ Expressing its integral nature, ~ the universal subtle essence remains intangible, yielding, and uncontrollable: ~ the ultimate expression of the cosmos. ~ As an expression of its unceasing creativeness, ~ it manifests as the spaciousness of the sky. ~ As an expression of its receptiveness, ~ it manifests as the great massiveness of galaxies, stars, and planets. ~ As an expression of harmonious reintegration, ~ it manifests as human life. ~ Thus, in the natural flow of energy transformation, human life becomes one of the four great expressions of the subtle essence of the universe. ~ It is the way of universal subtle integration. ~ Humankind conforms to Earth. ~ Earth conforms to the sky. ~ The sky conforms to the Subtle Origin. ~ The Subtle Origin conforms to its own nature. ~ These are the four peaks of manifestation from the great transformation of one universal subtle energy. ~ Taking an individual human life as example, ~ the intangible body with its fluids and nervous system construct a field of intangible, but functioning mind and super consciousness.

—[25c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ There was a thing, a "gathering" chaos, ~ Which existed prior to heaven and earth. ~ Silent! ~ Empty! ~ Existing by itself, unchanging, ~ Pervading everywhere, inexhaustible, ~ It might be called the mother of the world. ~ Its name is unknown; ~ I simply call it Tao. ~ If I were to exert myself to define it, ~ I might call it great. ~ Great means extending to the limitless. ~ Extending to the limitless means reaching the extreme distance. ~ Reaching the extreme distance means returning to "nearness." ~ Thus, Tao is great, ~ Heaven is great, earth is great, and man is great, too. ~ In the universe we have four greatnesses, and man is but one. ~ Man is in accordance with earth. ~ Earth is in accordance with heaven. ~ Heaven is in accordance with Tao. ~ Tao is in accordance with that which is.

—[25c38t] Henry Wei ~ Symbol of the Great Origin ~ Hsiang Yuan ~ There is something formless and perfect, ~ Ever-existing, even before birth of Heaven and Earth. ~ How still it is! ~ How quiet! ~ Abiding alone and unchanging, ~ It pervades everywhere without fail. ~ Well may it be the mother of the world. ~ I do not know its name, ~ But label it Tao, ~ And arbitrarily name it Great. ~ Great means going incessantly; ~ Going incessantly means reaching far; ~ Reaching far means completing the cycle. ~ Therefore, ~ Tao is Great; ~ Heaven is Great; ~ Earth is Great; ~ Kingliness is Great. ~ In the cosmos there are four Greats, ~ And Kingliness constitutes one of them. ~ Man patterns after Earth; ~ Earth patterns after Heaven; ~ Heaven patterns after Tao; ~ Tao patterns after Innate Freedom.

—[25c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ There is something undifferentiated ~ That precedes the birth of Heaven and Earth. ~ Silent and still, ~ It stands by itself and never changes - ~ All-pervading and never in danger. ~ One may regard it as the mother of Heaven and Earth. ~ I don't know its proper name; ~ I address it as Tao. ~ Were I forced to name it, I would call it Great. ~ "Great" means "to go." ~ "To go" means "far away." ~ "Far away" means "to return." ~ Therefore Tao is great, ~ Heaven is great, ~ Earth is great, ~ The king is also great. ~ In the universe there are four greats. ~ King is one of them. ~ The measure for man is Earth; ~ The measure for Earth is Heaven; ~ The measure for Heaven is Tao; ~ The measure for Tao is tzu-jan.

—[25c40t] Tao Huang ~ Matter is formed from chaos. ~ It was born before heaven and earth. ~ Silent and void. ~ Standing alone, without territory, ~ Able to be mother to the world. ~ I do not yet know its name, ~ I call it Tao. ~ With reluctance I deem it to be Great. ~ Great refers to the symbol. ~ The symbol refers to what is remote. ~ What is remote refers to returning. ~ Tao is great. ~ Heaven is great. ~ Earth is great. ~ Kingship is great. ~ These are the four great things in the world, ~ Kingship is one of them. ~ Humankind takes its origin from earth. ~ Earth takes her origin from heaven. ~ Heaven takes its origin from Tao. ~ Tao takes its origin from Nature.

—[25c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ There was something unique manifesting from chaos before the birth of Heaven and Earth. ~ Remotely! ~ It stands alone without deviation! ~ Cyclically! ~ It moves without an end! ~ It may be called the mother of the Heaven and the Earth. ~ We do not know its eternal name but give it the name Dao. ~ Constrained to give a name, it may be called "Movement". ~ After moving it is called "Departure". ~ After departing it is called "Extreme". ~ To avoid remaining in the extreme, it may be called "Return". ~ Dao is superior; ~ the universe is superior; ~ the world is superior; ~ and the ruler is superior. ~ There are four superiors in existence among which the ruler is one. ~ Thus, the ruler should follow the law of the world. ~ The world should follow the law of the universe. ~ The universe should follow the law of Dao. ~ Dao follows its own law - the law of Nature.

—[25c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ There was something undifferentiated and yet complete, ~ Which existed before heaven and earth. ~ Soundless and formless, it depends on nothing and does not change. ~ It operates everywhere and is free from danger. ~ It may be considered the mother of the universe. ~ I do not know its name, I call it Tao. ~ If forced to give it a name, I shall call it Great. ~ Now being great means functioning everywhere. ~ Functioning everywhere means far-reaching. ~ Being far-reaching means returning to the original point. ~ Therefore Tao is great. ~ Heaven is great. ~ Earth is great. ~ And the king is also great. ~ There are four great things in the universe, and the king is one of them. ~ Man models himself after Earth. ~ Earth models itself after Heaven. ~ Heaven models itself after Tao. ~ And Tao models itself after Nature.

—[25c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Существует одна вещь, совершенная по смеси. ~ Она родилась прежде Неба и Земли. ~ О, как она безмолвна и бесформенна! ~ Стоит одна и неизменна, ходит кругом, и ей ничто не угрожает. ~ Она может быть для Поднебесной матерью. ~ Мне не известно ее имя. ~ Надеяю эту вещь прозванием "Дао" и через силу отыскиваю для него имя "Великое". ~ Великим называю уходящее, ~ уходит - значит далеко находится, ~ а далеко находится - значит возвращается. ~ Поэтому-то Дао и велико, велико Небо, велика Земля, велик и царь. ~ Во вселенной пребывают четверо великих, и место одного из них занимает царь. ~ Примером для людей является Земля, ~ для Земли примером служит Небо, ~ для Небес примером выступает Дао, ~ Дао свой пример находит в самости.

— [25с92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Существует нечто, из Хаоса возникшее, рождённое прежде Неба и Земли. ~ Беззвучно-пустотное, одиноко-неизменчивое. ~ Двигаясь по кругу, не устаёт и способно быть матерью Неба и Земли. ~ Я не знаю его имени, а иероглифом обозначу это "Дао". ~ Через силу назову его ещё и "Великим". ~ Великое назову скоротечным. ~ Быстротечное назову отдалённым. ~ Отдалённое назову обращающимся вспять. ~ Поэтому Дао - велико. ~ Небо - велико. ~ Земля - велика. ~ Человек также велик. ~ Во Вселенной пребывают эти четыре великих, и человек - одно из них. ~ Человек следует Земле. ~ Земля следует Небу. ~ Небо следует Дао. ~ Дао же естественно.

— [25с93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Вот Вещь, в Хаосе свершившаяся, прежде Неба и Земли родившаяся! ~ О безмолвная! ~ О безвидная! ~ Одиноко стоишь и не меняешься, окружаешь все сущее и не гибнешь! ~ Тебя можно назвать Матерью Поднебесной. ~ Я не знаю твоего имени, но, обозначая знаком, называю тебя Путем-Дао. ~ Делая усилие, называю тебя Великим. ~ Великое называю уходящим, уходящее называю далеким, далекое называю возвращающимся. ~ Поэтому Дао велико, Небо велико, Земля велика, Монарх также велик. ~ Таким образом, в мире четверо великих, но Монарх из них - на первом месте. ~ Человек берет за образец Землю. ~ Земля берет за образец Небо. ~ Небо берет за образец Дао. ~ А Дао берет за образец свою самоестественность.

— [25с94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Есть нечто, хаос образующее, прежде Неба и Земли живущее. ~ Беззвучное! ~ Пустое! ~ Одиноко стоит, не изменяется, в себе самом вращается без устали. ~ Можно считать его Матерью Поднебесной. ~ Я не знаю его имени. ~ Даю ему прозвище - называю Дао. ~ Подбираю для него имя - называю Великим (Высоким). ~ Великое называю уходящим, уходящее называю удаляющимся, ~ удаляющееся называю возвращающимся. ~ Поэтому Дао велико, Небо велико, Земля велика, Ван-царь тоже велик. ~ Среди границ есть четверо великих, и Ван-царь один из них. ~ Человек берет за образец Землю. ~ Земля берет за образец Небо. ~ Небо берет за образец Дао. ~ Дао берет за образец естественность (цзы жань).

— [25с95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Вот вещь, в хаосе возникающая, прежде неба и земли родившаяся! ~ О беззвучная! ~ О лишенная формы! ~ Одиноко стоит она и не изменяется. ~ Повсюду действует и не имеет преград. ~ Ее можно считать матерью Поднебесной. ~ Я не знаю ее имени. ~ Обозначая иероглифом, назову ее дао; произвольно давая ей имя, назову ее великое. ~ Великое - оно в бесконечном движении. ~ Находящееся в бесконечном движении не достигает предела. ~ Не достигая предела, оно возвращается [к своему истоку]. ~ Вот почему велико дао, велико небо, велика земля, велик также и государь. ~ Во вселенной имеются четыре великих, и среди них - государь. ~ Человек следует [законам] земли. ~ Земля следует [законам] неба. ~ Небо следует [законам] дао, а дао следует самому себе.

— [25с96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Вещество произошло из хаоса. ~ Есть бытие, которое существует раньше, нежели небо и земля. ~ Оно недвижимо, бестелесно, самобытно и не знает переворота. ~ Оно идет, совершая бесконечный круг, и не знает предела. ~ Оно одно только может быть матерью (самкой) неба и земли. ~ Я не знаю его имени, но (люди) называют его Тао. ~ Могущество его называется величием; ~ величие его - безграничным; ~ безграничное - бесконечным; ~ бесконечное - возвращением. ~ Тао велико, небо велико, земля велика, и, наконец, царь велик. ~ Итак, в мире существуют четыре величия, одно из которых составляет царь. ~ Земля несет людей; небо несет землю; Тао несет небо, и, наконец, естественность несет Тао.

— [25c97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Есть нечто, в хаосе завершённое, ~ Прежде Неба и Земли рождённое. ~ Пустотное! Безбрежное! ~ Само в себе пребывает и не меняется. ~ Растекается повсюду и не знает преград. ~ Можно считать это Матерью Поднебесной. ~ Я не знаю, как называть его. ~ Давая ему прозвание, скажу: "Путь". ~ Если придется дать ему имя, скажу: "Великий". ~ "Великое" значит "распространяющееся повсюду", ~ "Распространяться повсюду" значит "уходить далеко", ~ "Уходить далеко" значит "возвращаться". ~ Воистину: ~ Путь велик, ~ Небо велико, ~ Земля велика ~ И Господин человека тоже велик. ~ Во вселенной есть четыре великих, и Господин человека - один из них. ~ Человеку образец - Земля. ~ Земле образец - Небо. ~ Небу образец - Путь. ~ А Пути образец - то, что таково само по себе.

— [25c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Вещь в наличии формируется из бесформенного завихрения. ~ Родается прежде Неба-Земли. ~ В беззвучности, в безмятежности. ~ Стоит независимо, не изменяясь. ~ Двигается в циклах, не погибая. ~ Так можно осуществлять порождающее начало в Поднебесной. ~ Сущность моя не знает этому имени. ~ Обозначим его знаком "Путь". ~ Постараясь подобрать ему имя, определим его как "великое". ~ Великое определим как преходящее. ~ Преходящее определим как далекое. ~ Далекое определим как обратное. ~ Причинность: ~ Путь - великий. ~ Небо - великое. ~ Земля - великая. ~ Человек - тоже великий. ~ Средь сфер есть четыре "великих", а человек из них занимает первое место. ~ Для человека образец - Земля. ~ Для Земли образец - Небо. ~ Для Неба образец - Путь. ~ Для Пути образец - самопроизвольная естественность.

— [26c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ The heavy is the root of the light; ~ Tranquility is the lord of agitation. ~ Therefore the gentleman, in traveling all day, does not get far away from his luggage carts. ~ When he's safely inside a walled-in [protected] hostel and resting at ease - only then does he transcend all concern. ~ How can the king of ten thousand chariots treat his own person more lightly than the whole land?! ~ If you regard things too lightly, then you lose the basic; ~ If you're agitated, you lose the "lord."

— [26c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ HEAVINESS is the root of lightness. ~ Serenity is the master of restlessness. ~ Therefore, the Sage, travelling all day, ~ Does not part with the baggage-wagon; ~ Though there may be gorgeous sights to see, ~ He stays at ease in his own home. ~ Why should a lord of ten thousand chariots ~ Display his lightness to the world? ~ To be light is to be separated from one's root; ~ To be restless is to lose one's self-mastery.

— [26c03t] D. C. Lau ~ The heavy is the root of the light; ~ The still is the lord of the restless. ~ Therefore the gentleman when travelling all day ~ Never lets the heavily laden carts out of his sight. ~ It is only when he is safely behind walls and watch-towers ~ That he rests peacefully and is above worries. ~ How, then, should a ruler of ten thousand chariots ~ Make light of his own person in the eyes of the empire? ~ If light, then the root is lost; ~ If restless, then the lord is lost.

— [26c04t] R. L. Wing ~ Gravity is the foundation of levity. ~ Stillness is the master of agitation. ~ Thus Evolved Individuals can travel the whole day Without leaving behind their baggage. ~ However arresting the views, ~ They remain calm and unattached. ~ How can leaders with ten thousand chariots ~ Have a light-hearted position in the world? ~ If they are light-hearted, they lose their foundation. ~ If they are agitated, they lose their mastery.

— [26c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ The heavy is the root of the light, ~ The tranquil is the master of the hasty, ~ Therefore the sage travels all day, without leaving his baggage wagon. ~ Although enjoying a magnificent and comfortable life, he does not indulge himself in it. ~ How is it that a lord with ten thousand chariots belittles his own importance under Heaven? ~ Lightness necessarily leads to the loss of root, ~ Hastiness necessarily results in the loss of mastery.

—[26c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ The heavy is the root of the light; ~ The still is the master of unrest. ~ Therefore the sage, traveling all day, ~ Does not lose sight of his baggage. ~ Though there are beautiful things to be seen, ~ He remains unattached and calm. ~ Why should the lord of ten thousand chariots act lightly in public? ~ To be light is to lose one's root. ~ To be restless is to lose one's control.

—[26c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ We keep our weight, so we will not lose our roots. ~ We keep our serenity, so we will not lose our poise. ~ For these reasons when the Sage travels all day, ~ he does not part from his heavy luggage wagon. ~ He sits quietly, untouched by the magnificent views. ~ What a pity it is then to see the lord of ten thousand chariots losing his weight in front of his people! ~ If one loses one's weight, one also loses one's base. ~ If one loses one's serenity, one also loses one's poise.

—[26c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ Heaviness is the base of lightness, ~ Peace is the master of commotion. ~ Therefore, when the great men traveled, ~ They never let their carriages out of sight. ~ No matter how beautiful and entertaining the scenery was, ~ They acted as though they did not even see it. ~ How can the rulers of today behave more carelessly than anyone? ~ Lightness will cause the loss of the base, ~ Commotion will cause the loss of the master.

—[26c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE VIRTUE OF GRAVITY ~ Weight underlies lightness, quiescence underlies motion. ~ Therefore the Sage never loses his gravity and quiescence from day to day. ~ Though glorious palaces should belong to him, he would dwell in them peacefully, without attachment. ~ Alas that a king with many chariots should conduct himself with frivolity in the midst of his kingdom! ~ By levity he loses his ministers, and by inconstancy his throne.

—[26c10t] James Legge ~ Gravity is the root of lightness; ~ stillness, the ruler of movement. ~ Therefore a wise prince, marching the whole day, does not go far from his baggage waggons. ~ Although he may have brilliant prospects to look at, he quietly remains (in his proper place), indifferent to them. ~ How should the lord of a myriad chariots carry himself lightly before the kingdom? ~ If he do act lightly, he has lost his root (of gravity); ~ if he proceed to active movement, he will lose his throne.

—[26c11t] David Hinton ~ Heavy is the root of light, ~ and tranquil the ruler of reckless. ~ A sage traveling all day is never far from the supplies in his cart, and however spectacular the views he remains calm and composed. ~ How can a lord having ten thousand chariots act lightly in governing all beneath heaven? ~ Act lightly and you lose your source-root. ~ Act recklessly and you lose your rule.

—[26c12t] Chichung Huang ~ Heaviness is the root of lightness; ~ Stillness is the sovereign of restlessness. ~ Hence, the gentleman journeyed all day ~ Without leaving his luggage vans. ~ Though having imperial guards, ~ In leisure, he was as clear as day. ~ How could a ten-thousand-chariot king ~ Conduct himself lightly over all under heaven? ~ Light, he would lose his root; ~ Restless, he would lose his sovereignty.

—[26c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ The heavy (chung) is root (ken) to the light (ch'ing); ~ The tranquil (ching) is master (chün) to the agitated (tsao). ~ Therefore the sage travels all day, ~ Without leaving (li) his baggage wagon (tzu chung). ~ Although he has glorious palaces (yung kuan), ~ He avoids its sumptuous apartments (yen-ch'u). ~ How could the Lord of ten thousand chariots, ~ Conduct himself lightly in the world? ~ One who acts lightly loses his foundation (pen); ~ One who is agitated loses his master (chün).

—[26c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ If a person is serious-minded, it would hold down [his penchant for] flippancy [like roots are holding down upward growing plants]; ~ [A person's] Serenity controls [his inclination for] impetuosity; ~ Therefore, a gentleman is weighted down with Tao, day and night, like an army, burdened with its full load of [well-prepared] supplies, when it marches [for battles]; ~ Even if he is being tempted by grandeur, he shall still [adhere steadfastly to Tao and] stay aloof [on a morally high ground] as a swallow who nests high above the ground. ~ Does it make any sense, if a ruler of a country of ten thousand war-wagons takes the task of governing light-heartedly, only because he loves his physical self? ~ [A person's being] Light-hearted (frivolous) will result in the loss of his roots; ~ [A person's being] Impetuous will lead to the loss of his ability to master [even himself].

—[26c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ The heavy is the root of the light. ~ The still is the master of the active. ~ Therefore, the sage, travelling all day, never separates himself from the baggage-wagon. ~ Though there are splendid sights to see, he stays quiescently in his own place. ~ Why should a king of ten thousand chariots display his lightness to the world? ~ To be light is to be separated from one's root; to be active is not to be master.

—[26c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ Prudence is more stable than frivolity. ~ Rationality is superior to impatience. ~ Therefore, the sage always behaves prudently and rationally. ~ Even when successful, he is not carried away. ~ How could the king of a big kingdom rule without prudence? ~ Frivolity results in the loss of stability. ~ Impatience leads to the loss of superiority.

—[26c17t] Arthur Waley ~ As the heavy must be the foundation of the light, ~ So quietness is lord and master of activity. ~ Truly, ~ 'A man of consequence though he travels all day ~ Will not let himself be separated from his baggage-wagon, ~ However magnificent the view, he sits quiet and dispassionate'. ~ How much less, then, must be the lord of ten thousand chariots ~ Allow himself to be lighter than these he rules! ~ If he is light, the foundation is lost; ~ If he is active, the lord and master is lost.

—[26c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ The heavy is the foundation of the light, and quietude is the sovereign of activity. ~ This is why the sage travels throughout the day yet does not separate himself from his retinue. ~ So despite the presence of glorious scenery, he remains relaxed and detached. ~ How could one be the master of ten thousand war chariots and yet treat his own person lighter than all under Heaven! ~ If he treats it lighter, he will lose his foundation. ~ If he engages in activity, he will lose his sovereignty.

—[26c19t] Lin Yutang ~ HEAVINESS AND LIGHTNESS ~ The Solid is the root of the light; ~ The Quiescent is the master of the Hasty. ~ Therefore the Sage travels all day ~ Yet never leaves his provision-cart. ~ In the midst of honor and glory, ~ He lives leisurely, undisturbed. ~ How can the ruler of a great country ~ Make light of his body in the empire? ~ In light frivolity, the Center is lost; ~ In hasty action, self-mastery is lost.

—[26c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ Heavy is the root of light; ~ Calm is the ruler of haste. ~ For these reasons, ~ The superior man may travel the whole day without leaving his heavy baggage cart. ~ Though inside the courtyard walls of a noisy inn, ~ he placidly rises above it all. ~ How then should a king with ten thousand chariots conduct himself lightly before all under heaven? ~ If he treats himself lightly, ~ he will lose the taproot; ~ If he is hasty, ~ he will lose the rulership.

—[26c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ The solid must be the root of the light. ~ The still must be the master of the restless. ~ Therefore, ~ wise people when traveling all day do not lose sight of their baggage cart. ~ Although there are beautiful scenes to see, they remain quietly in their own place. ~ Should a lord of ten thousand chariots appear more frivolous than a simple traveler? ~ To be light is to lose the root. ~ To be restless is to lose the master.

—[26c22t] David H. Li ~ Earnestness is the foundation of frivolity; ~ serenity is in control of rashness. ~ Thus, a gentleman, in the course of a day, does not depart from serenity and earnestness. ~ He refrains from extravagance [in public] and lives plainly at home. ~ Why would the sovereign of a ten-thousand-carriage state govern the world with frivolity? ~ Frivolity loses foundation; rashness loses control.

—[26c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ Heaviness is the center of lightness. ~ Stillness is the master of commotion. ~ For this reason, ~ The sage may travel the whole day, ~ Yet stays centered, without leaving his heavy baggage cart. ~ Or he may enjoy a splendid view, ~ Yet stays serene, calmly transcending all outward pleasures. ~ Why should the lord of ten thousand chariots behave lightly before all under Heaven? ~ One who behaves lightly loses one's center. ~ One who behaves agitatedly loses one's mastery.

—[26c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ Heaviness is the basis of lightness, ~ The passing is the basis of movement, ~ Therefore the sage, even when traveling all day long, ~ Never abandons the baggage wagon, ~ Therefore the sage, even when surrounded by splendor and luxury, ~ Is shrouded in indifference that stems from serenity. ~ How can this great emperor, with a thousand chariots, ~ Move easily throughout his kingdom? ~ If he is light, he will lose his basis, ~ If he is hasty, he will lose his serenity. ~ Wang-Pi comments: ~ The light cannot bear the heavy; the small cannot contain the large; the sedentary controls the moving, the one who does not move from his place controls the one who moves from his place. ~ Therefore heaviness is the basis of lightness, and serenity is the secret of control.

—[26c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ What holds, what you can trust ~ Is the same as this quietness - ~ And it is light-hearted. ~ This quiet light-hearted silence ~ Is the key to being free from emotion. ~ The sage never abandons the Tao, ~ He never lets its weight out of his sight. ~ He may live in a fabulous house ~ But he never gets caught up wanting to - ~ And though there are always temptations, ~ He stays unswayed, and smiles. ~ So why is it that our rulers ~ Seem so bright, but are glib and insubstantial? ~ Losing the weight of the Tao ~ Means you lose your root; ~ And when you can't sit still ~ You lose the source.

—[26c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ Heaviness is the root of lightness. ~ Tranquility is the lord of movement. ~ That is why the sage is always accompanied by his heavily laden cart ~ When he travels all day long. ~ Though he has a luxurious life to enjoy, ~ He never indulges himself in it. ~ Why should a ruler of ten thousand chariots ~ Take reckless action to govern the empire? ~ Lightness leads to the loss of the root; ~ Restlessness leads to the loss of the lord.

—[26c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ The heavy is the root of the light. ~ Stillness is the sovereign of restless movement. ~ Therefore a virtuous man will not lose sight of his impedimenta during the whole day. ~ Although he has splendour, he stands aloof. ~ Unfortunately the great ruler of ten thousand chariots governs the country indiscreetly. ~ To act abruptly is to lose the trust of his officials. ~ To act restlessly is to lose his respect as a sovereign.

—[26c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ Weight anchors lightness, and peace controls turmoil. ~ Thus, the wise person travels always with heavy provisions, ~ Is indifferent, like a swallow, to all the glory and grandeur. ~ What if a king treats the world lightly? ~ Being light, he will lose his root in the world. ~ Being changeable, he loses peace for the society.

—[26c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ Gravity and Serenity ~ Lao Tze says, ~ Gravity is the root of lightness. ~ Serenity is the ruler of hastiness. ~ Hence the sage practices the Tao all day long, ~ leaving no serene mind and heavy attitude. ~ Though a king can have seraglios and harems, he has to avoid approaching them. ~ Regretful are kings nowadays, they are very powerful, having ten thousand chariots and riders; ~ yet their attitude is light before the eyes of the people. ~ Light attitude will cause the loss of their subordinates; ~ hasty mind will cause the loss of their thrones.

—[26c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ Heaviness is the basis of lightness; ~ Calmness is the controlling power of hastiness. ~ Therefore the Sage, though travelling all day long, ~ Never separates from his baggage-wagon; ~ Though surrounded with magnificent sights, ~ He lives in tranquillity. ~ How is it, then, that a king of ten thousand chariots ~ Should conduct himself so lightly in the empire? ~ To be light is to lose the basis; ~ To be hasty is to lose the controlling power.

—[26c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ Heaviness is the foundation of lightness. ~ Serenity is the lord of rashness. ~ Therefore the Sage who travels the whole day never leaves his heavily covered carts. ~ Though there are spectacles of splendor, he stays composed and aloof. ~ Why as a ruler of ten thousand chariots would he treat himself lightly in the world? ~ Lightness will lose the foundation. ~ Rashness will lose the lord.

—[26c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ Heaviness is the root of lightness; ~ Stillness is the master of agitation. ~ And so the Wise Person: ~ Travels all day, not departing from the heavy baggage wagon ~ although there are grand sights, he sits calmly aloof. ~ Why is this? ~ A 10,000-chariot lord, mindful of his self, takes the world lightly. ~ Light, then lose the Root; ~ agitated, then lose the mastery.

—[26c33t] Cheng Lin ~ That which is weighty has its source in that which is light. ~ That which is tranquil can subdue that which is disquiet. ~ Wherefore, the Sage always conducts himself gravely and tranquilly. ~ Though he may be surrounded by splendour and comfort, he is always reposeful and disinterested. ~ When the ruler conducts himself lightly, he loses the respect of his ministers. ~ When he conducts himself with disquietude, he loses the support of his people.

—[26c34t] Yi Wu ~ Heaviness is the root of lightness. ~ Tranquility is the master of restlessness. ~ Therefore, the sage travels all day without parting from his baggage wagon. ~ Although there are splendid palaces, ~ he lives transcendently at ease. ~ Why would a ruler of ten thousand chariots treat himself so lightly in the world? ~ Being light, one would lose one's foundation. ~ Being restless, one would lose one's mastery.

—[26c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ Frivolity should be anchored to solemnity. ~ Tranquillity should keep a tight rein on agitation. ~ Therefore, the sage carries out his daily tasks with gravity and equanimity. ~ He is oblivious to the honour that has been bestowed upon him. ~ Although he lives in luxury, he is unaffected by all the trappings. ~ How could any national leader behave in a cavalier fashion in governing the country? ~ In fickle frivolity, he will lose the foundations. ~ In great haste, he will lose control.

—[26c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ Centeredness is the cure for impulsiveness. ~ Serenity is the master of restlessness. ~ Knowing this, one of universal nature is placid and never departs from the center of his own being. ~ Though he may move about all day, ~ he never loses his poise. ~ Though he may be surrounded by splendor and comfort, ~ he is always dispassionate and undistracted. ~ For one with great responsibility, ~ to conduct himself lightly is perilous. ~ In frivolity, one's root is lost. ~ In restlessness, one's self-mastery could go with the wind!

—[26c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ The weighty is the origin of the weightless. ~ Stillness is the fountain of restlessness. ~ Therefore, the ruler journeys from morning until night and never separates himself from his heavy supply cart. ~ Although he is in a glorious atmosphere, he remains quiescent and above it. ~ How can a leader "with ten thousand chariots" take himself lightly before the world? ~ To take himself lightly is to lose the origin. ~ Restlessness means that the fountain is lost.

—[26c38t] Henry Wei ~ Gravity as a Virtue ~ Chung Teh ~ Heaviness is the root of lightness; ~ Quiescence is the master of hastiness. ~ Thus the Sage traveling all day ~ Will not stay away from his loaded cart. ~ Though glorious prospects are in view, ~ He remains serene in a transcendental atmosphere. ~ For what reason should it be ~ That a weighty person like the lord of ten thousand chariots ~ Would consider himself lighter than worldly vanities? ~ In making light of himself, he loses his ministers; ~ In being hasty, he loses his kingly command.

—[26c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ The heavy is the root of the light; ~ Stillness is the lord of bustle. ~ Therefore the prince, ~ Traveling all day, ~ Never parts with his baggage-wagon. ~ Even at a magnificent sight, ~ He remains at ease, unmoved. ~ How could the lord of ten thousand chariots ~ Regard his own body more lightly than all under Heaven? ~ If you act lightly, the root is lost; ~ If you bustle, the lord is lost.

—[26c40t] Tao Huang ~ The heavy is the root of the light. ~ Tranquility is the master of the restless. ~ Thus, the noble person will travel all day without leaving his seat. ~ Though the center of the highest authority, ~ And surrounded by luxury, ~ He remains clear-minded. ~ How could the king of myriad chariots treat his body with less care than he gives the country? ~ Being careless loses the foundation. ~ Being restless loses mastery.

—[26c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ Heaviness is the cause of lightness. ~ Serenity is the effect of restlessness. ~ Therefore, a commanding officer does not risk parting with his supply trains even for a single day journey. ~ Even though he had honors and respect from others, he stayed at ease and on high. ~ How could a ruler of "ten thousand chariots" (the King), take a risk lightly before the world? ~ To be light will then lose the effect.

—[26c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ The heavy is the root of the light. ~ The tranquil is the ruler of the hasty. ~ Therefore the sage travels all day ~ Without leaving his baggage. ~ Even at the sight of magnificent scenes, ~ He remains leisurely and indifferent. ~ How is it that a lord with ten thousand chariots ~ Should behave lightheartedly in his empire? ~ If he is lighthearted, the minister will be destroyed. ~ If he is hasty, the ruler is lost.

—[26c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Тяжесть составляет корень легковесности, ~ покой есть государь поспешности. ~ Вот почему Премудрый человек, даже когда он целый день идет, не разлучается с тяжелою поклажей. ~ И даже разместившись в царственных чертогах, он остается беззаботен и далек от мира. ~ Да и как может властелин десятка тысяч колесниц относиться к себе легковеснее, чем к Поднебесной? ~ При легковесности утрачивают корень, из-за поспешности теряют государя.

—[26c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Тяжёлое - это корень лёгкого. ~ Покой - это правитель движения. ~ Поэтому мудрец, странствуя повседневно, не отходит от гружёной повозки. ~ Хотя он владеет роскошными дворцами, в своём умиротворении он отстранён от них. ~ Может ли властитель десяти тысяч колесниц пренебрегать Поднебесной ради себя? ~ То, что лёгко, - не имеет корней. ~ То, что пребывает в движении, - утрачивает правителя.

—[26c93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Тяжелое - корень легкого. ~ Покой - властелин поспешности. ~ Поэтому совершенномудрый весь день в движении пребывает, не покидая той телеги, что в обозе. ~ Хотя бывает так, что он живет среди роскоши и блеска, он непременно выше их и их не замечает. ~ Так может ли правитель царства, в коем десять тысяч колесниц, пренебрегать покоем Поднебесной во имя собственного блага? ~ Если он пренебрежет - потеряет подданных. ~ Если он поспешит - потеряет правление.

—[26c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Тяжелое есть основа легкого. ~ Покой есть господин беспокойного. ~ Вот почему совершенномудрый человек, шагая весь день, не отходит от груженой повозки. ~ Хотя его и зовут во дворцы, он селится подобно свободно гнездящейся ласточке. ~ И что тут поделать, если хозяин десяти тысяч колесниц сам облегчает Поднебесную? ~ Если облегчает, то теряет основу. ~ Если спешит, то теряет царственность.

—[26c95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Тяжелое является основой легкого. ~ Покой есть главное в движении. ~ Поэтому совершенномудрый, шагая весь день, не отходит от [телеги] с тяжелым грузом. ~ Хотя он живет прекрасной жизнью, но он в нее не погружается. ~ Почему властитель десяти тысяч колесниц, занятый собой, так пренебрежительно смотрит на мир? ~ Пренебрежение разрушает его основу, а его торопливость приводит к потере власти.

—[26с96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Тяжелое лежит в основании легкого. ~ Тишина господствует над движением. ~ Хотя мудрец бывает занят целый день, но относится к своим делам внимательно и с большой осторожностью. ~ Хотя ему будет слава и внешнее величие, но он никогда не прельстится ими, ибо он стоит выше их. ~ Что случится с тем царем, который, имея 10 000 колесниц, презирает заботу о своей стране и думает только о своем удовольствии? ~ Презирающий заботу о своей стране потеряет лучших слуг - опору государства. ~ Где легкомысленное движение в народе, там царь легко упразднится.

—[26с97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Тяжелое - корень легкого. ~ Покой - господин подвижности. ~ Вот почему мудрец, проведя в странствии целый день, ~ Не отлучится от своей поклажи. ~ Даже обладая прекрасным дворцом, ~ Он сидит безмятежно, воспаряя привольно над миром. ~ Как может господин тысяч колесниц ~ Относиться к себе легкомысленнее, чем к царству? ~ Кто легкомыслен, лишится корня. ~ Кто спешит, потеряет в себе господина.

—[26с98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Тяжелое является корнем легкого. ~ Покой является владыкой подвижности. ~ Это дает: ~ Человек мудрости в движении до конца дней не забывает о связи легкого и тяжелого. ~ Хотя есть шикарные перспективы, живет спокойно, минуя их все. ~ Отчего же хозяин десяти тысяч колесниц считает, что для тела его Поднебесная легка? ~ Легкость ведет к потере основы. ~ Подвижность ведет к потере владыки.

—[27с01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ The good traveler leaves no track behind; ~ The good speaker [speaks] without blemish or flaw; ~ The good counter doesn't use tallies or chips; ~ The good closer of doors does so without bolt or lock, and yet the door cannot be opened; ~ The good tier of knots ties without rope or cord, yet his knots can't be undone. ~ Therefore the Sage is constantly good at saving men and never rejects anyone; ~ And with things, he never rejects useful goods. ~ This is called Doubly Bright. ~ Therefore the good man is the teacher of the good, ~ And the bad man is the raw material for the good. ~ To not value one's teacher and not cherish the raw goods - ~ Though one had great knowledge, he would still be greatly confused. ~ This is called the Essential of the Sublime.

—[27с02t] John C. H. Wu ~ GOOD walking leaves no track behind it; ~ Good speech leaves no mark to be picked at; ~ Good calculation makes no use of counting-slips; ~ Good shutting makes no use of bolt and bar, ~ And yet nobody can undo it; ~ Good tying makes no use of rope and knot, ~ And yet nobody can untie it. ~ Hence, the Sage is always good at saving men, ~ And therefore nobody is abandoned; ~ Always good at saving things, ~ And therefore nothing is wasted. ~ This is called "following the guidance of the Inner Light." ~ Hence, good men are teachers of bad men, ~ While bad men are the charge of good men. ~ Not to revere one's teacher, ~ Not to cherish one's charge, ~ Is to be on the wrong road, however intelligent one may be. ~ This is an essential tenet of the Tao.

—[27с03t] D. C. Lau ~ One who excels in travelling leaves no wheel tracks; ~ One who excels in speech makes no slips; ~ One who excels in reckoning uses no counting rods; ~ One who excels in shutting uses no bolts yet what he has shut cannot be opened; ~ One who excels in tying uses no cords yet what he has tied cannot be undone. ~ Therefore the sage always excels in saving people, and so abandons no one; ~ Always excels in saving things, and so abandons nothing. ~ This is called following one's discernment. ~ Hence the good man is the teacher the bad learns from; ~ And the bad man is the material the good works on. ~ Not to value the teacher ~ Nor to love the material ~ Though it seems clever, betrays great bewilderment. ~ This is called the essential and the secret.

—[27с04t] R. L. Wing ~ A good path has no ruts. ~ A good speech has no flaws. ~ A good analysis uses no schemes. ~ A good lock has no bar or bolt, ~ And yet it cannot be opened. ~ A good knot does not restrain,

~ And yet it cannot be unfastened. ~ Thus Evolved Individuals are always good at saving others; ~ Hence no one is wasted. ~ They are always good at saving things; ~ Hence nothing is wasted. ~ This is called Doubling the Light. ~ Therefore a good person is the teacher of an inferior person; ~ And an inferior person is the resource of a good person. ~ One who does not treasure a teacher, or does not cherish a resource, ~ Although intelligent, is greatly deluded. ~ This is called Significant Subtlety.

—[27c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ One who is skilled at travelling leaves no traces of his wheels or footsteps; ~ One who is skilled at speaking says nothing that can be found fault with; ~ One who is skilled at counting uses no tallies; ~ One who is skilled at closing needs no bolts, while it is impossible to open what he has shut; ~ One who is skilled at binding has no strings, while it is impossible to undo what he has bound. ~ Therefore the sage is always skillful at saving men, ~ And so no man is uselessly cast away. ~ (The sage) is always skillful at saving things, ~ And so nothing is uselessly cast away. ~ This is called the hidden wisdom. ~ Therefore the good man is the teacher of the bad, ~ And the bad man is the material from which the good man learns. ~ He who does not honour his teacher and who does greatly care for the material is greatly confused though he thinks himself wise. ~ Such is called yao-miao (subtle).

—[27c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ A good walker leaves no tracks; ~ A good speaker makes no slips; ~ A good reckoner needs no tally. ~ A good door needs no lock, ~ Yet no one can open it. ~ Good binding requires no knots, ~ Yet no one can loosen it. ~ Therefore the sage takes care of all men ~ And abandons no one. ~ He takes care of all things ~ And abandons nothing. ~ This is called "following the light." ~ What is a good man? ~ A teacher of a bad man. ~ What is a bad man? ~ A good man's charge. ~ If the teacher is not respected, ~ And the student not cared for, ~ Confusion will arise, however clever one is. ~ This is the crux of mystery.

—[27c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ Perfect deeds leave no tracks behind it. ~ Perfect speech leaves no flaws to find fault with. ~ Those adept in counting do not require counting chips. ~ Those adept in sealing require no door latches, ~ yet what is sealed cannot be opened. ~ Those adept in tying need produce no knots, ~ yet the strings cannot be untied. ~ The Sage who is adept in saving people will abandon no one. ~ He is adept in saving creatures and will abandon no creature. ~ This is known as the Tradition of the Light. ~ The perfect man is the teacher of the imperfect. ~ The imperfect man is the assets of the perfect. ~ Those who do not value their teachers, ~ And those who do not take good care of their own assets, ~ However clever they are, they are really lost. ~ This is a key point that is often not understood.

—[27c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ Skillful driving leaves no tracks. ~ Skillful talking contains no blunders. ~ Skillful calculating needs no instruments. ~ Skillful securing requires no lock, but cannot be opened. ~ Skillful tying uses no knots, but cannot be untied. ~ Therefore, the great men were always good at making all people useful, so no one was left out; ~ They were very good at making all other things useful, so nothing was wasted. ~ This is why they were considered to be genuinely wise. ~ So, the kind are the teachers of the unkind; ~ The unkind are the resources of the kind. ~ If a person does not value the teachers or the resources, ~ No matter how smart he is, he is completely lost. ~ Therefore, this is an extremely important wisdom.

—[27c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE USE OF SKILL ~ The good walker makes no dust after him. ~ The good speaker incurs no discussion. ~ The good reckoner needs no arithmetic. ~ The good keeper needs no bolts or bars, and none can open after him. ~ The good binder needs no rope, and none can loose after him. ~ The wise man is a constant and good helper of his fellows. He rejects none. ~ He is a continual good preserver of things. He disdains nothing. ~ His intelligence is all-embracing. ~ Good men instruct one another; and bad men are the materials they delve in. ~ Whoever, therefore, does not honour his teacher and cherish his material, though he be called wise, is yet in a state of delusion. ~ This is no less important than strange.

—[27c10t] James Legge ~ The skilful traveller leaves no traces of his wheels or footsteps; ~ the skilful speaker says nothing that can be found fault with or blamed; ~ the skilful reckoner uses no tallies; ~ the skilful closer needs no bolts or bars, while to open what he has shut will be impossible; ~ the skilful binder uses no strings or knots, while to unloose what he has bound will be impossible. ~ In the same way the sage is always skilful at saving men, and so he does not cast away any man; ~ he is always skilful at saving things, and so he does not cast away anything. ~ This is called 'Hiding the light of his procedure.' ~ Therefore the man of skill is a master (to be looked up to) by him who has not the skill; ~ and he who has not the skill is the helper of (the reputation of) him who has the skill. ~ If the one did not honour his master, and the other did not rejoice in his helper, an (observer), though intelligent, might greatly err about them. ~ This is called 'The utmost degree of mystery.'

—[27c11t] David Hinton ~ Perfect travels leave no tracks. ~ Perfect words leave no doubts. ~ Perfect accounts need no counting. ~ Perfect gates close without locks and so cannot be opened. ~ Perfect knots bind without rope and so cannot be loosened. ~ A sage is always perfect in rescuing people and so abandons no one, ~ always perfect in rescuing things and so abandons nothing. ~ This is called the bequest of enlightenment, ~ so one who possesses this perfection is a teacher of those who don't, ~ and those who don't possess it are the resource of one who does. ~ Without honoring the teacher ~ and loving the resource, ~ no amount of wisdom can prevent vast confusion. ~ This is called the essential mystery.

—[27c12t] Chichung Huang ~ A good traveler leaves neither ruts nor footprints; ~ A good speaker makes neither slips nor errors; ~ A good calculator uses neither wooden chips nor bamboo chips; ~ A good door-shutter has neither latch nor lock, ~ Yet, the door he shuts cannot be opened; ~ A good knot-tier has neither rope nor string, ~ Yet, the knot he ties cannot be untied. ~ Hence, the sage man ~ Was constantly good at rescuing men ~ So that there were no cast-off men; ~ As for things, ~ There were no cast-off goods. ~ This is called surpassing insight. ~ Hence, good men are good men's teachers; ~ Evil men, good men's wealth. ~ He who neither values his teachers, ~ Nor cherishes his wealth, ~ Though crafty, is but a big fool. ~ This is called subtle essence.

—[27c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ Good (shan) running leaves no tracks, ~ Good speech has no flaws, ~ Good counting uses no counters, ~ A good lock uses no bolts yet cannot be opened, ~ A good knot uses no rope yet cannot be untied. ~ Hence the sage is always good at saving people, ~ Therefore no one is rejected. ~ He is always good at saving things, ~ Therefore nothing is rejected. ~ This is called following the light (ming). ~ Therefore the good person, ~ Is the not-good (pu-shan) person's teacher. ~ The not-good (pu-shan) person, ~ Is the good person's capital. ~ One who does not honor (kuei) the teacher, ~ Or love (ai) the capital, ~ Is greatly confounded though knowledgeable (chih). ~ This is called the important mystery (miao).

—[27c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ A carriage which rides excellently does not leave any trace of wheel tracks; ~ A superior talk (speech) leaves no room for fault-finding and accusation; ~ An efficient strategy does not involve ostentatious planning; ~ A marvelously closed door, which though was not bolted, yet cannot be opened; ~ Splendidly fastened together ropes, with which though no knot was tied, yet cannot be disconnected. ~ For this reason; ~ A Sage is so proficient at saving people that he abandons nobody; ~ He is so efficient at saving creatures and things that he forsakes no one; ~ This is called "to glow with the brilliance" [of Tao]. ~ Therefore: ~ Good people serve as both teachers and models for people who are not good; ~ People who are not good are the stocks (capitals) for good people [to work with]; ~ The person, who does not respect his teachers, as well as the person who does not value his capitals, despite their cleverness, will still remain grossly perplexed. ~ The above fact illustrates how subtly and amazingly exact

—[27c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ Good walking leaves no track behind it. ~ Good speech leaves no mark to be picked at. ~ Good calculation makes no use of counting-slips. ~ Good shutting makes no use of bolt and bar, and yet nobody can undo it. ~ Good tying makes no use of cord, and yet nobody can untie it. ~ Hence, the sage is always good at saving men, and therefore nobody is forgotten; always good at saving things, and therefore nothing is wasted. ~ This is called illumination. ~ Hence, good men are teachers of bad men. ~ Bad men are the property of good men. ~ Not to revere one's teacher, not to cherish one's property, is to be on the wrong road, however intelligent one may be. ~ This is called the essential and the mysterious.

—[27c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ An able driver leaves no ruts and tracks. ~ An eloquent speaking is flawlessly fluent. ~ A smart counter uses no tools. ~ A superb lock cannot be opened, yet it has not bolts. ~ A good tie cannot get loose, yet there is no rope used. ~ The sage constantly saves people, so nobody is abandoned; ~ And constantly saves things, so nothing is wasted. ~ This is intelligent. ~ Thus, able people can be the teachers of incompetent people. ~ The failure of incompetent people can serve as lessons for the able people. ~ Ignoring the teachers and neglecting the lessons make even the smart people blunder. ~ This is an extremely important point.

—[27c17t] Arthur Waley ~ Perfect activity leaves no track behind it; ~ Perfect speech is like a jade-worker whose tool leaves no mark. ~ The perfect reckoner needs no counting-slips; ~ The perfect door has neither bolt nor bar, ~ Yet cannot be opened. ~ The perfect knot needs neither rope nor twine, ~ Yet cannot be untied. ~ Therefore the Sage ~ Is all the time in the most perfect way helping men, ~ He certainly does not turn his back on men; ~ Is all the time in the most perfect way helping creatures, ~ He certainly does not turn his back on creatures. ~ This is called resorting to the Light. ~ Truly, 'the perfect man is the teacher of the imperfect; ~ But the imperfect is the stock-in-trade of the perfect man'. ~ He who does not respect his teacher, ~ He who does not take care of his stock-in-trade, ~ Much learning though he may possess, is far astray. ~ This is the essential secret.

—[27c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ One good at traveling leaves no tracks or prints. ~ One good at words says nothing flawed or blameworthy. ~ One good at reckoning does not use bamboo tallies. ~ One good at locking up has no lock yet what is locked cannot be opened. ~ One good at tying up has no cord yet what is tied cannot be untied. ~ This is how the sage is always good at saving people, so no one is discarded, ~ Always good at saving things, and so nothing is discarded. ~ This is what is known as maintaining the light. ~ Thus the good man is the teacher of men who are not good. ~ Men who are not good are material for the good man. ~ But if they do not value their teacher, and he does not cherish his material, no matter how wise, one will become greatly lost. ~ This is called the "profoundly subtle."

—[27c19t] Lin Yutang ~ ON STEALING THE LIGHT ~ A good runner leaves no track. ~ A good speech leaves no flaws for attack. ~ A good reckoner makes use of no counters. ~ A well-shut door makes use of no bolts, ~ And yet cannot be opened. ~ A well-tied knot makes use of no rope, ~ And yet cannot be untied. ~ Therefore the Sage is good at helping men; ~ For that reason there is no rejected (useless) person. ~ He is good at saving things; ~ For that reason there is nothing rejected. ~ This is called stealing the Light. ~ Therefore the good man is the Teacher of the bad. ~ And the bad man is the lesson of the good. ~ He who neither values his teacher ~ Nor loves the lesson ~ Is one gone far astray, ~ Though he be learned. ~ Such is the subtle secret.

—[27c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ He who is skilled at traveling leaves neither tracks nor traces; ~ He who is skilled at speaking is flawless in his delivery; ~ He who is skilled in computation uses neither tallies nor counters; ~ He who is skilled at closing things tightly has neither lock nor key, but what he closes cannot be opened; ~

He who is good at binding has neither cord nor string, but what he binds cannot be untied. ~ For these reasons, ~ The sage is always skilled at saving others and does not abandon them, ~ nor does he abandon resources. ~ This is called "inner intelligence." ~ Therefore, ~ Good men are teachers for the good man, ~ Bad men are foils for the good man. ~ He who values not his teacher ~ and loves not his foil, ~ Though he be knowledgeable, ~ is greatly deluded. ~ This is called "the wondrous essential."

—[27c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ A skillful traveler leaves no track. ~ A skillful speaker makes no slip. ~ A skillful reckoner needs no counting rod. ~ A skillfully made door requires no bolts, ~ yet it cannot be opened. ~ A skillful binding has no cords or knots, ~ yet it cannot be untied. ~ Therefore, ~ the True Person is skillful in assisting people, and abandons nobody; ~ Is skillful in assisting things, and abandons nothing. ~ This is called "Following the Inner Light." ~ Therefore, ~ the skillful person is the teacher of the person without skill. ~ The person without skill is the material for the skillful person. ~ If you do not respect the teacher, ~ if you do not care for the material, ~ you are on the road to confusion ~ and your cleverness will not save you. ~ This is an essential principle.

—[27c22t] David H. Li ~ A good traveler leaves no trails; ~ A good speaker allows no slips; ~ A good planner needs no tallies; ~ A good carpenter needs no bolts in securing a door from opening; ~ A good packager needs no strings in preventing a knot from untying. ~ Thus, ~ the sage cares for everyone and abandons no one, ~ cares for everything and abandons nothing. ~ This is unrevealed wisdom. ~ Thus, ~ a good person serves as the teacher to a not-so-good person; ~ a not-so-good person serves as the mirror to a good person. ~ One who neither respects one's teacher nor cares for one's mirror, even if wise, will be bewildered. ~ This is the innermost intricacy.

—[27c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ The master in his action is so complete ~ that he leaves no trace behind. ~ The master in his conversation is so balanced ~ that he leaves no discord behind. ~ The master in his thinking is so original ~ that he depends on no external authority. ~ The master in protecting people is so skillful ~ that, without any visible means, he renders all attempts for invasion ineffectual. ~ The master in uniting people is so adept ~ that, without any visible means, he renders all efforts for disunity ineffectual. ~ Thus, the master, without abandoning anyone, is always good at empowering people ~ And, without abandoning anything, is always good at utilizing things. ~ This is the all-embracing wisdom of the Tao. ~ Hence, the virtuous is the teacher of the non-virtuous, ~ While the non-virtuous serves as the lessons for the virtuous. ~ If you value not your teacher or cherish not your lessons, ~ No matter how intelligent and informed you are, you are greatly deluded. ~ This is the essential, subtle truth of the Tao.

—[27c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ The good traveler leaves no tracks, ~ The good speaker leaves no doubt, ~ The good accountant needs no abacus, ~ The good builder needs no lock and bolt, ~ And the door he closes will not open behind him. ~ The good fastener needs no ropes or knots, ~ And it is still impossible to untie after him. ~ Even if people are bad, why should they be rejected? ~ Therefore the sage is always the good savior of the people, ~ And nobody will reject him. ~ He is good to all creatures, ~ He spurns nothing. ~ This state is called "to see and to come to the light." ~ Therefore, good people are guides to bad people, ~ And many people are like matter in good people's hands. ~ And the person who does not appreciate his guide, ~ And the person who does not love the matter in his hand, ~ All their success comes from blindness. ~ This is the main principle of the secret.

—[27c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ The sage who goes by the way leaves no traces ~ The sage who speaks the true law never slips up - ~ He never calculates what profit he can make from what he does. ~ He keeps out thieves with wisdom! ~ He's never robbed - ~ He makes sure the rules are binding, then no one can undo them; ~ He is aware of everyone, leaving no one uncounted; ~ He cares like a parent, and wastes nothing. ~ This is the essence of harmony. ~ So, a good man is a model for a bad one ~ And, misguided, he is touched by his goodness. ~ Not to follow a teacher here ~ Or to love his precious message ~ Is to lose the Way, however clever you are - ~ This is the essence of the matter.

—[27c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ He who is good at walking leaves no traces; ~ He who is good at speaking leaves no slips; ~ He who is good at counting uses no counting tools; ~ He who is good at shutting renders all efforts of opening in vain though he uses no bolts; ~ He who is good at tying renders all efforts of untying in vain though he uses no ropes. ~ That is why the sage ~ Is always good at saving people ~ And abandoning no one; ~ That is why the sage is always good at saving things ~ And abandoning nothing. ~ This is called the intrinsic wisdom. ~ Thus the good man is the bad man's teacher; ~ The bad man is the material from which the good draws lessons. ~ If honouring not one's teacher, ~ Or loving not one's material, ~ One is a big fool though he seems clever. ~ Here lies the vital secret.

—[27c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ He who knows how to travel does not leave any trace. ~ He who knows how to use words does not make any errors. ~ He who knows stratagems needs not any plans. ~ He who knows how to lock uses no bolts, yet what has been locked cannot be opened. ~ He who knows how to tie uses no rope, yet what has been tied cannot be released. ~ Therefore the sage always knows how to take care of people, and so no one is abandoned. ~ He knows how to take care of all things, and so no thing is abandoned. ~ This is what is called following discernment. ~ That is why good men are the teachers of bad men, and bad men are the sources of warning of good men. ~ Not to value the teacher, not to care for the sources, ~ this reveals foolishness, however clever one may be. ~ This is the essential secret.

—[27c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ A good walker leaves no trace. ~ A good speaker uses no blasphemy. ~ A good calculator uses no counting aids. ~ A good door-keeper needs no bars. ~ A good knot uses no strings. ~ Similarly, ~ A wise saver will part with no one. ~ A wise user will waste nothing. ~ It is the subtle insight that gives such abilities. ~ The wise person will be seen as the teacher for the unwise. ~ The unwise will be regarded as the resources for the wise. ~ One may be a mental genius, ~ But if he appreciates no teacher or other resources, ~ He is only a blundering fool. ~ The key is such teaching/learning.

—[27c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ Procuring Enlightenment ~ Lao Tze says, ~ The skillful traveller leaves no wheel track; ~ the skillful speaker makes no slip of the tongue; ~ the skillful reckoner uses no tallies; ~ the skillful closer needs no bolts, while it is impossible to open what he has shut; ~ the skillful binder uses no strings or knots, while it is impossible to loosen what he has bound. ~ In the same way the sage is always skillful at saving men, and there is no rejected person; ~ he is always skillful at saving things, and there is no rejected thing. ~ This is called 'procuring enlightenment.' ~ Therefore the man of skill is a master of he who has no skill; ~ and he who has no skill is the servant of he who has skill. ~ If one does not value his master, and the other does not love his servant, intelligent as they are, they might be perplexed.

—[27c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ A good traveller leaves no track; ~ A good speaker leaves no error; ~ A good reckoner needs no counter; ~ A good closer needs no bars or bolts, ~ And yet it is impossible to open after him. ~ A good fastener needs no cords or knots, ~ And yet it is impossible to untie after him. ~ Even if men be bad, why should they be rejected? ~ Therefore the Sage is always a good saviour of men, ~ And no man is rejected; ~ He is a good saviour of things, ~ And nothing is rejected: ~ This is called double enlightenment. ~ Therefore good men are bad men's instructors, ~ And bad men are good men's materials. ~ Those who do not esteem their instructors, ~ And those who do not love their materials, ~ Though expedient, are in fact greatly confused. ~ This is essential subtlety.

—[27c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ A good walker leaves no trail. ~ A good speaker leaves no grounds for blame. ~ A good counter needs no calculator. ~ A well-closed door needs no bolt ~ and still cannot be opened. ~ A well-tied knot needs no binding ~ and still cannot be untied. ~ Therefore the Sage is always able to save his people ~ and there is no one forsaken. ~ He is able to save all things ~ and there is nothing wasted. ~ This is called inherited enlightenment. ~ Therefore the good man is the teacher of the bad. ~ And the bad man is the material for the good. ~ He who fails to value the teacher and cherish the material, ~ Is utterly lost in spite of his knowledge. ~ This is called crucial subtlety.

—[27c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ Excellent traveling: no tracks or traces. ~ Excellent speaking: no blemish or blame. ~ Excellent counting does not use counting slips. ~ Excellent locking: no bolt or bar, but the door cannot be opened. ~ Excellent tying: no cord or rope, but the knots cannot be undone. ~ And so the Wise Person: ~ Always Excels at rescuing people, ~ and so does not turn anyone away. ~ Always Excels at resolving things, ~ and so does not turn away from anything. ~ This is called 'being clothed in Clarity'. ~ The Excellent person ~ is the teacher of the person who is not Excellent. ~ The person who is not Excellent ~ is material for the Excellent person. ~ Not to treasure one's teacher, ~ not to love one's material, ~ though 'smart', is a great mistake. ~ This is an important secret.

—[27c33t] Cheng Lin ~ Good conduct leaves behind no traces. ~ Good words afford no room for criticism. ~ Good mathematicians require no calculating apparatus. ~ Good lids need no bolts, and they cannot be opened. ~ Good fasteners need no cords, and they cannot be released. ~ The Sage, by his abiding goodness, saves mankind because he spurns no one. ~ He, by his abiding goodness, saves the inanimate creation because he spurns nothing. ~ This is called mutual understanding. ~ Wherefore, ~ the good man should be the teacher of the bad man; ~ the bad man should serve as a lesson for the good man. ~ When one fails to esteem his teacher, or the other fails to value his lesson, each is under a great illusion, though each may possess erudition. ~ This is called obscure conception.

—[27c34t] Yi Wu ~ Good walkers leave no track. ~ Good speakers leave no opening for criticism. ~ Good counters use no calculators. ~ Good closers use no bolts, but the doors cannot be opened. ~ Good tiers use no rope, but their knots cannot be untied. ~ Therefore, the sage is constantly good at saving people; no one is forsaken. ~ He is constantly good at saving things; nothing is abandoned. ~ This is called inherent enlightenment. ~ Therefore, good men are teachers of men who are not good; ~ Men who are not good are the good man's materials. ~ He who does not respect his teacher nor love his materials, ~ However intelligent, is greatly confused. ~ This is called essential subtlety.

—[27c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ A good traveller leaves no tracks. ~ A good debater never makes a slip. ~ A good strategist does not require chips to formulate a plan. ~ A good leader does not confine his men to ensure that they stay. ~ A good employer does not need rope to bind his men to their jobs. ~ Therefore, the sage always assists but never abandons people. ~ He always aids all creatures and he never forsakes them. ~ This is called "covert enlightenment". ~ While a good person could be a bad person's teacher, ~ A bad person could provide a salutary lesson to a good person. ~ A learned person remains a befuddled one if he neither values the teacher nor learns from this salutary lesson. ~ The subtlety of Dao can only be appreciated by an intuitive mind.

—[27c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ One who is good at running leaves no tracks. ~ One who is good at talking has no flaws in his speech. ~ One who is good at calculating makes no use of counting tools. ~ One who is good at shutting things makes no use of bolt and bar, yet no one can open what he has shut. ~ One who is good at tying makes no use of cords and knots, yet no one can untie what he has fastened. ~ One of natural, integral virtue is good at helping all people impartially. ~ Thus, no one is abandoned. ~ Because he is good at protecting and preserving all things, ~ nothing is ever thrown away. ~ This is called "embodying the light of the subtle truth." ~ Hence, the people on the Universal Integral Way are teachers of those off the Way. ~

However, if the student does not value the teacher, ~ and the teacher does not tend the student well, ~ though they both may be intelligent enough, ~ this leads only to further separation.

—[27c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ The best action is free from marks [either good or evil]. ~ The best words are free from stains [either good or bad]. ~ The best calculator is free from calculation and measure. ~ The best closure has no bolts, yet it cannot be opened. ~ The best knot has no cord, yet it cannot be untied. ~ Thus, the wise knows how to rescue men; hence, no one is excluded. ~ He also knows how to rescue things; hence, nothing is excluded. ~ This is called penetration to illumination. ~ Therefore, the virtuous is the model for the unvirtuous. ~ The unvirtuous is the origin of the virtuous. ~ If one does not appreciate the virtuous or cherish the unvirtuous, ~ Although one is intelligent, one is not free from confusion. ~ This is called the indispensable wonder.

—[27c38t] Henry Wei ~ Skillful Application ~ Ch'iao Yung ~ A good walker leaves no traces behind; ~ A good speaker leaves no blemishes for criticism; ~ A good counter does not use counting chips; ~ A good lock has no bolt, yet cannot be opened; ~ A good knot has no string, yet cannot be untied. ~ Thus the Sage (in his silent and subtle way) ~ Is always good in saving people, ~ Thereby leaving no people unsaved; ~ And always good in saving things, ~ Thereby leaving nothing unsaved. ~ This is called "Passing the light." ~ Hence the good man is the teacher of the bad, ~ And the bad is object lesson for the good. ~ He who does not honor his teacher, ~ Nor loves any object lesson, ~ Is lost in a great maze, clever though he may be. ~ Such is called Significant Subtlety.

—[27c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ Perfect going leaves no tracks. ~ Perfect speech has no flaws. ~ Perfect counting uses no counters. ~ The perfect lock uses no bolt; it is impossible to open. ~ The perfect knot uses no rope; it is impossible to untie. ~ Therefore the sage ~ Is always perfect in delivering people from distress. ~ Thus he abandons no one. ~ He is always perfect in delivering creatures from distress. ~ Thus he abandons no creature. ~ This is called following the light. ~ Therefore the perfect man ~ Is the leader of the imperfect man; ~ The imperfect man ~ Is the asset of the perfect man. ~ He who does not treasure his leader, ~ He who does not cherish his asset, ~ Though he may be wise, is greatly deluded. ~ This is called the fundamental secret.

—[27c40t] Tao Huang ~ A good traveler leaves no tracks. ~ A good speaker is without flaw. ~ A good planner does not calculate. ~ A good doorkeeper does not lock, yet it cannot be opened. ~ A good knoter does not use binding, yet it cannot be undone. ~ Therefore, the sage is good at his earnest demands upon people. ~ So no one is left out. ~ No talent is wasted. ~ This is called being in the tow of enlightenment, ~ And it ensures the good person. ~ For everything that is good is the teacher of the good person. ~ Everything that is bad becomes a resource for the good person. ~ No need to honor the teachers. ~ No need to love the resources. ~ Though knowing this is a great paradox, ~ It is the subtle principle.

—[27c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ The perfect traveler does not need a trail. ~ The perfect speaker does not leave any argument. ~ The perfect planner does not need a sketch. ~ The perfect door does not need a latch. ~ The perfect binder does not need string. ~ Hence Sage rulers always perfectly saved people, thus nobody was abandoned; ~ and always perfectly saved things, thus nothing was wasted. ~ This is called "blocking enlightenment". ~ The good person is the teacher of the bad person. ~ A bad person is a lesson for the good person. ~ Esteem the teacher and be aware of the lesson. ~ Otherwise even though one is intelligent, he will be misguided. ~ These are the marvelous functions of Dao.

—[27c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ A good traveler leaves no track or trace. ~ A good speech leaves no flaws. ~ A good reckoner uses no counters. ~ A well-shut door needs no bolts, and yet it cannot be opened. ~ A well-tied knot needs no rope and yet none can untie it. ~ Therefore the sage is always good in saving men and consequently no man is rejected. ~ He is always good in saving things and consequently nothing is rejected. ~ This is called following the light (of Nature). ~ Therefore the good man is the teacher of the bad, ~ And the bad is the material from which the good may learn. ~ He who does not value the teacher, ~ Or greatly care for the material, ~ Is greatly deluded although he may be learned. ~ Such is the essential mystery.

—[27c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Умелая езда не оставляет следа, ~ от умелых слов не остается крапин, ~ умея сосчитать, не прибегают к счетным биркам; ~ когда умело запирают дверь, не применяют никаких замков, но ее не отпереть; ~ когда с умением завязывают узел, не используют веревки, но его не развязать. ~ Так и Премудрый человек проявляет неизменное умение спасать других, и потому нет брошенных людей; ~ умеет с неизменностью спасать вещи, и потому они не брошены. ~ Это зовут внезапно набегающим просветом. ~ Поэтому-то добрый человек недоброму наставник, ~ недобрый же для доброго опора. ~ Когда не дорожат своим наставником и не шадят своей опоры, то пусть бы были даже и умны, но пребывают в тяжком заблуждении. ~ В этом заключается вся суть и тайна.

—[27c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Умеющий путешествовать не оставляет колеи. ~ Умеющий говорить не делает оговорок. ~ Умеющий считать не пользуется счётными палочками. ~ Умеющий закрывать двери не пользуется засовами, а то, что он закрыл, невозможно открыть. ~ Умеющий связывать не использует верёвок, а то, что он завязал, невозможно распутать. ~ Поэтому мудрецу часто удаётся спасать людей, не оставляя ни одного из них. ~ Это зовётся сокрытой мудростью. ~ Поэтому добрый человек - учитель злых людей. ~ Злой человек - материал для добрых людей. ~ Если не ценить учителей, если не любить материала для них, то даже умудрённые впадут в величайшие заблуждения. ~ Это зовётся глубочайшей утончённостью.

—[27c93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Ходить умеющий следов не оставляет, ~ В речах хороших не бывает оговорок, ~ Не пользуется палочками тот, кто хорошо считать умеет, ~ Тот, кто умеет запирать, и без замка запрет так, что не откроешь, ~ Тот, кто связывает умело, веревки не возьмет, но его узел не развяжешь. ~ Поэтому-то совершенномудрый готов всегда к спасению людей и потому никогда не теряет людей. ~ Поэтому-то совершенномудрый всегда готов спасать существ и потому никогда не теряет существ. ~ И это его глубокой просветленной мудростью зовут. ~ Поэтому хороший человек - учитель дурных людей, а дурные люди - сокровище хорошего человека. ~ Если человек не ценит свое сокровище, то даже если он многомудр, все ж пребывает в великом заблуждении. ~ Это называется важнейшей тайной.

—[27c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Искусный в передвижении не оставляет колеи и следов. ~ Искусный в речах не допускает изъянов и ошибок. ~ Искусный в счете не пользуется счетными таблицами. ~ Искусный закрывать не запирает на ключ, но открыть невозможно. ~ Искусный связывать не вяжет веревкой, но развязать невозможно. ~ Вот почему совершенномудрый человек искусностью постоянства (постоянным добром) спасает людей и таким образом не отвергает людей; ~ искусностью постоянства (постоянным добром) спасает вещи и таким образом не отвергает вещи. ~ Это и есть практическое осуществление просветленности. ~ Вот почему искусные люди - учителя неискусных людей, ~ неискусные люди - ученики искусных людей. ~ Не почитайте своих учителей, не любите своих учеников. ~ Хотя это и разумеют как большое заблуждение, в действительности [оно] есть требование сокровенно-тайного [Дао].

—[27c95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Умеющий шагать не оставляет следов. ~ Умеющий говорить не допускает ошибок. ~ Кто умеет считать, тот не пользуется инструментом для счета. ~ Кто умеет закрывать двери, не употребляет затвор и закрывает их так крепко, что открыть их невозможно. ~ Кто умеет завязывать узлы, не употребляет веревку, [но завязывает так прочно], что развязать невозможно. ~ Поэтому совершенномудрый постоянно умело спасает людей и не покидает их. ~ Он всегда умеет спасать существа, поэтому он не покидает их. ~ Это называется глубокой мудростью. ~ Таким образом, добродетель является учителем недобрых, а недобрые - ее опорой. ~ Если [недобрые] не ценят своего учителя и добродетель не любит свою опору, то они, хотя и [считают себя] разумными, погружены в слепоту. ~ Вот что наиболее важно и глубоко.

—[27c96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Нравственный человек не оставляет после себя никаких следов. ~ Красноречивый не сделает ошибки в своих речах. ~ Победоносный полководец не употребляет никакой хитрости. ~ Если что крепко заперто, то (оно), хотя и без замков, не отпирается. ~ Если что крепко связано, то (оно), хотя и без замысловатых узлов, не развязывается. ~ Мудрецы спасают погибающих и не оставляют нуждающихся в чем-нибудь без помощи. ~ Они всегда очень бережно сохраняют вещи и не выкидывают их. ~ Это называется двойным просвещением. ~ Отсюда нравственный человек есть учитель (или руководитель) безнравственных; ~ безнравственные люди суть орудие нравственного. ~ Кто не уважает своего учителя и кто не любит своего орудия, тот, хотя умен, очень заблуждается. ~ Это называется важным отступлением от Тао.

—[27c97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Умеющий ходить не оставляет следов. ~ Умеющий говорить никого не заденет словом. ~ Умеющий считать не пользуется счетами. ~ Умеющий запирать не пользуется засовом, а запертое им не отпереть. ~ Умеющий связывать не пользуется веревкой, а связанное им не развязать. ~ Вот почему премудрый человек всегда спасает людей и никого не отвергает. ~ Всегда спасает вещи и ничего не отвергает. ~ Это зовется "сокрытое преемствование просветленности". ~ Посему добрый человек - учитель недоброму человеку, ~ А недобрый человек - орудие доброму человеку. ~ Не чтить учителя, не любить орудие - ~ Тут и великий ум впадет в заблуждение. ~ Вот что такое предел утонченности.

—[27c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Совершенствование в движении - в отсутствии колеи и следа. ~ Совершенствование в речи - в отсутствии заминок и оговорок. ~ Совершенствование в числах - в отсутствии бирок и фишек. ~ Совершенствование в запорах - в отсутствии замка и щеколды, а открыть не смогут. ~ Совершенствование в завязывании - в отсутствии веревок и узлов, а распутать не смогут. ~ Это дает: ~ Человек мудрости постоянно совершенствуется, помогая людям, поэтому не отвергает людей. ~ Постоянно совершенствуется, помогая вещам, поэтому не отвергает вещи. ~ Это определяется: ~ Преемственность ясности. ~ Причинность: ~ Совершенствующийся человек является наставником для несовершенствующегося человека. ~ Несовременствующийся человек является средством для совершенствующегося человека. ~ Если не чтят своих наставников и не любят свои средства, то даже обладая знаниями, пребывают в великом заблуждении. ~ Это определяется: ~ Сущностная тайна.

—[28c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ When you know the male yet hold on to the female, ~ You'll be the ravine of the country. ~ When you're the ravine of the country, ~ Your constant virtue will not leave. ~ And when your constant virtue doesn't leave, ~ You'll return {to} the state of the infant. ~ When you know the pure yet hold on to the soiled, ~ You'll be the valley of the country. ~ When you're the valley of the country, ~ Your constant virtue is complete. ~ And when your constant virtue is complete, ~ You'll return to the state of uncarved wood. ~ When you know the white yet hold on to the black, ~ You'll be the model for the country. ~ And when you're the model for the country, ~ Your constant virtue will not go astray. ~ And when your constant virtue does not go astray, ~ You'll return to the condition which has no limit. ~ When uncarved wood is cut up, it's turned into vessels; ~ When the Sage is used, he becomes the Head of Officials.

~ Truly, great carving is done without splitting up.

—[28c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ KNOW the masculine, ~ Keep to the feminine, ~ And be the Brook of the World. ~ To be the Brook of the World is ~ To move constantly in the path of Virtue ~ Without swerving from it, ~ And to return again to infancy. ~ Know the white, ~ Keep to the black, ~ And be the Pattern of the World. ~ To be the Pattern of the World is ~ To move constantly in the path of Virtue ~ Without erring a single step, ~ And to return again to the Infinite. ~ Know the glorious, ~ Keep to the lowly, ~ And be the Fountain of the World. ~ To be the Fountain of the World is ~ To live the abundant life of Virtue, ~ And to return again to Primal Simplicity. ~ When Primal Simplicity diversifies, ~ It becomes useful vessels, ~ Which, in the hands of the Sage, become officers. ~ Hence, "a great tailor does little cutting."

—[28c03t] D. C. Lau ~ Know the male ~ But keep to the role of the female ~ And be a ravine to the empire. ~ If you are a ravine to the empire, ~ Then the constant virtue will not desert you ~ And you will again return to being a babe. ~ Know the white ~ But keep to the role of the black ~ And be a model to the empire. ~ If you are a model to the empire, ~ Then the constant virtue will not be wanting ~ And you will return to the infinite. ~ Know honour ~ But keep to the role of the disgraced ~ And be a valley to the empire. ~ If you are a valley to the empire, ~ Then the constant virtue will be sufficient ~ And you will return to being the uncarved block. ~ When the uncarved block shatters it becomes vessels. ~ The sage makes use of these and becomes the lord over the officials. ~ Hence the greatest cutting does not sever.

—[28c04t] R. L. Wing ~ Know the male, ~ Hold to the female; ~ Become the world's stream. ~ By being the world's stream, ~ The Power will never leave. ~ This is returning to Infancy. ~ Know the white, ~ Hold to the black; ~ Become the world's pattern. ~ By becoming the world's pattern, The Power will never falter. ~ This is returning to Limitlessness. ~ Know the glory, ~ Hold to the obscurity; ~ Become the world's valley. ~ By being the world's valley, ~ The Power will be sufficient. ~ This is returning to Simplicity. ~ When Simplicity is broken up, ~ It is made into instruments. ~ Evolved Individuals who employ them, ~ Are made into leaders. ~ In this way the Great System is united.

—[28c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ He who knows the masculine but keeps to the feminine, is ready to be the ravine under Heaven. ~ Being the ravine under Heaven, he is not parted from constant "De" (Virtue), ~ He returns to the simple state, like an infant. ~ He who knows the white (glory) but keeps to the black (obscure), is ready to be the (divination) instrument of under Heaven. ~ Being the instrument of under Heaven, he rests upon constant "De," ~ He returns to the ultimate truth. ~ He who knows glory but keeps to disgrace, is ready to be the valley under Heaven. ~ Being the valley under Heaven, he will have plenty of the eternal "De," ~ He returns to simplicity. ~ When the simplicity is broken up, it is turned into concrete vessels. ~ By using the breaking up of simplicity, the sage sets up government and leadership. ~ Therefore the perfect government does not arise out of artificiality.

—[28c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ Know the strength of man, ~ But keep a woman's care! ~ Be the stream of the universe! ~ Being the stream of the universe, ~ Ever true and unswerving, ~ Become as a little child once more. ~ Know the white, ~ But keep the black! ~ Be an example to the world! ~ Being an example to the world, ~ Ever true and unwavering, ~ Return to the infinite. ~ Know honor, ~ Yet keep humility! ~ Be the valley of the universe! ~ Being the valley of the universe, ~ Ever true and resourceful, ~ Return to the state of the uncarved block. ~ When the block is carved, it becomes useful. ~ When the sage uses it, he becomes the ruler. ~ Thus, "A great tailor cuts little."

—[28c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ Keep one's place however humble, while knowing one's real strength. ~ Stay low, like the rivers that gather water from the higher grounds. ~ Be that lowly river: ~ Depart not from the eternal virtue, ~ Emulate the unpretentiousness of infants. ~ Keep one's color, though it be black, ~ while knowing about the white. ~ Be an example for the world. ~ Be an example for the world, ~ Do not disgrace the eternal virtue, ~ Emulate the Eternal. ~ Take the blames from the world without complaint, ~ Yet never forgetting the need for honor, ~ Be the lowly valley of the world. ~ This way, the eternal virtue is fulfilled. ~ And simplicity is restored. ~ Simplicity is valuable. ~ From simple substances we have all our useful tools. ~ When simple men are used by the Sages, ~ They become great statesmen. ~ Great people never go out of their way to make themselves great, ~ Just as the great artists will not do superfluous things to draw the attention of others.

—[28c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ Knowing you can be strong, but choosing to be weak, ~ Is like being the creeks and streams of the world. ~ If you can be the creeks and streams of the world, ~ The DE will never leave you, and you will return to the natural state of a newborn. ~ Knowing you can be bright, but choosing to be dull, ~ Is like being the model of perfection for the world. ~ If you can be the model of perfection for the world, ~ The DE will not stray from you, and you will return to the unlimited state. ~ Knowing you can be glorious, but choosing to be humiliated, ~ Is like being the valleys and canyons of the world. ~ If you can be the valleys and the canyons of the world, ~ The DE will always be sufficient for you, and you will return to the plain and simple state. ~ Being simple and relaxed makes things useful, so the great men used it to lead the people. ~ Therefore, a great system is one that does not hurt anything.

—[28c09t] Walter Gorn Old, BECOMING A CHILD ~ He who, being a man, remains a woman, will become an universal channel. ~ As an universal channel the eternal virtue will never forsake him. He will re-become a child. ~ He who, being in the light, remains in obscurity, will become an universal model. ~ As an universal model the eternal virtue will not pass him by. He will go back to the all-perfect. ~ He who, being glorious, continues in humility, will become an universal valley. ~ As an universal valley the eternal virtue will fill him. He will revert to the first essence. ~ This first essence is that which, being differentiated, gives rise to innumerable vessels of life. ~ A wise man, by embracing it, becomes the wisest of governors. ~ A liberal government is that which neither disregards nor hurts anyone.

—[28c10t] James Legge ~ Who knows his manhood's strength, ~ Yet still his female feebleness maintains; ~ As to one channel flow the many drains, ~ All come to him, yea, all beneath the sky. ~ Thus he the constant excellence retains; ~ The simple child again, free from all stains. ~ Who knows how white attracts, ~ Yet always keeps himself within black's shade, ~ The pattern of humility displayed, ~ Displayed in view of all beneath the sky; ~ He in the unchanging excellence arrayed, ~ Endless return to man's first state has made. ~ Who knows how glory shines, ~ Yet loves disgrace, nor e'er for it is pale; ~ Behold his presence in a spacious vale, ~ To which men come from all beneath the sky. ~ The unchanging excellence completes its tale; ~ The simple infant man in him we hail. ~ The unwrought material, when divided and distributed, forms vessels. ~ The sage, when employed, becomes the Head of all the Officers (of government); ~ and in his greatest regulations he employs no violent measures.

—[28c11t] David Hinton ~ Knowing the masculine ~ and nurturing the feminine ~ you become the river of all beneath heaven. ~ River of all beneath heaven ~ you abide by perennial Integrity ~ and so return to infancy. ~ Knowing the white ~ and nurturing the black ~ you become the pattern of all beneath heaven. ~ Pattern of all beneath heaven ~ you abide by perennial Integrity ~ and so return to the boundless. ~ Knowing splendor ~ and nurturing ruin ~ you become the valley of all beneath heaven. ~ Valley of all beneath heaven ~ you rest content in perennial Integrity ~ and so return to the simplicity of uncarved wood. ~ When uncarved wood is split apart ~ it becomes mere implements. ~ But when a sage is employed ~ he becomes a true minister, ~ for the great governing blade carves nothing.

—[28c12t] Chichung Huang ~ Knowing his masculinity, ~ Adhering to his femininity, ~ He remained to all under heaven a brook. ~ Being to all under heaven a brook, ~ His constant virtue never departed. ~ His constant virtue never departed, ~ He again reverted to infancy. ~ Knowing his whiteness ~ Adhering to his blackness, ~ He remained to all under heaven a valley. ~ Being to all under heaven a valley, ~ His constant virtue was sufficient. ~ His constant virtue being sufficient, ~ He again reverted to the unhewn log. ~ [Knowing his whiteness, ~ Adhering to his blackness, ~ He remained to all under heaven a horizontal bar ~ Being to all under heaven a horizontal bar, ~ His constant virtue never changed. ~ His constant virtue never changed, ~ He again reverted to Infinity.] ~ When the unhewn log dispersed, ~ It became vessels; ~ When the sage man was employed, ~ He became chief of the officialdom. ~ A great tailor does no cutting. —[28c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ To know (chih) the male, ~ But to abide (shou) by the female (tz'u), ~ Is to be the valley (ch'i) of the world. ~ Being the valley of the world, ~ And departing (li) not from the everlasting power (ch'ang te), ~ One again returns to the infant (ying erh). ~ To know (chih) the white (pe), ~ But to abide (shou) by the black (heh), ~ Is to be the model (shih) of the world. ~ Being the model of the world, ~ And deviating (t'eh) not from the everlasting power, ~ One again returns to the unlimited (wu-chi). ~ To know (chih) the illustrious (yung), ~ But to abide (shou) by the obscure (ju), ~ Is to be the valley (ku) of the world. ~ Being the valley of the world, ~ One's everlasting power (ch'ang te) being full, ~ One again returns to the uncarved wood (p'u). ~ The uncarved wood disperses to become vessels (ch'i), ~ To be used (yung) by the sage as officials. ~ Therefore a great institution does not mutilate (ko).

—[28c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ [A pursuer of Tao] would, as a rule, keeps himself docile and accommodating, even though he is not ignorant of [advantages] of being valiant and intrepid; ~ Because he is [aimed at being a civil] servant of the world; ~ Since he strives to make himself useful to the world, the perpetual Te will always be with him; ~ Thenceforth, he is able to return to the infant-like [purity and clarity, i.e. the disposition of being totally unassuming and unbiased]. ~ [One who pursues Tao] shall settle for the commonly undesirable status of obscurity, even though he is not unaware of the popular desirability of being distinctive; ~ Because he wants to set an example to the world; ~ By setting a [proper] example to the world means that his adherence to the perpetual Te is steadfastly whole-hearted; ~ [In this manner] he will return to the state of [pre-creation] nothingness (Tao). ~ [Tao pursuers] were not unaware of the grandeur [of being prominent], still they chose to settle in obscurity; ~ They intended to do services for the world like downstream valleys [accommodating abundant waterways]; ~ Each of them accumulated Te [humbly] like a downstream valley receiving waterways, so such individual would consequently cultivate perpetual Te sufficiently; ~ Thenceforth, [this individual will have adequate Te] to return to Simplicity (the true Tao). ~ When Simplicity (Tao) emerges [in the world] it develops into a device (instrument); ~ When a Sage applies it, it serves well in governing people; ~ Accordingly, the great laws of a government shall not be truncated [for private uses].

—[28c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ To know the masculine, to keep to the feminine, that is to be the brook of the world. ~ To be the brook of the world is to move constantly in the path of Virtue without swerving from it, and to return again to infancy. ~ To know the white, to keep to the black, that is to be the model of the world. ~ To be the model of the world is to move constantly in the path of Virtue without erring a single step, and to return again to infinite nothingness. ~ To know the glorious, to keep to the humble, that is to be the fountain of the world. ~ To be the fountain of the world is to live the abundant life of Virtue, and to return again to the uncarved block. ~ When the uncarved block stops being uncarved, it becomes useful vessels. ~ When the sage uses them, they become officials. ~ Hence, "A great tailor does not cut."

—[28c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ Knowing what nobility is, the sage stays with the lowly, as if the creek of the world. ~ As the creek of the world he flows without leaving the general Te until he reaches a status as innocent as a baby. ~ Knowing what cleanliness is, he does not mind staying dirty, He acts as the norm of the world. ~ As the norm of the world, he makes no mistakes, until he approaches Tao. ~ Knowing what honor is, he tolerates insults. ~ He acts as the valley of the world. ~ As the valley of the world, he is filled with general Te, until he returns to simplicity. ~ Wood that has been naturally broken can be made into utensils. ~ When sages are employed, they can be officers. ~ Great systems do not need to be carved.

—[28c17t] Arthur Waley ~ 'He who knows the male, yet cleaves to what is female ~ Becomes like a ravine, receiving all things under heaven,' ~ And being such a ravine ~ He knows all the time a power that he never calls upon in vain. ~ This is returning to the state of infancy. ~ He who knows the white, yet cleaves to the black ~ Becomes the standard by which all things are tested; ~ And being such a standard ~ He has all the time a power that never errs, ~ He returns to the Limitless. ~ He who knows glory, yet cleaves to ignominy ~ Becomes like a valley that receives into it all things under heaven, ~ And being such a valley ~ He has all the time a power that suffices; ~ He returns to the state of the Uncarved Block. ~ Now when a block is sawed up it is made into implements; ~ But when the Sage uses it, it becomes Chief of all Ministers. ~ Truly, 'The greatest carver does the least cutting'.

—[28c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ He who knows the male yet sustains the female will be a river valley for all under Heaven. ~ He who is a river valley for all under Heaven never separates himself from constant virtue and always reverts to the infant. ~ He who knows the white yet sustains the black will be a model for all under Heaven. ~ He who is a model for all under Heaven never deviates from constant virtue ~ And always reverts to the infinite. ~ He who knows glory yet sustains disgrace will be a valley for all under Heaven. ~ He who is a valley for all under Heaven is filled completely by constant virtue, for he always reverts to the uncarved block. ~ When the uncarved block fragments, it turns into implements. ~ As the sage would make use of them, he stands as chief of officials over them. ~ Thus the great carver never cuts.

—[28c19t] Lin Yutang ~ KEEPING TO THE FEMALE ~ He who is aware of the Male ~ But keeps to the Female ~ Becomes the ravine of the world. ~ Being the ravine of the world, ~ He has the original character which is not cut up, ~ And returns again to the (innocence of the) babe. ~ He who is conscious of the white (bright) ~ But keeps to the black (dark) ~ Becomes the model for the world. ~ Being the model for the world, ~ He has the eternal power which never errs, ~ And returns again to the Primordial Nothingness. ~ He who is familiar with honor and glory ~ But keeps to obscurity ~ Becomes the valley of the world. ~ Being the valley of the world, ~ He has an eternal power which always suffices, ~ And returns again to the natural integrity of uncarved wood. ~ Break up this uncarved wood ~ And it is shaped into vessel, ~ In the hands of the Sage ~ They become the officials and magistrates. ~ Therefore the great ruler does not cut up.

—[28c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ Know masculinity, ~ Maintain femininity, ~ and be a ravine for all under heaven. ~ By being a ravine for all under heaven, ~ Eternal integrity will never desert you. ~ If eternal integrity never deserts you, ~ You will return to the state of infancy. ~ Know you are innocent, ~ Remain steadfast when insulted, ~ and be a valley for all under heaven. ~ By being a valley for all under heaven, ~ Eternal integrity will suffice. ~ If eternal integrity suffices, ~ You will return to the simplicity of the unhewn log. ~ Know whiteness, ~ Maintain blackness, ~ and be a model for all under heaven. ~ By being a model for all under heaven, ~ Eternal integrity will not err. ~ If eternal integrity does not err, ~ You will return to infinity. ~ When the unhewn log is sawn apart, ~ it is made into tools; ~ When the sage is put to use, ~ he becomes the chief of officials. ~ For ~ Great carving does no cutting.

—[28c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ Develop the strength of a man, but live as gently as a woman. ~ Become a brook and receive all things under heaven. ~ If you are such a brook then Virtue will constantly flow into you and you will become a simple child again. ~ Know the pure but live the life of the sullied. ~ Become a fountain to all things under heaven. ~ If you become such a fountain then you will have abundant Virtue ~ and you will return to the state of the Uncarved Block. ~ When the Uncarved Block is cut up into pieces, ~ it is turned into specialized instruments. ~ But the True Person makes use of it whole ~ and becomes the master of the instruments. ~ Hence, it is said, "The finest carver cuts little."

—[28c22t] David H. Li ~ Know steeliness, but prefer tenderness. ~ Be the brook to the world. ~ The brook to the world is never disunited from virtue. ~ It aims to return to infancy. ~ Know limelight, but prefer shadow. ~ Be the standard to the world. ~ The standard to the world never deviates from virtue. ~ It aims to return to the Infinite. ~ Know fame, but prefer humility. ~ Be the valley to the world. ~ The valley to the world is filled with virtue. ~ It aims to return to simplicity. ~ Simplicity dissipates when [a block] is carved into a vessel. ~ A sage diminishes when [he/she] is used as a leader. ~ Thus, a great system is not cut up.

—[28c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ Knowing the strength of the masculine principle, ~ Yet remaining in the lovingness of feminine virtue, ~ One becomes the stream of life to which other streams conjoin. ~ In thus becoming the stream of life for the world, ~ One comes to embody perennial virtue, ~ And returns to pristine innocence. ~ Knowing the purity of kosmic harmony, ~ Yet remaining in the impurity of worldly discord, ~ One becomes the standard of life by which other people can live. ~ In thus becoming the standard of life for the world, ~ One comes to reaffirm perennial virtue, ~ And returns to inner infinity. ~ Knowing the glory of public acclaim, ~ Yet remaining in the obscurity of personal humility, ~ One becomes the valley of life in which other people can repose. ~ In thus becoming the valley of life for the world, ~ One comes to fulfill perennial virtue, ~ And returns to undivided simplicity. ~ Undivided simplicity is reduced to mere usefulness through division. ~ Remaining undivided, the sage makes masterful use of the divided, ~ And is made the leader of an organization. ~ Thus, the great organization led by a sage is undivided and whole.

—[28c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ The person who holds on to masculinity but also preserves femininity ~ Will be a channel that draws the entire world through it, ~ And, being a channel for the entire world, will not lack eternal heroism, ~ And can then return to the purity of his childhood. ~ The person who holds on to white, but also preserves black ~ Will be a sign and an example for the world, ~ And, being a sign and an example for the world, will not lack eternal heroism, ~ And can then return to the infinite absolute. ~ The person who holds on to honor but also preserves humility ~ Will be a valley that absorbs the whole world into it, ~ And, being a valley that absorbs the whole world into it, will not lack eternal heroism, ~ And can then return to fundamental perfection. ~ Fundamental perfection, when divided up, will become vessels of many uses, ~ And these will be used by the sage, officers, and ministers. ~ However, in order to be great and ruling and supreme, there is no need for division.

—[28c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ Understand the thrust of the yang - ~ But be more like the yin in your being. ~ Be like a valley that parts to its stream; ~ Be like a stream for the earth ... ~ And channel it, so it flows - to the sea. ~ Be newborn - be free of yourself, be humble, be earthy, be a valley for the whole world. ~ Be a channel for the energies here - ~ weave them in a true and practical way so they can link up with the Way and become one again. ~ Oneness generates everything: ~ When the sage rules in the light of it, ~ He rules everything. ~ A wise man never tries to break up the Whole.

—[28c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ Though knowing what is masculine, ~ You are ready to play the role of female ~ And content to be a stream in the world. ~ Content to be a stream in the world, ~ You will be accompanied by the eternal virtue, ~ And return to being a baby. ~ Though knowing what is white, ~ You are ready to play the role of black, ~ And content to be a model of the world. ~ Content to be a model of the world, ~ You will be no longer at odds with the eternal virtue, ~ And return to the final truth. ~ Though knowing what is honor, ~ You are ready to play the role of the disgraced ~ And content to be a valley in the world. ~ Content to be a valley in the world, ~ You will no longer lack the eternal virtue, ~ And return to simplicity (Tao). ~ When simplicity gets shattered and becomes materialized, ~ The sage makes use of it to be the lord over other officials. ~ One should know ~ The greatest system is not separable.

—[28c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ Recognize the male - the yang, ~ guard the female - the yin. ~ Be a valley under Heaven. ~ Be a valley under Heaven and the constant virtue will not fade away. ~ One will become like a little child again. ~ Recognize the white - the yang, ~ guard the black - the yin. ~ Be a model under Heaven. ~ Be a model under Heaven and the constant virtue will not fade away. ~ One will return to the infinite. ~ Recognize the glory, guard the disgrace. ~ Be a valley under Heaven. ~ Be the valley under Heaven and return again to the uncarved block. ~ When the block is carved up it is transformed into useful wares. ~ The sage will use them with equal heart. ~ Therefore the great law will not crumble.

—[28c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ One keeps weakness while knowing what strength is, ~ And serves as the humblest brook for the world. ~ Being the humblest, one can receive best ~ Until one returns to be the weakest infant. ~ One keeps black while knowing what white is, ~ And serves as a basic model for the world. ~ Being the basic model, one can receive properly ~ Until one returns to the oneness without polar opposition. ~ One keeps disgrace while knowing what glory is, ~ And serves as the lowest valley for the world. ~ Being the lowest, one can receive enough ~ To return to the most original simplicity. ~ Followed by people, this simplicity can shape the world ~ The wise use it as the example for the government. ~ The big system is, therefore, an indivisible simple whole.

—[28c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ Keeping to Pristine Simplicity ~ Lao Tze says, ~ He who has manhood's strength and takes upon him the female's feebleness; ~ his inclusiveness is worthy of being looked up to as the world's dale. ~ Being the world's dale, absolute virtue will not leave him; ~ further he will enter into a baby's attribute. ~ He who has the reputation of the pure, and takes upon him the reputation of the unclean; ~ he is worthy of being looked up to as the world's model. ~ Being the world's model, absolute virtue will not be in short, further he will be able to attain extreme bliss. ~ He who has a glorious status, and takes upon himself a humble situation; ~ is worthy of being looked up to as the world's valley. ~ Being the world's valley, absolute virtue is sufficient in him; ~ he will enter into the state of pristine simplicity. ~ When pristine simplicity is broken off, it turns to appear in various utensil's shapes. ~ The sage who realizes the importance of pristine simplicity thereby selects the officers. ~ Therefore the great perfection shouldn't be cut into pieces.

—[28c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ He who knows the masculine and yet keeps to the feminine ~ Will become a channel drawing all the world towards it; ~ Being a channel of the world, he will not be severed from the eternal virtue, ~ And then he can return again to the state of infancy. ~ He who knows the white and yet keeps to the black ~ Will become the standard of the world; ~ Being the standard of the world, with him eternal virtue will never falter, ~ And then he can return again to the absolute. ~ He who knows honour and yet keeps to humility ~ Will become a valley that receives all the world into it; ~ Being a valley of the world, with him eternal virtue will be complete, ~ And then he can return again to wholeness. ~ Wholeness, when divided, will make vessels of utility; ~ These when employed by the Sage will become officials and chiefs. ~ However, for a great function no discrimination is needed.

—[28c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ Knowing the male and keeping the female, ~ One will become the river of the world. ~ Being the river of the world, ~ One will not digress from constant virtue, ~ And will return to being a baby. ~ Knowing the white and keeping the black, ~ One will become a model of the world. ~ Being a model of the world, ~ One will not deviate from constant virtue, ~ And will return to the infinite. ~

Knowing honor and keeping disgrace, ~ One will become the valley of the world. ~ Being the valley of the world, ~ One will be content with constant virtue, ~ And return to the unhewn wood. ~ Unhewn wood when scattered will become vessels. ~ The Sage makes use of them to become the chief officer. ~ Therefore the great system will not be cut apart.

—[28c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ Be familiar with Masculinity, ~ but watch over Femininity - ~ and become the Valley of the World. ~ Being the Valley of the World, ~ invariant Te will not leave you. ~ Turn back to being an infant. ~ Be familiar with what is pure and white, ~ but watch over what is dark and black - ~ and become the Pattern for the World. ~ Being the Pattern for the World, ~ your invariant Te will be constant. ~ Turn back to being limitless. ~ Be familiar with what is praiseworthy, ~ but watch over what is disgraceful - ~ and become the Valley of the World. ~ Being the Valley of the World, ~ your invariant Te will be sufficient. ~ Turn back to being an Uncarved Block. ~ When the Uncarved Block is cut up ~ then it becomes a government tool. ~ When the Wise Person instead uses it ~ then it becomes head of the government. ~ Yes: ~ A great carver does no cutting, a great ruler makes no rules.

—[28c33t] Cheng Lin ~ When a man, though aware of his manly strength, abides by a womanly meekness, ~ he is content to occupy the most humble position in the world. ~ When he is content to occupy the most humble position in the world, and when he always abides by his true nature, ~ he becomes again like a newborn babe. ~ When a man, though aware of his own purity, does not spurn the impure, ~ he is content to dwell in the lowest place in the world. ~ When he is content to dwell in the lowest place in the world, and when he always abides by his true nature, ~ he reverts to the natural simplicity. ~ The original qualities are destroyed when a thing is turned into some useful vessel. ~ The Sage, by preserving the original qualities, becomes the supreme ruler. ~ Hence, the great institutions are those which do not violate the nature of man.

—[28c34t] Yi Wu ~ Knowing the male and keeping to the female, ~ One will be the stream bed of the world. ~ To be the stream bed of the world, ~ One will not depart from the constant virtue ~ But will return again to infancy. ~ Knowing the white and keeping to the black, ~ One will be the pattern of the world. ~ To be the pattern of the world, ~ One will not deviate from the constant virtue ~ But will return to the non-ultimate. ~ Knowing the honor and keeping to the mean, ~ One will be the valley of the world. ~ Being the valley of the world, ~ One's constant virtue is complete; ~ One returns to simplicity. ~ When the uncarved block is divided, it becomes vessels. ~ The sage uses it to become a leader. ~ Therefore, the great system will not cut apart.

—[28c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ Knowing the excitement of proactivity, you settle for quietude. ~ Everyone will converge to you like water flowing towards the valley. ~ Thus, you are like the valley to the world. ~ Holding fast to the "absolute virtue" (Dao), ~ You try to return to the pristine innocence of an infant. ~ You know the benefit of the limelight, but choose to be anonymous. ~ You set this example for others to follow. ~ Holding fast to the "absolute virtue" unerringly, ~ You hope to return to the path of Dao. ~ Knowing the lure of fame and glory, you choose humility instead. ~ By your taking a low profile, everyone converges to you like water flowing towards the ravine. ~ Thus, you are the ravine to the world. ~ The "absolute virtue" is bountiful. ~ Finally, it returns to the naturalness of a raw timber. ~ The natural block once carved becomes useful utensils. ~ The sage utilises them as leaders. ~ The system set up by the sage should cause no harm.

—[28c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ Know that you possess the strong masculine principle, ~ yet abide by the meek, feminine principle. ~ Thus, become the flowing stream of the world. ~ As the flowing stream of the world, ~ never swerve from your true nature. ~ In this way, you return to the originality of a newborn babe. ~ Know the bright, yet keep to the dark. ~ Never wavering from the subtle truth, ~ you will conform to the pattern of an integral being. ~ In this way, you return again to the infinite. ~ Know how to be honored and glorified, ~ yet maintain unadorned plainness. ~ Thus, become the abundant valley of the world. ~ As the abundant valley of the world, ~ you realize the sufficiency of the constant, subtle virtue of the integral universe. ~ In this way, you return to the original simplicity of an uncarved block of wood with undamaged potential. ~ An integral individual, by preserving the original qualities of his being, ~ maintains his supreme, integral nature. ~ When the uncarved block is shaped into various single tools and vessels, ~ its original qualities are destroyed. ~ This is called "the great Oneness that cannot be divided."

—[28c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ To be aware of the positive, yet to abide in the negative is to be the abyss of the universe. ~ To be the abyss of the universe is to not deviate from real attainment and to remain like an innocent child. ~ To be aware of the white, yet to abide in the black is to be the chasm of the universe. ~ To be the chasm of the universe is to have sufficient real attainment, and to remain in the state of original non-differentiation. ~ When original non-differentiation is differentiated, things are produced. ~ Yet when the wise makes use of original non-differentiation, he becomes the leader of the people. ~ Therefore, great governing is non-discriminating.

—[28c38t] Henry Wei ~ Return to Simplicity ~ Fan P'u ~ He, who knows the Male ~ And yet holds on to the Female, ~ Becomes the ravine of the world. ~ Being the ravine of the world, ~ He is always in union with Eternal Virtue, ~ And returns to the state of the new-born babe. ~ He, who knows the white (Yang) ~ And yet holds on to the black (Yin), ~ Becomes a model for the world. ~ Being a model for the world, ~ His Eternal Virtue becomes unerring, ~ And he returns to the Infinite. ~ He, who is aware of glory ~ And yet holds on to ignominy, ~ Becomes the valley of the world. ~ Being the valley of the world, ~ His Eternal Virtue becomes sufficient, ~ And he returns to the state of virgin wood (simplicity). ~ The virgin wood, on being cut up, is used as implements. ~ Sages, who make use of the implements, ~ Become high officials and leaders. ~ The Supreme Ruler uses the wood without cutting it.

—[28c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ He knows the male, ~ Yet holds fast to the female, ~ And thus becomes the ravine of all under Heaven. ~ When he becomes the ravine of all under Heaven, ~ The constant Te will never desert him. ~ He returns to the baby. ~ He knows white, ~ Yet holds fast to black, ~ And thus becomes the model for all under Heaven. ~ When he becomes the model for all under Heaven, ~ The constant Te will never fail him. ~ He returns to the infinite. ~ He knows glory, ~ Yet holds fast to ignominy, ~ And thus becomes the valley of all under Heaven. ~ When he becomes the valley of all under Heaven, ~ His constant Te will be sufficient, ~ He returns to the uncarved block. ~ When the uncarved block scatters, it turns into vessels. ~ When the sage uses them, ~ He becomes chief of ministers. ~ Therefore great cutting does not split.

—[28c40t] Tao Huang ~ Understanding the male and holding onto the female ~ Enables the flow of the world. ~ This being the flow of the world, the eternal action abides. ~ Knowing that the eternal action abides is to return to childhood. ~ Understanding the pure and holding on to the impure ~ Enables the cleansing of the world. ~ With the cleansing of the world, ongoing action suffices. ~ When ongoing action suffices, it returns to simplicity. ~ Understanding the white and holding on to the black ~ Enables the formation of the world. ~ Being the formation of the world, ongoing action does not stray. ~ When ongoing action does not stray, it returns to the infinite. ~ This simplicity takes shape as a mechanism. ~ The sage makes it the head ruler. ~ Great ruling never divides.

—[28c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ Know what is the Male - Positive and know what is the Female - Negative. ~ Be a servant of the world, be a servant of the world, by never departing from virtues in order to lead the world to return to the state of innocent infancy. ~ Know what is known and reserve what is unknown. ~ Be a model of the world, be a model of the world, by never failing to attain virtues in order to lead the world to return to a state of "void" - trouble free. ~ Know what is honorable and know what is dishonorable. ~ Be the destiny of the world, be the destiny of the world, by constantly accumulating virtues in order to return again to purity Pure Matter. ~ Ever since Pure Matter purity was changed into civilization, ~ Sage rulers have used officials as the instruments of rule. ~ The superior system of rule may exercise no division.

—[28c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ He who knows the male and keeps to the female ~ Becomes the ravine of the world. ~ Being the ravine of the world, ~ He will never depart from eternal virtue, ~ But returns to the state of infancy. ~ He who knows the white and yet keeps to the black ~ Becomes the model for the world. ~ Being the model for the world, ~ He will never deviate from eternal virtue, ~ But returns to the state of the non-ultimate. ~ He who knows glory but keeps to humility ~ Becomes the valley of the world. ~ Being the valley of the world, ~ He will be proficient in eternal virtue, ~ And returns to the state of simplicity (uncarved wood). ~ When the uncarved wood is broken up, it is turned into concrete things. ~ But when the sage uses it, he becomes the leading official. ~ Therefore the great ruler does not cut up.

—[28c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Кто, зная о своем мужском начале, сберегает в себе женское, становится ущельем Поднебесной? ~ А став ущельем Поднебесной, не разлучается с неизблемою добродетелью и возвращается к младенцу. ~ Кто, зная, что он светел, сберегает свою темноту, становится для Поднебесной образцом. ~ А став для Поднебесной образцом, не вносит изменения в неизблемую добродетель и возвращается к бескрайности. ~ Кто, зная что он славен, сберегает свою опозоренность, становится долиной Поднебесной. ~ А став долиной Поднебесной, преисполняется неизблемою добродетелью и возвращается к тому, что первоначально. ~ Первоначальное же рассыпается на чаши. ~ Когда Премудрый человек для них находит применение, то становится главой чинов. ~ Великое кроют не разрезая.

—[28c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Познав мужское, сохраняй и женское, становясь ложиной Поднебесной. ~ Будь ложиной Поднебесной, - тогда постоянная Благодать не покинет тебя, и вернешься в состояние новорожденного. ~ Познав белое, сохраняй и черное, становясь образчиком Поднебесной. ~ Будь образчиком Поднебесной, - тогда в постоянной Благодати не будет недостатка, и вернешься к Беспредельному. ~ Познав славу, сохраняй безвестность, становясь долиной Поднебесной. ~ Будь долиной Поднебесной, - тогда постоянная Благодать будет в избытке, и вернешься к изначальной простоте. ~ Когда изначальная простота рассеивается, то возникают инструменты. ~ Мудрец использует их и становится правителем чиновников. ~ Поэтому даже великие уложения не несут вреда.

—[28c93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Знай мужественность свою и женственность свою храни, ~ Тогда долиной пустоты для Поднебесной станешь ты. ~ Долиною для Поднебесной став, ты не лишишься этого вечного обретения. ~ Тогда ты вновь вернешься к состоянию младенца. ~ Знай белое свое и черное свое блюди, ~ Тогда бессменным образцом для Поднебесной станешь ты. ~ Когда ты станешь образцом для Поднебесной, ~ Благая Сила-Дэ у тебя не убудет и ты снова вернешься к Беспредельному. ~ Знай славу свою и позор свой храни, ~ Тогда ложбиною пустой для Поднебесной станешь ты. ~ Ложбиною пустоты для Поднебесной став, ~ Ты сделаешь достаточной свою Благую Силу-Дэ и вновь вернешься к изначальной простоте-первоначальности. ~ Первоначальность рассеивается, и появляются орудия. ~ Совершенные мудрецы используют их и становятся начальниками чиновников. ~ Поэтому Великий Порядок не может понести ущерб.

—[28c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Кто знает свое женское, хранит свое мужское, становится ложбиной Поднебесной. ~ Ставшего ложбиной Поднебесной постоянное Дэ не оставляет и возвращает в

[состояние] младенца. ~ Кто знает свое белое, хранит свое черное, становится образцом для Поднебесной. ~ Ставшему образцом Поднебесной постоянное Дэ не наносит вреда и возвращает в беспредельное. ~ Кто знает свою славу, хранит свой позор, становится руслом Поднебесной. ~ Ставшим руслом Поднебесной постоянное Дэ овладевает во всей полноте и возвращает в духовную простоту (пу). ~ Духовная простота рассеивается и становится правилом-предметом. ~ Совершенномудрый человек использует его и становится чиновным вождем. ~ Вот почему Великое правление не разрушается.

—[28с95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Кто, зная свою храбрость, сохраняет скромность, тот, [подобно] горному ручью, становится [главным] в стране. ~ Кто стал главным в стране, тот не покидает постоянное дэ и возвращается к состоянию младенца. ~ Кто, зная праздничное, сохраняет для себя будничное, тот становится примером для всех. ~ Кто стал примером для всех, тот не отрывается от постоянного дэ и возвращается к изначальному. ~ Кто, зная свою славу, сохраняет для себя безвестность, тот становится главным в стране. ~ Кто стал главным в стране, тот достигает совершенства в постоянном дэ и возвращается к естественности. ~ Когда естественность распадается, она превращается в средство, при помощи которого совершенномудрый становится вождем и великий порядок не разрушается.

—[28с96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Тот, кто знает свою силу и сохраняет свою слабость, делается долиной вселенной. ~ Когда он будет долиной вселенной, то в нем будет пребывать вечная добродетель. ~ Человек вторично возвращается в состояние младенца (Тао). ~ Кто знает глубину своего просвещения и остается в невежестве, тот делается примером всего мира. ~ Кто будет примером всего мира, тот не изменит вечной добродетели и возвратится к совершенству (Тао): он познает славу Его. ~ Находясь в презрении, он делается долиной вселенной. ~ Кто долина вселенной, тот будет доволен только добродетелью и возвратится в совершенную простоту. ~ Когда эта простота будет удалена, то из него выйдет превосходный сосуд. ~ Если святой муж употребит его, то делается начальником. ~ Вот почему великое установление никогда не уничтожится.

—[28с97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Знай свое мужское, но блюди свое женское: ~ Станешь ущельем Поднебесного мира. ~ Если уподобишься ущелью мира, ~ Превечное Совершенство не оставит тебя. ~ Тогда будешь как новорожденный младенец. ~ Знай свое светлое, но блюди свое темное: ~ Станешь образцом для Поднебесного мира. ~ Если станешь образцом для мира, ~ Превечное Совершенство не потерпит ущерба. ~ Тогда вернешься к Беспредельному. ~ Зная свою славу, но блюдя себя в умалении, ~ Станешь долиной Поднебесного мира. ~ Если уподобишься долине мира, ~ Превечное Совершенство будет в достатке. ~ Тогда будешь как Цельный Ствол. ~ Когда Цельный Ствол рубят, появляются предметы; ~ А пользование премудрого таково, что он встает во главе чинов: ~ Великий резчик ничего не разрезает.

—[28с98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Осознавая свою мужскую асимметрию, удерживай свою женскую асимметрию, - и станешь руслом ручья для нисхождения Небес. ~ Став руслом ручья для нисхождения Небес, не будешь терять связь с Потенцией постоянства; вернувшись, придешь в состояние ребенка. ~ Осознавая белое в себе, руководствуйся черным в себе, - станешь моделью для нисхождения Небес. ~ Став моделью для нисхождения Небес, не допустишь чрезмерности в Потенции постоянства; ~ вернувшись, придешь в состояние Отсутствия пределов. ~ Осознавая благородное в себе, руководствуйся низким в себе, - и станешь долиной для нисхождения Небес. ~ Если станешь долиной для нисхождения Небес, тогда Потенции постоянства будет достаточно; ~ вернувшись, придешь в состояние необделанного куска дерева. ~ В результате воздействия на целостную простоту дерева получается утварь. ~ Применяя это, человек мудрости становится властителем функций. ~ Причинность: ~ В большом порядке нет разделения.

—[29c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ For those who would like to take control of the world and act on it - ~ I see that with this they simply will not succeed. ~ The world is a sacred vessel; ~ It is not something that can be acted upon. ~ Those who act on it destroy it; ~ Those who hold on to it lose it. ~ With things - some go forward, others follow; ~ Some are hot, others submissive and weak; ~ Some rise up while others fall down. ~ Therefore the Sage: ~ Rejects the extreme, the excessive, and the extravagant.

—[29c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ DOES anyone want to take the world and do what he wants with it? ~ I do not see how he can succeed. ~ The world is a sacred vessel, which must not be tampered with or grabbed after. ~ To tamper with it is to spoil it, and to grasp it is to lose it. ~ In fact, for all things there is a time for going ahead, and a time for following behind; ~ A time for slow-breathing and a time for fast-breathing; ~ A time to grow in strength and a time to decay; ~ A time to be up and a time to be down. ~ Therefore, the Sage avoids all extremes, excesses and extravagances.

—[29c03t] D. C. Lau ~ Whoever takes the empire and wishes to do anything to it I see will have no respite. ~ The empire is a sacred vessel and nothing should be done to it. ~ Whoever does anything to it will ruin it; ~ whoever lays hold of it will lose it. ~ Hence some things lead and some follow; ~ Some breathe gently and some breathe hard; ~ Some are strong and some are weak; ~ Some destroy and some are destroyed. ~ Therefore the sage avoids excess, extravagance, and arrogance.

—[29c04t] R. L. Wing ~ Those who would take hold of the world and act on it, Never, I notice, succeed. ~ The world is a mysterious instrument, ~ Not made to be handled. ~ Those who act on it, spoil it. ~ Those who seize it, lose it. ~ So, in Natural Law ~ Some lead, some follow; ~ Some agitate, some remain silent; ~ Some are firm, some are weak; ~ Some carry on, some lose heart. ~ Thus, Evolved Individuals Avoid extremes, Avoid extravagance, Avoid excess.

—[29c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ He who desires to govern under Heaven and build up achievements will not succeed, which I assert. ~ "The under Heaven," which is a queer thing, cannot be handled arbitrarily. ~ He who acts arbitrarily will harm it, ~ He who holds on to it will lose it. ~ Therefore of all creatures (in themselves) ~ some lead and some follow, ~ some breathe and some blow, ~ some are strong and some weak, ~ some are baffled and some destroyed. ~ For this reason, the sage should discard the extremes, the extravagant and the excessive.

—[29c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ Do you think you can take over the universe and improve it? ~ I do not believe it can be done. ~ The universe is sacred. ~ You cannot improve it. ~ If you try to change it, you will ruin it. ~ If you try to hold it, you will lose it. ~ So sometimes things are ahead and sometimes they are behind; ~ Sometimes breathing is hard, sometimes it comes easily; ~ Sometimes there is strength and sometimes weakness; ~ Sometimes one is up and sometimes down. ~ Therefore the sage avoids extremes, excesses, and complacency.

—[29c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ Someone who sets out to win the world and contrives to make his way will never make it. ~ The world is holy, and is beyond contrivance and possession. ~ He who contrives to win will only lose. ~ He who only aspires to possess will be dispossessed. ~ The Sage never contrives to do anything and so he fails in nothing. ~ He never possesses anything and so he never loses anything. ~ Among the living things, some lead, while others follow. ~ Some sigh, while others shout. ~ Some display their strengths, while others show their weaknesses. ~ Some lend support, while others destroy. ~ In contrast, the Sage will discard the excessive, the extravagant, and the extreme.

—[29c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ Whoever wants to fiddle with the world for his own purposes, ~ I expect that he will fail. ~ The world is something sacred that cannot be fiddled with. ~ Whoever fiddles with it will ruin it, whoever obtains it will lose it. ~ Therefore, among the things in the world, some go first, ~ some follow behind; ~ Some are slow, some are fast; ~ Some are strong, some are weak; ~ Some are helpful, some are destructive. ~ So, the great men removed the excess, the extra, and the extreme.

—[29c09t] Walter Gorn Old, NON-ACTION ~ When a man who wishes to reform the world takes it in hand, I perceive that there will be no end to it! ~ Spiritual vessels are not fashioned in the world. ~ Whoever makes destroys; whoever grasps loses. ~ For perforce if one advances another is left behind; if one blows hot another will blow cold; if one be strengthened another will be weakened; if one be supported another will be undermined. ~ Therefore the Sage gives up all enthusiasm, levity, and pomp.

—[29c10t] James Legge ~ If any one should wish to get the kingdom for himself, and to effect this by what he does, I see that he will not succeed. ~ The kingdom is a spirit-like thing, and cannot be got by active doing. ~ He who would so win it destroys it; ~ he who would hold it in his grasp loses it. ~ The course and nature of things is such that ~ What was in front is now behind; ~ What warmed anon we freezing find. ~ Strength is of weakness oft the spoil; ~ The store in ruins mocks our toil. ~ Hence the sage puts away excessive effort, extravagance, and easy indulgence.

—[29c11t] David Hinton ~ Longing to take hold of all beneath heaven and improve it... ~ I've seen such dreams invariably fail. ~ All beneath heaven is a sacred vessel, ~ something beyond all improvement. ~ Try to improve it and you ruin it. ~ Try to hold it and you lose it. ~ For things sometimes lead and sometimes follow, ~ sometimes sigh and sometimes storm, ~ sometimes strengthen and sometimes weaken, ~ sometimes kill and sometimes die. ~ And so the sage steers clear of extremes, clear of extravagance, clear of exaltation.

—[29c12t] Chichung Huang ~ He who wishes to win all under heaven, ~ And act upon them - ~ In my view, he cannot prevail. ~ All under heaven are sacred vessels ~ That cannot be acted upon. ~ He who acts upon them ruins them; ~ He who holds on to them loses them. ~ For people - ~ Some walk; some follow; ~ Some blow warm; some blow cold; ~ Some are strong; some weak; ~ Some safe; some in danger. ~ Hence, the sage man ~ Abandoned excessiveness; ~ Abandoned arrogance; ~ Abandoned extravagance.

—[29c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ One who desires to take the world and act (wei) upon it, ~ I see that it cannot be done. ~ The world (tien hsia) is a spirit vessel (shen ch'i), ~ Which cannot be acted (wei) upon. ~ One who acts (wei) on it fails, ~ One who holds on to it loses (shih). ~ Therefore things either move forward or follow behind; ~ They blow hot or blow cold; ~ They are strong (ch'iang) or weak; ~ They get on or they get off. ~ Therefore the sage gets rid of over-doing, ~ Gets rid of extravagances, ~ Gets rid of excesses.

—[29c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ If there is someone who aspires to conquer the world in order to manipulate it, I have seen enough to declare that he will never succeed; ~ Because the world is a device for the manifestation of the heavenly greatness; ~ There is no room for any tampering; ~ It is not a device for personal possession; ~ Those who attempt to tamper with it will fail; ~ Those who try to possess it will lose. ~ [Therefore, in handling world affairs a Sage adopts the following measure:] ~ He may either lead or follow [depending on the circumstance]; ~ He may either keep his lips tight or blow out air (speak up) [according to the need]; ~ He may either strengthen (build-up) or weaken (bring down) someone's standings [depending on the situation]; ~ He may either support or abandon some proceedings [whichever he deems proper]. ~ In summary: ~ A Sage would expel all elements of excessiveness, extravagance and exorbitance.

—[29c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ If anyone wants to take the world and directs it at his will, I do not see how he can succeed. ~ The world is a sacred vessel, which cannot be directed at one's will. ~ To direct it is to fail. ~ To grasp it is to lose it. ~ Some things go ahead, some follow, some breathe slowly, some breathe fast, some are strong, some are weak, some grow in strength, some decay. ~ Therefore, the sage avoids "very", "too" and "extreme".

—[29c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ To conquer and rule the world, I think, is not achievable. ~ The world is like a sacred utensil, which cannot be taken and held. ~ Whoever tries to conquer it will fail. ~ Whoever tries to hold it will lose it. ~ Thus, the sage does not try this, so he can avoid failure. ~ The sage does not try to own the world, so he loses nothing. ~ Things can be fast or slow, warm or cool, strong or weak, light or heavy. ~ The sage avoids the excessive, extravagant, and grandiose.

—[29c17t] Arthur Waley ~ Those that would gain what is under heaven by tampering with it - I have seen that they do not succeed. ~ For that which is under heaven is like a holy vessel, dangerous to tamper with. ~ Those that tamper with it, harm it. ~ Those that grab at it, lose it. ~ For among the creatures of the world some go in front, some follow; ~ Some blow hot when others would be blowing cold. ~ Some are feeling vigorous just when others are worn out. ~ Some are loading just when others would be tilting out. ~ Therefore the Sage 'discards the absolute, the all-inclusive, the extreme'.

—[29c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ As for those who would like to take all under Heaven and act on it, the way I see it, such action would never end, because all under Heaven is the numinous vessel, ~ Which cannot be acted on. ~ One who acts on it will destroy it; ~ one who tries to grasp it will lose it. ~ Thus some people tend to lead and some follow; ~ some breathe in through the nose and some blow out through the mouth; ~ some are strong and some weak; ~ and some are energetic and some lazy. ~ As this is so, the sage rids them of extremism, extravagance, and complaisance.

—[29c19t] Lin Yutang ~ WARNING AGAINST INTERFERENCE ~ There are those who will conquer the world ~ And make of it (what they conceive or desire). ~ I see that they will not succeed. ~ (For) the world is God's own Vessel ~ It cannot be made (by human interference). ~ He who makes it spoils it. ~ He who holds it loses it. ~ For: ~ Some things go forward, ~ Some things follow behind; ~ Some blow hot, ~ And some blow cold; ~ Some are strong, ~ And some are weak; ~ Some may break, ~ And some may fall. ~ Hence the Sage eschews excess, eschews extravagance, eschews pride.

—[29c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ Of those who wish to take hold of all-under-heaven and act upon it, ~ I have seen that they do not succeed. ~ Now, ~ All-under-heaven is a sacred vessel, ~ Not something that can be acted upon; ~ Who acts upon it will be defeated, ~ Who grasps it will lose it. ~ Of creatures, ~ some march forward, others follow behind; ~ some are shiveringly silent, others are all puffed up; ~ some are strong, others are meek; ~ some pile up, others collapse. ~ For these reasons, ~ The sage ~ rejects extremes, rejects excess, rejects extravagance.

—[29c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ Whoever wishes to take over the world will not succeed. ~ The world is a sacred vessel and nothing should be done to it. ~ Whoever tries to tamper with it will mar it. ~ Whoever tries to grab it will lose it. ~ Hence, ~ there is a time to go ahead and a time to stay behind. ~ There is a time to breathe easy and a time to breathe hard. ~ There is a time to be vigorous and a time to be gentle. ~ There is a time to gather and a time to release. ~ Therefore, ~ the True Person avoids extremes, self-indulgence, and extravagance.

—[29c22t] David H. Li ~ One who plans to govern the people in the world with coercion is, ~ in my view, unlikely to succeed. ~ The people in the world are revered specimens, ~ They cannot be coerced; they cannot be dominated. ~ One who seeks to coerce is defeated; ~ One who seeks to dominate loses. ~ The sage practices laissez-faire. ~ Thus, the sage will not be defeated, the sage will not lose. ~ Among matters, ~ some lead and others follow; ~ some breathe slowly and others fast; ~ some are robust and others slim; ~ some play safe and others blast. ~ Thus, ~ the sage discards extremes, discards extravagances, discards excesses.

—[29c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ Those who want to take control of the world by force can never succeed, ~ For the world is a sacred vessel of dynamic energy, not meant to be controlled. ~ Those who try to forcibly control it will ruin it. ~ Those who try to forcibly keep it will lose it. ~ Because life is not a static entity but a dynamic process, ~ Sometimes one moves ahead and sometimes follows behind. ~ Sometimes one works hard and sometimes takes rest. ~ Sometimes one grows strong and sometimes grows weak. ~ Sometimes one is supported and sometimes is unsupported. ~ Wherefore, the sage, knowingly moving with the dynamic flow of life, ~ Avoids extremes, avoids extravagance, and avoids excess.

—[29c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ When a person undertakes to hold and mold the world, ~ I see that he will fail in this task. ~ Since the world is an instrument of God: ~ It cannot be molded, ~ It cannot be held. ~ He who tries to mold it damages it, ~ He who insists on holding it loses it. ~ Therefore the sage does not mold it, and therefore he does not damage it, ~ He does not try to hold it, and therefore he does not lose it. ~ With all things, some move forward while others lag behind, ~ Some hold their tongues, while others speak a lot, ~ Some are strong, while others are weak, ~ Some are on the wagon, while others fall off. ~ Therefore the sage avoids excess, extremism, haughtiness, lust, and arrogance.

—[29c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ If a ruler behaves as if he's invented the world, ~ He will do no good at all. ~ The earth is a sacred vessel - ~ and it cannot be owned or improved. ~ If you try to possess it, you will destroy it; ~ If you try to hold on to it, you will lose it. ~ Some are leaders, then, and others follow. ~ Some drift like the wind, and others drive hard. ~ Some are thick-skinned, and others have no armour. ~ And some are the destroyers, and others they destroy. ~ So now you know why the sage abandons greed, all false charm - ~ and every last iota of pride.

—[29c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ He who wants to gain the kingship by force ~ Can never be successful, I think. ~ The kingship is so sacred ~ That cannot be obtained through force. ~ Those who try to obtain it by force will ruin it; ~ Those who keep it by force will lose it. ~ Because things are different: ~ Some go ahead or follow; ~ Some breathe gently or hard; ~ Some are strong or weak; ~ Some are in safety or in danger. ~ Hence the sage does away with extremity, extravagance and excess.

—[29c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ To rule the country with force is a matter that cannot be avoided - as I see. ~ Yet to hold the land under Heaven with force cannot be done. ~ Whoever does it will fail. ~ Whoever tries to control it will lose it. ~ If there is something that goes in the front, there will be something that follows behind. ~ If there is something that makes warmth, there will be something that cools it down. ~ If there is something that creates strength, there will be something that makes it weak. ~ If there is something that reaches its goal, there will be something that breaks it. ~ Therefore the sage stays away from opposing the rule of Nature, ~ from seeking luxuriousness, from doing what is against his own duty.

—[29c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ A willful doer cannot, as I see it, win the world, ~ The world cannot be willfully manipulated or controlled. ~ One who tries to manipulate it will destroy it. ~ One who tries to control it will lose it. ~ The wise does nothing to manipulate or control ~ And will, therefore, neither destroy nor lose. ~ For there are forever subtle changes in the world. ~ People walk either in front or behind. ~ They are either inhaling or exhaling, ~ Either strengthening or weakening, ~ And doing either good or harm. ~ That is why the wise will never desire too much.

—[29c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ Warning Against Interference ~ Lao Tze says, ~ If there is a king who wishes to take over the world and establishes a man-made order, I can predict that he will not make it at all. ~ For the world is of divine entity and it can't be subjugated to a man-made order. ~ Whoever wants to try will result in failure. ~ Whoever insists on his point of view will plunge in loss. ~ Because, ~ when one wishes to march forward, others just follow reluctantly; ~ when one wishes to breathe making a thing warm, others blow it cold; ~ when one wishes to strengthen it, others wish to weaken it; ~ when one wishes to sustain it, others wish to destroy it. ~ Hence the sage puts away excessive effort, extravagance, and easy indulgence.

—[29c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ When a man is to take the world over and shape it, ~ I see that he must be obliged to do it. ~ For the world is a divine vessel: ~ It cannot be shaped; ~ Nor can it be insisted upon. ~ He who shapes it damages it; ~ He who insists upon it loses it. ~ Therefore the Sage does not shape it, so he does not damage it; ~ He does not insist upon it, so he does not lose it. ~ For, among all things, some go ahead, while others lag behind; ~ Some keep their mouth shut, while others give forth puffs; ~ Some are strong, while others are weak; ~ Some are on the cart, while others fall off. ~ Therefore the Sage avoids excess, extravagance and indulgence.

—[29c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ He who wants to take the world and act on it will not be able to achieve, I know. ~ The world is a sacred vessel ~ Which cannot be acted on. ~ To act on it is to destroy it. ~ To seize it is to lose it. ~ So the things ~ Either lead or follow; ~ Either whistle or blow; ~ Either are strong or weak; ~ Either defeat or fall. ~ That is why the Sage abandons the excessive, the extravagant, and the extreme.

—[29c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ When someone wants to take over the world ~ and do some work on it, I can see he won't be able. ~ The world is a spirit-thing, it can't be 'worked' on. ~ One who works ruins, ~ one who grasps loses. ~ Yes, things: ~ Sometimes they will go ahead, sometimes follow after; ~ sometimes they will be snorting wildly, sometimes breathing easily; ~ sometimes they will be strong, sometimes weak; ~ sometimes they will break, sometimes destroy. ~ And so the Wise Person: ~ Avoids excess, avoids extravagance, avoids being grandiose.

—[29c33t] Cheng Lin ~ When one desires to win over an Empire by action, I find that he will never have a moment of rest. ~ The possession of an Empire is something ordained by the gods. ~ It cannot be gained by action, or held. ~ Those who try to gain by action are sure to fail; ~ those who try to hold are sure to lose. ~ As regards the things of this world, they are constantly alternating: ~ they lead, they follow; ~ they inhale, they exhale; ~ they are strong, they are weak; ~ they rise, they fall. ~ Wherefore, the Sage eschews that which is excessive, extravagant, or superfluous.

—[29c34t] Yi Wu ~ If one wants to possess the world and act upon it, ~ I know that he cannot get it. ~ The world is a sacred vessel; ~ It cannot be acted upon. ~ To act upon it is to destroy it. ~ To grasp it is to lose it. ~ Therefore, in all things, ~ Some lead, some follow, ~ Some blow warm, some blow cool, ~ Some are strong, some are weak, ~ Some destroy, some are destroyed. ~ Therefore, the sage avoids the extreme, ~ The extravagant, and the excessive.

—[29c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ If you want to rule the world according to your own whims, ~ It is unlikely to be successful. ~ Governing a country is a sacred mission. ~ You must not be meddlesome or intransigent. ~ He who is meddlesome will flounder in his job. ~ He who is rigid and foolhardy will lose the plot. ~ It takes all sorts to make the world. ~ Some are leaders and some are followers. ~ Some are highly excitable and some are calm. ~ Some are strong and some are weak. ~ Some feel secure and some feel threatened. ~ Nevertheless, the sage forsakes excess, extravagance and arrogance.

—[29c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ Those who want to conquer the world and make it conform to their own desires will never have success, ~ for the sovereignty of the world is a subtle thing. ~ He who tries to shape it spoils it. ~ He who tries to hold it loses it. ~ The things of the world are constantly changing. ~ There is a time for things to move ahead, ~ and a following time for things to retreat; ~ a time to withdraw internally, ~ and a following time to expand externally; ~ a time to grow luxuriantly, ~ and a following time to decay; ~ a time to rise up, ~ and a following time to sink down low. ~ Therefore, one who does not separate his being from the deep nature of the universe avoids all extremes, extravagance and excess.

—[29c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ If one undertakes the task of governing the kingdom and engages in governing it, ~ I see that he cannot lead it anywhere. ~ A kingdom is a spiritual vessel and should not be manipulated. ~ Manipulating it leads to failure. ~ To grasp it is to miss it. ~ Because the natures of things vary, one acts, another copies; ~ One breathes lightly, another breathes heavily; ~ One is vigorous, one is meek; ~ One carries on, another fails. ~ Thus, the wise is not excessive, overindulgent, or extreme.

—[29c38t] Henry Wei ~ Non-Action ~ Wu Wei ~ One might wish to get hold of the world, ~ And wilfully interfere with it. ~ In my view, this is bound to fail. ~ The world is a Divine Vessel. ~ It cannot be interfered with. ~ He who interferes with it spoils it; ~ He who grasps it loses it. ~ For among the creatures of the world, ~ Some are leaders, some are followers; ~ Some tend to condone, some to condemn; ~ Some are strong, some are weak; ~ Some are forward-looking, some are downcast. ~ The Sage, therefore, eschews the excessive, ~ Eschews the extravagant, and eschews the extreme.

—[29c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ Do you wish to conquer all under Heaven and rule it? ~ I see you will never succeed. ~ All under Heaven is a sacred vessel; ~ No one can rule it by action. ~ Whoever rules it by action destroys it; ~ Whoever seizes it loses it. ~ Therefore, among the creatures, ~ Some go, some follow; ~ Some breathe lightly, some blow hard; ~ Some are strong, some are weak; ~ Some break, some fall. ~ Therefore the sage ~ Shuns extremes, ~ Shuns extravagance, ~ Shuns vanity.

—[29c40t] Tao Huang ~ I see that those who want to take over the world and manipulate it do not succeed. ~ The sacred mechanism of the world cannot be manipulated. ~ Those who manipulate it will fail, ~ Those who hold on to it will lose it. ~ Matter ~ Either leads or follows, ~ Either heats or chills, ~ Either strengthens or weakens, ~ Either enhances or destroys. ~ So the sage abandons extremes, extravagance, multiplicity.

—[29c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ Will anybody want to lead the world according to his selfish design? ~ I see that he will never attain his end. ~ The sacred instrument of the world cannot be grasped or intervened: ~ one who intervenes will be defeated; ~ one who grasps will lose it. ~ Among things: ~ some are moving ahead, others are following behind; ~ some are breathing in air, others are breathing in water; ~ some are strong, others are weak; ~ some are still carried on and some are dropped. ~ Therefore, a Sage ruler avoided: ~ Extreme, Extravagance and Indulgence.

—[29c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ When one desires to take over the empire and act on it (interfere with it), I see that he will not succeed. ~ The empire is a spiritual thing, and should not be acted on. ~ He who acts on it harms it. ~ He who holds on to it loses it. ~ Among creatures some lead and some follow. ~ Some blow hot and some blow cold. ~ Some are strong and some are weak. ~ Some may break and some may fall. ~ Therefore the sage discards the extremes, the extravagant, and the excessive.

—[29c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Кто вознамерится взять Поднебесную и ею заниматься, на мой взгляд, это ему не удастся. ~ Поднебесная - чаша душевная, и сформовать ее нельзя. ~ Формуя, ее только портят, владея же, утрачивают. ~ Среди сущего одни ведут, другие следуют; ~ одни выдыхают медленно, другие - быстро; ~ одни становятся сильны, другие чахнут; ~ одни поднимаются, другие гибнут. ~ Именно поэтому Премудрый человек отбрасывает крайность, отвергает неумеренность, отказывается от излишества.

—[29c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Тому, кто хочет править Поднебесной и при этом предается деяниям, я думаю, не достичь успеха. ~ Поднебесная - это священный сосуд, с которым ничего нельзя сделать. ~ Действующий - потерпит неудачу. ~ Желаящий обрести это - утратит. ~ Поэтому одни существа идут впереди, другие следуют за ними. ~ Одни выдыхают через нос, другие дуют ртом. ~ Одни разрушают, другие уничтожаются. ~ Вот почему мудрец сторонится избыточности, избегает чрезмерности и отбрасывает бахвальство.

— [29с93t] Е. А. Торчинов ~ Если кто-либо возжелает овладеть Поднебесной, то я знаю, что он не возьмет ее. ~ Поднебесная - божественный сосуд, и нельзя воздействовать на нее. ~

Воздействующий на нее потерпит поражение, и хватающий ее потеряет ее. ~ Поэтому среди существ есть такие, которые идут вперед, есть и такие, что идут следом за ними; ~ бывают существа, которые молчат, бывают существа, которые кричат; ~ бывают сильные, бывают слабые; ~ бывают надежно защищенные, бывают беззащитно обнаженные. ~ Поэтому совершенномуудрый уходит от чрезмерности, уходит от избытка, уходит от излишества.

— [29с94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ [Положим, некто] одержим страстью овладеть Поднебесной и воздействовать на нее. ~ А мне ясно: у него ничего не получится. ~ Поднебесная - это духовный сосуд, на него нельзя воздействовать. ~ Тот же, кто будет воздействовать, разрушит его. ~ А тот, кто будет удерживать, потеряет его. ~ Ведь искони устроено так: ~ из существ одни идут, другие следуют за ними, ~ одни фыркают, другие трубят, ~ одни усиливаются, другие истощаются, ~ одни хищники, другие жертвы. ~ Вот почему совершенномуудрый человек отказывается от излишеств, ~ отказывается от роскоши, отказывается от расточительности.

— [29с95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Если кто-нибудь силой пытается овладеть страной, то, вижу я, он не достигает своей цели. ~ Страна подобна таинственному сосуду, к которому нельзя прикоснуться. ~ Если кто-нибудь тронет [его], то потерпит неудачу. ~ Если кто-нибудь схватит [его], то его потеряет. ~ Поэтому ~ одни существа идут, другие - следуют за ними; ~ одни расцветают, другие высыхают; ~ одни укрепляются, другие слабеют; ~ одни создаются, другие разрушаются. ~ Поэтому совершенномуудрый отказывается от излишеств, устраняет роскошь и расточительность.

— [29с96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Кто действует, сильно желая завладеть вселенной, тот никогда не достигнет желаемого, потому что вселенная есть божественное орудие, поэтому распоряжаться ее судьбою никто не вправе. ~ Отсюда, кто покушается на это, тот нарушает порядок мира; ~ кто хочет завладеть им, тот немедленно потеряет его. ~ Вообще вещи идут вперед или назад; воют или дуют; сильны или слабы; несутся или же останавливаются на одном месте. ~ Поэтому мудрец избегает всякой крайности, роскоши и великолепия.

— [29с97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Когда кто-то хочет завладеть миром и переделать его, ~ Я вижу, что он не добьется своей цели. ~ Мир - божественный предмет, переделать его нельзя. ~ Кто будет его переделывать, погубит его; ~ Кто будет держаться за него, потеряет его. ~ Среди вещей одни действуют, другие следуют, ~ Одни пышат жаром, другие источают холод, ~ Одни сильны, другие слабы, ~ Одни расцветают, другие клонятся к упадку. ~ Вот почему премудрый человек отвергает крайности, отвергает излишества, отвергает роскошь.

— [29с98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Если заранее стремишься взять себе Поднебесную и осуществляешь это, то для сущности моей очевидно, что не обретя, прекратишь. ~ Поднебесная - божественная утварь. ~ Нельзя осуществлять. ~ Нельзя удерживать. ~ Кто осуществляет - потерпит поражение. ~ Кто удерживает - потеряет ее. ~ Причинность: ~ Для вещей существует чередование - движения и следования, вдоха и выдоха, усиления и ослабления, возвышения и падения. ~ Эта дает: ~ Человек мудрости отвергает крайность, излишество, полноту.

— [30с01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ Those who assist their rulers with the Way, ~ Don't use weapons to commit violence in the world. ~ Such {deeds easily rebound}. ~ In places where {armies} are stationed, thorns and brambles will grow. ~ The good [general] achieves his result and that's all; ~ He does not use the occasion to seize strength from it. ~ He achieves his result but does not become arrogant; ~ He achieves his result but does not praise his deeds; ~ He achieves his result and yet {does not} brag. ~ He achieves his result, yet he abides with the result because he has no choice. ~ This is called achieving one's result [without] using force. ~ When things reach their prime, they get old; ~ We call this "not the Way." ~ What is not the Way will come to an early end.

—[30c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ HE who knows how to guide a ruler in the path of Tao ~ Does not try to override the world with force of arms. ~ It is in the nature of a military weapon to turn against its wielder. ~ Wherever armies are stationed, thorny bushes grow. ~ After a great war, bad years invariably follow. ~ What you want is to protect efficiently your own state, ~ But not to aim at self-aggrandisement. ~ After you have attained your purpose, ~ You must not parade your success, ~ You must not boast of your ability, ~ You must not feel proud, ~ You must rather regret that you had not been able to prevent the war. ~ You must never think of conquering others by force. ~ For to be over-developed is to hasten decay, ~ And this is against Tao, ~ And what is against Tao will soon cease to be.

—[30c03t] D. C. Lau ~ One who assists the ruler of men by means of the way does not intimidate the empire by a show of arms. ~ This is something which is liable to rebound. ~ Where troops have encamped ~ There will brambles grow; ~ In the wake of a mighty army ~ Bad harvests follow without fail. ~ One who is good aims only at bringing his campaign to a conclusion and dare not thereby intimidate. ~ Bring it to a conclusion but do not boast; ~ Bring it to a conclusion but do not brag; ~ Bring it to a conclusion but do not be arrogant; ~ Bring it to a conclusion but only when there is no choice; ~ Bring it to a conclusion but do not intimidate. ~ A creature in its prime doing harm to the old ~ Is known as going against the way. ~ That which goes against the way will come to an early end.

—[30c04t] R. L. Wing ~ Those who use the Tao to guide leaders Do not use forceful strategies in the world. ~ Such matters tend to recoil. ~ Where armies are positioned, ~ Thorny brambles are produced. ~ A great military always brings years of hunger. ~ Those who are skillful Succeed and then stop. ~ They dare not hold on with force. ~ They succeed and do not boast. ~ They succeed and do not make claims. ~ They succeed and are not proud. ~ They succeed and do not acquire in excess. ~ They succeed and do not force. ~ Things overgrown will always decline. ~ This is not the Tao. ~ What is not the Tao will soon end.

—[30c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ He who assists the rulers with Tao does not dominate under Heaven by force. ~ The use of force will soon incur requital. ~ Wherever armies are stationed, briars and thorns grow wild. ~ Great wars are always followed by famines. ~ Content yourselves with your success and stop. ~ Do not seek to dominate under Heaven by force of arms. ~ Succeed but don't boast about it, ~ Succeed but don't brag about it, ~ Succeed but don't be arrogant, ~ Succeed and take it as you have to do, ~ Succeed and don't attempt to dominate. ~ Things must grow old after reaching their prime, which is contrary to Tao. ~ Whatever is contrary to Tao will soon perish.

—[30c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ Whenever you advise a ruler in the way of Tao, ~ Counsel him not to use force to conquer the universe. ~ For this would only cause resistance. ~ Thorn bushes spring up wherever the army has passed. ~ Lean years follow in the wake of a great war. ~ Just do what needs to be done. ~ Never take advantage of power. ~ Achieve results, ~ But never glory in them. ~ Achieve results, ~ But never boast. ~ Achieve results, ~ But never be proud. ~ Achieve results, ~ Because this is the natural way. ~ Achieve results, ~ But not through violence. ~ Force is followed by loss of strength. ~ This is not the way of Tao. ~ That which goes against the Tao comes to an early end.

—[30c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ The person who through the Dao helps a ruler ~ Will advise against using sheer military force to conquer the world. ~ Such military activity will invite its own counter-effects. ~ For where the military force goes, ~ farmlands will give way to thorns and brambles. ~ In the wake of military conquest, ~ A year of misfortune inevitably follows. ~ Good results are the natural outcome of good deeds. ~ They are not achieved by force or contrivance. ~ In the face of good results, ~ One must not indulge in conceit; ~ Nor must one boast about one's success; ~ Nor must one succumb to pride. ~ Remember that good results follow the natural law. ~ Good results are not brought about by forcing the course of events. ~ Anything that has seen the prime of its age will soon get old. ~ Going past the prime is going against the Dao. ~ Going against the Dao, one soon perishes.

—[30c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ Those who use the DAO to assist their monarchs do not rely on force to conquer the world. ~ If you use force, it so easily comes back and haunts you. ~ Thorns will grow where the army camped, ~ A year of starvation will follow a big war. ~ A person who understands war will only fight to win a war, ~ Not to use force to conquer the world. ~ After winning a war, do not be self-satisfied. ~ After winning a war, do not show off. ~ After winning a war, do not be conceited. ~ After winning a war, treat it like you were forced to fight. ~ After winning a war, do not use force to conquer the world. ~ When things become too strong, they start to decay, ~ Which is against the DAO. ~ Being against the DAO will lead to an early destruction.

—[30c09t] Walter Gorn Old, DECLINING FROM STRIFE ~ The man who aids the King by the use of Tao forces the people into submission without resort to the use of arms. He will not regard the fruit of his actions. ~ Prickly briars and thorns flourish where battalions have quartered. ~ Bad years follow on the heels of armies in motion. ~ The good soldier is brave when occasion requires, but he does not risk himself for power. ~ Brave is he when occasion requires, but he does not oppress. ~ Brave is he when occasion requires, but he does not boast. ~ Brave is he when occasion requires, but he is not haughty. ~ Brave is he when occasion requires, but he is not mean. ~ Brave is he when occasion requires, but he does not rage. ~ Things become old through excess of vigour. This is called Non-Tao; and what is Non-Tao is soon wasted!

—[30c10t] James Legge ~ He who would assist a lord of men in harmony with the Tao will not assert his mastery in the kingdom by force of arms. ~ Such a course is sure to meet with its proper return. ~ Wherever a host is stationed, briars and thorns spring up. ~ In the sequence of great armies there are sure to be bad years. ~ A skilful (commander) strikes a decisive blow, and stops. ~ He does not dare (by continuing his operations) to assert and complete his mastery. ~ He will strike the blow, but will be on his guard against being vain or boastful or arrogant in consequence of it. ~ He strikes it as a matter of necessity; ~ he strikes it, but not from a wish for mastery. ~ When things have attained their strong maturity they become old. ~ This may be said to be not in accordance with the Tao: and what is not in accordance with it soon comes to an end.

—[30c11t] David Hinton ~ If you use the Way to help a ruler of people ~ you never use weapons to coerce all beneath heaven. ~ Such things always turn against you: ~ fields where soldiers camp turn to thorn and bramble, and vast armies on the march leave years of misery behind. ~ The noble prevail if they must, then stop: they never press on to coerce the world. ~ Prevail, but never presume. ~ Prevail, but never boast. ~ Prevail, but never exult. ~ Prevail, but never when there's another way. ~ This is to prevail without coercing. ~ Things grown strong soon grow old. ~ This is called losing the Way: Lose the Way and you die young.

—[30c12t] Chichung Huang ~ Use the Tao to assist your sovereign lord; ~ Do not use military power ~ To flaunt your strength over all under heaven. ~ Such things are apt to boomerang: ~ Where an army has encamped, ~ Brambles and thorns grow. ~ A good commander stops ~ Once his end is achieved, ~ And does not thereby seek military superiority. ~ His end achieved, he is not arrogant; ~ His end achieved, he is not conceited; ~ His end achieved, he does not brag; ~ His end achieved, he accepts it reluctantly. ~ This is called ~ Achieving the end without seeking military superiority. ~ Something ages while still in its prime ~

Is contrary to the Tao; ~ What is contrary to the Tao perishes early.

—[30c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ One who assists the ruler with Tao, ~ Does not overpower (ch'iang) the world by military conquests. ~ Such affairs have a way of returning (huan): ~ Where armies are stationed, ~ Briars and thorns grow, ~ After great campaigns, ~ Bad years are sure to follow. ~ The good person is resolute (kuo) only, ~ But dares not (kan) take the path of the strong (ch'iang). ~ Be resolute (kuo) yet do not boast (ching), ~ Be resolute yet do not show off (fa), ~ Be resolute yet do not be haughty, ~ Be resolute because you have no choice, ~ Be resolute yet do not overpower (ch'iang). ~ When things are full grown, they age. ~ This is called not following Tao. ~ Not following Tao they perish early.

—[30c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ A person who assists a ruler to lead should [adopt the policy of] avoiding to intimidate other countries with its military might; ~ [If military action is deemed necessary] he should think hard [about consequences and weighing non-violent alternatives]; ~ Because, weeds and thistles grew wild every time after armies march through the land, ~ Every time there was a big military operation, [several] years of famine followed afterwards. ~ An excellent military man only seeks [all in all] the effect [of deflating the enemy's aggression]; ~ After having achieved the result [of defeating the enemy] he would not be self-pleased; ~ He would not glorify his victory; ~ He would avoid being arrogant; ~ Nor would he intimidate [the losing side]. ~ Because he has acted out of necessity, he does not dare [to take advantage of the situation] to terrorize the beaten party. ~ When a living thing starts turning rigid and inflexible, it is a sign of its approaching old age; ~ This is what I describe as acting against Tao; ~ Those who proceed on courses leading away from Tao will perish prematurely.

—[30c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ He who knows how to guide a ruler in the path of the Way does not try to override the world with force of arms. ~ It is in the nature of arms to turn against its wielder. ~ Wherever armies are stationed, thorny bushes grow. ~ After a great war, bad harvests follow. ~ After victory, to protect efficiently one's own state, one should not to rely on force. ~ Victory without claiming ability. ~ Victory without claiming success. ~ Victory without being proud. ~ Victory but saying it is not one's will. ~ Victory with no longer relying on force. ~ A thing at its strength begins to become old; this is against the Way; what is against the Way will soon cease to be.

—[30c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ Those who aid the ruler with Tao do not use military power to win the world. ~ This is because such action is likely to backfire: ~ Where armies camp, thorny problems arise, ~ Where troops march, fatal years follow. ~ The competent general stops when the goal is reached, and never flaunts. ~ Never be vainglorious when the goal is achieved. ~ Never be haughty when the goal is achieved. ~ Never be arrogant when the goal is achieved. ~ Never do more than necessary when the goal is achieved. ~ Never flaunt when the goal is achieved. ~ It is not following Tao if things wilt while still in their prime. ~ Not following Tao results in an untimely end.

—[30c17t] Arthur Waley ~ He who by Tao purposes to help a ruler of men ~ Will oppose all conquest by force of arms; ~ For such things are wont to rebound. ~ Where armies are, thorns and brambles grow. ~ The raising of a great host ~ Is followed by a year of dearth. ~ Therefore a good general effects his purpose and then stops; he does not take further advantage of his victory. ~ Fulfils his purpose and does not glory in what he has done; ~ Fulfils his purpose and does not boast of what he has done; ~ Fulfils his purpose, but takes no pride in what he has done; ~ Fulfils his purpose, but only as a step that could not be avoided; ~ Fulfils his purpose, but without violence; ~ For what has a time of vigour also has a time of decay. ~ This is against Tao, ~ And what is against Tao will soon perish.

—[30c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ One who would assist the ruler of men in accordance with the Dao does not use military force to gain power over all under Heaven. ~ As for such matters, he is wont to let them revert.

~ Where armies deploy, there thistles and thorns grow. ~ The aftermath of great military operations is surely a year of famine. ~ One good at this desists when result is had and dares not use the opportunity to seize military supremacy. ~ Have result but do not take credit for it; ~ have result but do not boast about it; ~ have result but do not take pride in it; ~ have result but only when there is no choice; ~ have result but do not try to gain military supremacy. ~ Once a thing reaches its prime, it grows old. ~ We say it goes against the Dao, and what is against the Dao comes to an early end.

—[30c19t] Lin Yutang ~ WARNING AGAINST THE USE OF FORCE ~ He who by Tao purposes to help the ruler of men ~ Will oppose all conquest by force of arms. ~ For such things are wont to rebound. ~ Where armies are, thorns and brambles grow. ~ The raising of a great host ~ Is followed by a year of dearth. ~ Therefore a good general effects his purpose and stops. ~ He dares not rely upon the strength of arms; ~ Effects his purpose and does not glory in it; ~ Effects his purpose and does not boast of it; ~ Effects his purpose and does not take pride in it; ~ Effects his purpose as a regrettable necessity; ~ Effects his purpose but does not love violence. ~ (For) things age after reaching their prime. ~ That (violence) would be against the Tao. ~ And he who is against the Tao perishes young.

—[30c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ One who assists the ruler of men with the Way ~ does not use force of arms against all under heaven; ~ Such a course is likely to boomerang. ~ Where armies have been stationed, briars and brambles will grow. ~ A good general fulfills his purpose ~ and that is all. ~ He does not use force to seize for himself. ~ He fulfills his purpose, but is not proud; ~ He fulfills his purpose, but is not boastful; ~ He fulfills his purpose, but does not brag; ~ He fulfills his purpose only because he has no other choice. ~ This is called "fulfilling one's purpose without using force." ~ If something grows old while still in its prime, ~ This is called "not being in accord with the Way." ~ Not being in accord with the Way leads to an early demise.

—[30c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ If you would assist leaders of people by way of the Tao, ~ you will oppose the use of armed force to overpower the world. ~ Those who use weapons will be harmed by them. ~ Where troops have camped only thorn bushes grow. ~ Bad harvests follow in the wake of a great army. ~ The skillful person strikes the blow and stops, ~ without taking advantage of victory. ~ Bring it to a conclusion but do not be vain. ~ Bring it to a conclusion but do not be boastful. ~ Bring it to a conclusion but do not be arrogant. ~ Bring it to a conclusion but only when there is no choice. ~ Bring it to a conclusion but without violence. ~ When force is used, youthful strength decays. ~ This is not the way of Tao. ~ And that which goes against the Tao will quickly pass away.

—[30c22t] David H. Li ~ One guided by Direction does not use military power to subdue the people in the world. ~ It boomerangs. ~ Where armies visit, thorns grow. ~ After a great war, famines follow. ~ One who knows war stops after the objective is reached. ~ He dares not flaunt power. ~ Reach objective, but boast not; ~ reach objective, but tout not; ~ reach objective, but show arrogance not; ~ Reaching objective is because there is no alternative; ~ Reaching objective does not call for flaunting power. ~ Matter withers after saturation. ~ This is not in line with Direction. ~ Not in line with Direction, early demise is the expectation.

—[30c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ Those who assist national leaders by means of the Tao, ~ Never use military force to make their nations world powers. ~ No action is ever without a repercussion: ~ Wherever an army is stationed, there grow briars and brambles. ~ Wherever a battle is fought, there follows a famine. ~ A good general in the direst necessity of a war ~ Achieves his purpose of winning the war, ~ But never seeks to gain power over others. ~ Therefore, ~ achieve your purpose, but only if it is called for; ~ Achieve your purpose, but never be haughty; ~ Achieve your purpose, but never be boastful; ~ Achieve your purpose, but never be supercilious; ~ Achieve your purpose, but never be overpowering. ~ Whenever something reaches an extreme in strength, it will inevitably decline. ~ This is called the way against the Tao. ~ The way against the Tao always leads to an early demise.

—[30c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ The person who helps a ruler of men with the Tao ~ Does not force the world with weapons. ~ He aims only to redeem the Tao, ~ And does not attempt to force his strength on others. ~ Bringing redemption, he does not attribute it to himself, ~ He does not boast much, he is not proud, ~ He thinks that it is his obligation to do so. ~ This is how redemption will be, without force. ~ When things reach their full power, ~ They begin their process of aging. ~ This goes against the Tao. ~ Whatever goes against the Tao will quickly come to an end.

—[30c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ The Emperor's advisors will never recommend violence ~ if they know what the Tao is. ~ If you use the strategy of warfare ~ it can only result in revenge. ~ After troops have tramped by ~ only weeds and nettles grow in the broken ground. ~ There can be no harvest, ~ and everyone is left starving. ~ If you need to take action, only do what is necessary. ~ Never abuse your power. ~ And if you're successful, don't be smug; ~ If you are a success, don't trumpet it - ~ If you think you've won, never overdo it - ~ Those who use force soon end up without it - ~ And this is not the Way. ~ And if you do not follow the Way, you will die.

—[30c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ He who assists the ruler by means of the Tao ~ Does not conquer other countries by the military force. ~ Military actions usually invite retaliatory aftermath: ~ Wherever armies station, ~ Thistles and thorns grow; ~ A great war is always followed ~ By a great famine. ~ He who is well versed in the art of war ~ Only uses the force to win the war, ~ And not to bully or conquer other countries. ~ Win the war but do not boast; ~ Win the war but do not brag; ~ Win the war but do not show arrogance; ~ Win the war but do know it is out of necessity; ~ Win the war but do not thereby bully and conquer other countries. ~ Whatever is in its prime is bound to decline; ~ For, being in prime is against the Tao; ~ Whatever goes against the Tao ~ Will come to an early end.

—[30c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ The ruler who rules his people with Tao ~ need not show his force with an army. ~ If he who rules does so with the force of an army the others will return with the force of an army. ~ Wherever armies have marched, ~ thistles and thorns grow. ~ Whenever a great war has begun, ~ crop failure and famine follow. ~ That is why a good ruler would not dare to flaunt the power of his army. ~ He would not use the force to glory in the force. ~ He uses the army, yet with reserve and dignity. ~ He uses the army, yet with politeness. ~ He uses the army just because he is forced to do so. ~ That is what 'to show consideration and not force' means. ~ A strong army is like a creature in its prime: ~ it will only grow older. ~ This is the rule of Tao and that is the reason why one should not oppose the Tao. ~ He who opposes the Tao will meet an early end.

—[30c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ Those who aid a government with the Way ~ Will not threaten the world with military power, ~ And are therefore returned with kindness in all affairs. ~ Where armies have stayed will grow only thorns and bush. ~ When military force dominates, an inauspicious year follows. ~ Wise leaders prefer natural results than uses of force. ~ And win victories that would result naturally. ~ They win without boasting about their valor, ~ Or feeling proud of their victories, ~ Or looking triumphant everywhere. ~ They win but feel guilty as if they were forced to it. ~ They win without military reinforcement. ~ Things that have become strong will begin to weaken. ~ That which weakens is against the Way. ~ What is against the Way cannot last long.

—[30c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ Warning Against The Use of Force ~ Lao Tze says, ~ If the king assists himself with the Tao, he will not assert his mastery in the world by force of arms. ~ He always seeks a consummate result. ~ Whenever a host has encamped, there will be briars and thorns grown. ~ In the sequences of great armies there are sure to be bad years. ~ The skillful ruler knows to attain a good result, he doesn't dare continue his operations to complete his mastery. ~ In anticipating a good result, being self-opinioned is not appropriate. ~ In anticipating a good result, take action only when there is no alternative course. ~ In anticipating a good result, being masterful is not appropriate. ~ When things have attained strong maturity, they become old. ~ This may be said to be not in accordance with the Tao. ~ And what is not in accordance with the Tao soon comes to an end.

—[30c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ He who assists a ruler of men with Tao does not force the world with arms. ~ He aims only at carrying out relief, and does not venture to force his power upon others. ~ When relief is done, he will not be assuming, ~ He will not be boastful; he will not be proud; ~ And he will think that he was obliged to do it. ~ So it comes that relief is done without resorting to force. ~ When things come to the summit of their vigour, they begin to grow old. ~ This is against Tao. ~ What is against Tao will soon come to an end.

—[30c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ Those who aid the ruler with Tao do not use military force to conquer the world. ~ Because this will invite retaliation. ~ Where the army stays, briars and thorns grow. ~ After a great war comes the year of adversity. ~ The good man stops after getting results. ~ Without daring to conquer. ~ He achieves results without bragging, ~ Achieves results without exalting, ~ Achieves results without arrogance, ~ Achieves results with reluctance, ~ Achieves results without conquering, ~ A thing in its prime soon becomes old; ~ This is not Tao. ~ Not being Tao, it is sure to die early.

—[30c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ One who assists the people's rulers with Tao, ~ does not use weapons to force changes in the world. ~ "Such action usually backfires." ~ Where troops camp, thorns and brambles grow. ~ Excellence consists in: ~ Being resolute, that is all, not venturing to take control by force; ~ being resolute, but not boastful; ~ being resolute, but not overbearing; ~ being resolute, but not arrogant; ~ being resolute, when you have no choice; ~ being resolute, but not forcing. ~ Things are vigorous, then grow old and weak: ~ A case of 'not-Tao'. ~ Not-Tao, soon gone.

—[30c33t] Cheng Lin ~ Those who use Truth in assisting the ruler do not resort to war for the conquest of an Empire. ~ War is a most calamitous evil. ~ Wherever armies are quartered, briars and thorns become rampant. ~ Famines inevitably follow in the wake of great wars. ~ The good rulers are satisfied when an attack is stopped, and they do not venture to pursue conquest for supremacy. ~ Victories do not make them vainglorious, aggressive, arrogant, or anxious to pursue conquest for supremacy. ~ It is contrary to Truth for the strong to do harm to the weak. ~ Those who act contrary to Truth are sure to perish early.

—[30c34t] Yi Wu ~ One who aids the ruler with the Way ~ Does not use military force to be strong in the world. ~ It brings retribution. ~ Where an army is stationed, ~ Briars and thorns grow. ~ After a great war, ~ A bad year invariably follows. ~ The good one gets a result and stops; ~ He dares not attribute it to his strength. ~ He gets results but does not brag, ~ gets results but does not boast, ~ gets results but is not arrogant, ~ gets results but does not make choices, ~ gets results but does not use force. ~ Anything that grows strong grows old. ~ This is called, "Not being with the Way". ~ Whatever is not with the Way will die early.

—[30c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ An enlightened minister prefers applying the principles of Dao to assist his sovereign in governing. ~ He is extremely reluctant to use force to subjugate others. ~ Using force always has repercussions. ~ Wherever the army passes through, the land is laid to waste and brambles grow. ~ After a major battle, there will be a famine the following year. ~ A moral person will only accomplish his task. ~ He will not be heavy-handed. ~ Achieving success, he is not ostentatious. ~ Accomplishing his task, he does not gloat. ~ Scoring victory, he is not arrogantly intransigent. ~ He goes to war in order to achieve his objective, only when he has no other choice. ~ Even after winning, he does not brutalise the vanquished. ~ Whenever anything reaches its peak, it starts to decline. ~ Moreover, excessive use of force is not in accordance with Dao. ~ Anything that goes against Dao will suffer an early demise.

—[30c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ One who assists a leader with the subtle truth of the universe advises him not to use the force of arms to try to conquer the world, ~ for such things will always rebound. ~ It is generally the nature of weapons to turn against their wielders. ~ Whenever armies touch the land, ~ they turn it into a wasteland. ~ Moreover, plague and death invariably follow in the wake of a great war. ~ Therefore, a leader should be allowed to effect only a right purpose and not rely on the force of arms once his goal has been achieved. ~ He effects his right purpose, ~ but does not take pride in it. ~ He effects his right purpose as a regrettable necessity. ~ He effects his right purpose, ~ but does not delight in violence, ~ for he knows that to be excessively strong is to hasten decay and that violence is against the integral nature of the universe. ~ Whoever goes against the nature of the universe will soon perish.

—[30c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ Aiding in governing the kingdom through Tao means not depending on the superiority of arms. ~ Depending on the superiority of arms creates consequences. ~ Wherever there are armies, disorder occurs. ~ After a great battle, there is a year of deprivation. ~ Victory is merely the outcome of a contest. ~ One should not dare to claim superiority of power. ~ As victory is merely an outcome, one should not boast about it. ~ As it is merely an outcome, one should not show off because of it. ~ As it is merely an outcome, one should not be proud of it. ~ As it is merely an outcome, one cannot help but have it. ~ As it is merely an outcome, one should not claim superiority of power. ~ Claiming to be strong leads to decay. ~ This violates Tao. ~ That which violates Tao will not last long.

—[30c38t] Henry Wei ~ Moderate Use of Force ~ Chien Wu ~ He who uses Tao to assist the ruler of a people ~ Will not employ armed force to dominate the world. ~ For such a scheme is apt to boomerang. ~ Where armies are quartered, ~ Briars and brambles abound. ~ After a great war, famine inevitably happens. ~ Therefore, ~ A good-natured man attains his objective and stops; ~ He dares not grab by violence. ~ He wants to attain his objective, ~ But does not extol it, ~ Nor brag about it, nor take pride in it. ~ He attains his objective as if it could not be helped, ~ And does not use it to practice violence. ~ For things, after their prime, will begin to decay. ~ Decay indicates disregard of Tao. ~ Whatever disregards Tao soon vanishes.

—[30c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ He who assists the ruler by Tao ~ Does not resort to arms to dominate all under Heaven by force. ~ This thing loves to rebound. ~ Where troops have encamped, ~ Brambles grow; ~ After the raising of great armies ~ A famine follows invariably. ~ A good man merely lets it bear fruit; ~ He does not seek to force it. ~ He lets it bear fruit; he is not vainglorious. ~ He lets it bear fruit; he is not boastful. ~ He lets it bear fruit; he is not arrogant. ~ He lets it bear fruit, out of necessity. ~ He lets it bear fruit and does not force it. ~ When a thing reaches its prime, it becomes old. ~ Forcing is called contrary to Tao. ~ What is contrary to Tao expires early.

—[30c40t] Tao Huang ~ Using the Tao as the rule for governing the people, ~ Do not employ the army as the power of the world. ~ For this is likely to backfire. ~ Where the army has marched, thorns and briars grow. ~ Being good has its own consequence, ~ Which cannot be seized by power. ~ Achieving without arrogance, ~ Achieving without bragging, ~ Achieving without damage, ~ Achieving without taking ownership. ~ This is called achieving without force. ~ Matter becomes strong, then old. ~ This is called "Not-Tao." ~ Dying young is "Not-Tao."

—[30c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ A ruler who is in accord with Dao will never use military force to override the world, ~ Because this kind of affair ensures reciprocal killing. ~ Once an army has operated in the field there is nothing left growing but thorny bushes. ~ Once a great war is over, invariably there are horrible years following. ~ The perfect fighter is decisive, yet he does not allow himself to be violent. ~ Decisive but not proud; ~ decisive but not boastful and decisive when he is obliged to fight. ~ Be decisive but not aggressive. ~ A matured living body will soon grow old. ~ That is called "aberration of Dao". ~ Aberration of Dao will cause early death.

—[30c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ He who assists the ruler with Tao does not dominate the world with force. ~ The use of force usually brings requital. ~ Wherever armies are stationed, briars and thorns grow. ~ Great wars are always followed by famines. ~ A good (general) achieves his purpose and stops, ~ But dares not seek to dominate the world. ~ He achieves his purpose but does not brag about it. ~ He achieves his purpose but does not boast about it. ~ He achieves his purpose but is not proud of it. ~ He achieves his purpose but only as an unavoidable step. ~ He achieves his purpose but does not aim to dominate. ~ (For) after things reach their prime, they begin to grow old, ~ Which means being contrary to Tao. ~ Whatever is contrary to Tao will soon perish.

—[30c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Кто помогает государю на основе Дао, не подминает Поднебесную оружием. ~ В противном случае лишь ожидает крах. ~ Где стоит войско, там растут колючие кустарники. ~ После прохода большой армии настают голодные годы. ~ У искусного сбывается, и только! ~ Он не смеет брать оружием и подминать. ~ У него сбывается, и он не зазнается; ~ сбывается, и не кичится; ~ сбывается, и не гордится; ~ сбывается как неизбежное; ~ сбывается при том, что он не подминает. ~ На смену возмужалости, когда находятся в расцвете сил, приходит старость. ~ Это значит действовать вопреки Дао. ~ А тому, кто действует вопреки Дао, конец приходит рано.

—[30c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Тот, кто помогает правителю людей посредством Дао, не понуждает Поднебесную силой оружия. ~ Этому делу предначертано доброе воздаяние. ~ Там, где стояли лагерем войска, растут лишь терновники да колючки. ~ После большого сражения неизбежно грядёт неурожайный год. ~ Умелый [полководец] достигает цели и на этом останавливается. ~ Он не смеет прибегать к принуждению. ~ Он достигает цели и не восхваляет себя; ~ достигает цели и не кичится этим; ~ достигает цели и не проявляет высокомерия; ~ достигает цели лишь тогда, когда у него нет другого выбора; ~ достигает цели, но не принуждает. ~ Когда вещи, исполняясь силы, стареют, то это зовётся противоречащим Дао. ~ То, что противоречит Дао, сгинет до срока.

—[30c93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Тот, кто, обладая Дао-Путем, оказывает как советник помощь государю, оружие не применяет, дабы силой взять Поднебесную, ибо к нам возвращаются плоды деяний наших. ~ Там, где прошли войска, родится только терновник да репей колючий, а по пятам за войском следуют голодные годы. ~ Благому следующий полководец лишь цели должной достигает, и все. ~ Не смеет брать он то, что взять лишь силой можно. ~ Он достигает только должной цели и не гордится этим. ~ Он достигает только должной цели и не воует более. ~ Он достигает только должной цели и не кичится этим. ~ Он достигает только должной цели и не более того. ~ Он достигает только должной цели и не творит насилий. ~ Когда живое существо сильно и крепко, но вдруг дряхлеет, говорят, что это результат утраты Дао. ~ Кто истинный теряет Дао-Путь, тот гибнет рано.

—[30c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Тот, кто посредством Дао помогает государю, ~ не использует солдат, чтобы насиловать Поднебесную, ~ ибо такое действие вызывает противодействие. ~ Места, где побывали войска, зарастают колючками и терновником, ~ после скопища армий непременно наступают лихие годы. ~ Искусный (добрый) добился успеха - и все, ~ [он] не дерзнет прибегнуть к насилию. ~

Добился успеха и не бахвалится. ~ Добился успеха и не карает. ~ Добился успеха и не своевольничает. ~ Добился успеха и не взимает. ~ Добился успеха и не прибегает к насилию. ~ Если вещь должна быть в расцвете сил, а стара, ~ значит, она не-Дао. ~ Не-Дао рано умирает.

— [30c95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Кто служит главе народа посредством дао, не покоряет другие страны при помощи войск, ибо это может обратиться против него. ~ Где побывали войска, там растут терновник и колючки. ~ После больших войн наступают голодные годы. ~ Искусный [полководец] побеждает и на этом останавливается, и он не осмеливается осуществлять насилие. ~ Он побеждает и себя не прославляет. ~ Он побеждает и не нападает. ~ Он побеждает и не гордится. ~ Он побеждает потому, что к этому его вынуждают. ~ Он побеждает, но он не воинствен. ~ Когда существо, полное сил, становится старым, то это называется [отсутствием] дао. ~ Кто не соблюдает дао, погибнет раньше времени.

— [30c96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Кто помогает царю по Тао, тот не будет заботиться о процветании страны посредством военной силы: что бы вы ни сделали людям, они тем же воздадут вам. ~ Где войско стоит, там будет расти колючая трава (вместо хлеба). ~ После великой войны бывает неурожайный год. ~ Отсюда когда нравственный человек управляет (страной), то никогда не прибегает к грубой силе, не ищет тщеславия, не воюет, не гордится ничем, не останавливается нигде и не усиливается. ~ Когда вещь дойдет до полноты своего развития, то она ослабеет и дряхлеет. ~ То, что не Тао, быстро уничтожается.

— [30c97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Тот, кто берет Путь в помощь господину людей, ~ Не подчиняет мир силой оружия: ~ Ибо это навлечет скорое возмездие. ~ Где стояло войско, там вырастут бурьян и колючки, ~ Где прошла война, там будет голодный год. ~ Искусный [стратег] ценит только плод ~ И не пользуется случаем, чтобы стать сильнее. ~ Одержав победу, не кичится; ~ Одержав победу, не бахвалится; ~ Одержав победу, не гордится. ~ Он побеждает словно поневоле. ~ Он побеждает - и не показывает силы. ~ Кто накопил силу, быстро одряхлеет, ~ Это означает "противиться Пути". ~ А кто противится Пути, скоро погибнет.

— [30c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Если с мотивацией Пути помогаешь правителю людей, то не будешь посредством оружия усиливать Поднебесную. ~ В таких делах сильно воздаяние. ~ Там, где стоят войска, вырастают колючки и тернии. ~ За большими ратями следуют годы неудач и бедствий. ~ Наилучшее - добившись успеха, устранишься. ~ Не старайся через это получить силу. ~ В успехе не гордись. ~ В успехе не хвастай. ~ В успехе не возносись. ~ В успехе оказывайся против своей воли. ~ В успехе не будь сильным. ~ Сущность, достигнув пика силы, начинает стареть. ~ Это определяется: ~ Не Путь. ~ Если не Путь, то устранишься пораньше.

— [31c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ As for weapons - they are instruments of ill omen. ~ And among things there are those that hate them. ~ Therefore, the one who has the Way, with them does not dwell. ~ When the gentleman is at home, he honors the left; ~ When at war, he honors the right. ~ Therefore, weapons are not the instrument of the gentleman - ~ Weapons are instruments of ill omen. ~ When you have no choice but to use them, it's best to remain tranquil and calm. ~ You should never look upon them as things of beauty. ~ If you see them as beautiful things - this is to delight in the killing of men. ~ And when you delight in the killing of men, you'll not realize your goal in the land. ~ Therefore, in happy events we honor the left, ~ But in mourning we honor the right. ~ Therefore, the lieutenant general stands on the left; ~ And the supreme general stands on the right. ~ Which is to say, they arrange themselves as they would at a funeral. ~ When multitudes of people are killed, we stand before them in sorrow and grief. ~ When we're victorious in battle, we treat the occasion like a funeral ceremony.

—[31c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ FINE weapons of war augur evil. ~ Even things seem to hate them. ~ Therefore, a man of Tao does not set his heart upon them. ~ In ordinary life, a gentleman regards the left side as the place of honour: ~ In war, the right side is the place of honour. ~ As weapons are instruments of evil, ~ They are not properly a gentleman's instruments; ~ Only on necessity will he resort to them. ~ For peace and quiet are dearest to his heart, ~ And to him even a victory is no cause for rejoicing. ~ To rejoice over a victory is to rejoice over the slaughter of men! ~ Hence a man who rejoices over the slaughter of men cannot expect to thrive in the world of men. ~ On happy occasions the left side is preferred: ~ On sad occasions the right side. ~ In the army, the Lieutenant Commander stands on the left, ~ While the Commander-in-Chief stands on the right. ~ This means that war is treated on a par with a funeral service. ~ Because many people have been killed, it is only right that survivors should mourn for them. ~ Hence, even a victory is a funeral.

—[31c03t] D. C. Lau ~ It is because arms are instruments of ill omen and there are Things that detest them that one who has the way does not abide by their use. ~ The gentleman gives precedence to the left when at home, but to the right when he goes to war. ~ Arms are instruments of ill omen, not the instruments of the gentleman. ~ When one is compelled to use them, it is best to do so without relish. ~ There is no glory in victory, and to glorify it despite this is to exult in the killing of men. ~ One who exults in the killing of men will never have his way in the empire. ~ On occasions of rejoicing precedence is given to the left; ~ On occasions of mourning precedence is given to the right. ~ A lieutenant's place is on the left; ~ The general's place is on the right. ~ This means that it is mourning rites that are observed. ~ When great numbers of people are killed, one should weep over them with sorrow. ~ When victorious in war, one should observe the rites of mourning.

—[31c04t] R. L. Wing ~ The finest weapons can be the instruments of misfortune, ~ And thus contrary to Natural Law. ~ Those who possess the Tao turn away from them. ~ Evolved leaders occupy and honor the left; ~ Those who use weapons honor the right. ~ Weapons are instruments of misfortune ~ That are used by the unevolved. ~ When their use is unavoidable, ~ The superior act with calm restraint. ~ Even when victorious, let there be no joy, ~ For such joy leads to contentment with slaughter. ~ Those who are content with slaughter ~ Cannot find fulfillment in the world.

—[31c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ Weapons are instruments of evil, ~ They are disdained by everyone. ~ Therefore those who possess Tao stay away from them. ~ When at home jun-zi honours the left; ~ When at war he honours the right. ~ Weapons are the instruments of evil, not the instruments of jun-zi. ~ When he uses them unavoidably, he maintains an indifferent attitude. ~ Even when he is victorious, he doesn't think himself praiseworthy. ~ If he praises his victory, he is the man delighting in the slaughter of people. ~ He who delights in the slaughter of people will not succeed under Heaven. ~ On happy occasions, the left is honoured, ~ On unhappy occasions, the right is honoured. ~ The lieutenant-general stands on the left, ~ The senior general stands on the right. ~ That is to say that the arrangement of war affairs follows that of funeral ceremonies. ~ The war will slaughter the multitude of people, ~ So we should go to the battleground with sorrow and grief. ~ Even if it is won, we observe the occasion with funeral ceremonies.

—[31c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ Good weapons are instruments of fear; all creatures hate them. ~ Therefore followers of Tao never use them. ~ The wise man prefers the left. ~ The man of war prefers the right. ~ Weapons are instruments of fear; they are not a wise man's tools. ~ He uses them only when he has no choice. ~ Peace and quiet are dear to his heart, ~ And victory no cause for rejoicing. ~ If you rejoice in victory, then you delight in killing; ~ If you delight in killing, you cannot fulfill yourself. ~ On happy occasions precedence is given to the left, ~ On sad occasions to the right. ~ In the army the general stands on the left, ~ The commander-in-chief on the right. ~ This means that war is conducted like a funeral. ~ When many people are being killed, ~ They should be mourned in heartfelt sorrow. ~ That is why a victory must be observed like a funeral.

—[31c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ Fine weapons are ominous objects ~ And are detested by all living things. ~ For this reason the man who follows the Dao ~ will stay away from them when possible. ~ The refined man respects life in his daily life. ~ (he "follows the left"). ~ If he should resort to military force, he unavoidably ~ destroys life (he "follows the right"). ~ Weapons are ominous objects and are never the instruments of a refined person. ~ If ever he cannot avoid using them, ~ he must not make a big thing out of it. ~ Even if he wins the war, ~ he must not glorify the victory. ~ He who glorifies military victories ~ takes pleasure in killing. ~ He who takes pleasure in killing ~ will not win the support of the world. ~ Auspicious events are symbolized by the left; ~ Ominous events are symbolized by the right. ~ The next-in-command should take the left seat; ~ The chief-in-command should take the right seat. ~ This is to say that a military victory should be treated like a ceremony to honor the dead. ~ For those who kill, let us shed our tears upon them. ~ Upon winning a war, let us pay tribute to those who die with the rites of mourning.

—[31c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ Weapons are not auspicious, but very annoying. ~ So, people who follow the DAO do not use them. ~ Noble men value their left side in daily life and their right side in battle. ~ Weapons are not auspicious, not something noble men like to use. ~ They use them only when they have to, and they treat them like they do not matter. ~ After winning a war, do not be delighted. ~ Those who are delighted love to kill. ~ The people who love to kill cannot be allowed to control the country. ~ At celebrations, the left side is respected; at funerals, the right side is respected. ~ In a war, the subordinate is on the left side and the commander is on the right side. ~ Therefore, a war should be talked about like a funeral. ~ When many are killed, people should cry to show sadness. ~ Winning a war should be treated like a funeral.

—[31c09t] Walter Gorn Old, CEASING FROM WAR ~ Weapons, however ornamental, are not a source of happiness, but are dreaded by all. ~ Therefore the man of Tao will not abide where such things are. ~ A respectable man at home sets the place of honour at his left hand; but the warrior on going forth to battle gives honour to the right hand. For weapons are things of ill omen, and the man of enlightenment does not use them except when he cannot help it. ~ His great desire is peace, and he does not take joy in conquest. ~ To joy in conquest is to joy in the loss of human life. ~ He who joys in bloodshed is not fit to govern the country. ~ When affairs are prosperous the left side is preferred, but when things are adverse the right is esteemed. ~ The adjutant-general is therefore on the left side, while the general-in-chief is on the right. ~ This I perceive is the manner also observed at a funeral! ~ He who has occasion to kill many people has cause for deep sorrow and tears. ~ Therefore a victorious army observes the order of a funeral.

—[31c10t] James Legge ~ Now arms, however beautiful, are instruments of evil omen, hateful, it may be said, to all creatures. ~ Therefore they who have the Tao do not like to employ them. ~ The superior man ordinarily considers the left hand the most honourable place, but in time of war the right hand. ~ Those sharp weapons are instruments of evil omen, and not the instruments of the superior man; ~ - he uses them only on the compulsion of necessity. ~ Calm and repose are what he prizes; ~ victory (by force of arms) is to him undesirable. ~ To consider this desirable would be to delight in the slaughter of men; ~ and he who delights in the slaughter of men cannot get his will in the kingdom. ~ On occasions of festivity to be on the left hand is the prized position; ~ on occasions of mourning, the right hand. ~ The second in command of the army has his place on the left; ~ the general commanding in chief has his on the right; ~ - his place, that is, is assigned to him as in the rites of mourning. ~ He who has killed multitudes of men should weep for them with the bitterest grief; ~ and the victor in battle has his place (rightly) according to those rites.

—[31c11t] David Hinton ~ Auspicious weapons are the tools of misfortune. ~ Things may not all despise such tools, ~ but a master of the Way stays clear of them. ~ The noble-minded treasure the left when home and the right when taking up weapons of war. ~ Weapons are tools of misfortune, ~ not tools of the noble-minded. ~ When there's no other way, ~ they take up weapons with tranquil calm, ~ finding no glory in victory. ~ To find glory in victory is to savor killing people, ~ and if you savor killing people you'll never guide all beneath heaven. ~ We honor the left in celebrations ~ and honor the right in lamentations, ~ so captains stand on the left ~ and generals on the right. ~ But use them both as if conducting a funeral: ~ when so many people are being killed ~ it should be done with tears and mourning. ~ And victory too should be conducted like a funeral.

—[31c12t] Chichung Huang ~ Weapons are inauspicious instruments ~ Which people all loathe. ~ Therefore, he who possesses the Tao ~ Does not accumulate. ~ The gentleman ordinarily honors the left; ~ At war, he honors the right. ~ Therefore, weapons are not the gentleman's instruments. ~ Weapons being inauspicious instruments, ~ If you cannot but use them, ~ It is best to cover up their sharp blades; ~ Do not relish them. ~ If you relish them, ~ It means you enjoy killing men. ~ He who enjoys killing men ~ Cannot be allowed to prevail in the empire. ~ Hence, on auspicious occasions, ~ Precedence is given to the left; ~ In mourning, ~ Precedence is given to the right. ~ Hence, a lieutenant general stands left; ~ A senior general stands right, ~ Meaning it is handled with mourning rituals. ~ If the number of men killed is multitudinous, ~ Preside over it in grief. ~ After winning a war, ~ Handle it with mourning rituals.

—[31c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ Military weapons are implements (ch'i) of ill omen, ~ Avoided (o) even by natural creatures (wu). ~ Hence the Taoist does not indulge (ch'u) in them. ~ The princely person (chün-tzu) in dwelling honors the left, ~ In military campaigns honors the right. ~ Hence military weapons are not implements of a princely person. ~ Military weapons, being implements of ill omen, ~ Are to be employed only in dire necessity. ~ Better to regard them with lack of interest. ~ Do not admire (mei) them. ~ If one admires (mei) them, ~ One would be rejoicing in the killing of people. ~ But whoever rejoices in the killing of people, ~ Will not be successful (chih) in the world. ~ Therefore in joyful affairs the left is honored, ~ In mournful affairs the right is honored. ~ The Second-in-Command takes the place of the left, ~ The Commander-in-Chief takes the place of the right, ~ Meaning that this is his place in the funeral rite. ~ When many people have been killed, ~ Wail them with sorrow and lamentations. ~ When victorious in battle, ~ Mark the occasion with the rite (li) of funeral.

—[31c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ Excellent armaments and proficient armies are ominous instruments, even animals detest them [because of their violent disposition]; ~ Therefore a person who quests for Tao shall not make much use of them [unless it is the last resort]. ~ [By decree of the traditional Propriety Ritual (Li)] In court: ~ In times of peace, the left side of the king is considered the superior placement; ~ But, in times of battles, the right side of the king is deemed superior. ~ Military devices are ominous instruments, so they are not instruments for gentlemen; ~ A Gentleman only employs them when he has exhausted all other options, even so he would still struggle hard to avert the situation; ~ He does not celebrate victory, for the glorification of victory would condone the killing of people; ~ Whoever endorses killing of people can never become a leader of the world. ~ [According to the traditional Propriety Ritual (Li):] ~ Ceremonies for fortunate (happy) occasions designates the left side as superior, ~ whereas ceremonies for unfortunate (unhappy) occasions assigns the right side as superior. ~ However, for military ceremonies [the representation is reversed]: ~ [the inferior] deputy (strategic) generals are placed on the left side, while the leading (combating) generals are placed on the right side; ~ [After each battle the commander-in-chief] must cry out with moan and tears to mourn the dead in the ceremony, because many people were killed. ~

Accordingly, even the [happy] ceremony for celebrating the victory was modeled after the rituals of funerals.

—[31c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ Good weapons are instruments of evil. ~ Even things seem to hate them. ~ Therefore the man of the Way does not set his heart upon them. ~ A superior man prefers the left side when at home, prefers the right side when in war. ~ Weapons are instruments of evil. ~ They are not the instruments of the superior man. ~ He uses them when he has no choice. ~ He prefers peace and quiet. ~ To him victory is not beautiful. ~ To glorify a victory is to rejoice over killing men. ~ If one rejoices over killing men, one will not conquer the will of the world. ~ Many people have been killed, one should weep over them with sorrow. ~ A victory is also a funeral.

—[31c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ Weapons are destructive. ~ They are generally disliked. ~ Therefore, Tao-followers avoid them. ~ At home, Gentlemen are happy in left seats. ~ When in war, gentlemen prefer to the right. ~ Since weapons are destructive, they are not gentlemen's tools. ~ They are used as a last resort. ~ It is better to be cautious. ~ After winning, one should not glorify the victory. ~ By glorifying war, one takes delight in killing. ~ Those who take delight in killing will not win the world. ~ In joyful events the left is honored. ~ In funerals the right side is honored. ~ The lieutenant commander positions to the left. ~ The command-in-chief positions to the right. ~ This is following funeral convention. ~ When casualties are heavy, honor the deaths with grief. ~ Treat victory as if it is a funeral.

—[31c17t] Arthur Waley ~ Fine weapons are none the less ill-omened things. ~ That is why, among people of good birth, in peace the left-hand side is the place of honour, but in war this is reversed and the right-hand side is the place of honour. ~ The Quietist, even when he conquers, does not regard weapons as lovely things. ~ For to think them lovely means to delight in them, and to delight in them means to delight in the slaughter of men. ~ And he who delights in the slaughter of men will never get what he looks for out of those that dwell under heaven. ~ A host that has slain men is received with grief and mourning; he that has conquered in battle is received with rites of mourning.

—[31c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ Weapons are instruments of ill omen. ~ The people always hate them, so one who has the Dao has nothing to do with them. ~ When the noble man is at home, he honors the left and, when employing troops, honors the right. ~ Weapons are instruments of ill omen; ~ they are not the instruments of the noble man, who uses them only when there is no choice. ~ It is best to be utterly dispassionate [tiandan] about them, and, even if they bring victory, one should not praise them. ~ Nevertheless, to praise them means that one delights in slaughtering people, and one who delights in slaughtering people, of course, can never achieve the goal of ruling all under Heaven. ~ For auspicious matters, one honors the left, and, for inauspicious matters, one honors the right. ~ A deputy general takes his place on the left, but a general-in-chief takes his place on the right, where mourning rites are observed. ~ When masses of people are slaughtered, one should weep for them with utmost sadness, so, when victorious in war, one should observe it with mourning rites.

—[31c19t] Lin Yutang ~ WEAPONS OF EVIL ~ Of all things, soldiers are instruments of evil, ~ Hated by men. ~ Therefore the religious man (possessed of Tao) avoids them. ~ The gentleman favors the left in civilian life, ~ But on military occasions favors the right. ~ Soldiers are weapons of evil. ~ They are not the weapons of the gentleman. ~ When the use of soldiers cannot be helped, ~ The best policy is calm restraint. ~ Even in victory, there is no beauty, ~ And who calls it beautiful ~ Is one who delights in slaughter. ~ He who delights in slaughter ~ Will not succeed in his ambition to rule the world. ~ [The things of good omen favor the left. ~ The things of ill omen favor the right. ~ The lieutenant-general stands on the left, ~ The general stands on the right. ~ That is to say, it is celebrated as a Funeral Rite.] ~ The slaying of multitudes should be mourned with sorrow. ~ A victory should be celebrated with the Funeral Rite.

—[31c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ Now, ~ Weapons are instruments of evil omen; ~ Creation abhors them. ~ Therefore, ~ One who aspires to the Way does not abide in them. ~ The superior man at home honors the left, on the battlefield honors the right. ~ Therefore, ~ Weapons are not instruments of the superior man; ~ Weapons are instruments of evil omen, ~ to be used only when there is no other choice. ~ He places placidity above all and refuses to prettify weapons; ~ If one prettifies weapons, this is to delight in the killing of others. ~ Now, ~ One who delights in the killing of others ~ Cannot exercise his will over all under heaven. ~ For this reason, ~ On occasions for celebration, the left is given priority; ~ On occasions for mourning, the right is given priority. ~ Therefore, ~ A deputy general stands on the left, ~ The general-in-chief stands on the right. ~ In other words, ~ They stand in accordance with mourning ritual. ~ The killing of masses of human beings, ~ we bewail with sorrow and grief; ~ Victory in battle, ~ we commemorate with mourning ritual.

—[31c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ Weapons are ill-omened things. ~ Among gentle people the left side is the place of honor when at home, ~ but in war the right side is the place of honor. ~ Weapons are not proper instruments for gentle people; ~ they use them only when they have no other choice. ~ Peace and quiet are what they value. ~ They do not glory in victory. ~ To glorify it is to delight in the slaughter of people. ~ Those who delight in the slaughter of people will never thrive among all that dwell under heaven. ~ The army that has killed people should be received with sorrow. ~ Conquerors should be received with the rites of mourning.

—[31c22t] David H. Li ~ Weaponry are not instruments of the good; ~ they are disliked by everyone. ~ One with Direction does not harbor them. ~ A gentleman, ~ at home, takes the left position; ~ in war, the right position. ~ Weaponry are not instruments of the good; ~ they are not a gentleman's instruments. ~ Use them only because there is no alternative; ~ use them with restraint. ~ After victory, beautify it not. ~ One who beautifies [war] is one who delights in killing. ~ One who delights in killing is unfit to be entrusted with people of the world. ~ On celebratory occasions, prefer left; ~ On sad occasions, prefer right. ~ The adjutant stays left; ~ the commander-in-chief stays right. ~ Thus, treat war as funeral. ~ Those who have killed, return with remorse. ~ Treat victory as funeral.

—[31c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ Weapons are instruments of ill omen; all creatures abhor them. ~ Therefore, the man of the Tao never abides in them. ~ The virtuous man usually honors the left, the positive, ~ But, when called to be in a battlefield, honors the right, the negative. ~ Weapons are instruments of ill omen, ~ Not instruments of the virtuous man. ~ Therefore, when he is compelled to resort to them, ~ He uses them with utmost restraint and calmness. ~ He does not glorify victory, for glorifying victory means to take delight in killing. ~ And whosoever takes delight in killing will never find success in this world. ~ On occasions for celebration, the positive left is given priority, ~ On occasions for mourning, the negative right is given priority. ~ The lieutenant stands on the left, and the general on the right. ~ That is, they stand in accordance with mourning ritual. ~ The killing of masses of human beings we bewail with deep sorrow and grief. ~ The victory in battle we observe with rites of mourning.

—[31c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ As far as weapons are concerned, they are instruments of suffering. ~ They are not the instruments of the man of Tao. ~ For the actions of weapons will be repaid: ~ In a place where armies are stationed, only thorns and thistles grow. ~ Years of misery always accompany great wars. ~ When the man of Tao stays at home, ~ His left is his place of honor, ~ And when using weapons, ~ His right is his place of honor. ~ He uses weapons ~ Only when he cannot avoid doing so. ~ He does not rejoice in his conquests. ~ If he rejoices in his conquests, ~ It means that he enjoys killing and slaughter. ~ The person who enjoys killing people, ~ Cannot realize his aspirations in the world. ~ In matters of bringing honor, the place of honor is on the left; ~ In the opposite matters, the place of honor is on the right. ~ The adjutant-general takes his place on the left, ~ The general's place is on the right, ~ And this means that it is a funeral procession. ~ The slaughter of many people leads to deep and protracted mourning. ~ Victory in battle is immortalized in a funeral procession.

—[31c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ The guide who walks the Way ~ Never resorts to violence. ~ The sage goes to the left side of the Emperor; ~ while the man of war goes to the right. ~ Weapons are terrible things - ~ and no sage will have anything to do with them, ~ unless there is no alternative. ~ The sage wants peace and quiet. ~ No victory is free of grief, ~ and so to celebrate one is to glory in the death of innocent people. ~ No one who revels in death like this ~ can be true to the Way ~ or is fit to rule in our world. ~ At glad times, the place of honour is on the left: ~ after disaster, it is on the right. ~ So in the army, the officers stand to the left while the general stands to the right. ~ So the whole thing is staged like a funeral. ~ When a war kills many, we must mourn for them - ~ And if you win the war, you must grieve it.

—[31c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ Arms are tools of ill omen, ~ Detested by everybody. ~ And a man of the Tao does not use them. ~ The gentleman usually favours the left, ~ But when being at war, he favours the right. ~ Arms are tools of ill omen, ~ Not the instruments of the gentleman. ~ Even if compelled to use them, ~ The gentleman does not use them with pleasure. ~ Even if being the victor, ~ The gentleman does not glorify the victory. ~ He who glorifies the victory ~ Is such one as takes delight in killing. ~ He who takes delight in killing ~ Can never be successful in winning the empire. ~ On occasions of auspicious celebration the left is favoured; ~ On occasions of mourning the right is favoured. ~ A lieutenant's position is on the left; ~ A general's position is on the right. ~ That is to say, mourning rites should be observed in military operations. ~ War brings about heavy casualties, ~ So one should take part in it with deep sorrow. ~ When winning the victory, victors should treat the dead by observing the rites of mourning.

—[31c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ Weapons are cursed instruments. ~ They are something to hate. ~ Therefore he who holds the Tao will not use them. ~ A virtuous man keeps to the left position in his daily life, but values the right in times of war. ~ Weapons are cursed instruments and not made for virtuous men. ~ He who uses them against his will will handle them with great concern. ~ One should regard victory as something ugly. ~ He who regards it as beautiful enjoys killing and will not achieve his ambition under Heaven. ~ A lucky event is honoured by the left position, ~ an unlucky event by the right. ~ In preparation for war, a lieutenant stands on the left, ~ a general stands on the right. ~ This means that the matter is treated as a funeral. ~ Cry with sorrow when many people are killed. ~ Regard it as a period of mourning when the battle is won.

—[31c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ The weapon is a disliked inauspicious object. ~ One who serves the Way will not take up a weapon. ~ A gentleman values the left in the dwelling place ~ And a general the right in the battlefield. ~ One serving the Way uses the inauspicious weapon ~ Only when there is the extreme necessity. ~ It is best to be indifferent to military achievements. ~ Having achieved a victory, one should not beautify it. ~ Those who beautify wars like killing. ~ Those who like killing cannot be accepted by the world. ~ The left is valued on auspicious occasions. ~ And the right on inauspicious occasions. ~ On the battle field, the assistant general is on the left. ~ And the general on the right. ~ Such positioning treats the war as a burial ceremony. ~ The wise person mourns when too many have died, ~ Holds a burial ceremony rather than victory celebration.

—[31c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ The Unlucky Emblem ~ Lao Tze says, ~ The strong military force is an unlucky emblem to the state, thus all living creatures would abhor it. ~ The Tao practitioners should not promote it too. ~ The upright man ordinarily considers the left hand the most honorable place, but in time of war the right hand. ~ The military force is an unlucky emblem, it is not the emblem for the upright man. ~ It is manipulated on the compulsion of necessity. ~ Calm and repose should be prized; ~ victory is not regarded as a beautiful work. ~ Whoever regards victory as a beautiful work, he is one who takes delight in killing men. ~ Whoever likes to kill men will not succeed in his ambition to rule the world. ~ On occasion of rejoicing, precedence is given to the left; ~ on occasion of mourning, precedence is given to the right. ~ The second in command of an army has his place on the left; ~ the chief commander has position of the right; ~ this says: a funeral is taking place. ~ The lamentation is observed for the numerous dead who were killed on the battlefield. ~ Thus, a victory ceremony is being held in the funeral rite.

—[31c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ So far as arms are concerned, they are implements of ill-omen. ~ They are not implements for the man of Tao. ~ For the actions of arms will be well requited; where armies have been quartered brambles and thorns grow. ~ Great wars are for certain followed by years of scarcity. ~ The man of Tao when dwelling at home makes the left as the place of honour, and when using arms makes the right as the place of honour. ~ He uses them only when he cannot avoid it. ~ In his conquests he takes no delight. ~ If he take delight in them, it would mean that he enjoys in the slaughter of men. ~ He who takes delight in the slaughter of men cannot have his will done in the world.

—[31c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ Fine weapons are the tools of evil; ~ All things are likely to hate them. ~ So those with Tao do not want to deal with them. ~ The gentleman who stays at home values the left; ~ In war, he values the right. ~ Weapons are the tools of evil, ~ not the tools of the gentleman. ~ When he uses them unavoidably, he is most calm and detached ~ And does not glorify his victory. ~ To glorify means to relish the murder of people, ~ Relishing the murder of people, ~ One cannot exercise his will in the world. ~ Happy occasions prefer the left. ~ Sorrowful occasions prefer the right. ~ The lieutenant-general is placed on the left. ~ The general-in-chief is placed on the right. ~ This means observing this occasion with funeral rites. ~ Having killed many people, one should lament with sorrow and grief. ~ Victory in war must be observed with funeral rites.

—[31c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ 'Fine weapons' are ill-omened instruments. ~ Things seem to detest them, so the ambitious man does not dwell here. ~ "The gentleman at home favors the left, ~ when at war he favors the right." ~ Weapons are ill-omened instruments, ~ not instruments for the gentleman, ~ he uses them when he has no choice. ~ What is calm and quiet is highest. ~ When victorious, he does not think this a fine thing, ~ because to think it fine is to delight in slaughtering people. ~ One who delights in slaughtering people cannot achieve his purposes in the world. ~ "In fortunate times, prefer the left; ~ in mourning, prefer the right." ~ The lower officer takes his stand on the left, ~ the higher officer takes his stand on the right. ~ This says: ~ He takes his stand as at a mourning ceremony. ~ At the slaughter of such masses of men, ~ he weeps for them, mourning and lamenting. ~ When victorious in the battle - ~ he takes his stand as at a mourning ceremony.

—[31c33t] Cheng Lin ~ The weapons of war are implements of disaster, and they should not be employed by the rulers except when it is unavoidable. ~ They should not show enthusiasm for their employment, and even when they are victorious, they should not glorify them. ~ To glorify them means taking delight in the killing of men. ~ Those who take delight in the killing of men cannot win the approval of the whole Empire. ~ The weapons of war are the implements of disaster, and they are detestable. ~ Therefore they are spurned by the followers of Truth. ~ Ordinarily the ruler esteems the left hand, but in war he esteems the right hand. ~ On joyful occasions, the left-hand side is the place of honour, ~ but on mournful occasions, the right-hand side is the place of honour. ~ The general second in command is seated on the left-hand side, and the general-in-chief is seated on the right-hand side. ~ All these indicate that war should be regarded as a mournful occasion. ~ When many people are killed, it should be an occasion for the expression of bitter grief. ~ Even when a victory is scored, the occasion should be regarded as lamentable.

—[31c34t] Yi Wu ~ Fine weapons are things of ill omen. ~ All beings may dislike them; ~ Therefore, one who follows the Way does not live with them. ~ Ordinarily, a superior man values the left side; ~ Using an army, he values the right side. ~ Weapons are things of ill omen, not a superior man's things. ~ He uses them only when unavoidable. ~ He regards contentment as best. ~ Even if he wins, victory is not beautiful. ~ To find a victory beautiful is to rejoice at killing people. ~ One who rejoices at killing people can never attain his will in the world. ~ On fortunate occasions, the left side is elevated; ~ On unfortunate occasions, the right side is elevated. ~ The lieutenant-general stays on the left; ~ The supreme general stays on the right. ~ Deal with military affairs as if they were funeral rites. ~ Mourn for the killing of many people. ~ Observe funeral rites for the winning of a war.

—[31c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ Sharp weapons are inauspicious instruments. ~ Everyone dislikes them. ~ Hence, those who follow the way of Dao avoid using them. ~ In times of peace, a person of virtue favours the left side. ~ Only during war does the right side become the preferred choice. ~ A weapon is an instrument of bad omen. ~ It is never the favourite object of the man of virtue. ~ Even as the last resort when military force has to be used, ~ It should be used with great restraint and equanimity. ~ In victory, one should not glorify the war. ~ He who glorifies war must be a bloodthirsty person. ~ No bloodthirsty person has ever won universal respect or approval. ~ The left side represents good auspices. ~ The right side augurs bad omen. ~ The second-in-command resides on the left side, whereas the commander-in-chief resides on the right. ~ In conducting the war, the mood is as dark and solemn as that of a funeral rite. ~ During the conflict, you should still mourn for the heavy casualties you have inflicted. ~ In victory, you should bury the dead with appropriate ceremony.

—[31c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ Weapons are instruments of killing and destruction, ~ which are contrary to the nature of life. ~ Thus, they are avoided by those who follow the subtle Way of the universe. ~ According to ancient social custom, ~ in times of peace a gentleman regards the left side, the soft hand, as the place of honor; ~ in times of war, the right side, the strong hand, is considered the place of honor. ~ Because weapons are inauspicious, ~ they are not the instruments of a gentleman. ~ Only when one has no other choice may one resort to using them, and, if their use is necessary, one must employ calmness and restraint, ~ for peace and quiet are the normal nature of universal life. ~ Even in victory there is no cause for excitement and rejoicing. ~ To rejoice over a victory is to delight in killing and destruction. ~ He who delights in killing and destruction cannot be expected to thrive for long in the world. ~ Therefore, on happy occasions the left side has precedence, ~ while on sad occasions, it is the right side. ~ When this rite was applied in the army, the lieutenant-commander stood at the left, while the commander-in-chief stood on the right. ~ This indicates that war is treated as the equivalent of a funeral service. ~ Because many people have been caused an unnatural death in war, ~ it is only right that the survivors should mourn them. ~ Even when a victory is won, ~ the occasion should be regarded as lamentable.

—[31c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ Arms are implements of ill omen which are abhorred by men. ~ Therefore, the man of Tao does not abide them. ~ Arms are implements of ill omen. ~ One uses them only when one cannot avoid it. ~ Even if one engages in fighting, one should remain quiescent and indifferent. ~ Even if the war is won, one should not glorify it. ~ To glorify it means that one enjoys slaying men. ~ If one enjoys slaying men, one will never be successful in the world.

—[31c38t] Henry Wei ~ Banning the Use of Force ~ Yen Wu ~ Fine weapons are inauspicious instruments. ~

They are probably detested by the people. ~ Therefore, he who is possessed of Tao rejects them. ~ The superior man honors the left in time of peace; ~ In time of war he honors the right. ~ Weapons are inauspicious instruments; ~ They are not instruments for the superior man. ~ He uses them only under dire necessity, ~ And in this case priority is given to moderation. ~ He does not consider victory a fine thing. ~ Those who consider victory a fine thing ~ Are those who delight in slaughtering people. ~ Those who delight in slaughtering people ~ Can never gratify their ambition to win the world. ~ Therefore, the left is favored for felicitous occasions; ~ For mournful occasions, the right is favored. ~ The second-in-command stands on the left, ~ While the commander-in-chief stands on the right; ~ For according to funeral rites are they treated. ~ Mass slaughter is to be bewailed with grief and sorrow. ~ Victory is to be mourned with funeral rites.

—[31c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ Dazzling arms ~ Are instruments of ill omen. ~ All creatures detest them. ~ Therefore the man of Tao does not keep company with them. ~ At home, the prince honors the left; ~ At war, the right. ~ Arms ~ Are instruments of ill omen - ~ No instruments for the prince. ~ When necessary to use them, ~ It's best to do so in calm disinterestedness. ~ You do not celebrate a victory. ~ To celebrate a victory ~ Is to delight in the slaughter of people. ~ He who delights in the slaughter of people ~ Will never realize his ambition under Heaven. ~ At times of good fortune, you honor the left; ~ At times of misfortune, you honor the right. ~ The second in command stands on the left; ~ The supreme commander stands on the right. ~ This means they stand as if observing funeral rites. ~ Having committed mass killings, ~ Let us weep with deep sorrow; ~ For a victory, let us observe funeral rites.

—[31c40t] Tao Huang ~ The army is the mechanism of bad luck. ~ The elements of the world may oppose. ~ So those who have ambitions cannot rest. ~ Therefore the nobleman takes his place on the left side, ~ And the commander on the right side. ~ So the army is not the nobleman's weapon. ~ As a mechanism of bad luck, ~ He uses it only as the last resort. ~ Then the best way is to use it quickly and destructively. ~ Do not enjoy this. ~ To take delight in it is to enjoy killing people. ~ Those who enjoy killing people do not attract the favor of the world. ~ The good inclines to the left, ~ The bad inclines to the right. ~ Thus the intelligent officer stays on the left, ~ The army commander stays on the right. ~ Speaking in an image of sadness, ~ After killing the people, every one stands in mourning. ~ Victory is celebrated as a funeral service.

—[31c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ War is an unlucky instrument. ~ It is hated by everything! ~ Thus a man of Dao will never resort to use it. ~ A position taken by a gentle official is on the right - honorable side; ~ the position taken by a war conductor is on the left - less honorable side. ~ War is an unlucky instrument, it is not the instrument of a gentle ruler. ~ They are obligated to die and utilized by the authority. ~ To keep calm and have peace of mind is to be superior. ~ Victory of war is not delightful: ~ if one delights in war, he delights in killing people; ~ if one delights in killing people, it will never be possible for him to be at peace with the world. ~ Thus on happy occasions the right side is honored. ~ On sad occasions the left side is honored. ~ During a war, many people are killed, ~ It should be taken mournfully. ~ Even a victory should be treated as a funeral.

—[31c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ Fine weapons are instruments of evil. ~ They are hated by men. ~ Therefore those who possess Tao turn away from them. ~ The good ruler when at home honors the left. ~ When at war he honors the right. ~ Weapons are instruments of evil, not the instruments of a good ruler. ~ When he uses them unavoidably, he regards calm restraint as the best principle. ~ Even when he is victorious, he does not regard it as praiseworthy, ~ For to praise victory is to delight in the slaughter of men. ~ He who delights in the slaughter of men will not succeed in the empire. ~ In auspicious affairs, the left is honored. ~ In inauspicious affairs, the right is honored. ~ The lieutenant general stands on the left. ~ The senior general stands on the right. ~ This is to say that the arrangement follows that of funeral ceremonies. ~ For the slaughter of the multitude, let us weep with sorrow and grief. ~ For a victory, let us observe the occasion with funeral ceremonies.

—[31c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Отличное оружие - несчастья инструмент. ~ Его, кажется, никто не любит. ~ И им не ведает, у кого Дао. ~ Благородный муж обычно самой ценной стороной считает левую, ~ когда же он берется за оружие, то ценит правую. ~ Оружие - несчастья инструмент, ~ и благородный муж его своим не признает. ~ Он пользуется им лишь по необходимости. ~ Считает наилучшим сохранять невозмутимость и не восторгаться победой на войне. ~ Ведь ею восторгаться - значит радоваться убиению людей. ~ А кто радуется убиению людей - не может быть главою Поднебесной. ~ В праздничной обрядности дорожат левой стороной, в траурной предпочитают правую. ~ Подчиненные военачальника находятся на левой стороне, сам он занимает место справа. ~ Значит, они размещаются согласно погребальному обряду, ~ и им при множестве убитых следует оплакивать их с горечью и скорбью. ~ Победа на войне заслуживает погребального обряда.

—[31c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Оружие - инструмент зла. ~ Даже вещи - и те ненавидят его. ~ Поэтому ему нет места у того, кто овладел Дао. ~ Благородный муж, будучи дома, предпочитает левую сторону, а отправляясь в поход - правую. ~ Оружие - инструмент зла, а не орудие благородного мужа. ~ И он не пользуется им, пока его к этому не принудят; ~ а главное - делает это в равнодушии к славе и выгоде, побеждает, но не стремится к славе. ~ Стремящийся же к славе получает удовольствие, убивая людей. ~ Тот, кто получает удовольствие, убивая людей, никогда не сможет повелевать Поднебесной. ~ В случае радостного события обращайся влево, в случае печального события - вправо. ~ Место помощника полководца - слева, место полководца - справа. ~ Это значит, что приходит время погребальных обрядов. ~ Когда гибнет великое множество людей, кто-то должен оплакивать их, скорбя. ~ Даже когда достигнута победа в сражении, должно найтись место и погребальным обрядам.

—[31c93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Оружие недоброго знамения вестник. ~ Поэтому все существа оружие и брань всем сердцем ненавидят. ~ Поэтому тот муж, что Дао обладает, его не применяет никогда. ~ Муж благородный, пребывая дома, ценит левую сторону, а применяя оружие, предпочитает правую. ~ Оружие недоброго знамения вестник. ~ Оно не есть орудие благородных мужей. ~ И только если нет иного выбора, его возможно применить. ~ Муж благородный ценит всего превыше мир и покой. ~ И даже коль в войне он побеждает, тому не радуется он нисколько: ведь радоваться ей - то же самое, что наслаждаться убиением людей. ~ А тот, кто наслаждается смертоубийством, неспособен направить свою волю на благо Поднебесной. ~ Ведь когда празднуют нечто хорошее, то выбирают левую сторону, а когда оплакивают и скорбят, то выбирают правую. ~ Вот почему генерал-адъютант слева, а главнокомандующий войском справа. ~ Их расположение соответствует траурному ритуалу. ~ В войне погибло много людей, о них надо скорбеть, печалиться и плакать. ~ А победу в войне достойно отмечать лишь погребальным ритуалом.

—[31c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Превосходное войско - орудие несчастья, любой из людей ненавидит его. ~ Поэтому обладающие Дао не состоят в нем. ~ Если благородный муж на мирной службе, то поддерживает левых. ~ Если на военной службе, то поддерживает правых. ~ Войско - орудие несчастья и не орудие благородного мужа. ~ Если вопреки желанию приходится все-таки использовать его, ~ то сверх всего ставь равнодушие к славе и выгоде. ~ Одержав победу, не считай это прекрасным. ~ А если сочтешь это прекрасным, то, значит, радуешься убийству людей. ~ Кто радуется убийству людей, тот не сможет добиться своих целей в Поднебесной. ~ Служение счастьем относится к левому. ~ Служение злу относится к правому. ~ Противостоящие командующим войсками занимают позицию левых. ~ Идущие в командующие войсками занимают позицию правых. ~ Правильно говорят, что следует встречать их (войско) похоронным ритуалом. ~ Всех убитых людей следует горестно и скорбно оплакивать. ~ Военную победу нужно встречать похоронным ритуалом.

— [31c95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Хорошее войско - средство, [порождающее] несчастье, его ненавидят все существа. ~ Поэтому человек, следующий дао, его не употребляет. ~ Благородный [правитель] во время мира предпочитает быть уступчивым [в отношении соседних стран] и лишь на войне применяет насилие. ~ Войско - орудие несчастья, поэтому благородный [правитель] не стремится использовать его, он применяет его, только когда его к этому вынуждают. ~ Главное состоит в том, чтобы соблюдать спокойствие, а в случае победы себя не прославлять. ~ Прославлять себя победой - это значит радоваться убийству людей. ~ Тот, кто радуется убийству людей, не может завоевать сочувствия в стране. ~ Благополучие создается уважением, а несчастье происходит от насилия. ~ Слева строятся военачальники флангов, справа стоит полководец. ~ Говорят, что их нужно встретить похоронной процессией. ~ Если убивают многих людей, то об этом нужно горько плакать. ~ Победу следует отмечать похоронной процессией.

— [31c96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Благоустроенное войско есть нечестивое орудие, есть предмет по своему существу злой. ~ Мудрец предпочитает левую сторону правой, ибо употребляющие войско предпочитают правую сторону левой. ~ Войско есть нечестивое орудие, поэтому оно не может быть орудием для (истинно) мудрых. ~ Отсюда, оно и употребляется только в неизбежных случаях. ~ Хотя война ставит, быть может, целью спокойствие, но она несомненное зло. ~ Если б она была добро, то нужно было бы радоваться ей, но радуется ей лишь любящий убивать людей. ~ Любящий убивать людей не может осуществить свой добрый замысел в мире. ~ При добром деле левая сторона предпочитается правой, а при беде - правая левой. ~ Подчиненные генералы останавливаются на левой стороне, а начальствующие - на правой. ~ Когда сделается известной победа, то следует встретить эту весть с траурным обрядом, ибо на войне очень многие погибают. ~ Так как на войне очень многие погибают, то следует оплакивать войну. ~ Когда война окончится победою, следует объявить всеобщий траур.

— [31c97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Доброе оружие - злое орудие. ~ Многим вещам оно ненавистно, ~ И тот, кто имеет Путь, его не держит. ~ Благий государь в своем доме чтит левое, ~ А, идя войной, чтит правое. ~ Оружие - злое орудие, благородный муж его не держит, ~ Применяют его, только если к тому принудят, ~ И применять его нужно сдержанно и бесстрастно. ~ Одержав победу, не гордись содеянным, ~ Кто гордится победой, тот радуется убийству. ~ А кто рад убийству, тот не преуспеет в мире. ~ В счастливых событиях ценится левое, ~ В несчастных событиях ценится правое. ~ Младший полководец стоит слева, ~ Старший полководец стоит справа: ~ Значит, они стоят как на похоронах. ~ На убийство множества людей откликайтесь скорбным плачем, ~ Победу на войне отмечайте траурным обрядом.

— [31c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Даже самое хорошее оружие - это инструмент, который не предвещает блага. ~ Любая вещь может пострадать от него. ~ Причинность: ~ При наличии Пути, его не применяют. ~ Правитель-мудрец, пребывая в мире, ценит левое; ~ применяя оружие, ценит правое. ~ Оружие - это инструмент, который не предвещает блага. ~ Это инструмент - не для правителя-мудреца. ~ Лишь против своей воли применяют его. ~ Высшее осуществляется безмятежностью и бесстрастностью. ~ Побеждая, не восторгаются. ~ Если восторгаешься, значит радуешься гибели людей. ~ А ведь тот, кто радуется гибели людей, не сможет добиться, чтобы устремления Поднебесной сошлись в нем. ~ В счастливых делах возвышают правое. ~ Заместитель командующего располагается слева. ~ Главнокомандующий располагается справа. ~ Говорят, что так располагают для траурного ритуала. ~ При гибели множества людей следует в печали и горести оплакивать их. ~ После победы в битве следует устраивать траурные ритуалы.

—[32c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ The Tao is constantly nameless. ~ Though in its natural state it seems small, no one in the world dares to treat it as a subject. ~ Were marquises and kings able to maintain it, ~ The ten thousand things would submit to them on their own, ~ And Heaven and Earth would unite to send forth sweet dew. ~ By nature it would fall equally on all things, with no one among the people ordering that it be so. ~ As soon as we start to establish a system, we have names. ~ And as soon as there are set names, ~ Then you must also know that it's time to stop. ~ By knowing to stop - in this way you'll come to no harm. ~ The Way's presence in the world ~ Is like the relationship of small valley [streams] to rivers and seas.

—[32c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ TAO is always nameless. ~ Small as it is in its Primal Simplicity, ~ It is inferior to nothing in the world. ~ If only a ruler could cling to it, ~ Everything will render homage to him. ~ Heaven and Earth will be harmonized ~ And send down sweet dew. ~ Peace and order will reign among the people ~ Without any command from above. ~ When once the Primal Simplicity diversified, ~ Different names appeared. ~ Are there not enough names now? ~ Is this not the time to stop? ~ To know when to stop is to preserve ourselves from danger. ~ The Tao is to the world what a great river or an ocean is to the streams and brooks.

—[32c03t] D. C. Lau ~ The way is for ever nameless. ~ Though the uncarved block is small ~ No one in the world dare claim its allegiance. ~ Should lords and princes be able to hold fast to it ~ The myriad creatures will submit of their own accord, ~ Heaven and earth will unite and sweet dew will fall, ~ And the people will be equitable, though no one so decrees. ~ Only when it is cut are there names. ~ As soon as there are names ~ One ought to know that it is time to stop. ~ Knowing when to stop one can be free from danger. ~ The way is to the world as the River and the Sea are to rivulets and streams.

—[32c04t] R. L. Wing ~ The Tao of the Absolute has no name. ~ Although infinitesimal in its Simplicity, ~ The world cannot master it. ~ If leaders would hold on to it, ~ All Things would naturally follow. ~ Heaven and Earth would unite to rain Sweet Dew, ~ And people would naturally cooperate without commands. ~ Names emerge when institutions begin. ~ When names emerge, know likewise to stop. ~ To know when to stop is to be free of danger. ~ The presence of the Tao in the world ~ Is like the valley stream joining the rivers and seas.

—[32c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ Tao has no name forever. ~ Though the simplicity seems small, it may be subordinated to nothing under Heaven. ~ If kings and princes can preserve it, all creatures would submit of themselves to them. ~ (Yin and Yang between) Heaven and Earth unite to drip sweet dew, ~ Without the command of the people, it drips evenly over all. ~ Once there was government, there were names appearing. ~ Once there were names, one has to know where and when to stop. ~ By practising moderation one can be free from danger. ~ Everything under Heaven is embraced by Tao, just like every river or stream running into the sea.

—[32c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ The Tao is forever undefined. ~ Small though it is in the unformed state, it cannot be grasped. ~ If kings and lords could harness it, ~ The ten thousand things would naturally obey. ~ Heaven and earth would come together ~ And gentle rain fall. ~ Men would need no more instruction and all things would take their course. ~ Once the whole is divided, the parts need names. ~ There are already enough names. ~ One must know when to stop. ~ Knowing when to stop averts trouble. ~ Tao in the world is like a river flowing home to the sea.

—[32c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ The Dao has always been nameless and simple. ~ Though humble, it is never subservient to anyone under heaven. ~ Still, if kings and barons would follow the Dao steadfastly ~ All the living things on earth would benefit and pay them homage. ~ It is the interaction of heaven and earth that brings rain to all the living things. ~ Heaven and earth are not at the command of anyone. ~ Yet all living things benefit from their actions. ~ Humans since the beginning of time have established all kinds of traditions and have named names. ~ Should they then not know when to stop? ~ Those who know when to stop know no death. ~ Just as the rivers and valleys bring water to the sea, ~ So the Dao brings all living things to the Ultimate.

—[32c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ The DAO has no name, but it is always present. ~ It is simple and small, but no one can conquer it. ~ If the kings are able to practice it, everybody will come and obey by themselves. ~ The heavens and the earth will be in harmony, ~ And rain will pour down from the sky. ~ People will take care of themselves without need of the law. ~ Since there were names, everything got its own place. ~ People should know when to stop; ~ If they know when to stop, they can avoid disasters. ~ The world comes to the DAO like every stream and river comes to the ocean.

—[32c09t] Walter Gorn Old, INTELLIGENT VIRTUE ~ Tao the absolute has no name. ~ But although insignificant in its original simplicity, the world does not presume to bemean it. ~ If a king could lay hold on it, the world would of itself submit to him. ~ Heaven and Earth would conspire to nourish him. ~ The people without pressure would peacefully fall into their own places. ~ If he should dispose them by titles and names, he would be making a name for himself. ~ Yet he would wisely stop short of the name, and thus avoid the evil of distinctions. ~ Tao is to the world what the streams and valleys are to the great rivers and seas.

—[32c10t] James Legge ~ The Tao, considered as unchanging, has no name. ~ Though in its primordial simplicity it may be small, the whole world dares not deal with (one embodying) it as a minister. ~ If a feudal prince or the king could guard and hold it, all would spontaneously submit themselves to him. ~ Heaven and Earth (under its guidance) unite together and send down the sweet dew, which, without the directions of men, reaches equally everywhere as of its own accord. ~ As soon as it proceeds to action, it has a name. ~ When it once has that name, (men) can know to rest in it. ~ When they know to rest in it, they can be free from all risk of failure and error. ~ The relation of the Tao to all the world is like that of the great rivers and seas to the streams from the valleys.

—[32c11t] David Hinton ~ Way is perennially nameless, ~ an uncarved simplicity. ~ Though small, ~ it's subject to nothing in all beneath heaven. ~ But when lords or emperors foster it, ~ the ten thousand things gladly become their guests, ~ heaven mingling with earth sends down sweet dew, ~ and the people free of mandates share justice among themselves. ~ When a governing blade begins carving it up, names arise. ~ Once names arise, ~ know that it's time to stop. ~ Knowing when to stop, you can avoid danger. ~ Way flowing through all beneath heaven: ~ it's like valley streams flowing into rivers and seas.

—[32c12t] Chichung Huang ~ The Tao is constant and nameless. ~ The unhewn log, though tiny, ~ None under heaven dare subjugate. ~ If marquises and kings can adhere to it, ~ The ten thousand things will submit to them spontaneously. ~ When heaven and earth integrate ~ To drip sweet dew, ~ Without anyone ordering them, ~ It is evenly distributed spontaneously. ~ With the first cutting, ~ Names emerged. ~ Names having emerged, ~ One should also know where to stop. ~ Knowing where to stop ~ Will thereby exempt one from peril. ~ The Tao's relation to all under heaven ~ Is like small valley streams ~ To a river or an ocean.

—[32c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ Tao everlasting (ch'ang) is the nameless uncarved wood (p'u). ~ Though small, ~ Nothing under heaven can subjugate it (mo neng ch'en). ~ If kings and barons can abide by (shou) it, ~ All creatures will arrive as guests (pin) to a banquet. ~ Heaven and earth unite, ~ To send down the sweet rain. ~ Without being commanded by the people (mo chih ling), ~ It falls evenly (chün) by itself. ~ At the beginning of institution names come to be. ~ Once there are names, ~ One must know when to stop (chih chih). ~ One who knows when to stop does not become exhausted (pu tai). ~ Tao in the world is like ~ Valley streams flowing into rivers and seas.

—[32c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ Tao [in its entirety] is always indescribable; ~ Simplicity (the fundamental Truth) is though too subtle [to be detectable], yet nobody on earth can afford not to subject to its command; ~ If kings and lords can maintain it (Tao), myriad things and creatures will subordinate to them voluntarily as [acquiescent] visitors; ~ If Heaven and Earth (human world) are corroborating harmoniously, then [like the legend had described], there will be "sweet [timely] dews befall on Earth"; ~ [In other words, a proper society thus formed is impelled by principles of seeking] "fairness and equal opportunity for all the people even though people did not call out for it." ~ Originally, the initiation of our system (government) is [necessitated by practical need which is] describable; ~ Since there is justification [of government's existence] we shall draw a line to limit [its power]; ~ In spite of the fact that we recognize the necessity for the limitation of [power of government and each system of government has its limitation], we still should not let it suspend [our quest for eking out better systems]. ~ This illustrates that Tao is to be manifested in this world [little by little gradually], like numerous [tiny] streams and waterways converged together [one by one] to form huge rivers and seas.

—[32c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ The Way is always nameless. ~ Small as it is in its uncarved block, it is inferior to nothing in the world. ~ If only a king or a prince could abide with it, all things in the world will render homage to him. ~ Heaven and Earth are in harmony and send down sweet dew. ~ Without being commanded to do so, the people live in peace and order. ~ When the original diversifies, different names arise. ~ When names arise, one should know it is time to stop. ~ To know when to stop is to be free from danger. ~ The Way is to the world what a great river or an ocean is to the streams and brooks.

—[32c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ Tao does not have a name and is simple. ~ It is small, but no one can rule it. ~ If kings and nobles can follow it, the people themselves would be submissive. ~ When heaven and earth work together, rain is produced. ~ Nobody gives the order, it is produced naturally. ~ When a regulation is initiated, it should have a reason. ~ When there is a reason, we need to know where to stop. ~ If we know where to stop, we may avoid failure. ~ Tao to the world is like the sea to the rivers.

—[32c17t] Arthur Waley ~ Tao is eternal, but has no fame (name); ~ The Uncarved Block, though seemingly of small account, ~ Is greater than anything that is under heaven. ~ If kings and barons would but possess themselves of it, ~ The ten thousand creatures would flock to do them homage; ~ Heaven-and-earth would conspire ~ To send Sweet Dew, ~ Without law or compulsion, men would dwell in harmony. ~ Once the block is carved, there will be names, ~ And so soon as there are names ~ Know that it is time to stop. ~ Only by knowing when it is time to stop can danger be avoided. ~ To Tao all under heaven will come ~ As streams and torrents flow into a great river or sea.

—[32c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ The Dao in its constancy is "nameless." ~ Although the uncarved block is small, none under Heaven can make it his servitor [chen], but, if any lord or prince could hold on to it, the myriad folk would submit spontaneously. ~ As when Heaven and Earth unite to send down sweet dew, though not one of the people are ordered to do so, they live in harmony of their own accord. ~ When the cutting of it starts, names come into existence. ~ Once names exist, one should know to stop. ~ It is by knowing to stop that danger can be avoided. ~ As an analogy, the relationship between the Dao and all under Heaven is similar to the way streams and tributaries respond to the river and the sea.

—[32c19t] Lin Yutang ~ TAO IS LIKE THE SEA ~ Tao is absolute and has no name. ~ Though the uncarved wood is small, ~ It cannot be employed (used as vessel) by anyone. ~ If kings and barons can keep (this unspoiled nature), ~ The whole world shall yield them lordship of their own accord. ~ The Heaven and Earth join, ~ And the sweet rain falls, ~ Beyond the command of men, ~ Yet evenly upon all. ~ Then human civilization arose and there were names. ~ Since there were names, ~ It were well one knew where to stop. ~ He who knows where to stop ~ May be exempt from danger. ~ Tao in the world ~ May be compared to rivers that run into the sea.

—[32c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ The Way is eternally nameless. ~ Though the unhewn log is small, ~ No one in the world dares subjugate it. ~ If feudal lords and kings could maintain it, ~ The myriad creatures would submit of themselves. ~ Heaven and earth unite to suffuse sweet dew. ~ Without commanding the people, ~ equality will naturally ensue. ~ As soon as one begins to divide things up, there are names; ~ Once there are names, one should also know when to stop; ~ Knowing when to stop, one thereby avoids peril. ~ In metaphorical terms, ~ The relationship of all under heaven to the Way is like that of valley streams to the river and sea.

—[32c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ The Tao is forever nameless. ~ Though the Uncarved Block is small, ~ it is not inferior to anything under heaven. ~ If leaders could keep hold of it, ~ the ten thousand things would submit to them freely. ~ Heaven and earth would unite and sweet dew would fall. ~ The people would live in harmony without any law or decree. ~ Only when the Block is carved are there names. ~ As soon as there are names it is time to stop. ~ Knowing when to stop prevents trouble. ~ All under heaven will return to the Tao ~ as brooks and streams flow home to the sea.

—[32c22t] David H. Li ~ Direction frequently needs no name. ~ It is simple. ~ It is small. ~ Still, it submits to nothing in the world. ~ Were a Duke or a Prince to embrace Direction, ~ myriad matters would submit on own volition. ~ With the cosmos and the earth in harmony, sweet dew accrues. ~ It self-regulates without the need of intervention. ~ As the system begins, names are assigned. ~ When names are assigned, know when to stop. ~ Knowing when to stop averts danger. ~ Direction in relation to people of the world is like the sea to rivers.

—[32c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ The Tao remains eternally unnamable. ~ As undivided simplicity, ~ If it resides in an ordinary person, ~ nobody in the world can subjugate him; ~ If an influential person abides by it, ~ everybody in the world will be drawn to him. ~ When heaven and earth come together in harmony, ~ Showering the world equally with the sweet rain of undivided simplicity, ~ People cooperate voluntarily without any governing rules. ~ When simplicity is divided, names come into existence. ~ When names are already there, the process of further division should stop, ~ For to know when to stop ~ is to avoid the danger of complexity. ~ The Tao is to the world ~ what the ocean is to the rivers of the earth.

—[32c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ The Tao was always nameless. ~ When it was expressed for the first time, ~ It was given a name. ~ And once it has already been given a name, it is necessary to stop. ~ The knowledge of where to stop makes a person immune to any danger.

—[32c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ The Tao has no name it is a cloud that has no shape. ~ If a ruler follows it faithfully, ~ then every living thing under heaven will say yes to him. ~ Heaven and earth make love, ~ And a sweet dew-rain falls. ~ The people do not know why, ~ But they are gathered together like music. ~ Things have been given names from the beginning. ~ We need to know when we have enough names: this is wisdom. ~ At the beginning of time ~ The sage gave names to everything - seen, and unseen. ~ A ruler who walks the Way ~ Is like a river reaching the sea ~ Gathering the waters of the streams into himself, as he goes.

—[32c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ The Tao is nameless for ever. ~ Though it is very small, ~ It is subject to no one in the world. ~ If lords and kings can keep it, ~ They can bring all things in the world under subjection. ~ When the Yin and Yang between heaven and earth unite, ~ Sweet dew will fall, so equally scattered down ~ Without any interference on the part of the people. ~ The administration of the empire demands names; ~ Names are once given, ~ Limitations are thereby known. ~ The knowledge of limitations helps avoid danger. ~ The Tao is to the world what the river and the sea ~ Are to the countless streamlets.

—[32c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ The Tao has no name, like an uncarved block. ~ But no one under Heaven dares claim its allegiance. ~ Should lords and princes be able to hold fast to it, ~ the myriad creatures will submit to their own accord. ~ Heaven and Earth will unite and the sweet dewdrop will fall. ~ People will live in peace, even though no one is seeking for it. ~ When the block is carved it will be named. ~ It will also be time to stop. ~ Knowing to stop in time avoids danger. ~ The Tao runs under Heaven as the river and the water of the valley run into the sea.

—[32c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ The eternal Way has no name. ~ The earliest simplicity has no significance, ~ But its function is supreme. ~ If kings and officials can keep the Way, ~ The whole world will become their guest. ~ Harmony between heaven and earth creates rains and dews, ~ Which all share equally without laws or rules. ~ With the growth of the earliest system, ~ There appeared names, which are therefore conventional. ~ Knowing what is conventional, ~ One can also understand where and when to stop. ~ Knowing where and when to stop, ~ One will never meet with countering forces. ~ The Way is to the world what rivers are to the ocean.

—[32c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ Tao Is Like The Sea ~ Lao Tze says, ~ The Tao is not designated as a certain type. ~ The pristine simplicity is just a small display of the Tao. ~ Though it is small, whoever in exercise of this method, will make no man in the world daring to treat him as a servant. ~ If the duke or the king knows to exercise this method; all existence will express obedience and loyalty to him. ~ Heaven and Earth unite and send down sweet dew which without the direction of men, reaches equally everywhere as of its own accord. ~ As soon as it proceeds to action, it has a way. ~ When it once has that way, men can know to rest in it. ~ When they know to rest in it, they can be free from all risk of failure and error. ~ The relation of the Tao to all the world is like that of great rivers and sea to streams and valleys.

—[32c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ Tao was always nameless. ~ When for the first time applied to function, it was named. ~ Inasmuch as names are given, one should also know where to stop. ~ Knowing where to stop one can become imperishable.

—[32c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ Tao is constantly nameless. ~ Though the unhewn wood is small, ~ No one in the world dares to subjugate it. ~ If dukes and kings can keep it, ~ All things will become guests by themselves. ~ Heaven and earth conjugate in dropping sweet dew; ~ People without being ordered are fair to each other. ~ In the beginning of creation, all were given names. ~ Having names, they know their limits. ~ Knowing their limits keeps them from danger. ~ Thus Tao is to the world ~ As brooks and valleys are to rivers and seas.

—[32c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ Tao will always be nameless, an Uncarved Block, ~ although it is a thing of no account, ~ no one in the world can make it his subject. ~ If the princes and kings could watch over It, ~ the thousands of things would on their own be as deferential as guests. ~ Heaven and Earth would join together to send sweet dew. ~ The people on their own would share equally, ~ without anyone giving orders. ~ When you begin making decisions and cutting it up, ~ rules and names appear. ~ And once names appear, you should know to stop. ~ Knowing to stop, you can be without fear. ~ A comparison: ~ Tao's presence in the world, ~ is like the relation of small river valleys to the Yang-tze and the ocean.

—[32c33t] Cheng Lin ~ Truth is the name given to that which was originally nameless and simple. ~ Though small, the whole world cannot subjugate it. ~ When the rulers abide by it, all animate creation will of their own accord become their servants. ~ Because heaven and earth are one with Truth, they produce rains and dews which benefit all mankind alike without their asking. ~ The name was fabricated by man. ~ Since it has been given a name, the rulers ought to know it. ~ When they know it, they will be free from danger. ~ Truth is to the universe as rivers and seas are to the earth.

—[32c34t] Yi Wu ~ The Way constantly is nameless. ~ Although its simplicity makes it seem trivial, ~ No one can subjugate it. ~ If dukes and kings can keep to it, ~ All things will naturally behave as guests. ~ Heaven and earth will unite with each other, ~ And sweet dew will fall. ~ People, without being commanded, ~ Will be equal to each other. ~ In the beginning of creation, ~ All things were given names. ~ When names are given, ~ One must know when to stop. ~ Knowing when to stop, ~ One will be free from danger. ~ The Way is to the world ~ As the great rivers and oceans ~ Are to streams in the valleys.

—[32c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ Dao is often referred to as "the nameless". ~ Although this "pristine simplicity" (Dao) appears to be insignificant, ~ Nothing in the world can subjugate it. ~ If a ruler can follow the way of Dao, ~ Everyone will naturally come to join him. ~ When Yin and Yang harmonise, rain begins to fall. ~ Similarly, people will live in harmony without any coercion. ~ Whenever a system is set up, new terminology appears. ~ (A new system will bring about new disputes.) ~ However, it is important to simplify the system. ~ Knowing when to stop, you can avert a calamity. ~ What Dao is to the people is similar to what the ocean is to the rivers.

—[32c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ The universal subtle essence is unnameable and omnipresent. ~ Although it appears even in the plainest and most ordinary of things, ~ it is inferior to nothing. ~ It maintains itself as a model of indivisible integrity. ~ If people would embrace it as their own true nature, ~ everything would settle down in right order and peace of its own accord. ~ Harmonious relationship can be illustrated by the cycle of the seasons which produces rain and dew at exactly the right times. ~ People do not need to do anything to insure the harmony between Heaven and Earth. ~ All names were given for the purpose of distinction when the original simplicity was diversified. ~ When one departs from simplicity, the result is perplexity. ~ When one returns to simplicity, one is saved from destruction by confusion. ~ The universal subtle essence is to human beings what the great ocean is to the rivers and streams of the earth.

—[32c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ Tao is real, yet unnameable. ~ It is original non-differentiation and invisible. ~ Nevertheless, nothing in the universe can dominate it. ~ If rulers and lords were able to abide with it, all things in the universe would yield to them naturally. ~ Heaven and earth are unified and rain the dew of peace. ~ Without being ordered to do so, people become harmonious by themselves. ~ When discrimination begins, names arise. ~ After names arise, one should know where to abide. ~ When one knows where to abide, one is never exhausted. ~ To abide with Tao in the world is to be the same as mountain streams flowing to the rivers and to the sea.

—[32c38t] Henry Wei ~ Holy Virtue ~ Sheng Teh ~ Tao is eternal and has no name. ~ Though P'u (Simplicity) may appear puny, ~ Yet the world dare not dominate it. ~ If kings and nobles can preserve it intact, ~ The ten thousand things will gladly pay them homage. ~ Heaven and Earth unite in harmony ~ To pour down showers of sweet dew, ~ To benefit all mankind graciously and evenly. ~ Institutions once begun, names come into being. ~ Names having come into being, ~ One should know where to rest. ~ To know where to rest is to forestall peril. ~ Tao differentiated in the world (will return to One), ~ Like streams and rivers flowing to the sea.

—[32c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ Tao is forever nameless. ~ Though the uncarved block is small, ~ No one under Heaven can make it his subject. ~ If kings and princes hold fast to it, ~ The ten thousand things will submit of their own accord; ~ Heaven and Earth will unite to send sweet dew; ~ The people will be fair of themselves, without being ordered. ~ When the cutting begins, names come to be. ~ As soon as names appear, ~ Know that it's time to stop. ~ By knowing this, you will be free from danger. ~ To draw an analogy, the working of Tao under Heaven ~ Is like streams and rapids flowing into great rivers and seas.

—[32c40t] Tao Huang ~ Tao is eternally nameless. ~ Though simplicity is small, ~ The world cannot treat it as subservient. ~ If lords and rulers can hold on to it, ~ Everything becomes self-sufficient. ~ Heaven and earth combine and allow sweet dew. ~ Without rules, people will naturally become equal. ~ At the outset, the rule must be expressed. ~ Once it exists, stop speaking of it. ~ The result of not speaking of it is to eliminate danger. ~ In a manner of speaking, Tao is to the world ~ As the rivers are to oceans and seas.

—[32c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ The eternity of Dao has no name: ~ Even though Pure Matter is infinitely small, its function is so superior that it is next to none, ~ If rulers can follow the model of nature, everything under the heaven will render homage to them, ~ Then the people would automatically be equally sufficient without being directed. ~ It was named after the initiation of regulations, when names were given, ~ Then one will know how to rest. ~ To know how to stop will not reach a perilous end. ~ The application of Dao to the world is like the relation of oceans to rivers.

—[32c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ Tao is eternal and has no name. ~ Though its simplicity seems insignificant, none in the world can master it. ~ If kings and barons would hold on to it, all things would submit to them spontaneously. ~ Heaven and earth unite to drip sweet dew. ~ Without the command of men, it drips evenly over all. ~ As soon as there were regulations and institutions, there were names. ~ As soon as there are names, know that it is time to stop. ~ It is by knowing when to stop that one can be free from danger. ~ Analogically, Tao in the world may be compared to rivers and streams running into the sea.

—[32c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Дао, будучи незыблемым, не имеет имени. ~ И хоть первоначальное ничтожно, никто под Небесами его сделать своим подданным не в силах. ~ Если владетели и царь смогут ему следовать, все десять тысяч вещей сами сочтут себя гостями, Небеса с Землей соединятся и снизойдет сладчайшая роса. ~ Народ, не получив ни от кого приказа, сам меж собою уравнивается. ~ С началом кройки возникает имя; ~ а возникает имя, узнают, когда остановиться. ~ Узнав, когда остановиться, можно избежать опасности. ~ Дао Поднебесной напоминает горную долину со стремящимся по ней в реку к морям потоком.

—[32c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Дао неизменно и безымянно. ~ Хотя простота и мала, никто в Поднебесной не может править ею. ~ Если бы правитель и князья могли придерживаться её, мириады существ сами повиновались бы ей. ~ Когда Небо и Земля взаимосочетаются, то выпадают сладкие росы и народ безо всяких указов умиротворяется. ~ Когда начинается управление, - возникают и имена. ~ Коль скоро возникают имена, - муж должен знать, что настало время остановиться. ~ Знающий, где надо остановиться, избежит гибели. ~ Дао в Поднебесной подобно рекам и морям, куда впадают долинны ручьи.

—[32c93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Дао-Путь постоянно и безымянно. ~ Хотя оно столь просто и так мало, никто в Поднебесной не смеет сделать его своим слугой. ~ Если князья и цари смогут блюсти его, все сущее упокоится и умиротворится. ~ Тогда Небо и Земля в согласии и гармонии пребудут, с небес прольется сладкая роса и весь народ без всякого приказа сам обретет равновесие. ~ Когда все вещи обрели раздельное существование, тогда установились имена. ~ С тех пор как появились имена, необходимо Поднебесной познать, где следует остановиться в своих стремлениях. ~ И зная, где остановиться, мы избегаем гибели и бедствий. ~ Ведь Дао-Путь для Поднебесной - как море-океан для всех ручьев и рек.

— [32c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Дао постоянно и безымянно. ~ (Вариант перевода: Дао именуется постоянным небытием.) ~ Духовное естество хотя и младенчески слабое (маленькое), ~ никто в Поднебесной не может подчинить [его] себе. ~ Если хоу и ваны смогут блюсти его, то мириады вещей сами покорятся. ~ Небо сочетается в браке с Землей, ниспадая сладкой росой. ~ Людям никто не приказывает, и все само по себе уравнивается. ~ С началом насильственного правления появились имена. ~ И поскольку имена уже есть, постольку нужно знать, как пресечь (искоренить) [их]. ~ Зная то, как пресечь [имена], можем избежать гибели. ~ Тому пример: когда Дао находится в Поднебесной, это подобно стоку ручьев и рек в Цзян и Море.

— [32c95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Дао вечно и безымянно. ~ Хотя оно ничтожно, но никто в мире не может его подчинить себе. ~ Если знать и государи могут его соблюдать, то все существа сами становятся спокойными. ~ Тогда небо и земля сольются в гармонии, наступят счастье и благополучие, а народ без приказания успокоится. ~ При установлении порядка появились имена. ~ Поскольку возникли имена, нужно знать предел [их употребления]. ~ Знание предела позволяет избавиться от опасности. ~ Когда дао находится в мире, [все сущее вливается в него], подобно тому, как горные ручьи текут к рекам и морям.

— [32c96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Вечное Тао не имеет имени. ~ Оно незначительно, как щепка, но мир не может подчинить его себе. ~ Когда цари и князья заботятся о защите (своей страны), то сама природа делается помощницей их. ~ Когда небо совокупляется с землей, то спускается роса на землю, чего человек не в состоянии устроить. ~ Когда Тао разделилось на части, то получило имя. ~ Если имя известно, то нужно воздерживаться. ~ (Каждому) следует знать, где ему нужно оставаться. ~ Кто соблюдает во всем воздержание, тот не будет знать (нравственного) падения. ~ Это - Тао, которое существует во всей вселенной.

— [32c97t] В. В. the things that are small. ~ The ten thousand things entrust their lives to it, and yet it does not act as their master. ~ It can be named with the things that are great. ~ Therefore the Sage's ability to accomplish the great ~ Comes from his not playing the role of the great. ~ Therefore he is able to accomplish the great.

— [34c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ THE Great Tao is universal like a flood. ~ How can it be turned to the right or to the left? ~ All creatures depend on it, ~ And it denies nothing to anyone. ~ It does its work, ~ But it makes no claims for itself. ~ It clothes and feeds all, ~ But it does not lord it over them: ~ Thus, it may be called "the Little." ~ All things return to it as to their home, ~ But it does not lord it over them: ~ Thus, it may be called "the Great." ~ It is just because it does not wish to be great ~ That its greatness is fully realized.

— [34c03t] D. C. Lau ~ The way is broad, reaching left as well as right. ~ The myriad creatures depend on it for life yet it claims no authority. ~ It accomplishes its task yet lays claim to no merit. ~ It clothes and feeds the myriad creatures yet lays no claim to being their master. ~ For ever free of desire, it can be called small; ~

Yet, as it lays no claim to being master when the myriad creatures turn to it, it can be called great. ~ It is because it never attempts itself to be great that it succeeds in becoming great.

—[34c04t] R. L. Wing ~ The Great Tao extends everywhere. ~ It is on the left and the right. ~ All Things depend on it for growth, ~ And it does not deny them. ~ It achieves its purpose, ~ And it does not have a name. ~ It clothes and cultivates All Things, ~ And it does not act as master. ~ Always without desire, It can be named Small. ~ All Things merge with it, And it does not act as master. ~ It can be named Great. ~ In the end it does not seek greatness, And in that way the Great is achieved.

—[34c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ The great Tao is like a river overflowing, ~ It can go left, it can go right. ~ All things owe their existence to it, ~ But it never interferes with them. ~ When its work is accomplished, it is unable to say where its credit is. ~ It protects and nourishes all, but it does not claim to be master over them. ~ Always without its desire, it may be called small. ~ All things come to it as to their home, ~ And yet it does not pose as their master, ~ It may be called great. ~ It is precisely because it never claims to be great, that it can achieve its greatness.

—[34c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ The great Tao flows everywhere, both to the left and to the right. ~ The ten thousand things depend upon it; it holds nothing back. ~ It fulfills its purpose silently and makes no claim. ~ It nourishes the ten thousand things, ~ And yet is not their lord. ~ It has no aim; it is very small. ~ The ten thousand things return to it, ~ Yet it is not their lord. ~ It is very great. ~ It does not show greatness, ~ And is therefore truly great.

—[34c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ The Great Dao is all-encompassing. ~ Its influences pervade all directions. ~ All living things depend on it. ~ But the Dao works quietly. ~ It accomplishes yet makes no claims. ~ It provides clothing and nourishments yet does not take command over anything. ~ Ever aspiring for non-existence, ~ It can be called little. ~ Providing a home to all the living things yet claiming no ownership, ~ It can be called great. ~ Exactly because the Dao never takes itself as great, ~ It is truly great.

—[34c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ The big DAO is like a flood, going everywhere. ~ Everything depends on it to grow, but it never refuses to help. ~ When things are accomplished, it never claims credit. ~ It nurtures everything, but never tries to control them. ~ It never has desires, so it can be called the SMALL. ~ Everything depends on it, but it never tries to be their master, so it can be called the BIG. ~ Only because it never wants to be the BIG, so it becomes the BIG.

—[34c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE PERFECT CONDITION ~ Mighty Tao is all-pervading. ~ It is simultaneously on this side and on that. ~ All living things subsist from it, and all are in its care. ~ It works, it finishes, and knows not the name of merit. ~ In love it nurtures all things, and claims no excellence therein. ~ It knows neither ambition nor desire. ~ It can be classed with the humblest of things. ~ All things finally revert to it, and it is not thereby increased. ~ It can be mentioned with the greatest of things. ~ Thus does the wise man continually refrain from self-distinction.

—[34c10t] James Legge ~ All-pervading is the Great Tao! ~ It may be found on the left hand and on the right. ~ All things depend on it for their production, which it gives to them, not one refusing obedience to it. ~ When its work is accomplished, it does not claim the name of having done it. ~ It clothes all things as with a garment, and makes no assumption of being their lord; ~ - it may be named in the smallest things. ~ All things return (to their root and disappear), and do not know that it is it which presides over their doing so; ~ - it may be named in the greatest things. ~ Hence the sage is able (in the same way) to accomplish his great achievements. ~ It is through his not making himself great that he can accomplish them.

Zhang ~ Tao is everywhere. ~ It can be guidance. ~ Everything lives depending on it without exception, With such accomplishment, it claims none. ~ Providing clothing and food to everything, it does not govern them: this is called lowliness. ~ Guiding everything, it does not master, this can be called greatness. ~ Because it does not proclaim to be great, it can actually be great.

—[34c17t] Arthur Waley ~ Great Tao is like a boat that drifts; ~ It can go this way; it can go that. ~ The ten thousand creatures owe their existence to it and it does not disown them; ~ Yet having produced them, it does not take possession of them. ~ Tao, though it covers the ten thousand things like a garment, ~ Makes no claim to be master over them, ~ And asks for nothing from them. ~ Therefore it may be called the Lowly. ~ The ten thousand creatures obey it, ~ Though they know not that they have a master; ~ Therefore it is called the Great. ~ So too the Sage just because he never at any time makes a show of greatness in fact achieves greatness.

—[34c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ The way the great Dao floods, oh, it can go left or right. ~ The myriad folk rely on it for life, but it does not tell them to do so. ~ It achieves success but enjoys no reputation for doing so. ~ It clothes and feeds the myriad folk but does not become their master. ~ It is always without desire and so can be named among the small. ~ The myriad things return to it, but it does not become their master, so it can be named among the great. ~ Therefore it is because he himself never tries to be great that he fulfills his greatness.

—[34c19t] Lin Yutang ~ THE GREAT TAO FLOWS EVERYWHERE ~ The Great Tao flows everywhere, ~ (Like a flood) it may go left or right. ~ The myriad things derive their life from it, ~ And it does not deny them. ~ When its work is accomplished, ~ It does not take possession. ~ It clothes and feeds the myriad things, ~ Yet does not claim them as its own. ~ Often (regarded) without mind or passion, ~ It may be considered small. ~ Being the home of all things, yet claiming not, ~ It may be considered great. ~ Because to the end it does not claim greatness, ~ Its greatness is achieved.

—[34c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ Rippling is the Way, flowing left and right! ~ Its tasks completed, its affairs finished, ~ Still it does not claim them for its own. ~ The myriad creatures return to it, ~ But it does not act as their ruler. ~ Eternally without desire, ~ It may be named among the small; ~ The myriad creatures return to it, ~ But it does not act as their ruler; ~ It may be named among the great. ~ For these reasons, ~ The sage can achieve greatness, ~ Because he does not act great. ~ Therefore, ~ He can achieve greatness.

—[34c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ The great Tao covers everything like a flood. ~ It flows to the left and to the right. ~ The ten thousand things depend upon it and it denies none of them. ~ It accomplishes its task yet claims no reward. ~ It clothes and feeds the ten thousand things yet it does not attempt to control them. ~ Therefore, ~ it may be called "the little." ~ The ten thousand things return to it, ~ even though it does not control them. ~ Therefore, ~ it may be called "the great." ~ So it is that the True Person does not wish to be great and therefore becomes truly great.

—[34c22t] David H. Li ~ The Grand Direction permeates, left and right. ~ With myriad matters depending on it for growth, it declines none. ~ Accomplishing much, it accepts no limelight. ~ Nurturing myriad matters without claiming, it may be labeled Small; ~ Receiving myriad matters without claiming, it may be labeled Grand. ~ By not self-claiming Grand, it is thus Grand.

—[34c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ The Great Tao overflows everywhere in the universe. ~ It suffuses with life all beings that depend on it for their existence. ~ It accomplishes everything while remaining nameless. ~ It nurtures everything while claiming no mastership. ~ It desires nothing for itself, and is therefore called the Small. ~ It is the source whereto everything returns, and is therefore called the Vast. ~ Thus, the sage never thinks of claiming greatness for himself, ~ Yet, for this very reason, achieves true greatness.

—[34c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ The great Tao is in everything, both on the left and on the right. ~ Through it, all things come into being, and it does not abandon them. ~ When its work is completed, it does not possess them. ~ It loves and nurtures all things, ~ But does not rule them. ~ It never exists, so it can be called small, apparently. ~ All things return home to it, ~ And it does not claim to own them, ~ So it can be called great, apparently. ~ It never aspires to greatness, ~ And therefore it accomplishes greatness.

—[34c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ The Great Tao goes everywhere ~ past your left hand and your right - ~ filling the whole of space. ~ It is breath to every thing, and yet it asks for nothing back. ~ It feeds and creates everything, but it will never tell you so. ~ It nurtures all things without lording it over anything. ~ It names itself in the lowest of the low. ~ It holds what it makes, ~ Yet never fights to do so: ~ that is why we call it Great. ~ Why? ~ Because it never tries to be so.

—[34c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ The great Tao is felt everywhere ~ Extending in all directions. ~ All things grow on it and it never declines them. ~ It accomplishes its great task without claiming to merit. ~ It breeds all things without claiming to be their master; ~ It can be called the Small. ~ All things finally return to it ~ And it never claims to be their master; ~ And it can be called the Great. ~ It becomes the Great ~ Because it never claims to be the Great.

—[34c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ The Tao is floating everywhere, to the left and to the right. ~ The lives of the myriad creatures depend on it, no one can live without it. ~ It accomplishes its task, yet claims no honour. ~ It nourishes the myriad creatures, yet claims no possession. ~ It is always free from desire; ~ it can be called small. ~ The myriad creatures turn to it, yet it does not master them; it can be called great. ~ That is why the sage never boasts to be the great one, therefore he is the great one.

—[34c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ The Way extends and expands. ~ One is in it wherever one is. ~ By trusting it, all beings grow and develop. ~ The Way enables successes but possesses no name. ~ It provides for all but rules over nothing. ~ It is free of personal desires ~ And can therefore be named as insignificant. ~ It is obeyed by all, though it has no political power. ~ Therefore, it can be named as the greatest. ~ One who never wants to be great can therefore grow great.

—[34c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ The Great Tao Flows Everywhere ~ Lao Tze says, ~ The great Tao flows everywhere. ~ There is no discrimination of what is the right and what is the left. ~ All existence lives up to it, and it denies no one. ~ It doesn't claim credit, though there is achievement. ~ It loves and nourishes all existence but does not lord over them. ~ It appears ambitionless and is regarded as less important. ~ All existence returns to it, and it doesn't dominate them. ~ Certainly this is great. ~ This is the reason that the sage never regards himself as great, ~ thus he deserves to be titled as great.

—[34c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ The great Tao pervades everywhere, both on the left and on the right. ~ By it all things came into being, and it does not reject them. ~ Merits accomplished, it does not possess them. ~ It loves and nourishes all things but does not dominate over them. ~ It is always non-existent; therefore it can be named as small. ~ All things return home to it, and it does not claim mastery over them; therefore it can be named as great. ~ Because it never assumes greatness, therefore it can accomplish greatness.

—[34c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ The great Tao overflows, ~ able to move left and right. ~ All things rely on it for life, ~ But it does not dominate them. ~ Completing its task without possession, ~ Clothing and feeding all things, ~ Without wanting to be their master. ~ Always void of desire, ~ It can be called Small. ~ All things return to it ~ Without its being their master; ~ It can be called Great. ~ Just because the Sage would never regard himself as great, ~ He is able to attain his own greatness.

—[34c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ Great Tao drifts - it can go right or go left. ~ The thousands of things depend on it for life, ~ it rejects nothing. ~ It achieves successes, ~ but does not hold tight to the fame. ~ It clothes and feeds the thousands of things, ~ but does not act the ruler. ~ Always: ~ Desiring nothing, it can be called 'of no account'. ~ The thousands of things turn back to it, ~ but it does not act the ruler - it can be called 'Great'. ~ Because in the end, ~ it does not insist on its own greatness, yes, it is able to achieve its full greatness.

—[34c33t] Cheng Lin ~ The great Truth is all-pervasive and may be found everywhere. ~ It gives life to all animate creation, and yet it does not claim lordship over them. ~ It accomplishes all things, and yet it does not claim anything for itself. ~ It embraces all things, and yet it has no fixed abode. ~ It abides by inaction, and may be considered minute. ~ It is the ultimate destiny of all animate creation though it is not conscious of it, and it may be considered great. ~ Because it is never conscious of its greatness, it becomes truly great.

—[34c34t] Yi Wu ~ The great Way is universal, ~ It exists on the left and the right. ~ All things rely on it for life, ~ And it does not refuse them. ~ It achieves without possessing. ~ It clothes and feeds all things ~ Without being their master. ~ Constantly desireless, it may be called "the small". ~ All things return to it, ~ But it is not their master. ~ It may be called "the great". ~ Because it does not consider itself great, ~ It is able to be great.

—[34c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ The great Dao flows everywhere. ~ It goes to the right and it goes to the left. ~ Myriad beings depend on it to survive, ~ But it does not interfere with them. ~ It facilitates but does not gloat. ~ It nourishes everything, but does not exert control. ~ Dao has no goal and appears to be insignificant. ~ Nevertheless, everything relies on it for sustenance, but it exerts no control. ~ Such action seems to be magnificently great. ~ Dao has no intention to be great, yet it attains greatness.

—[34c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ The subtle essence of the universe is omnipresent. ~ It may go to the left or the right. ~ All things derive their life from it, ~ and it holds nothing back from them, ~ yet it takes possession of nothing. ~ It accomplishes its purpose, ~ but it claims no merit. ~ It clothes and feeds all, ~ but has no ambition to be master over anyone. ~ Thus it may be regarded as "the Small." ~ All things return to it, and it contains them, ~ yet it claims no authority over them. ~ Thus it may be recognized as "the Great." ~ The wise one who never attempts to be emotionally great and who accomplishes each small task with full devotion, ~ as if it were the greatest of tasks, is naturally recognized as great.

—[34c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ The magnificent Tao is all-pervading. ~ It may penetrate to either this side or that side. ~ All creatures abide with it and grow; none are excluded from it. ~ When its work is done, it does not demand merit. ~ It nurtures all things, but does not rule them. ~ When it is without intention, it may be called lesser. ~ When all things return to it, yet it does not possess them, it may be called greater. ~ Therefore, the wise does not endeavor to be great. ~ Hence, his attainment is great.

—[34c38t] Henry Wei ~ Natural Perfection ~ Ren Ch'eng ~ The Great Tao is all pervasive; ~ It could be on your right or on your left. ~ The ten thousand things depend on it for growth, ~ And it never lets them down. ~ It achieves success but is not possessive. ~ It enfolds and nourishes the ten thousand things, ~ Yet it does not claim ownership. ~ Always desireless and covetous of nothing, ~ It could be termed small. ~ But as the ten thousand things return to it, ~ And it does not care to be their lord, ~ It could be termed great. ~ Thus the Sage never in life tries to be great, ~ And for this very reason becomes truly great.

—[34c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ The great Tao overflows left and right, ~ The ten thousand things depend on it for their lives, and it never disowns them. ~ Its work is done, but it has no name. ~ It clothes and nurtures the ten thousand things, yet it makes no claim to be lord over them. ~ It is always free of desire. ~ It may be called small. ~ The ten thousand things return to it, yet it makes no claim to be lord over them. ~ It may be called great. ~ Because it never regards itself as great, ~ It can accomplish its greatness.

—[34c40t] Tao Huang ~ As the Tao is all-pervading, ~ It operates on both the left and the right. ~ Success is consequent to all affairs. ~ It does not proclaim its own existence. ~ All things return. ~ Yet there is no claim of ownership, ~ So it is forever desireless. ~ This can be called small. ~ All things return. ~ Yet there is no claim of ownership, ~ This can be called great. ~ The sage accomplishes greatness in not acting great. ~ Thus can he accomplished what is great.

—[34c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ How all-pervading the superior Dao is! ~ It could be on the left, it could be on the right. ~ Upon it the life of all things depends and it does not deny anyone. ~ It accomplishes merits but it does not possess fame. ~ It shields and nourishes All Things but it does not lord over them. ~ It may be called the Superior. ~ Hence, a Sage ruler never wishes to be superior. ~ Therefore he eventually became superior.

—[34c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ The Great Tao flows everywhere. ~ It may go left or right. ~ All things depend on it for life, and it does not turn away from them. ~ It accomplishes its task, but does not claim credit for it. ~ It clothes and feeds all things but does not claim to be master over them. ~ Always without desires, it may be called The Small. ~ All things come to it and it does not master them, it may be called The Great. ~ Therefore (the sage) never strives himself for the great, and thereby the great is achieved.

—[34c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Какая широта в великом Дао! ~ Он может находиться слева, справа. ~ Опираясь на него, вещей родится десять тысяч. ~ И от них он не отказывается. ~ Но его заслуги не приносят ему славы. ~ Дает одежду, пищу всем вещам, но не становится их господином. ~ У него незыблемо отсутствие желаний, и он может находиться в унижении. ~ Все вещи к нему возвращаются, но он не становится их господином и может получить имя великого. ~ Он потому может осуществить свою великость, что не признает себя великим.

—[34с92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Великое Дао всеохватно и распротёрто и влево, и вправо. ~ Мириады созданий опираются на него, а оно порождает их и не отрекается от них, но достигая успеха, остаётся безвестным. ~ Оно одевает и вскармливает мириады созданий, не правя ими. ~ Неизменно остаётся свободным от желаний и может быть названо Малым. ~ Мириады созданий возвращаются к нему, и посему оно может быть названо Великим. ~ В силу того, что оно никогда не считает себя великим, ему удаётся достичь величия.

—[34с93t] Е. А. Торчинов ~ Великий Путь, безбрежное Дао, повсюду растекается оно. ~ Вот оно слева, но оно и справа. ~ Все сущее, опираясь на него, рождается, но Дао им не обладает. ~ Благие качества и свойства свои оно не выставляет напоказ для прославления, оно питает, пестует все сущее, но не становится над сущим властелином. ~ Когда мудрец в бесстрастии все время пребывает, он Дао даже в самом малом созерцает. ~ Все сущее к нему стремится возвратиться, но не становится оно над ним владыкой. ~ Его поэтому назвать Великим можно! ~ Поэтому и совершенномудрый до самого конца к величию нисколько не стремится. ~ Поэтому он может стать поистине великим!

—[34с94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Великое Дао разлито повсюду, оно может быть и слева и справа. ~ Мириадам вещей оно служит опорой и, порождая [их], не уклоняется от этого; ~ успешно завершает и остается безвестным; ~ одевает и пестует мириады вещей и не становится их властелином. ~ [Оно] постоянно остается бесстрастным, ~ (Вариант перевода: [Оно] стремится к постоянному небытию,) ~ можно назвать его маленьким. ~ Мириады вещей возвращаются к нему и не считают его властелином, ~ можно назвать его великим. ~ Оно вообще не считает себя великим, ~ поэтому и может возвышаться в своем величии.

—[34с95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Великое дао растекается повсюду. ~ Оно может находиться и справа и слева. ~ Благодаря ему все сущее рождается и не прекращает [своего роста]. ~ Оно совершает подвиги, но славы себе не желает. ~ С любовью воспитывая все существа, оно не считает себя их властелином. ~ Оно никогда не имеет собственных желаний, поэтому его можно назвать ничтожным. ~ Все сущее возвращается к нему, но оно не рассматривает себя их властелином. ~ Его можно назвать великим. ~ Оно становится великим, потому что никогда не считает себя таковым.

—[34с96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ О, беспредельно великое Тао! ~ Оно справа и слева. ~ Вся тварь появилась на свет, благодаря ему; оно не отталкивает ее от себя. ~ Заслуги Тао велики, но оно ими не хвалится. ~ Оно промышляет о всех вещах с любовью, но не желает быть господином их. ~ Так как оно не имеет никакой страсти, то оно называется ничтожным. ~ Его можно назвать маленьким, ибо мельчайшая вещь возвращается в него. ~ Все существа подчиняются ему, но оно не считает себя господином их; ~ поэтому его можно назвать великим. ~ Мудреца нельзя назвать великим, хотя он совершает великие дела. ~ Причина того, что святой легко достигает величия, заключается в том, что он не величает самого себя.

—[34с97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Великий Путь разливается привольно! ~ Он может быть и слева, и справа. ~ Все вещи опираются на него, чтобы жить, ~ И он их не отвергает, ~ Во всем достигает успеха, ~ И не имеет славы. ~ Он одевает и кормит все вещи, ~ Но им не хозяин, ~ Вечно лишенный желаний - ~ Его можно причислить к тому, что мало. ~ Все вещи вверяют себя ему, ~ А он все же им не хозяин - ~ Его можно причислить к тому, что велико. ~ Оттого, что он никогда не считает себя великим, ~ Он и может воистину быть велик.

— [34c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ В разливе великого Пути можно быть и слева, и справа. ~ Мириады сущностей, отождествляясь с этим, рождаются-живут, не облакаясь при этом в слова. ~ Успех дела - не в прославлении наличия. ~ Одевай и вскармливай мириады сущностей, но не осуществляй роль хозяина. ~ Устремляясь к постоянству отсутствия, можешь прославиться в малом. ~ Мириады сущностей приходят, но не осуществляй роль хозяина. ~ Можешь прославиться в великом. ~ Так как до конца не возвеличиваешь себя в осуществлении. ~ Причинность: можешь реализовать свое великое.

— [35c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ Hold on to the Great Image and the whole world will come to you. ~ Come to you and suffer no harm; but rather know great safety and peace. ~ Music and food - for these passing travelers stop. ~ Therefore, of the Tao's speaking, we say: ~ Insipid, it is! It's lack of flavor. ~ When you look at it, it's not sufficient to be seen; ~ When you listen to it, it's not sufficient to be heard; ~ Yet when you use it, it can't be used up.

— [35c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ HE who holds the Great Symbol will attract all things to him. ~ They flock to him and receive no harm, for in him they find peace, security and happiness. ~ Music and dainty dishes can only make a passing guest pause. ~ But the words of Tao possess lasting effects, ~ Though they are mild and flavourless, ~ Though they appeal neither to the eye nor to the ear.

— [35c03t] D. C. Lau ~ Have in your hold the great image ~ And the empire will come to you. ~ Coming to you and meeting with no harm ~ It will be safe and sound. ~ Music and food ~ Will induce the wayfarer to stop. ~ The way in its passage through the mouth is without flavour. ~ It cannot be seen, ~ It cannot be heard, ~ Yet it cannot be exhausted by use.

— [35c04t] R. L. Wing ~ Hold fast to the Great Image, ~ And all the world will come. ~ Yet its coming brings no harm, Only peace and order. ~ When there is music together with food, ~ The audience will linger. ~ But when the Tao is expressed, ~ It seems without substance or flavor. ~ We observe and there is nothing to see. ~ We listen and there is nothing to hear. ~ We use it and it is without end.

— [35c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ Whoever holds fast to the great image will become that one to whom all people under Heaven will come. ~ (Even if all people under Heaven) come to him they will not hinder each other, ~ And all enjoy comfort, peace and health. ~ Music and dainties will make passing guests stop, ~ (But) Tao, if spoken out, will be insipid and tasteless. ~ Being looked at, it is imperceptible, ~ Being listened to, it is inaudible, ~ Being utilized, it is inexhaustible.

— [35c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ All men will come to him who keeps to the one, ~ For there lie rest and happiness and peace. ~ Passersby may stop for music and good food, ~ But a description of the Tao ~ Seems without substance or flavor. ~ It cannot be seen, it cannot be heard, ~ And yet it cannot be exhausted.

— [35c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ He who holds the great sign ~ Attracts a great following. ~ He who helps the followers avoid harm ~ Enjoys great peace. ~ Music and good food can stop passers-by on their way. ~ The Dao, on the contrary, offers only a bland taste. ~ It can hardly be seen or heard. ~ Yet if one uses it, it is inexhaustible.

— [35c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ If you have the DAO, everything will come to you. ~ They come to you because they will not be hurt anymore, and they will become secure and peaceful. ~ Pleasant music and tasteful food will make even the passerby stop. ~ When being talked about, the DAO is tasteless. ~ When you look at it, you will not see it; when you listen to it, you will not hear it; ~ However, when you use it, it will never run out.

— [35c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE VIRTUE OF BOUNTY ~ Attain to the Great Idea, and all the world will flock to you. ~ It will flock to you and will not be hurt therein, for it will rest in a wonderful peace. ~ Where there is a festival the wayfarer will stay. ~ To the palate the Tao is insipid and tasteless. ~ In regarding it the eye is not impressed. ~ In listening to it the ear is not filled. ~ But in its uses it is inexhaustible.

—[35c10t] James Legge ~ To him who holds in his hands the Great Image (of the invisible Tao), the whole world repairs. ~ Men resort to him, and receive no hurt, but (find) rest, peace, and the feeling of ease. ~ Music and dainties will make the passing guest stop (for a time). ~ But though the Tao as it comes from the mouth, seems insipid and has no flavour, though it seems not worth being looked at or listened to, the use of it is inexhaustible.

—[35c11t] David Hinton ~ Holding to the great image all beneath heaven sets out: ~ sets out free of risk, peace tranquil and vast. ~ Music and savory food ~ entice travelers to stop, ~ but the Way uttered forth ~ isn't even the thinnest of bland flavors. ~ Look at it: not enough to see. ~ Listen to it: not enough to hear. ~ Use it: not enough to use up.

—[35c12t] Chichung Huang ~ Take hold of the great image, ~ And all under heaven will flock to you. ~ Once there, unharmed, ~ They will settle down in peace and prosperity. ~ Music and pastries ~ Make the wayfarers pause. ~ Therefore, when the Tao utters words, ~ They say: "How bland and tasteless! ~ Looked at, ~ It is not worth seeing; ~ Listened to, ~ Not worth hearing." ~ When used, however, ~ It is inexhaustible.

—[35c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ Hold aloft the Great Image (hsiang), ~ The whole world will go to it. ~ Going to it, they will meet with no harm, ~ Only safety, peace, and contentment (an p'ing t'ai). ~ When music and dainty dishes are offered, ~ The passers-by stop. ~ Tao, when it is uttered by the mouth, ~ Is so bland it has no flavor. ~ When looked at, it is not enough to be seen. ~ When listened to, it is not enough to be heard, ~ When used (yung), it is inexhaustible.

—[35c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ If someone is successful in capturing the grandest phenomenon [of cosmos with his description]; ~ He may then be the right man for the world to follow; ~ Furthermore, if the world is processing [on this right course] unobstructed; ~ The world will enjoy peace, justice and prosperity. ~ The pleasure of listening to good music, and eating delicious food, were as transient as travelers passed by; ~ [When Tao was discussed]: ~ As far as mouth was concerned, the discussion gave off nothing more than tastelessness; ~ As far as eyes were concerned, the discussion offered nothing worthwhile to look at; ~ As far as ears were concerned, the discussion rendered nothing [musical which] deserves our making an effort to listen to it. ~ Nevertheless, when comes to the utilizations of discussions [about Tao], we shall discover that their applications are inexhaustible.

—[35c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ He who holds the great image will attract all things to him. ~ They flock to him and receive no harm, for in him they find peace, security and happiness. ~ Music and dainty dishes make a passing guest pause. ~ But being said in the words, the Way is tasteless, flavorless, not seen, not heard, but it cannot be used up.

—[35c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ Those who grasp Tao will be followed by the whole world. ~ Following without worries, the world becomes secure, peaceful, and prosperous. ~ Music and banquet make the travelers stop by. ~ But when Tao is said, it is plain and flavorless. ~ It is invisible when it is looked at. ~ It is inaudible when it is listened to. ~ It is inexhaustible when it is utilized.

—[35c17t] Arthur Waley ~ He who holding the Great Form goes about his work in the empire ~ Can go about his work, yet do no harm. ~ All is peace, quietness and security. ~ Sound of music, smell of good dishes ~ Will make the passing stranger pause. ~ How different the words that Tao gives forth! ~ So thin, so flavourless! ~ If one looks for Tao, there is nothing solid to see; ~ If one listens for it, there is nothing loud enough to hear. ~ Yet if one uses it, it is inexhaustible.

—[35c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ Grasp the great image, and all under Heaven will turn to you. ~ Turning to you means not harm but safety and peace in great measure. ~ Music and fine food make the passing visitor stay. ~ When the Dao is spoken of, how bland: it has no flavor at all! ~ We look for it, but not enough is there to see anything. ~ We listen for it, but not enough is there to hear anything. ~ We try to use it, but not enough is there to use up.

—[35c19t] Lin Yutang ~ THE PEACE OF TAO ~ Hold the Great Symbol ~ And all the world follows, ~ Follows without meeting harm, ~ (And lives in) health, peace, commonwealth. ~ Offer good things to eat ~ And the wayfarer stays. ~ But Tao is mild to the taste. ~ Looked at, it cannot be seen; ~ Listened to, it cannot be heard; ~ Applied, its supply never fails.

—[35c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ Hold fast to the great image and all under heaven will come; ~ They will come but not be harmed, rest in safety and peace; ~ Music and fine food will make the passerby halt. ~ Therefore, ~ When the Way is expressed verbally, ~ We say such things as ~ "how bland and tasteless it is!" ~ "We look for it, but there is not enough to be seen." ~ "We listen for it, but there is not enough to be heard." ~ Yet, when put to use, it is inexhaustible!

—[35c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ Hold on to the Great Image ~ and all under heaven will approach you. ~ Coming to you and not being harmed, ~ they will find rest, peace, and security. ~ A passing guest will pause at the sound of music and the smell of fancy food. ~ By comparison the Tao is mild and flavorless. ~ It is not solid enough to be seen, ~ nor loud enough to be heard. ~ Yet, it lasts forever.

—[35c22t] David H. Li ~ Whoever embraces the Grand Image attracts people in the world. ~ Attracting but not discriminating, they live in peace. ~ Hearing music and seeing food, visitors linger. ~ Direction, [as a subject] for discussion, is plain and flavorless. ~ Looking at it, it is invisible; ~ Listening to it, it is inaudible; ~ using it, it is inexhaustible.

—[35c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ From the great formless imagining the world emerges into existence, ~ Without obstruction, but with balance, harmony, and peace. ~ Music and feast provide fleeting pleasures in this ephemeral world. ~ The Tao in its utterance brings no such pleasures to the senses. ~ The Tao, when looked at, cannot be seen by the eye. ~ The Tao, when listened to, cannot be heard by the ear. ~ Yet, when used, it is forever inexhaustible.

—[35c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ The person who holds the great thing ~ Will go through a whole world. ~ He will go along the path straightforwardly without seeing danger, ~ But finds tranquillity, friendship, and equality. ~ The sounds of a tune and the scent of delicacies will cause the stranger passing by to stop. ~ But Tao, when it is expressed in words, is pure, devoid of all taste. ~ When someone looks at it, he won't see it. ~ When someone listens to it, he won't hear it. ~ However, when someone uses it, it is everything.

—[35c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ Everyone will gather to the man ~ Who rules in the light of the One. ~ To trust such a being is to live ~ In true happiness and healing. ~ Good food and sweet music ~ May make you stop ~ You listen, in passing. ~ But the Tao: how does it seem? ~ Oh, tasteless and shapeless by comparison. ~ You cannot even hear it. ~ Is it even worth trying to? ~ Yes, my friend because it is unending.

—[35c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ He who holds the great image (Tao) ~ Attracts all the people to him. ~ Coming to him and not harming each other, ~ They all live in peace and happiness. ~ Music and food ~ Can allure passersby to stop, ~ But the Tao, coming out of the mouth, ~ Is tasteless. ~ It cannot be seen, ~ It cannot be heard, ~ But when using it, you can never exhaust its use.

—[35c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ Embrace the appearance of Tao. ~ Everyone under the great Heaven will follow it, ~ yet no one tries to cause harm to it. ~ Peace and safety and equality will arise. ~ Banquets and delicacies are like passing guests: they cannot last. ~ The Tao passes the mouth, it cannot be tasted. ~ The Tao passes the eyes, it cannot be seen. ~ The Tao passes the ears, it cannot be heard. ~ Yet it can never be exhausted by use.

—[35c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ The owner of the biggest image attracts the whole world. ~ When all who come have been safely settled, ~ The world will then be peaceful. ~ Melodious music and delicious food ~ Can only attract passers-by. ~ But the Way is, when put into one's mouth, tasteless, ~ When looked at, colorless, ~ When listened to, uninteresting, ~ And, when used, limitlessly bountiful.

—[35c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ The Peace In The Tao ~ Lao Tze says, ~ When the king of men holds the great image, the whole world's people turn to rally round him. ~ When people turn to rally round him, and do not commit loss and harm, then the world shall become peaceful and secure. ~ He who takes delight in the Tao, and enjoys it, the true one will stay with him. ~ The Tao's teaching is as dry as a course of tasteless dish. ~ It cannot be seen, nor can't be heard. ~ However, it will never be exhausted in its application.

—[35c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ To him who holds to the Great Form all the world will go. ~ It will go and see no danger, but tranquillity, equality and community. ~ Music and dainties will make the passing stranger stop. ~ But Tao when uttered in words is so pure and void of flavour; ~ When one looks at it, one cannot see it; ~ When one listens to it, one cannot hear it. ~ However, when one uses it, it is inexhaustible.

—[35c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ Hold on to the great image ~ And the whole world will follow. ~ Following without harm, in safety, peace, and comfort. ~ Music and viand will cause the traveler to stop. ~ But Tao spoken by mouth is flavorless and bland. ~ Looked at, it cannot be seen. ~ Listened to, it cannot be heard. ~ Used, it will never be exhausted.

—[35c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ Grasp the Great Image and the world will come, ~ it will come and not be harmed - a great peace and evenness. ~ For music and cakes, passing strangers stop, ~ Tao flowing from the lips - flat. ~ No taste to it. ~ Look for it: you will not be satisfied looking; ~ listen for it: you will not be satisfied listening; ~ put it into practice: you will not be satisfied stopping.

—[35c33t] Cheng Lin ~ He who abides by the great Simulacrum (Truth) finds the people of the whole world eager to follow him. ~ By following him they are rendered free from harm, and peace prevails. ~ Like music and baits, he attracts all passers-by. ~ The utterance of Truth is insipid. ~ It cannot be seen with the eyes; ~ it cannot be heard with the ears; ~ it cannot be exhausted from constant use.

—[35c34t] Yi Wu ~ He who holds to the great image ~ Will be followed by the people of the world. ~ They will go unharmed, ~ In safety, calm, and peace. ~ Music and good food tempt passing guests to pause; ~ [But,] the Way that is tasted has no flavor, ~ Looked at, it cannot be seen, ~ Listened to, it cannot be heard, ~ Used, it cannot be exhausted.

—[35c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ When the ruler follows the way of Dao, ~ People will flock to him. ~ They become the beneficiaries and enjoy peace and harmony. ~ Beautiful music and sumptuous foods allure all passers-by. ~ They linger and then decide to stay. ~ How is Dao best described? ~ Dao is tasteless, invisible and inaudible, ~ But its use is inexhaustible.

—[35c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ When the subtle Way of the universe is taught, people know where to go and what to learn, ~ because they know that they will not be harmed but will receive great peace. ~ The teacher of the universal Way is like one who gives real food to people. ~ He does not feed them colorful bait with the intention of catching them. ~ The subtle Way of the universe is flavorless, with nothing much to offer the mouth. ~ Neither does it offer much to be enjoyed by the eyes or entertain the ears, yet its usefulness is inexhaustible.

—[35c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ When one maintains the great image in dealing with the world, ~ One deals with the world without harming it. ~ Instead, one makes the world serene, tranquil, and peaceful. ~ Music and delicacies may attract passersby to remain momentarily, ~ But the taste of Tao is plain and without flavor. ~ Look at it, nothing can be seen. ~ Listen to it, nothing can be heard. ~ Employ it, it cannot be depleted.

—[35c38t] Henry Wei ~ Virtue of Benevolence ~ Ren Teh ~ Hold fast to the Great Form, ~ And wherever in the world you go, ~ You will meet with no harm, ~ But enjoy security, peace, and well-being. ~ Where there is music with good food, ~ The passers-by will pause and linger. ~ But Tao, on being set forth orally, ~ Is insipid and tasteless. ~ It is invisible when looked at, ~ And inaudible when listened to, ~ Yet its utility will never come to an end.

—[35c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ Holding fast to the great form, ~ Go anywhere under Heaven. ~ Wherever you go, nothing will harm you - ~ You will be safe and in peace. ~ Music and fine food ~ Make the passing stranger stop. ~ When Tao comes out from the mouth, ~ How flavorless it is! ~ You look at it, but it is invisible. ~ You listen to it, but it is inaudible. ~ You use it, but it is inexhaustible.

—[35c40t] Tao Huang ~ Holding on to the great Symbol, ~ The whole world carries on. ~ On and on without doing harm. ~ Being happy at peace, ~ Enjoying greatly the music and food, ~ Travelers stop by. ~ When the Tao is spoken forth plainly ~ It has no flavor at all. ~ Look, but that is not sufficient for seeing. ~ Listen, but that is not sufficient for hearing. ~ Use it, but it is not exhausted.

—[35c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ He who holds fast to the superior model, the whole world may follow him without ado. ~ They follow him without harm, but with comfort, equality and prosperity. ~ Musical temptation and food's flavor can stop a traveler on the road. ~ When Dao is tasted by mouth, it is mild and without flavor. ~ When it is looked at, it cannot be entirely seen; ~ when it is listened to, it cannot be entirely heard; ~ and when it is taken, it cannot be eaten.

—[35c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ Hold fast to the great form (Tao), ~ And all the world will come. ~ They come and will encounter no harm; ~ But enjoy comfort, peace, and health. ~ When there are music and dainties, ~ Passing strangers will stay. ~ But the words uttered by Tao, ~ How insipid and tasteless! ~ We look at it, it is imperceptible. ~ We listen to it, it is inaudible. ~ We use it, it is inexhaustible.

—[37c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ The Tao never strives, ~ yet nothing is left undone. ~ If leaders were able to adhere to it the ten thousand things would develop of their own accord. ~ If after they have developed ~ they experience desires to strive, ~ they can bury those desires under the nameless Uncarved Block. ~ The nameless Uncarved Block can protect against desire. ~ When desires are restrained there will be peace, ~ and then all under heaven will be at rest.

—[37c22t] David H. Li ~ Direction is laissez-faire at all times; it is all-permeating. ~ Were a Duke or a Prince to govern with Direction, ~ Myriad matters would develop on own volition. ~ As self-development degenerates into avarice in complexity, ~ I suppress it with Direction's simplicity. ~ Suppressing with Direction's simplicity, ~ avarice disappears. ~ Without avarice, serenity visits with ease; ~ The world self-governs in peace.

—[37c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ The Tao does nothing, ~ Yet it leaves nothing undone. ~ If the leaders of the world abide by it, ~ All beings of their own accord will transform themselves. ~ If in the course of self-transformation discordant desires arise, ~ Calm them with the unnameable simplicity of the Tao. ~ If calmed with the nameless simplicity of the Tao, ~ Discordant desires of their own accord will disappear. ~ If discordant desires disappear and quietude is restored, ~ The world of its own accord will order itself.

—[37c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ Tao is never active, but there is nothing it does not do. ~ If princes and kings could hold onto it, all things would develop by themselves. ~ When they develop, the desire in them would emerge, ~ I would restrain them with simplicity, ~ So simple that it does not even have a name, ~ In order to liberate them from desire. ~ Free of desire, they would be soaked in tranquillity, ~ And thus the world would attain purity and virtue. ~ Simplicity, however unimportant it may be, ~ Cannot be subdued even by the entire world. ~ If princes and kings could hold onto it, ~ Everything in the world, of its own accord, would pay homage. ~ Heaven and earth would unite to sprinkle dew, sweeter than honey, on the ground. ~ Without anyone ordering them to do so, people would attain harmony by themselves. ~ With the mission accomplished and the objectives achieved, ~ People would see themselves as following in nature's footsteps.

—[37c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ The Tao goes on forever wu-wei - doing nothing ~ And yet everything gets done. ~ How? ~ It does it by being, ~ And by being everything it does. ~ If people and rulers go by this then every living thing will be well. ~ And if parts still want to separate the true leader will use the centrifugal weight of this original unnameable Oneness. ~ It is simple: ~ If no one wants anything for themselves then there can be peace and all things will know peace the way music ends in peace.

—[37c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ The Tao always remains inactive, ~ Yet it acts upon everything in the world. ~ If lords and kings can keep it, ~ All creatures will grow and develop naturally. ~ When desires are kindled in the growth and development, ~ I can suppress them with the nameless Simplicity of the Tao. ~ Once I do so ~ Desires will be repressed. ~ Once desires are repressed, ~ The whole world will be naturally at peace.

—[37c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ The Tao always does nothing but nothing remains undone. ~ If the ruler observes this the myriad creatures will act of their own accord. ~ After their metamorphosis, desire will arise. ~ It will press them down with the power of the uncarved block, the Tao. ~ The nameless uncarved block is free from desire. ~ Absence of desire will lead to stillness and the world under Heaven will be harmonized by itself.

—[37c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ The eternal Way serves everything by doing nothing. ~ If the kings can keep the model, ~ A natural order will appear in the world. ~ Should something undesirable grow after that, ~ Prevent it with the nameless simplicity. ~ By saying "the nameless simplicity," ~ I mean the reduction of vain desires. ~ Vain desires can be reduced by serenity of mind, ~ And the world can then be back in the Way.

—[37c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ The World In Peace ~ Lao Tze says, ~ The Tao's accomplishment is constantly made through acting without the intent to control fate, yet leaving nothing undone. ~ If the king of men insists on practicing the Tao, all existence will transform themselves in their natural courses. ~ When they transform and go out of their way, the king of men should guide them back to a pristine simplicity which was unknown to the world before. ~ Namely, the pristine simplicity of being desireless. ~ To be desireless is cultivated by being still. ~ It is by this stillness that this world is settled down in peace naturally.

—[37c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ Tao is ever inactive, and yet there is nothing that it does not do. ~ If princes and kings could keep to it, all things would of themselves become developed. ~ When they are developed, desire would stir in them; ~ I would restrain them by the nameless Simplicity, ~ In order to make them free from desire. ~ Free from desire, they would be at rest; ~ And the world would of itself become rectified. ~ However insignificant Simplicity seems, the whole world cannot make it submissive. ~ If princes and kings could keep to it, ~ All things in the world would of themselves pay homage. ~ Heaven and earth would unite to send down sweet dew. ~ The people with no one to command them would of themselves become harmonious. ~ When merits are accomplished and affairs completed, ~ The people would speak of themselves as following nature.

—[37c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ Tao is always inactive. ~ But it leaves nothing undone. ~ If dukes and kings can keep it, ~ Then all things will be naturally transformed. ~ If transformation raises desires, ~ I would suppress them with nameless simplicity. ~ Nameless simplicity means being without desires. ~ Being without desires and with tranquility, ~ The world will keep peace by itself.

—[37c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ Tao invariably Does Nothing, ~ and nothing remains not done. ~ If the princes and kings can watch over it, ~ the thousands of things will change by themselves. ~ If they change, and become desirous and active, ~ I will restrain them with the Nameless One's Simplicity. ~ Restraining them with the Nameless One's Simplicity will cause them no disgrace. ~ Not being disgraced, they will be Still. ~ The world will order itself.

—[37c33t] Cheng Lin ~ Truth abides by inaction, and yet nothing is left undone. ~ If the rulers abide by Truth, all animate creation will of their own accord come under their influence. ~ When they of their own accord come under their influence, and if selfish desires arise, I would tranquillize them with the nameless simplicity (Truth). ~ Once tranquillized by the nameless simplicity, they will again be free from selfish desires. ~ Thus free from selfish desires, they will be calm, and the world will of its own accord become peaceful.

—[37c34t] Yi Wu ~ The Way is constantly in non-action, ~ But it leaves nothing undone. ~ If dukes and kings can keep to it, ~ All things will be transformed by themselves. ~ But, in transforming, desires arise. ~ I will subdue them by the nameless simplicity; ~ With nameless simplicity, ~ There will be no desires. ~ Being desireless is to be tranquil. ~ All the world will become calm by itself.

—[37c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ Dao always sticks to non-action, yet everything develops spontaneously. ~ If the rulers could follow the way of Dao, ~ Everything under the sun will function properly. ~ If desire begins to creep in during the developing process, ~ It should be constrained by the "nameless simplicity". ~ The "nameless simplicity" has no designs. ~ Without designs, it will not create any disturbance. ~ Hence, peace will again prevail in the world.

—[37c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ The subtle essence of the universe is always unoccupied, ~ yet it leaves nothing undone. ~ If the people of the world were wise enough to plant the root of their lives deep within the Subtle Origin, ~ then the worldly affairs of life would coherently follow their own natural course, ~ and harmony would abound of its own accord. ~ When confusion takes place in one's surroundings, ~ it can be dissolved with the power of undisturbable Simplicity. ~ When life is ruled by undisturbable Simplicity, ~ desire and passion naturally fall away and reveal people's true, original nature. ~ Then the peaceful order of the universe prevails and unity manifests again of its own accord.

—[37c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ Tao is real and free from action, yet nothing is not acted upon. ~ If rulers abide with it, all things transmute by themselves. ~ If, in the process of transmutation, intention emerges, it must be overcome by the original non-differentiation of the nameless. ~ To experience the original non-differentiation of the nameless, one should also be free from intending to have no-intention. ~ To be free from intending to have no-intention is to be quiescent. ~ Thereby, the world is naturally led to tranquillity.

—[37c38t] Henry Wei ~ The Way of Government ~ Wei Cheng ~ Tao is eternal and devoid of action, ~ Yet there is nothing it does not do. ~ If kings and nobles can preserve it intact, ~ The ten thousand things will reform of themselves. ~ If after the reform they desire to be active, ~ I shall calm them with the Nameless Simplicity (p'u), ~ The Nameless Simplicity will induce desirelessness, ~ Desirelessness will tend to quiescence, ~ And the world will set itself on the right course.

—[37c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ Tao never does, ~ Yet leaves nothing undone. ~ If kings and princes hold fast to this, ~ The ten thousand things will transform of themselves. ~ Should desires arise after transformation, ~ I shall calm them with the nameless, uncarved block. ~ The nameless, uncarved block ~ Brings desirelessness. ~ With desirelessness comes stillness, ~ And all under Heaven will be at peace by itself.

—[37c40t] Tao Huang ~ Tao is eternally nameless. ~ If lords and rulers would abide by it, ~ All things would evolve of themselves. ~ What evolves desires to act. ~ I, then, suffuse this with nameless simplicity. ~ Suffusing with nameless simplicity is eliminating humiliation. ~ Without humiliation, peace arises. ~ Heaven and earth regulate themselves.

—[37c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ The eternity of Dao contrives nothing, yet it provides everything. ~ If rulers can cling to it - Dao, ~ All Things will transform (change) themselves. ~ Any artificial desire occurring during the transformation, shall be suppressed by the nameless "Purity" (Pure Matter). ~ Nameless "Purity" (Pure Matter) will do away with artificial desires. ~ When artificial desires have been done away with, all peoples will be at peace and the world order will be established automatically.

—[37c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ Tao invariably takes no action, and yet there is nothing left undone. ~ If kings and barons can keep it, all things will transform spontaneously. ~ If, after transformation, they should desire to be active, ~ I would restrain them with simplicity, which has no name. ~ Simplicity, which has no name, is free of desires. ~ Being free of desires, it is tranquil. ~ And the world will be at peace of its own accord.

—[37c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Дао, будучи незыблемым, находится в бездействии, но оно при этом непременно действует. ~ Если владельцы и царь смогут ему следовать, то десять тысяч вещей сами же преобразуются. ~ Когда они, преобразовываясь, пожелают возрасти, я их укрошу посредством приведения к безымянной первожданности. ~ В состоянии безымянной первожданности не появится желаний. ~ А при отсутствии желаний и в покое Поднебесная сама придет к стабильности.

—[37c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Дао извечно пребывает в недеянии, но нет того, чего бы оно ни совершало. ~ Если правители и князья могли бы соблюдать его, мириады существ обрели бы самопреображение. ~ Если же после того, как они обретут преобразование, родятся желания, то я погашу их безымянной простотой. ~ Безымянная простота свободна от желаний. ~ И если, избавясь от желаний, я обрету спокойствие, то Поднебесная сама придёт в порядок.

—[37c93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Дао-Путь постоянен, в недеянии он пребывает, но нет ничего, не сделанного им. ~ И если князья и цари умеют его блюсти, все сущее будет изменяться само по себе. ~ Но если изменяясь, оно возжелает творить самочинно, я буду давить на него простотой первожданной. ~ После того как я надавлю на него простотой первожданной, оно желать перестанет. ~ Без вожделиний оно обретет покой, и тогда Поднебесная исправится сама собой.

—[37c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Дао постоянно не деет и не не-деет. ~ Если хоу и ваны смогут блюсти его, то мириады вещей будут сами собою развиваться. ~ [Но если кто] наравне с развитием вдруг возжелает еще и мастерить, ~ я обуздаю того безымянным духовным естеством (пу). ~ Само же безымянное духовное естество по-прежнему останется бесстрастным. ~ [Его] бесстрастие приведет к покою, и Поднебесная сама собою утвердится.

—[37c95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Дао постоянно осуществляет недеяние, однако нет ничего такого, что бы оно не делало. ~ Если знать и государи будут его соблюдать, то все существа будут изменяться сами собой. ~ Если те, которые изменяются, захотят действовать, то я буду подавлять их при помощи простого бытия, не обладающего именем. ~ Не обладающее именем - простое бытие - для себя ничего не желает. ~ Отсутствие желания приносит покой, и тогда порядок в стране сам собой установится.

— [37c96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Тао ничего не делает, но нет того, чего бы оно не сделало. ~ Если царь и князя хорошо будут управлять страной, то все существа преобразуются так, как они желают. ~ Если все существа придут в сильное движение, то я удержу их посредством безымянной простоты. ~ Безымянная простота не имеет страсти. ~ Когда (в мире) не будет страстей, то будет спокойствие повсеместное и на всей земле будет правда.

— [37c97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Путь вечно в недеянии, ~ А в мире все делается. ~ Если князя и цари смогут блюсти его, ~ Вещи сами себя претворят. ~ Если потом они возымеют желание действовать, ~ Я сдержу их безымянной простотой. ~ Безымянная простота не таит никаких желаний. ~ Когда в покое не родится желаний, ~ Поднебесный мир выправится сам собой.

— [37c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Постоянство Пути - в отсутствии осуществления. ~ В результате отсутствует не-осуществленное. ~ Если удельные князя и правители способны придерживаться этого, тогда мириады сущностей сами стремятся к преобразованиям. ~ Если в преобразованиях желают действовать, то сущность моя удержит их посредством первозданной целостности отсутствия имен. ~ Состояние первозданной целостности отсутствия имен также ориентирует на отсутствие стремлений. ~ Когда состояние отсутствия стремлений осуществляется посредством покоя, тогда выправление Поднебесной будет происходить само собой.

— [38c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ The highest virtue is not virtuous; therefore it truly has virtue. ~ The lowest virtue never loses sight of its virtue; therefore it has no true virtue. ~ The highest virtue takes no action, yet it has no reason for acting this way; ~ The highest humanity takes action, yet it has no reason for acting this way; ~ The highest righteousness takes action, and it has its reasons for acting this way; ~ The highest propriety takes action, and when no one responds to it, then it angrily rolls up its sleeves and forces people to comply. ~ Therefore, when the Way is lost, only then do we have virtue; ~ When virtue is lost, only then do we have humanity; ~ When humanity is lost, only then do we have righteousness; ~ And when righteousness is lost, only then do we have propriety. ~ As for propriety, it's but the thin edge of loyalty and sincerity, and the beginning of disorder. ~ And foreknowledge is but the flower of the Way, and the beginning of stupidity. ~ Therefore the Great Man ~ Dwells in the thick and doesn't dwell in the thin; ~ Dwells in the fruit and doesn't dwell in the flower. ~ Therefore, he rejects that and takes this.

— [38c02t] John C. H. resorts to persuasion by force. ~ Hence when the way was lost there was virtue; ~ When virtue was lost there was benevolence; ~ When benevolence was lost there was rectitude; ~ When rectitude was lost there were the rites. ~ The rites are the wearing thin of loyalty and good faith ~ And the beginning of disorder; ~ Foreknowledge is the flowery embellishment of the way ~ And the beginning of folly. ~ Hence the man of large mind abides in the thick not in the thin, in the fruit not in the flower. ~ Therefore he discards the one and takes the other.

—[38c04t] R. L. —[38c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ The superior virtue does not show itself in formal virtue, ~ In this way it really possesses virtue. ~ The inferior virtue rigidly sticks to formal virtue, ~ In this way it loses virtue. ~ The superior virtue takes no action to show itself, and need not do so purposely. ~ The inferior virtue takes action to show itself, and does so purposely. ~ The superior benevolence takes action to show itself, and does not do so on purpose. ~ The superior righteousness takes action to show itself, and does so on purpose. ~ The superior propriety takes action to show itself, ~ And when it gets no response, it will stretch its arms and retaliate. ~ Therefore, only when Tao is lost does De arise, ~ Only when De is lost does benevolence arise, ~ Only when benevolence is lost does righteousness arise, ~ Only when righteousness is lost does propriety arise. ~ The thing that is called propriety is really the want of loyalty and faithfulness and the beginning of disorder. ~ The thing that is called foresight is really the ornament of Tao and the beginning of ignorance. ~ For this reason the great man dwells in the thick and keeps away from the thin, ~ He dwells in plainness and keeps away from the ornament. ~ Therefore he rejects the latter and accepts the former.

—[38c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ A truly good man is not aware of his goodness, ~ And is therefore good. ~ A foolish man tries to be good, ~ And is therefore not good. ~ A truly good man does nothing, ~ Yet leaves nothing undone. ~ A foolish man is always doing, ~ Yet much remains to be done. ~ When a truly kind man does something, he leaves nothing undone. ~ When a just man does something, he leaves a great deal to be done. ~ When a disciplinarian does something and no one responds, ~ He rolls up his sleeves in an attempt to enforce order. ~ Therefore when Tao is lost, there is goodness. ~ When goodness is lost, there is kindness. ~ When kindness is lost, there is justice. ~ When justice is lost, there is ritual. ~ Now ritual is the husk of faith and loyalty, the beginning of confusion. ~ Knowledge of the future is only a flowery trapping of the Tao. ~ It is the beginning of folly. ~ Therefore the truly great man dwells on what is real and not what is on the surface, ~ On the fruit and not the flower. ~ Therefore accept the one and reject the other.

—[38c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ The people who have high DE do not purposely show the DE, but ultimately have the DE. ~ The people who have low DE are always afraid of not showing the DE, but ultimately lose the DE. ~ The people who have high DE practice WUWEI, but ultimately get everything done. ~ The people who have low DE do things purposely, but ultimately fail in many things. ~ The kind people do not do things purposely, but get everything done well. ~ The highly righteous people do things purposely, but ultimately fail in many things. ~ The people who follow courtesy and orders do everything purposely, but when no one follows them, they rudely force people to do so. ~ Therefore, when the DAO is lost, charity appears; ~ When charity is lost, righteousness appears; ~ When righteousness is lost, courtesy and order appear. ~ Courtesy and order have little loyalty and faith, and they are the source of chaos. ~ Therefore, they are the end of the DAO and the beginning of a dark age. ~ Noble men always stay sturdy, not shallow; solid, not flimsy. ~ So one should keep the former and get rid of the latter.

—[38c09t] Walter Gorn Old, OF VIRTUE ~ The superior virtue is not recognised as such, and it is therefore the very essence of virtue. ~ The inferior virtue has the distinction of virtue, and therefore it lacks the essence. ~ The superior virtue is spontaneous, and makes no claim to merit. ~ The inferior virtue is designing, and lays claim to recognition. ~ The higher benevolence acts without pretension to merit. ~ The inferior justice acts, and also makes pretensions. ~ The inferior expediency is designing, and therefore no one honours it. ~ Therefore does it bare its arm and assert itself by force. ~ Thus it transpires that when virtue is lost, benevolence takes its place. ~ When benevolence is lost, justice ensues. ~ When justice is lost, then expediency follows. ~ But expediency is the mere shadow of what is right and true, and is portentous of confusion. ~ Superficial virtue is the mere tinsel of Tao, and the fool makes use of it. ~ But the truly great man establishes himself on that which is solid, and will not lean upon a shadow. ~ He keeps to the real, and avoids display. ~ He rejects the one, and takes the other with both hands.

Lin ~ He with the highest virtue ~ Does not display his virtue ~ And so has virtue. ~ He with the lowest virtue ~ Does not let go of virtue ~ And so has no virtue. ~ He with the highest virtue does not act ~ And nothing is left undone. ~ He with the lowest virtue acts ~ And has intent to act. ~ He with the highest human-heartedness acts ~ And has no intent to act. ~ He with the highest righteousness acts ~ And has intent to act. ~ He with the highest propriety acts ~ And if there is no response, ~ Bares his arms to apply force. ~ Therefore, ~ When Tao is lost, virtue appears. ~ When virtue is lost, human-heartedness appears. ~ When human-heartedness is lost, righteousness appears. ~ When righteousness is lost, propriety appears. ~ Propriety is the thinness of loyalty and honesty, ~ And the beginning of disorder; ~ Foreknowledge is the ornament of Tao, ~ And the beginning of ignorance. ~ Therefore, great gentlemen stay in the thick, and not in the thin. ~ They stay with the substance, and not with the ornament. ~ So they reject that to prefer this.

—[38c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ The finest Te is not Te-like, so it is Te; ~ the poorest Te never leaves off being Te-like, so it is not Te. ~ The finest Te: no working at it, no goal in mind; ~ the poorest Te: people work at it, with a goal in mind. ~ The finest Goodness: people work at it, but with no goal in mind; ~ the finest Morality: people work at it, with a goal in mind; ~ the finest Etiquette: people work at it, and, when none pay attention, they roll up their sleeves and go on the attack. ~ Yes: ~ Losing Tao, next comes Te; ~ losing Te, next comes Goodness; ~ losing Goodness, next comes Morality; ~ losing Morality, next comes Etiquette. ~ And now Etiquette is loyalty and sincerity spread thin, ~ and the first sign of disorders. ~ Foreknowledge is the flower of Tao, ~ and the beginning of folly. ~ And so the great man: ~ Resides with the substance, ~ does not stay with what is thin. ~ Resides with the fruit, ~ does not stay with the flower. ~ Yes: ~ He leaves 'that' aside and attends to 'this'.

—[38c33t] Cheng Lin ~ The most virtuous is not conscious of being virtuous, and therefore he attains virtue. ~ The least virtuous is always afraid of losing virtue, and therefore he fails to attain virtue. ~ The most virtuous abides by inaction, and nothing is left undone. ~ The least virtuous is always employed with action, and much is left undone. ~ When benevolence is most highly esteemed, people practise it for its own sake. ~ When righteousness is most highly esteemed, people practise it for their own good. ~ When propriety is most highly esteemed, people practise it because they are compelled to. ~ Thus, ~ virtue becomes fashionable when people fail to follow Truth; ~ benevolence becomes fashionable when people fail to attain virtue; ~ righteousness becomes fashionable when people fail to practise benevolence; ~ propriety becomes fashionable when people fail to practise righteousness. ~ The rules of propriety are brought about by the lack of loyalty and sincerity, and by the prevalence of confusion. ~ Learning is pushed to the fore when Truth is disregarded as a matter of no importance, and when hypocrisy begins to prevail. ~ Therefore the truly great men dwell in what is fundamental, and shun what is trivial; ~ they abide by what is real, and discard what is ornamental.

—[38c34t] Yi Wu ~ One with supreme virtue is not attached to virtue, so has virtue. ~ One with lower virtue does not lose virtue, so has no virtue. ~ One with supreme virtue is in non-action and acts without purpose. ~ One with lower virtue is in action and has purpose in his actions. ~ One with high humanity is in action but acts without purpose. ~ One with high righteousness is in action and acts with purpose. ~ One with high propriety is in action but, if people do not respond, ~ He raises armies to draw others to him. ~ Therefore, when people lose the Way, they resort to virtue. ~ Losing virtue, they resort to humanity. ~ Losing humanity, they resort to righteousness. ~ Losing righteousness, they resort to propriety. ~ Propriety marks the lack of loyalty and trust ~ And the beginning of disorder! ~ The man with foreknowledge is only an ornament of the Way ~ And the beginning of stupidity. ~ Therefore, the great man dwells on the thick but not on the thin. ~ Dwells on the substance, but not on the ornament. ~ So, he renounces that and takes this.

—[38c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ The ruler with great virtue never reveals his virtue. ~ Hence, he truly possesses real virtue. ~ An ordinary ruler deliberately tries to show off his virtue. ~ He therefore does not possess any real virtue. ~ The ruler with great virtue goes with the flow. ~ His action encapsulates the essence of wu-wei. ~ The ordinary ruler deliberately tries to go with the flow. ~ He thus achieves the antithesis of wu-wei. ~ The ruler with great compassion rules benevolently without ulterior motives. ~ He thus captures the essence of wu-wei. ~ The ruler of righteousness deliberately sets out to rule benevolently. ~ He thus misses the essence of wu-wei. ~ The ruler of propriety (rites) imposes rules and regulations. ~ When the people do not conform, he responds with punitive measures. ~ Therefore, when Dao is in decline, virtue supplants it. ~ When virtue is in decline, benevolence replaces it. ~ When benevolence fails, righteousness takes its place. ~ When righteousness does not prevail, rites begin to exert their authority. ~ The prevalence of rites is the sign that loyalty and trust are wearing very thin and that serious trouble is brewing. ~ Clever people with prescience to foretell events represent the superficiality of Dao. ~ This heralds the beginning of ignorance. ~ Therefore, a man of substance is unsophisticated but not shallow. ~ He resides on the fundamental but not on the superficial. ~ He thus embraces the substance and rejects the trimmings.

—[38c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ One of subtle universal virtue is not conscious of being virtuous, ~ therefore, he is truly virtuous. ~ One of partial virtue attempts to live up to an external standard of virtue, ~ therefore, he is not truly virtuous. ~ One of whole virtue does not need to do anything in order to be virtuous, ~ because virtue is the very essence of one's true nature. ~ But, one of partial virtue believes that something must be done in order to prove that he is virtuous. ~ Thus, partial virtue becomes prevalent when people fail to follow their own true nature. ~ Benevolence becomes prevalent when people fail to be naturally kind. ~ Etiquette becomes prevalent when people fail to be righteous and considerate. ~ When people find no response with etiquette, ~ they roll up their sleeves and force others to respond to them. ~ When people stray from the subtle way of universal nature, ~ they can no longer perceive their own true nature. ~ Thus, they emphasize relative virtue. ~ When natural virtue is lost, ~ society depends on the doctrine of humanism. ~ When humanity becomes corrupted, ~ social and religious teachings appear and become powerful forces. ~ When social and religious teachings become corrupted, ~ what is left behind is the empty shell of superficial ceremonies and artificial etiquette. ~ When etiquette is emphasized, ~ it is because people lack the simple qualities of fairness and kindness. ~ This is the starting point of people of confusion. ~ All of these man-made, partial virtues are merely superficial flowers, a false nature. ~ When people begin to move away from their own true nature, ~ it is the beginning of hypocrisy. ~ Therefore, one who integrates his own individual being with the deep nature of the universe sets his heart upon the root of reality rather than the husk, and upon the nourishment of the fruit rather than the fleeting beauty of the flowers. ~ Truly, he cherishes what is deep within rather than what is shallow without. ~ Knowing this, he knows what to accept and what to reject.

—[38c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ The highest attainment (Tê) is free from attainment. ~ Therefore, there is attainment. ~ The lowest attainment is never free from attainment. ~ Therefore, there is no attainment. ~ The highest attainment never acts and is purposeless. ~ The lowest attainment acts and is purposeful. ~ The highest benevolence (jen) acts and is purposeless. ~ The highest righteousness (yi) acts and is purposeful. ~ The highest propriety (li) acts and no one follows it. ~ One bares one's arms and throws one's opponents away. ~ Therefore, when Tao is lost, we have attainment. ~ When attainment is lost, we have benevolence. ~ When benevolence is lost, we have righteousness. ~ When righteousness is lost, we have propriety. ~ Propriety is due to a lack of trustworthiness and is the beginning of disorder. ~ Anticipated knowledge is the superficiality of Tao and is the beginning of foolishness. ~ Hence, the great man chooses reality and not superficiality. ~ He acts according to reality and not appearance. ~ Thus, he grasps the one and foregoes the other.

—[38c38t] Henry Wei ~ Discourse on Virtue ~ Lun Teh ~ Superior virtue is not virtue-conscious, ~ Therefore it has virtue. ~ Inferior virtue never forgets virtue, ~ Therefore it has no virtue. ~ Superior virtue does not interfere, ~ And has no motive to interfere. ~ Inferior virtue interferes, ~ And has a motive to interfere. ~ Superior benevolence interferes without motive; ~ Superior righteousness interferes from motive; ~ Superior propriety interferes, ~ And failing to evoke any response, ~ Lifts its arm and resorts to violence. ~ Therefore, ~ After the loss of Tao, virtue appears; ~ After the loss of virtue, benevolence appears; ~ After the loss of benevolence, righteousness appears; ~ After the loss of righteousness, propriety appears. ~ Propriety is a mere veneer of loyalty and sincerity, ~ And constitutes the prime cause of confusion. ~ Traditional knowledge is the flower (outward show) of Tao, ~ And has become the origin of folly. ~ Therefore, men of the heroic type abide by depth, ~ And stay away from shallowness; ~ Abide by the fruit and stay away from the flower. ~ Forsooth, they reject this and adopt that.

—[38c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ The man of superior virtue [te] is not virtuous; ~ Therefore he has virtue. ~ The man of inferior virtue never fails to be virtuous; ~ Therefore he has no virtue. ~ A man of superior virtue never acts; ~ He seeks nothing through action. ~ A man of inferior virtue acts; ~ He seeks [virtue] through action. ~ A man of superior humaneness [jen] acts; ~ Yet he seeks nothing through action. ~ A man of superior righteousness [i] acts; ~ He seeks [righteousness] through action. ~ A man of superior ritual propriety [li] acts; ~ And when others fail to respond accordingly, ~ He stretches his arm and charges at them. ~ Therefore, when Tao is lost, virtue appears; ~ When virtue is lost, humaneness appears; ~ When humaneness is lost, righteousness appears; ~ When righteousness is lost, ritual propriety appears. ~ Truly, ritual propriety means ~ The thinning of loyalty and truthfulness, ~ And the origin of disorder. ~ Foresight ~ Is the flower of Tao, ~ The beginning of folly. ~ Therefore the great man ~ Dwells in the thick, ~ Not in the thin, ~ In the fruit, ~ Not in the flower. ~ Therefore he discards that and takes this.

—[38c40t] Tao Huang ~ Eminent action is inaction, ~ For that action it is active. ~ Inferior action never stops acting, ~ For that reason it is inactive. ~ Eminent action is disengaged, ~ Yet nothing is left unfulfilled; ~ Eminent humanness engages, ~ Yet nothing is left unfulfilled; ~ When eminent righteousness engages, ~ It reduces the results of engagements; ~ Eminent justice engages, but does not respond adequately to situations. ~ For that reason it is frustrated. ~ When Tao is lost, ~ It becomes Action; ~ When Action is lost, ~ It becomes benevolence; ~ When benevolence is lost, ~ It becomes justice. ~ When justice is lost, ~ It becomes propriety. ~ Propriety is the veneer of faith and loyalty, ~ And the forefront of troubles. ~ Foresight is the vain display of Tao, ~ And the forefront of foolishness. ~ Therefore, the man of substance ~ Dwells in wholeness rather than veneer, ~ Dwells in the essence rather than the vain display. ~ He rejects the latter, and accepts the former.

—[38c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ When conduct is of high virtue, one is unconscious of virtue, thus he can accomplish virtue. ~ When conduct is of low virtue, one is conscious of virtue, thus he cannot accomplish virtue. ~ High virtue does not contrive and has no desire for gain. ~ Low virtue also does not contrive but has desire for gain. ~ High benevolence does contrive yet it has no desire for gain. ~ High righteousness does contrive and also has desire for gain. ~ High ritual does not only contrive and desire, but is also violent: ~ if it finds no response at all, it resorts to fighting its way out with stretched arms. ~ Hence when Dao is losing, then its virtues are losing. ~ When virtues are losing, benevolence is encouraged. ~ When benevolence is losing, the righteousness is encouraged. ~ When righteousness is losing, then rituals are encouraged. ~ Rituals stand for the lack of loyalty and reliability and are the beginning of disorder. ~ Divination stands for the emotional performance of Dao and is the beginning of stupidity. ~ Therefore the superior man prefers to possess few things rather than an abundance, to have insight rather than to see superficially. ~ Thus he prefers insight to superficiality.

—[38c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ The man of superior virtue is not (conscious of) his virtue, ~ And in this way he really possesses virtue. ~ The man of inferior virtue never loses (sight of) his virtue, ~ And in this way he loses his virtue. ~ The man of superior virtue takes no action, but has no ulterior motive to do so. ~ The man of inferior virtue takes action, and has an ulterior motive to do so. ~ The man of superior humanity takes action, but has no ulterior motive to do so. ~ The man of superior righteousness takes action, and has an ulterior motive to do so. ~ The man of superior propriety takes action, ~ And when people do not respond to it, he will stretch his arms and force it on them. ~ Therefore: ~ When Tao is lost, only then does the doctrine of virtue arise. ~ When virtue is lost, only then does the doctrine of humanity arise. ~ When humanity is lost, only then does the doctrine of righteousness arise. ~ When righteousness is lost, only then does the doctrine of propriety arise. ~ Now, propriety is a superficial expression of loyalty and faithfulness, and the beginning of disorder. ~ Those who are the first to know have the flowers of Tao but are the beginning of ignorance. ~ For this reason the great man dwells in the thick, and does not rest with the thin. ~ He dwells in the fruit, and does not rest with the flower. ~ Therefore he rejects the one, and accepts the other.

—[38с91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Верх добродетели - ее не проявлять и потому быть добродетелью проникнутым. ~ При низшей добродетели стараются ее не упустить и потому не обладают добродетелью. ~ При высшей добродетели бездействуют и лишены намерения действовать. ~ При низшей добродетели берутся за дела и преисполнены намерения действовать. ~ При высшей человечности берутся за дела, но лишены намерения действовать. ~ При высшей справедливости берутся за дела и преисполнены намерения действовать. ~ При высшей ритуальности берутся за дела, и если не встречают отклика, то тащат с пылом за собой. ~ Поэтому с утратой Дао и обретают добродетель; ~ с утратой добродетели овладевают человечностью; ~ с утратой человечности усваивают справедливость; ~ с утратой справедливости вверяют себя ритуалу. ~ Ритуальность составляет мелочь в проявлении преданности и доверия. ~ В ней заключается начало смуты. ~ Различать заранее - это цветок Дао и начало глупости. ~ Именно поэтому великий муж довольствуется сутью и не гонится за мелочами, предпочитает плод цветку, отбрасывает то и берет это.

—[38с92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Человек высшей Благости не проявляет свою Благость, и потому он обладает Благостью. ~ Человек низкой Благости не отклоняется от Благости, и потому он не обладает Благостью. ~ Человек высшей Благости пребывает в недеянии и не имеет намерения действовать. ~ Человек низкой Благости погружен в деяния и к тому же имеет намерение действовать. ~ Человек высокой гуманности действует, и нет того, чего бы он ни сделал. ~ Человек высокой справедливости действует, но всё же остаётся то, что ещё надо сделать. ~ Человек высоких ритуалов погружен в деяния, но когда он не достигает желаемого, то закатывает рукава и прибегает к силе. ~ Поэтому, когда утрачивается Дао, - приходит Благость. ~ Когда утрачивается Благость, - приходит гуманность. ~ Когда утрачивается гуманность, - приходит справедливость. ~ Когда утрачивается справедливость, - приходят ритуалы. ~ Ритуалы - это тончайшая ширма для преданности и искренности и предвестник смуты. ~ Предзнание - это цветок Дао и начало невежества. ~ Поэтому великий муж пребывает в плотно-возвышенном и отвергает тонко-ничтожное. ~ Он принимает плоды и отвергает цветы. ~ Поэтому он отказывается от первого ради второго.

—[38с93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Высшее Благо не благо, и благодаря этому оно наделено благом. ~ Низшее Благо не теряет блага, и благодаря этому оно лишено блага. ~ Высшее Благо пребывает в недеянии, и ему незачем действовать. ~ Низшее Благо деятельно, и оно имеет цель для своих деяний. ~ Высшее милосердие деятельно, но ему незачем действовать. ~ Высшая справедливость деятельна, и она имеет цель для своих деяний. ~ Высшее ритуальное благоговение деятельно, но ему не соответствует ничего во всем мире; ~ поэтому следующие ритуалу тогда закатывают рукава до плеч и силой принуждают народ идти за ними. ~ Поэтому люди утрачивают Дао-Путь и обретают Благо; ~ теряют Благо и обретают милосердие; ~ теряют милосердие и обретают справедливость; ~ теряют справедливость и обретают ритуальное благоговение. ~ Но ритуальное благоговение - свидетельство того, что у людей оскудевают преданность и верность слову. ~ Поэтому оно - начало смуты. ~ Предвидение будущего - не только цвет Дао-Пути, но и начало глупости. ~ Поэтому великий муж пребывает в том, что обильно, а не в том, что скудно. ~ Он не пребывает в цветущих верхушках сущего. ~ Отбрасывая то, берет он это.

—[38с94t] А. Е. почему после потери Дао следует Дэ; ~ после потери Дэ следует Жэнь; ~ после потери Жэнь следует И; ~ после потери И следует Ли. ~ Ли - это ничтожность преданности Синь (Доверию) и начало смуты. ~ Только что представленная [вам норма Ли] - это цветок Дао и начало тупости. ~ Поэтому великий муж там, где Дао обильно, а не там, где ничтожно; ~ там, где плод, а не там, где его цветок. ~ Вот почему отбрасывает одно, избирает другое.

— [38c95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Человек с высшим дэ не стремится делать добрые дела, поэтому он добродетелен; ~ человек с низшим дэ не оставляет [намерения] совершать добрые дела, поэтому он не добродетелен; ~ человек с высшим дэ бездейтелен и осуществляет надеяние; ~ человек с низшим дэ деятелен, и его действия нарочиты; ~ обладающий высшим человеколюбием действует, осуществляя надеяние; ~ человек высшей справедливости деятелен, и его действия нарочиты; ~ человек, во всем соблюдающий ритуал, действует, [надеясь на взаимность]. ~ Если он не встречает взаимности, то он прибегает к наказаниям. ~ Вот почему дэ появляется только после утраты дао; ~ человеколюбие - после утраты дэ; ~ справедливость - после утраты человеколюбия; ~ ритуал - после утраты справедливости. ~ Ритуал - это признак отсутствия доверия и преданности. ~ [В ритуале] - начало смуты. ~ Внешний вид - это цветок дао, начало невежества. ~ Поэтому [великий человек] берет существенное и оставляет ничтожное. ~ Он берет плод и отбрасывает его цветок. ~ Он предпочитает первое и отказывается от второго.

— [38c96t] Д. П. —[39c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ Of those in the past that attained the One - ~ Heaven, by attaining the One became clear; ~ Earth, by attaining the One became stable; ~ Gods, by attaining the One became divine; ~ Valleys, by attaining the One became full; ~ Marquises and kings, by attaining the One made the whole land ordered and secure. ~ Taking this to its logical conclusion we would say - ~ If Heaven were not by means of it clear, it would, I'm afraid, shatter; ~ If the Earth were not by means of it stable, it would, I'm afraid, let go. ~ If the gods were not by means of it divine, they would, I'm afraid, be powerless. ~ If valleys were not by means of it full, they would, [I'm afraid] dry up. ~ And if marquises and kings were not by means of it noble and high, they would, I'm afraid, topple and fall. ~ Therefore, it must be the case that the noble has the base as its root; ~ And it must be the case that high has the low for its foundation. ~ Thus, for this reason, marquises and kings call themselves "The Orphan," "The Widower," and "The One Without Grain." ~ This is taking the base as one's root, is it not?! ~ Therefore, they regard their large numbers of carriages as having no carriage. ~ And because of this, they desire not to dazzle and glitter like jade, ~ But to remain firm and strong like stone.

—[39c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ FROM of old there are not lacking things that have attained Oneness. ~ The sky attained Oneness and became clear; ~ The earth attained Oneness and became calm; ~ The spirits attained Oneness and became charged with mystical powers; ~ The fountains attained Oneness and became full; ~ The ten thousand creatures attained Oneness and became reproductive; ~ Barons and princes attained Oneness and became sovereign rulers of the world. ~ All of them are what they are by virtue of Oneness. ~ If the sky were not clear, it would be likely to fall to pieces; ~ If the earth were not calm, it would be likely to burst into bits; ~ If the spirits were not charged with mystical powers, they would be likely to cease from being; ~ If the fountains were not full, they would be likely to dry up; ~ If the ten thousand creatures were not reproductive, they would be likely to come to extinction; ~ If the barons and princes were not the sovereign rulers, they would be likely to stumble and fall. ~ Truly, humility is the root from which greatness springs, ~ And the high must be built upon the foundation of the low. ~ That is why barons and princes style themselves "The Helpless One," "The Little One," and "The Worthless One." ~ Perhaps they too realize their dependence upon the lowly. ~ Truly, too much honour means no honour. ~ It is not wise to shine like jade and resound like stone-chimes.

—[39c03t] D. C. Lau ~ Of old, these came to be in possession of the One: ~ Heaven in virtue of the One is limpid; ~ Earth in virtue of the One is settled; ~ Gods in virtue of the One have their potencies; ~ The valley in virtue of the One is full; ~ The myriad creatures in virtue of the One are alive; ~ Lords and princes in virtue of the One become leaders in the empire. ~ It is the One that makes these what they are. ~ Without what makes it limpid heaven might split; ~ Without what makes it settled earth might sink; ~ Without what gives them their potencies gods might spend themselves; ~ Without what makes it full the valley might run dry; ~ Without what keeps them alive the myriad creatures might perish; ~ Without what makes them leaders lords and princes might fall. ~ Hence the superior must have the inferior as root; ~ The high must have the low as base. ~ Thus lords and princes refer to themselves as 'solitary', 'desolate', and 'hapless'. ~ This is taking the inferior as root, is it not? ~ Hence the highest renown is without renown, ~ Not wishing to be one among many like jade ~ Nor to be aloof like stone.

—[39c04t] R. L. Wing ~ From old, these may have harmony with the One: ~ Heaven in harmony with the One becomes clear. ~ Earth in harmony with the One becomes stable. ~ Mind in harmony with the One becomes inspired. ~ Valleys in harmony with the One become full. ~ All Things in harmony with the One become creative. ~ Leaders in harmony with the One become incorruptible in the world. ~ These were attained through Oneness. ~ Heaven without clarity would probably crack. ~ Earth without stability would probably quake. ~ Mind without inspiration would probably sleep. ~ Valleys without fullness would probably dry up. ~ All Things without creativity would probably die off. ~ Leaders without incorruptible ways would probably stumble and fall. ~ Indeed, the high-placed stem from the humble; ~ The elevated are based upon the lowly. ~ This is why leaders call themselves ~ Alone, lonely, and unfavored. ~ Is this not because they stem from the humble and common? ~ Is it not? ~ Therefore, attain honor without being honored. ~ Do not desire to shine like jade; wear ornaments as if they were stone.

—[39c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ From of old those that attained one principle (Tao) - ~ Heaven attained the One and became clear, ~ Earth attained the One and became tranquil, ~ Spirits attained the One and became divine, ~ Valleys attained the One and became full, ~ All things attained the One and became luxuriant, ~ Kings and princes attained the One and became heads of the Kingdom. ~ What they strove to achieve was fulfilled by the principle (the One). ~ If Heaven couldn't have become clear it would soon crack. ~ If Earth couldn't have become tranquil it would soon be shaken. ~ If spirits couldn't have become divine they would soon perish. ~ If valleys couldn't have become full they would soon be exhausted. ~ If all things couldn't have become luxuriant they would soon be extinct. ~ If kings and princes couldn't have maintained their majesty and nobility they would soon lose their kingdoms and states. ~ Therefore the noble takes the humble as its root, ~ And the high takes the low as its ground. ~ Just for this reason kings and princes call themselves the orphaned, the solitary and the unworthy. ~ Is it not regarding the humble as the root of the noble? ~ Is it not so? ~ Therefore to seek too much honour means to lose honour wholly. ~ So neither the noble jade, nor the humble rocks should one strive to be.

—[39c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ These things from ancient times arise from one: ~ The sky is whole and clear. ~ The earth is whole and firm. ~ The spirit is whole and strong. ~ The valley is whole and full. ~ The ten thousand things are whole and alive. ~ Kings and lords are whole, and the country is upright. ~ All these are in virtue of wholeness. ~ The clarity of the sky prevents its falling. ~ The firmness of the earth prevents its splitting. ~ The strength of the spirit prevents its being used up. ~ The fullness of the valley prevents its running dry. ~ The growth of the ten thousand things prevents their dying out. ~ The leadership of kings and lords prevents the downfall of the country. ~ Therefore the humble is the root of the noble. ~ The low is the foundation of the high. ~ Princes and lords consider themselves "orphaned," "widowed," and "worthless." ~ Do they not depend on being humble? ~ Too much success is not an advantage. ~ Do not tinkle like jade ~ Or clatter like stone chimes.

—[39c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ There is one universal formula that always works: ~ The sky had followed the universal formula, ~ and it became clear. ~ The earth had followed the universal formula, ~ and became calm and safe. ~ The gods follow the universal formula, ~ and they have become effective. ~ The valleys follow the universal formula, ~ and they now harbor copious vegetation and creatures. ~ The living things follow the universal formula, ~ and they live; ~ When barons and kings follow the universal formula, ~ they become the object of emulation by their peoples. ~ All these achievements are due to the universal formula. ~ If the sky were not clear it could be torn apart. ~ If the earth were not calm and safe ~ it could burst into chaos. ~ If the gods were not effective ~ they could wear out. ~ If the valleys were not copious ~ they could become empty. ~ If the living things could not live ~ they would be doomed. ~ If barons and kings could not keep their high and respected positions, ~ they could be toppled. ~ The noble must be based on the ignoble. ~ The highly positioned must be buttressed by the lowly. ~ Barons and kings call themselves the "lonely one" the "widowed one", or the "under provided one". ~ Don't these practices demonstrate loud and clear ~ that it is through the lowly ~ that kings and barons hold their positions? ~ Merely counting the number of carriages ~ will not give you any carriage. ~ It is no use showing the shiny look of jade ~ if the substance is merely an ordinary stone.

—[39c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ From the beginning, everything has needed to become natural and harmonic, which is called ONE. ~ When the sky becomes ONE, it is clear; ~ When the earth becomes ONE, it is peaceful; ~ When the spirits become ONE, they grant all wishes; ~ When the riverbeds and valleys become ONE, they fill with water; ~ When all living things become ONE, they grow; ~ When the kings become ONE, they can govern their countries. ~ This is because of the DAO. ~ If the sky is not clear, it will collapse; ~ If the earth is not peaceful, it will explode; ~ If spirits cannot grant wishes, they will disappear; ~ If all living things cannot grow, they will die; ~ If kings cannot govern their countries, they will be overthrown. ~ Therefore, the cheap is the base of the noble; the low is the foundation of the high. ~ So the kings always called themselves bad names like the single, the widower, and the unkind. ~ Is this proof that the cheap is the base of the noble? Is it not? ~ Therefore, pursuing fame will get you no fame. ~ Do not be like a beautiful jade; be instead like a plain stone.

—[39c09t] Walter Gorn Old, TRACING THE SOURCE ~ Certain things have, by unity, lasted from most ancient times, namely:- ~ The transparency of Heaven; ~ The steadfastness of Earth; ~ The incorporeality of spirits; ~ The watery plenitude of valleys; ~ The life of all creations; ~ The government of kings and princes; ~ All these endure by unity. ~ But for the cause of its transparency Heaven would be in danger of obscurity. ~ But for the cause of its steadfastness the Earth would be in danger of disintegration. ~ But for the cause of their incorporeality spirits would be in danger of decease. ~ But for the cause of their plenitude the valleys would be in danger of sterility. ~ But for the cause of their vitality all creations would be in danger of destruction. ~ But for the cause of their honour and greatness princes and kings would be in danger of an overthrow. ~ Herein we see how honour is derived from that which is without distinction; and how greatness rests upon, and is sustained by, that which is insignificant. ~ Hence do princes and kings call themselves "orphans," "solitary men," and "chariots without wheels." ~ Do they not thereby acknowledge their authority to be vested in, and supported by, their superiors? ~ Who can deny it? ~ Surely "a chariot without wheels" is no chariot at all! ~ It is as hard for a man to be isolated like a single gem as to be lost in the crowd like a common pebble.

—[39c10t] James Legge ~ The things which from of old have got the One (the Tao) are - ~ Heaven which by it is bright and pure; ~ Earth rendered thereby firm and sure; ~ Spirits with powers by it supplied; ~ Valleys kept full throughout their void; ~ All creatures which through it do live; ~ Princes and kings who from it get ~ The model which to all they give. ~ All these are the results of the One (Tao). ~ If heaven were not thus pure, it soon would rend; ~ If earth were not thus sure, 'twould break and bend; ~ Without these powers, the spirits soon would fail; ~ If not so filled, the drought would parch each vale; ~ Without that life, creatures would pass away; ~ Princes and kings, without that moral sway, ~ However grand and high, would all decay. ~ Thus it is that dignity finds its (firm) root in its (previous) meanness, and what is lofty finds its stability in the lowness (from which it rises). ~ Hence princes and kings call themselves 'Orphans,' 'Men of small virtue,' and as 'Carriages without a nave.' ~ Is not this an acknowledgment that in their considering themselves mean they see the foundation of their dignity? ~ So it is that in the enumeration of the different parts of a carriage we do not come on what makes it answer the ends of a carriage. ~ They do not wish to show themselves elegant-looking as jade, but (prefer) to be coarse-looking as an (ordinary) stone.

—[39c11t] David Hinton ~ Ancients who realized primal unity: ~ Heaven realized primal unity ~ and so came to clarity. ~ Earth realized primal unity ~ and so came to tranquility. ~ Gods realized primal unity ~ and so came to spirit. ~ Valleys realized primal unity ~ and so came to fullness. ~ The ten thousand things realized primal unity ~ and so came to life. ~ Lords and emperors realized primal unity ~ and so came to rectify all beneath heaven. ~ It's their very existence: ~ without clarity heaven cracks open, ~ without tranquility earth bursts forth, ~ without spirit gods cease, ~ without fullness valleys run dry, ~ without life the ten thousand things perish, ~ without high nobility lords and emperors stumble and fall. ~ Nobility is rooted in humility, ~ and high founded on low. ~ This is why true lords and emperors call themselves ~ orphaned, destitute, ill-fated. ~ Isn't this rooted in humility? ~ Isn't it counting the world's praise as no praise, ~ refusing to tinkle like delicate jade bells or clatter like ponderous stone chimes?

—[39c12t] Chichung Huang ~ Long, long ago, those that acquired One were: ~ Heaven, which acquired One ~ And thereby became clear; ~ Earth, which acquired One ~ And thereby became tranquil; ~ Spirits, which acquired One ~ And thereby became miraculous; ~ Valley streams, which acquired One ~ And thereby became full; ~ Marquises and kings, who acquired One ~ And thereby became chieftains over all under heaven. ~ Going to the extreme would mean: ~ If heaven were excessively clear, ~ It would crack; ~ If earth were excessively tranquil, ~ It would quake; ~ If spirits were excessively miraculous, ~ They would cease to be so; ~ If valley streams were excessively full, ~ They would go dry; ~ If marquises and kings were endlessly noble and high, ~ They would collapse. ~ Therefore, the noble must take the humble to be their roots; ~ The high must take the low to be their basis. ~ Hence, marquises and kings call themselves "The inadequate one," "the deficient one" and "the unworthy one." ~ This means taking the humble to be their roots, ~ Does it not? ~ Therefore, the highest praise is no praise. ~ Hence, do not wish to be as noble as jade, ~ Nor as high as a mountain rock.

—[39c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ Those of old that attain the One: ~ Heaven attains the One thus is clear, ~ Earth attains the One thus is peaceful, ~ Spirits attain the One thus are efficacious, ~ Valleys attain the One thus are replenished, ~ Ten thousand beings attain the One thus come to be, ~ Princes and barons attain the One thus are exalted in the world. ~ All because they attain the One. ~ Heaven, without that which renders it clear, might crack, ~ Earth, without that which renders it peaceful, might explode, ~ Spirits, without that which makes them efficacious, might cease, ~ Valleys, without that which replenishes them, might become empty, ~ Ten thousand beings, without that which sustains them in existence, might become extinct, ~ Barons and kings, without that which exalts them to high positions, might be toppled. ~ Therefore the exalted is rooted in the humble, ~ The high has the low for foundation. ~ Therefore barons and kings call themselves orphaned, widowed and unworthy. ~ Is this not taking the humble for one's root? ~ Is it not? ~ Therefore the most famous has no fame. ~ Do not tinkle like jade, ~ Or chime like stones!

—[39c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ In the past it did happen that Oneness was achieved: ~ When Oneness was realized in Universe, there was pure Serenity; ~ When Oneness was materialized on Earth, there was peace; ~ When Oneness was apprehended by Spirits, they became efficacious; ~ When Oneness was incorporated in valleys (life-support resources), they were fully filled [with water]; ~ When Oneness was attained by [myriad] creatures and things, their lives were perpetuated; ~ When Oneness was absorbed by kings and lords, they led the world on the right course. ~ The importance of striving for Oneness is because: ~ If Heaven cannot maintain pure and entire Serenity, it may crack; ~ If Earth cannot maintain unification, it may burst with cracks; ~ If spirits are not efficacious, their existence may be threatened; ~ If valleys are not filled, they will soon dry up; ~ If [myriad] creatures and things can not obtain proper support for existence, they will vanish; ~ If kings and lords cannot set on the right course, their institution will stumble [and collapse]. ~ Therefore, nobility must be built up from lowliness; ~ A high position must be supported by something of lower position; ~ That is why kings and lords used to refer to themselves [as documented in ancient records] as: "I, the misfit", "I, the morally light-weight" and "I, the good-for-nothing individual"; ~ Doesn't this exemplify "Nobility is built up from lowliness"? ~ You still disagree? ~ To be called a misfit, a morally light-weight or a good-for-nothing person are all undesirable, but kings and lords addressed themselves as such [to indicate that they are willing to carry the unpleasant burden of these miserable people]. ~ Therefore, people who seek reputation for the sake of fame really are in truth the people who have no sense of honor; ~ [A truly honorable person] would neither present himself as a piece of rare jade; ~ Nor would he be satisfied to be [as morally mediocre as] a one of the colossal of [undistinguished] ornamental stones.

—[39c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ In the remote past there were those who attained the One. ~ Attaining the One, heaven is clear. ~ Attaining the One, earth is calm. ~ Attaining the One, God is holy. ~ Attaining the One, the cave is full. ~ Attaining the One, ten thousand creatures come into life. ~ Attaining the One, kings and princes become sovereign rulers of the world. ~ All of them are what they are by virtue of the one. ~ If heaven were not clear, it would fall to pieces. ~ If earth were not calm, it would quake. ~ If God were not holy, he would cease from being. ~ If the fountain were not full, it would dry up. ~ If ten thousand creatures did not come to life, they would perish. ~ If kings and princes were not supreme, they would stumble and fall. ~ Hence, humility is the root of greatness. ~ The high is built upon the foundation of the low. ~ That is why kings and princes style themselves "the solitary one," "the little one," and "the worthless one". ~ Is this not enough to prove that humility serves as root? ~ Therefore extreme honor means no honor. ~ Do not wish to shine like jade and be aloof like stone.

—[39c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ Previously those who have integrity are as follows: ~ Heaven has integrity, so it is clear. ~ Earth has integrity, so it is peaceful. ~ Gods have integrity, so they are responsive. ~ Valleys have integrity, so they are full. ~ All living creatures have integrity, so they can live. ~ Kings and lords have integrity, so they can govern normally. ~ Why is it so? ~ If Heaven is not clear, it could split. ~ If Earth is not peaceful, it could collapse. ~ If Gods are not responsive, nobody would worship. ~ If valleys are not full, they could be depleted. ~ If living creatures cannot live, they would become extinct. ~ If Kings and lords cannot govern normally, they would fall. ~ Therefore, humbleness is the root from which nobleness grows. ~ Low is the foundation on which high is built. ~ It is because of this, kings and lord call themselves lonely persons, friendless persons, and worthless persons. ~ This is for the sake of being humble, is it not? ~ The extremely honorable is the one without being honored. ~ They do not want to be like glittering jades, but like solid rocks.

—[39c17t] Arthur Waley ~ As for the things that from of old have understood the Whole - ~ The sky through such understanding remains limpid, ~ Earth remains steady, ~ The spirits keep their holiness, ~ The abyss is replenished, ~ The ten thousand creatures bear their kind, ~ Barons and princes direct their people. ~ It is the Whole that causes it. ~ Were it not so limpid, the sky would soon get torn, ~ Were it not for its steadiness, the earth would soon tip over, ~ Were it not for their holiness, the spirits would soon wither away, ~ Were it not for this replenishment, the abyss would soon go dry, ~ Were it not that the ten thousand creatures can bear their kind, ~ They would soon become extinct. ~ Were the barons and princes no longer directors of their people and for that reason honoured and exalted, they would soon be overthrown. ~ Truly, ~ 'The humble is the stem upon which the mighty grows, ~ The low is the foundation upon which the high is laid.' ~ That is why barons and princes refer to themselves as 'The Orphan', 'The Needy', 'The Ill-provided'. ~ Is this not indeed a case of might rooting itself upon humility? ~ True indeed are the sayings: ~ 'Enumerate the parts of a carriage, and you still have not explained what a carriage is', and ~ 'They did not want themselves to tinkle like jade-bells, while others resounded like stone-chimes'.

—[39c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ As for those who obtained the One long, long ago, ~ Heaven is pure by having obtained the One; ~ Earth is stable by having obtained the One; ~ the gods have their spiritual power by having obtained the One; ~ valleys can be filled by having obtained the One; ~ the myriad things live by having obtained the One; ~ lords and princes provide constancy to all under Heaven by having obtained the One. ~ This is how they attain to these states. ~ If Heaven had not this means to be pure, it would, we fear, deteriorate. ~ If Earth had not this means to be stable, it would, we fear, disintegrate. ~ If the gods had not this means to have spiritual power, they would, we fear, terminate. ~ If valleys had not this means to achieve fullness, they would, we fear, dry up. ~ If the myriad things had not this means to live, they would, we fear, expire. ~ If lords and princes did not have this means to achieve loftiness and nobility, they would, we fear, collapse. ~ Thus it is that nobility uses humility as its roots and loftiness uses lowliness as its foundation. ~ This is why lords and princes refer to themselves as "the orphan," "the widower," or "the unworthy." ~ Is this not using humility as the roots? ~ Is this not so? ~ Therefore the ultimate number of praises amounts to no praise, so one wants neither "he glows with luster like the jade" nor "he is as hard as hard can be like the stone."

—[39c19t] Lin Yutang ~ UNITY THROUGH COMPLEMENTS ~ There were those in ancient times possessed of the One: ~ Through possession of the One, the Heaven was clarified, ~ Through possession of the One, the Earth was stabilized, ~ Through possession of the One, the gods were spiritualized, ~ Through possession of the One, the valleys were made full, ~ Through possession of the One, all things lived and grew, ~ Through possession of the One, the princes and dukes became the ennobled of the people. ~ That was how each became so. ~ Without clarity, the Heavens would shake, ~ Without stability, the Earth would quake, ~ Without spiritual power, the gods would crumble, ~ Without being filled, the valleys would crack, ~ Without the life-giving power, all things would perish, ~ Without the ennobling power, the princes and dukes would stumble. ~ Therefore the nobility depend upon the common man for support, ~ And the exalted ones depend upon the lowly for their base. ~ That is why the princes and dukes call themselves "the orphaned," "the lonely one," "the unworthy." ~ Is it not true then that they depend upon the common man for support? ~ Truly, take down the parts of a chariot, ~ And there is no chariot (left). ~ Rather than jingle like the jade, ~ Rumble like the rocks.

—[39c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ In olden times, these attained unity: ~ Heaven attained unity, and thereby became pure. ~ Earth attained unity, and thereby became tranquil. ~ The spirits attained unity, and thereby became divine. ~ The valley attained unity, and thereby became full. ~ Feudal lords and kings attained unity, and thereby all was put right. ~ Yet, pushed to the extreme, ~ It implies that, ~ If heaven were ever pure, it would be likely to rend. ~ It implies that, ~ If earth were ever tranquil, it would be likely to quake. ~ It implies that, ~ If the spirits were ever divine, they would be likely to dissipate. ~ It implies that, ~ If the valley were ever full, it would be likely to run dry. ~ It implies that, ~ If feudal lords and kings were ever noble and thereby exalted, they would be likely to fall. ~ Therefore, ~ It is necessary to be noble, and yet take humility as a basis. ~ It is necessary to be exalted, and yet take modesty as a foundation. ~ Now, for this reason, ~ Feudal lords and kings style themselves ~ "orphaned," "destitute," and "hapless." ~ Is this not because they take humility as their basis? ~ Therefore, ~ Striving for an excess of praise, one ends up without praise. ~ Consequently, ~ Desire not to be jingling as jade nor stolid as stone.

—[39c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ From ancient times these things have arisen from the One: ~ Heaven is clear because of the One, ~ The earth is firm because of the One, ~ The Spirit is strong because of the One, ~ The valley is full because of the One, ~ The ten thousand things reproduce because of the One, ~ Leaders are able to lead because of the One. ~ All of this comes from the One. ~ If heaven were not clear it would soon split. ~ If the earth were not firm it would soon bend and break. ~ If the Spirit were not strong it would soon wear out. ~ If the valley were not full it would soon dry up. ~ If the ten thousand things did not reproduce they would soon die out. ~ If leaders could not lead they would soon fall. ~ Therefore, greatness has its source in the little. ~ The low is the foundation of the high. ~ Princes call themselves "alone," "helpless," "worthless." ~ Is this not acknowledging a humble root? ~ Enumerate the parts of a carriage and you have not defined a carriage. ~ Better to resound like stone chimes than to tinkle like jade bells.

—[39c22t] David H. Li ~ Among those with One in the past: ~ The cosmos, with One, produced cleanliness; ~ The earth, with One, produced calmness; ~ A shen, with One, produced responsiveness; ~ The valley, with One, produced fullness; ~ Myriad matters, with One, generated; ~ A Duke or Prince, with One, at the center of the world was seated. ~ Extending, ~ The cosmos, without One and without cleanliness, would be separated; ~ The earth, without One and without calmness, would be barren; ~ A shen, without One and without responsiveness, would be deserted; ~ The valley, without One and without fullness, would be depleted; ~ Myriad matters, without One and without growth, would stall; ~ Dukes and princes, without One and without being in the center, would fall. ~ Thus, ~ humbleness is the root of esteem; ~ lowness is the foundation of height. ~ Thus, ~ a Duke or Prince calls himself My Loneliness, The Isolated Person, The Ungracious Person. ~ Is this not humbleness as the root of esteem? ~ Is it not so? ~ Thus, the supreme honor requires no honor. ~ Aim not at jade's attractiveness, but at rock's solidness.

—[39c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ In ancient times, these attained wholeness: ~ Heaven attained wholeness and thereby became pure. ~ Earth attained wholeness and thereby became tranquil. ~ Spirits attained wholeness and thereby became divine. ~ Valleys attained wholeness and thereby became full. ~ Beings attained wholeness and thereby became alive. ~ Leaders attained wholeness and thereby all was put aright. ~ Everything is what it is by virtue of its wholeness. ~ Heaven without purity would rend. ~ Earth without tranquility would collapse. ~ Spirits without divinity would dissipate. ~ Valleys without fullness would desiccate. ~ Beings without aliveness would perish. ~ Leaders without magnanimity would fall. ~ Humility is the basis of magnanimity. ~ Modesty is the fundament of exaltation. ~ Those in high position call themselves powerless, unworthy, or destitute. ~ Is this not because they take humility as the basis of magnanimity? ~ There is no honor in displaying your honor. ~ Desire not either to be jingling like jade or to be stolid like stone.

—[39c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ Among things, these are the ones that received the One in ancient times: ~ Heaven, that is made clear by the One, ~ Earth, that is stabilized by the One, ~ The soul, that is made spiritual by the One, ~ The valley, that is made full by the One. ~ Through the One, all things came into being and were realized, ~ Princes and kings, through the One, became rulers of the world. ~ If heaven were not clear, it could tear, ~ If earth were not stable, it could collapse, ~ If the soul were not active, it could dissolve, ~ If the valley were not full, it could dry up. ~ If things did not exist, they would be as if they had never been, ~ If princes and kings did not rule, ~ They would be thrown from their thrones. ~ The nobleman must measure himself in terms of the humble and simple man, ~ The dignitary must use the lowly as his basis. ~ Therefore, princes and kings call themselves "ignorant," "cowardly," "worthless." ~ Does that not mean that they consider humility to be the root of their nature? ~ For what does a person hate more than "ignorant," "cowardly," or "worthless"? ~ Yet princes and kings still choose these words to describe themselves. ~ Therefore there is no exaltation in this dignitary. ~ Thus kings rise by lowering their value, ~ And disappear by raising their value. ~ It is not good to be conspicuous, like a single gemstone, ~ Or monotonous and invisible like one of the countless stones in a field.

—[39c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ From its first days, the universe came from the One: ~ The heavens are one, and clear, and round because of it; ~ The earth is one, and is its firm infused foundation; ~ The spirit force is one, with all it brings into being; ~ The valley is a oneness, and so it flows and renews all things; ~ Everything is one - every living thing is one, and alive! ~ Kings and lords are one in a kingdom that is one and they can only rule truly because of the One. ~ If Heaven wasn't clear, then the sky would fall down; ~ If the earth cannot be peaceful, it will tear itself apart; ~ If the Spirit cannot bless, then no one will believe in it; ~ If the valley can't rebirth, then the valley will run dry; ~ If life can't be itself, then life will be nothing; ~ And if the king is nothing, then the world will be at war. ~ Everything has both yin and yang in it - ~ and from their rise-and-fall-coupling comes new life. ~ The highest authority needs the basement as its base, ~ And the depths are the foundation of the heights. ~ That is why rulers call themselves lonely, like souls in a wilderness who have no home. ~ And, in doing so, don't they see then that their roots lie with the people? ~ To see yourself as extraordinary is to stand out like jade among ordinary stones; ~ but what people ignore - the lonely, and the worthless - is the rock a true leader finds himself on. ~ You see, you win by losing - and you lose by succeeding.

—[39c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ Among the ancient holders of the One: ~ Heaven that holds the One becomes clear and bright; ~ Earth that holds the One becomes steady; ~ Gods that hold the One become efficacious; ~ Valleys that hold the One become full; ~ All creatures that hold the One become alive; ~ Lords and leaders who hold the One become leaders of the human world. ~ By inference Heaven might split without what makes it clear and bright; ~ Earth might shake without what makes it steady; ~ Gods might disappear without what makes them efficacious; ~ Valleys might go dry without what makes them full; ~ All creatures might die out without what makes them alive; ~ Lords and kings might fall without what makes them leaders. ~ That is why the humble is the root of the noble, ~ And the high is based on the low. ~ That is why lords and kings call themselves "the solitary", "the few" and "the unkind". ~ Does not this take the humble as the root (of the noble)? ~ Does this not? ~ Hence the highest honor does not need honoring. ~ It is better, therefore, to be a hard stone than a beautiful piece of jade.

—[39c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ Since ancient times, what comes into possession is the 'One'. ~ Heaven in possession of the 'One' is clear. ~ The Earth in possession of the 'One' is tranquil. ~ The gods in possession of the 'One' are efficacious. ~ The valley in possession of the 'One' is full. ~ The myriad creatures in possession of the 'One' are alive. ~ The rulers in possession of the 'One' are faithful to their country. ~ Although they are different, they are the same 'One'. ~ When Heaven is not clear, it risks cracking. ~ When the Earth is not tranquil, it risks exploding. ~ When the gods are not efficacious, they risk ceasing to exist. ~ When the valley is not full, it risks drying up. ~ When the myriad creatures possess no life, they risk extinction. ~ When rulers are not faithful, they risk a fall from their heights. ~ Therefore the humble is the basis of the precious. ~ The low is the basis of the high. ~ The rulers shall humiliate themselves. ~ That is why one grows the root at the base - isn't it? ~ That is why one prefers to be the wheel instead of the carriage, ~ one chooses to be a stone instead of jade.

—[39c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ Achievement of oneness in the past includes: ~ The heaven that became clear, ~ The earth that became peaceful, ~ The soul that became sensitive, ~ And kings that became the world's leaders. ~ The following can be inferred: ~ The heaven will break ~ If it can by no means clear up; ~ The earth will be wasteland ~ If it can by no means be peaceful; ~ The soul will die out ~ If it can by no means be sensitive; ~ And kings will go rampant ~ If they can by no means lead the world. ~ Therefore, ~ Nobility is rooted in the ordinary people, ~ And the high is based on the low. ~ The kings take names ~ Like "the Isolated," "the Helpless," or "the Wicked," ~ Just because they appreciate their roots and bases. ~ Therefore, ~ The most glorious does not seek after glory, ~ And the wisest does not seek to be the beautiful jade ~ But the unrefined rough rock.

—[39c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ The Power of The Tao ~ Lao Tze says, ~ Old things which have the correctness are: ~ It is by correctness that ~ the Heaven becomes bright and pure, and the Earth firm and sure; ~ the spirits divine; ~ the valleys full; ~ all existence lively; ~ and the kings just for the world's model. ~ All these are the results of correctness. ~ If the Heaven were not so pure, it would soon rend. ~ If the Earth were not so sure, it would break and bend. ~ If the spirits were not so divine, they would lose their prophesy. ~ If the valleys were not so full, they would parch. ~ If all existence were not so lively, they would be extinct. ~ If the kings had no morality, they would collapse from their throne. ~ Therefore, dignity finds root in meanness, and the lofty find their stability in lowness. ~ Therefore, the kings self-styled themselves by the solitary, the unworthy, and the virtueless. ~ Didn't these mean that dignity finds its root in its meanness? ~ Didn't these? ~ So, when we analyze a cart's construction, we can't find a part named cart. ~ As for me, I would neither appreciate being regarded as a jade rare and expensive, nor as a stone popular and cheap.

—[39c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ From of old the things that have acquired Unity are these: ~ Heaven by Unity has become clear; ~ Earth by Unity has become steady; ~ The Spirit by Unity has become spiritual; ~ The Valley by Unity has become full; ~ All things by Unity have come into existence; ~ Princes and kings by Unity have become rulers of the world. ~ If heaven were not clear, it would be rent; ~ If earth were not steady, it would be tumbled down; ~ If the Spirit were not active, it would pass away; ~ If the Valley were not full, it would be dried up; ~ If all things were not existing, they would be extinct; ~ If princes and kings were not rulers, they would be overthrown. ~ The noble must be styled in the terms of the humble; ~ The high must take the low as their foundation. ~ Therefore princes and kings call themselves 'the ignorant', 'the virtueless' and 'the unworthy'. ~ Does this not mean that they take the humble as their root? ~ What men hate most are 'the ignorant', 'the virtueless' and 'the unworthy'. ~ And yet princes and kings choose them as their titles. ~ Therefore the highest fame is to have no fame. ~ Thus kings are increased by being diminished; ~ They are diminished by being increased. ~ It is undesirable to be as prominent as a single gem, ~ Or as monotonously numerous as stones.

—[39c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ Those of ancient times obtained the One: ~ Heaven obtained the One for its clarity; ~ Earth obtained the One for its tranquility; ~ The Spirit obtained the One for its divinity; ~ The Valley obtained the One for its repletion; ~ All things obtained the One for their lives; ~ Dukes and kings obtained the One for the rectitude of the world. ~ What causes these is the One. ~ Without clarity, Heaven could not avoid disrupting. ~ Without tranquility, Earth could not avoid explosion. ~ Without divinity, The Spirit could not avoid dissolving. ~ Without repletion, The Valley could not avoid dissipating. ~ Without life, All things could not avoid perishing. ~ Without rectitude and dignity, Dukes and kings could not avoid falling. ~ Therefore, distinction has humility as its root; ~ The high regards the low as its foundation. ~ Therefore dukes and kings call themselves ~ Orphans, widowers, and starvers. ~ Does this not mean regarding humility as a base? ~ Doesn't it? ~ He who is most praise-worthy ~ Does not need any praise. ~ He prefers to be neither rare as jade, ~ Nor as common as rocks.

—[39c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ Those that of old got The One Thing: ~ The sky got The One Thing, and by this became clear. ~ The earth got The One Thing, and by this became steady. ~ The spirits got The One Thing, and by this obtained their powers. ~ The rivers got The One Thing, and by this became full. ~ The thousands of things got The One Thing, and by this came to life. ~ The princes and kings got The One Thing, and by this became the Standard for the World. ~ This is how things came about. ~ The sky, without what makes it clear, is likely to crack. ~ The earth, without what makes it steady, is likely to quake. ~ The spirits, without what gives them powers, are likely to vanish. ~ The rivers, without what makes them full, are likely to dry up. ~ The thousands of things, without what gives them life, are likely to perish. ~ The princes and kings, without what makes them eminent and noble, are likely to fall. ~ Yes, the eminent takes the common and ignored as a root, ~ the noble takes the lowly as a foundation. ~ And so the princes and kings call themselves: 'the orphan ...', 'the poor ...', 'the destitute ...' ~ Is this not using the common and ignored as a root? ~ Is it not so? ~ Yes, enumerate the carriage parts - still not a carriage. ~ He doesn't wish to glitter and glitter like jade; ~ he falls like a stone, falling into oblivion.

—[39c33t] Cheng Lin ~ Since antiquity the following may be said to have attained Truth: ~ Heaven, which by Truth is clear. ~ Earth, which by Truth is secure. ~ The gods, which by Truth are divine. ~ The valleys, which by Truth are full. ~ All animate creation, which by Truth are alive. ~ The rulers, which by Truth are capable of rectifying the Empire. ~ Conversely, the following inferences may be stated: ~ Without that which renders it clear, heaven stands the danger of disruption. ~ Without that which renders it secure, earth stands the danger of depression. ~ Without that which renders them divine, the gods stand the danger of impotence. ~ Without that which renders them full, the valleys stand the danger of desiccation. ~ Without that which renders them life, all animate creation stand the danger of annihilation. ~ Without that which renders them capable of rectification, the rulers stand the danger of being overthrown. ~ Humility forms the basis of honour, just as the low ground forms the foundation of a high elevation. ~ Wherefore, the sovereigns are content to call themselves "The Virtueless" and "The Unworthy." ~ Does not this show that they regard humility as a matter of utmost importance? ~ Hence, the most praiseworthy are indifferent about praise. ~ It matters not to them whether they are admired as are beautiful jades, or despised as are rugged stones.

—[39c34t] Yi Wu ~ Those of ancient times attained oneness. ~ Heaven attained oneness and became clear; ~ Earth attained oneness and became calm; ~ Spirits attained oneness and became divine; ~ Valleys attained oneness and became full; ~ All things attained oneness and came to life; ~ Dukes and kings attained oneness and became models for the world. ~ All was achieved by oneness. ~ Heaven, without [oneness], becoming clear, might crack; ~ Earth, without [oneness], becoming calm, might explode; ~ Spirits, without [oneness], becoming divine, might be exhausted; ~ Valleys, without [oneness], becoming full, might dry up; ~ All things, without [oneness], receiving life, might perish; ~ Dukes and kings, without [oneness], becoming honorable, might fall. ~ Therefore, the superior takes the inferior as its root. ~ The high recognizes the low as its foundation. ~ Therefore, dukes and kings call themselves ~ "the lonely one", "the little one", and "the worthless one". ~ Is this not to recognize the lowly as the root? ~ Is not this? ~ Therefore, those who wish for great reputation have no reputation. ~ We do not want to be bright as jade or hard as stone.

—[39c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ In antiquity, the person who follows Dao said: ~ If the sky is harmonised with Dao, it will be clear. ~ When the Earth harmonises with Dao, it will be settled. ~ Similarly, the spirits will retain their magic power; ~ The valley will be filled with water. ~ When the ruler follows the way of Dao, his reign will be peaceful. ~ All these are achieved by following the way of Dao. ~ If the sky is not clear, it will split. ~ If the Earth is not settled, it will erupt. ~ When the spirits lose their power, they will become extinct. ~ The valley without water will dry up. ~ All forms of life without nourishment will perish. ~ A ruler who fails to maintain peace will be toppled. ~ Dignitaries rely on the support from commoners. ~ A tall building depends entirely on its base to stay erect. ~ Hence, the rulers customarily use self-deprecating words when referring to themselves. ~ Is this not an acknowledgement that everything originates from a humble beginning? ~ Everyone dislikes words like orphaned, widowed, and unworthy. ~ Yet, the rulers customarily use these terms to describe themselves. ~ The irony is that if you crave for fame, you will end up losing it. ~ The person who follows Dao has no desire to be valued like a beautiful jade. ~ Nor would he like to be rejected as an ugly stone.

—[39c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ Since ancient times there have been those who have attained the subtle essence of the universe and thus become what they are. ~ Heaven attained the subtle essence of the universe and became clear. ~ Earth attained the subtle essence of the universe and became stable. ~ Divine spirits attained the subtle essence of the universe and became powerful. ~ The Valley of the Universe attained the subtle essence of the universe and became productive. ~ The myriad things attained the subtle essence of the universe and became prosperous. ~ The sages attained the subtle essence of the universe and became wise. ~ All became what they are by attaining the subtle essence of the universe and hence their true nature. ~ Extinction happens to one who violates his true nature. ~ Without being pure, Heaven would cease to be. ~ Without being stable, Earth would burst into bits. ~ Without maintaining their potency, spirits would disperse. ~ Without being productive, the vast Valley of the Universe would become exhausted. ~ Without being reproductive, the myriad things would perish. ~ Without fortifying themselves with integral virtue, sages would stumble and fall. ~ Greatness is rooted in plainness, ~ just as the low forms the foundation of the high. ~ Realizing this, the ancient sovereigns were content to style themselves as desolate, unworthy, and needy. ~ Therefore, one who does not separate his being from the nature of the universe follows the Integral Way. ~ He has no wish to sound like jingling jade pendants in order to court a good name, ~ nor like the rumbling of a stone rolling from a cliff in order to create a bad name. ~ Each one should work on one's own subtle spiritual integration with the subtle essence of the universe.

—[39c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ In the remote past there were those who attained the One. ~ Attaining the One, heaven became pure. ~ Attaining the One, earth became peaceful. ~ Attaining the One, God became spiritual. ~ Attaining the One, the ocean became full. ~ Attaining the One, ten thousand things came into life. ~ Attaining the One, rulers became the models of the world. ~ All of them became so through the One. ~ Without becoming pure, heaven would have broken. ~ Without becoming peaceful, the earth would have quaked. ~ Without becoming spiritual, God would have crumbled. ~ Without becoming full, the ocean would have drained. ~ Without coming into life, ten thousand things would have perished. ~ Without becoming the models of the world, rulers would have stumbled. ~ Therefore, the worthless serves as the foundation of the worthy. ~ The inferior serves as the basis of the superior. ~ Thus, rulers call themselves isolated men, without merit, and worthless. ~ Is this not enough to prove that the worthless serve as the foundation of the worthy? ~ Hence, the perfect fame is no fame. ~ Rulers do not want to be esteemed as tingling jade; they would rather be plain, solid rock.

—[39c38t] Henry Wei ~ Foundation of the Law ~ Fa Pen ~ Since antiquity, these have possessed the One - ~

Heaven in possession of the One has become clear; ~ Earth in possession of the One has become steady; ~ Spirits in possession of the One have become divine; ~ Valleys in possession of the One have become full; ~ Creatures in possession of the One have become alive; ~ Kings and nobles in possession of the One have become exemplary. ~ All the above became what they are in the same way. ~ Heaven without the One to make it clear ~ Is apt to crack; ~ Earth without the One to make it steady ~ Is apt to quake; ~ Spirits without the One to make them divine ~ Are apt to cease operation; ~ Valleys without the One to make them full ~ Are apt to become dry; ~ Creatures without the One to make them alive ~ Are apt to become extinct; ~ Kings and nobles without the One to make them exemplary ~ Are apt to lose their prestige and eminence. ~ Forsooth, the honorable is rooted in the humble, ~ And the high is founded on the low. ~ So kings and nobles call themselves orphaned, lonely, and unworthy. ~ Does not this indicate that the honorable is rooted in the humble? ~ Indeed, if a chariot is taken apart, ~ There will no longer be any chariot. ~ Desire not to be like polished jade, ~ But rather to be like rough rocks.

—[39c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ The things of old that have attained the One: ~ Heaven, having attained the One, is clear; ~ Earth, having attained the One, is steady; ~ Spirits, having attained the One, possess their numinous power; ~ Valleys, having attained the One, are full; ~ The ten thousand things, having attained the One, come to life; ~ Kings and princes, having attained the One, become the model for all under Heaven. ~ It is by virtue of the One that they become what they are. ~ Were Heaven not clear by virtue of that, ~ I fear it would soon shatter; ~ Were Earth not steady by virtue of that, ~ I fear it would soon collapse; ~ Were spirits not to possess their numinous power by virtue of that, ~ I fear they would soon cease to be; ~ Were valleys not full by virtue of that, ~ I fear they would soon dry up; ~ Were the ten thousand things not to come to life by virtue of that, ~ I fear they would soon perish; ~ Were kings and princes not noble and high by virtue of that, ~ I fear they would soon fall. ~ Therefore, for the noble the humble is the root; ~ For the high the low is the foundation. ~ For this reason, kings and princes ~ Refer to themselves as "the orphaned one," "the widowed one," and "the ill-provided one." ~ Isn't this because the humble is the root? ~ Is it not? ~ Therefore, if you tally your honors you will count none. ~ Don't try to jingle like jade-bells, ~ Rather, sound like rolling rocks.

—[39c40t] Tao Huang ~ Those from the past have attained Oneness. ~ By attaining Oneness, heaven is clear. ~ By attaining Oneness, earth is at peace. ~ By attaining Oneness, the spirit is quickened. ~ By attaining Oneness, the valley is filled. ~ By attaining Oneness, the king puts order in the whole world. ~ All these result from Oneness. ~ Without its clarity, heaven is liable to explode. ~ Without its peace, earth is liable to erupt. ~ Without its quickening, the spirit is liable to die out. ~ Without its fullness, valleys are liable to dry out. ~ Without proper esteem, the king is liable to fall. ~ Esteem is rooted in the humble. ~ The high is founded upon the low. ~ This is why the lords and rulers call themselves widows and orphans without support. ~ Is this is not the root of being humble? ~ Much praise amounts to no praise. ~ Without preference, Being is as resonant as Jade and as gravelly as stone.

—[39c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ Since the beginning of Heaven and Earth, there were things attaining balance: ~ through attaining balance, Heavens equilibrated; ~ through attaining balance, the Earth became secure; ~ through attaining balance, minds became calm; ~ through attaining balance, valleys became capacious; ~ through attaining balance, All Things became productive; ~ through attaining balance, rulers achieved justice throughout the world. ~ Were the heavens are not equilibrated, they might collapse; ~ were the Earth not secure, it might quake to bits; ~ were minds not calm, they might be disrupted; ~ were valleys not capacious, they might dry up; ~ were All Things non-productive, they might become extinct; ~ were rulers not obtaining justice throughout the world, they might fall. ~ Hence, the rulers established the rule based on the ruled; ~ and the highness was built upon the foundation of the lowness. ~ When rulers called themselves "orphans", "widows" and "indigents" reminds that they established the rule according to the needs of the ruled. ~ Did they not? ~ Thus frequent flattery becomes no flattery. ~ Therefore, a perfect gentleman has no excessive desires: ~ He is smooth like smooth jade! ~ He is solid like solid rock!

—[39c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ Of old those that obtained the One: ~ Heaven obtained the One and became clear. ~ Earth obtained the One and became tranquil. ~ The spiritual beings obtained the One and became divine. ~ The valley obtained the One and became full. ~ The myriad things obtained the One and lived and grew. ~ Kings and barons obtained the One and became rulers of the empire. ~ What made them so is the One. ~ If heaven had not thus become clear, ~ It would soon crack. ~ If the earth had not thus become tranquil, ~ It would soon be shaken. ~ If the spiritual beings had not thus become divine, ~ They would soon wither away. ~ If the valley had not thus become full, ~ It would soon become exhausted. ~ If the myriad things had not thus lived and grown, ~ They would soon become extinct. ~ If kings and barons had not thus become honorable and high in position, ~ They would soon fall. ~ Therefore humble station is the basis of honor. ~ The low is the foundation of the high. ~ For this reason kings and barons call themselves children without parents, lonely people without spouses, and men without food to eat. ~ Is this not regarding humble station as the basis of honor? ~ Is it not? ~ Therefore enumerate all the parts of a chariot as you may, and you still have no chariot. ~ Rather than jingle like the jade, ~ Rumble like the rocks.

—[39c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Есть издавна обретшие единое. ~ Благодаря ему Небо и делается чистым, ~ Земля хранит устойчивость, ~ души обретают чудотворность, ~ долины наполняются, ~ вещей родится десять тысяч, ~ владетели и царь становятся для Поднебесной образцом. ~ Достигнуть этого им помогает именно единое. ~ Когда у Неба нет того, что доставляет чистоту, оно, пожалуй, разломается; ~ Земля, не обладая тем, что придает устойчивость, пожалуй, станет шаткой; ~ души, не имея того, что сохраняет чудодейственность, пожалуй, перестанут проявляться; ~ долины при отсутствии того, что позволяет им наполниться, пожалуй, пересохнут; ~ десяти тысячам вещей по неимению того, чем можно жить, не избежать, пожалуй, истребления; ~ владетели и царь, не обладая тем, что обеспечивает знатностью и высшим положением, пожалуй, этого лишатся. ~ Знатность коренится в худородстве, высокому основой служит низкое. ~ Именно поэтому владетели и царь называют себя: "сырый", "вдовый" и "убогий". ~ Не значит ли это, что в худородстве заключается их корень? Разве не так? ~ Отсюда и выходит, что все части, из которых состоит повозка, повозкой еще не являются. ~ Не стремись быть редким словно яшма или многим как простые камни.

—[39c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Вот то, что с древности пребывало в Едином: ~ Небо пребывало в Едином и потому достигало чистоты. ~ Земля пребывала в Едином и потому достигала покоя. ~ Духи пребывали в Едином и потому были одухотворённо-подвижны. ~ Долина пребывала в Едином и потому достигала расцвета. ~ Мириады вещей пребывали в Едином и потому обретали рождение. ~ Правитель и князья пребывали в Едином и потому были честны с Поднебесной. ~ Лишь благодаря Единому они достигали этого. ~ Если Небо не чисто, оно разверзается. ~ Если Земля не спокойна, она опускается. ~ Если духи не одухотворённо-подвижны, они истощаются. ~ Если долина не расцветает, она иссыхает. ~ Если мириады вещей не обретают рождения, они обречены на уничтожение. ~ Если знать и правители не честны, они будут свергнуты. ~ Поэтому в основе ценного лежит дешёвое. ~ Благородный муж рассматривает подданных в качестве своего корня. ~ Высшие рассматривают низших в качестве своей основы. ~ Поэтому правитель и князья называют себя "сырыми", "покинутыми", "неудачниками". ~ Так разве это не значит: "Рассматривать подданных в качестве своего корня"? ~ Разве это не так? ~ Поэтому они и достигают величайшего признания вне признания, не желая быть прекраснейшими, словно яшма, и твердейшими, будто камень.

— [39с93t] Е. А. Торчинов ~ Вот те, кто некогда причастны стали Одному: ~ Небо стало причастно Одному - и очистилось, ~ Земля стала причастна Одному - и упокоилась, ~ Божественное стало причастно Одному - и одухотворилось, ~ Долины стали причастны Одному - и наполнились, ~ Все сущее стало причастно Одному - и стало порождать, ~ Цари и князья стали причастны Одному - и Поднебесная выправилась. ~ А вот что было бы в противном случае: ~ Не стало бы Небо чистым и распалось бы на куски, ~ Не упокоилась бы Земля и раскололась бы на части, ~ Не одухотворилось бы божественное и истощилось бы немедленно, ~ Не наполнились бы долины и пересохла бы тотчас, ~ Не стало порождать бы сущее и тотчас бы погибло, ~ Не ценили бы цари и князья высокое и были бы низложены внезапно. ~ Поэтому цените униженное, считая его корнем, поскольку для всего высокого низкое будет всегда основанием. ~ Вот поэтому-то цари и князья и называют себя "сырыми", "одинокими" и "недостойными". ~ Разве это не означает "считать униженное корнем"? ~ Не так ли? ~ Поэтому стремящийся быть владельцем многих колесниц остается без колесницы. ~ И я не стремлюсь быть блестящим и сияющим, как яшма, а хочу быть столь же простым и незаметным, как простой булыжник.

— [39с94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Вот те, кто в древности обрели единство: ~ Небо обрело единство чистотой, ~ Земля обрела единство незыблемостью, ~ дух обрел единство духовностью (лин), ~ лоно [Поднебесной] обрело единство полнотой, ~ мириады вещей обрели единство рождением, ~ хоу и ваны обрели единство, став воплощением честности для Поднебесной. ~ Они достигли этого. ~ Небо, не став чистым, боюсь, может лопнуть. ~ Земля, не став незыблемой, боюсь, может рассыпаться. ~ Дух, не став одухотворенным, боюсь, может истощиться. ~ Мириады вещей, не рождаясь, боюсь, могут исчезнуть. ~ Хоу и ваны, не став ценимыми и высокопочитаемыми, боюсь, могут оступиться. ~ Основой дорогого (благородного) является дешевое (худородное). ~ Основой высокого является низкое. ~ Поэтому хоу и ваны называют себя сырыми, одинокими, несчастными. ~ Это не оттого ли, что дешевое (худородное) является основой? ~ А разве нет?! ~ Однако если за несколькими колесницами погонишься, ни одну не догонишь. ~ Не желай сверкать словно драгоценная яшма, будь блеклым, как простой камень.

— [39с95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Вот те, которые с древних времен находятся в единстве. ~ Благодаря единству небо стало чистым, земля - незыблемой, дух - чутким, долина - цветущей и начали рождаться все существа. ~ Благодаря единству знать и государи становятся образцом в мире. ~ Вот что создает единство. ~ Если небо не чисто, оно разрушается; ~ если земля зыбка, она раскалывается; ~ если дух не чуток, он исчезает; ~ если долины не цветут, они превращаются в пустыню; ~ если вещи не рождаются, они исчезают; ~ если знать и государи не являются примером благородства, они будут свергнуты. ~ Незнатные являются основой для знатных, а низкое - основанием для высокого. ~ Поэтому знать и государи сами называют себя "одинокими", "сырыми", "несчастливыми". ~ Это происходит оттого, что они не рассматривают незнатных как свою основу. ~ Это ложный путь. ~ Если разобрать колесницу, от нее ничего не останется. ~ Нельзя считать себя "драгоценным", как яшма, а нужно быть простым, как камень.

— [39с96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ В древности всякое существо достигало единства. ~ Небо, достигши единства, стало чистым. ~ Земля, достигши единства, стала спокойной. ~ Дух, достигши единства, стал разумным. ~ Долина, достигши единства, стала полной. ~ Всякая вещь, достигши единства, стала существовать. ~ Цари и князья, достигши единства, стали образцами для мира. ~ Все это было достигнуто, благодаря единству. ~ Достижение единства во всем этом одно и то же. ~ Если бы небо было не чисто, то казалось бы, что оно боится взрыва. ~ Если бы земля потеряла спокойствие, то она была бы в опасности разрушения. ~ Если бы дух лишился разумности, то он потерял бы (свойство) быть духом. ~ Если бы пустота долины наполнилась чем-нибудь, то она перестала бы быть долиной. ~ Всякая вещь, если бы перестала расти, уничтожилась бы. ~ Если бы цари и князья потеряли верность и преданность (своих подданных), то были бы свергнуты. ~ Отсюда благородные люди смотрят на неблагородных, как на свое начало; высшие смотрят на низших, как на свое основание. ~ Цари и князья заботятся о бедных сиротах и вдовах. ~ Этим же они могли бы свидетельствовать о своем происхождении. ~ Ужели это неправда? ~ Если разобрать телегу по частям, то не останется телеги. ~ Я не желаю быть гордым, как драгоценный камень. ~ Также я не желаю быть презираемым, как дикий камень.

— [39c97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Из тех, кто в древности обрел единое: ~ Небо, обретя единое, стало чистым; ~ Земля, обретя единое, стала покойной; ~ Духи, обретя единое, стали божественными; ~ Долины, обретя единое, стали полны; ~ Вся тьма вещей, обретя единое, живет; ~ Князья и цари, обретя единое, правят Поднебесной. ~ Так все происходит благодаря единому. ~ Небо, не будучи чистым, не расколется ли? ~ Земля, не будучи покойной, не растрясется ли? ~ Духи, не будучи божественными, не обессият ли? ~ Долины, не будучи наполненными, не оскудеют ли? ~ Вся тьма вещей, не имея в себе жизни, не исчезнет ли? ~ Князья и цари, не имея почета и славы, не падут ли? ~ Посему корень почета - униженность. ~ Основа славы - безвестность. ~ Оттого князья и цари зовут себя сиротами, одинокими, беспомощными. ~ Не значит ли это, что для них униженность - корень? ~ Разве нет? ~ Имея множество колесниц, считай, что у тебя нет колесниц. ~ Не желай ни блеснуть, словно прекрасная яшма, ~ Ни быть твердым, словно простой булыжник.

— [39c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Изначально так обретают единство: ~ Небо обретает единство способностью чистоты. ~ Земля обретает единство способностью покоя. ~ Дух обретает единство способностью божественной тайны. ~ Долина обретает единство способностью наполнения. ~ Мириады существ обретают единство способностью жить. ~ Удельные князья и правители обретают единство способностью осуществлять исправление Поднебесной. ~ Это и приводит их к единству. ~ Если у Неба отсутствует способность чистоты, может и расколоться. ~ Если у Земли отсутствует способность покоя, может прийти в движение. ~ Если у духа отсутствует способность божественной тайны, может и иссякнуть. ~ Если у долины отсутствует способность наполнения, может и истощиться. ~ Если у мириад существ отсутствует способность жить, могут и исчезнуть. ~ Если у удельных князей и правителей отсутствует способность к исправлению посредством почитания высокого, могут и рухнуть. ~ Причинность: ~ Основой для благородного является подлое. ~ Опорой для высокого является низкое. ~ Это дает: ~ Удельные князья и правители называют себя сирыми, вдовыми, неприкаянными. ~ Разве это не потому, что подлое является основой? ~ Разве нет? ~ Причинность: ~ В частом выражении восхваления - отсутствие восхваления. ~ Не стремись к блеску драгоценного камня, будь заурядным, как простой булыжник.

Lin ~ The superior man, on hearing Tao, ~ Practices it diligently. ~ The average man, on hearing Tao, ~ Regards it both as existing and not existing. ~ The inferior man, on hearing Tao, ~ Laughs aloud at it. ~ Without his laughter, it would not be Tao. ~ Therefore the established word says: ~ The luminous Tao seems obscure. ~ The advancing Tao seems retreating. ~ The even Tao seems rough. ~ The highest virtue seems empty. ~ Great whiteness seems blackened. ~ Broad virtue seems insufficient. ~ Established virtue seems secret. ~ Pure substance seems fluid. ~ The great square has no corners. ~ The great vessel is late in completing. ~ The great voice sounds faint. ~ The great image has no shape. ~ Tao is concealed and has no name. ~ Yet only Tao is good in giving and completing.

— [41c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ "When the best shih hears Tao, ~ he puts out great effort to practice it. ~ When the average shih hears Tao, ~ he will keep it sometimes, and sometimes forget about it. ~ When the poorest shih hears Tao, ~ he just has a big laugh." ~ If he does not laugh, it must not quite be Tao. ~ Yes, the 'Well-Founded Sayings' has it: ~ The bright Tao seems dark; ~ the Tao going forward seems to be going backward; ~ the smooth Tao seems rough. ~ The loftiest Te seems like a valley; ~ great purity seems sullied; ~ abundant Te seems insufficient. ~ Well-founded Te seems flimsy; ~ what is pure and natural seems faded; ~ the best square has no corners. ~ A great bronze takes long to finish; ~ great music has a delicate sound; ~ the Great Image has no shape. ~ Tao is something concealed, nameless. ~ It is just Tao, ~ good at sustaining a person and completing him.

— [41c33t] Cheng Lin ~ When the highest type of men hear of Truth, they forthwith sedulously practise it. ~ When the average type of men hear of Truth, they are unimpressed. ~ When the lowest type of men hear of Truth, they greatly deride it. ~ Indeed, if these men do not deride it, it is surely not Truth. ~ Wherefore it is said in the Book of Jiann-Yan: ~ "The one who understands Truth appears as though he did not understand it. ~ The one who advances toward Truth appears as though he were retreating from it. ~ The one who finds the way of Truth easy appears as though he found it difficult." ~ The most virtuous appear as though they were devoid of virtue. ~ The virtuous who can impart virtue to others appear as though they were incapable. ~ The virtuous who are strong appear as though they were weak. ~ The virtuous who are solid appear as though they were unreal. ~ The most pure appears as though it were impure. ~ The perfect square is cornerless. ~ The greatest achievement is slow of completion. ~ The highest note is inaudible. ~ The great Simulacrum is formless. ~ The great Truth is nameless. ~ It is only Truth that excels both in giving and achieving.

— [41c34t] Yi Wu ~ When the highest scholars hear of the Way, they practice it diligently. ~ When average scholars hear of the Way, they doubt its existence. ~ When the lowest scholars hear of the Way, they laugh loudly at it. ~ Without their laughing, it would not be the Way. ~ Therefore, the established words say: ~ The bright way looks dim, ~ The advancing way looks as if retreating, ~ The level way looks rough, ~ Supreme virtue looks like a valley, ~ Great whiteness looks soiled, ~ Abundant virtue looks deficient, ~ Established virtue looks like cowardice, ~ True essence looks changeable, ~ The greatest square has no corners, ~ The greatest vessel is completed late, ~ The greatest music is seldom heard, ~ The greatest image has no shape, ~ The Way is hidden in namelessness. ~ Yet, only the Way is good in lending itself, and is complete.

— [41c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ When a consummate scholar learns about Dao, ~ He studies it diligently and puts it into practice. ~ When a mediocre scholar hears about Dao, ~ He becomes totally perplexed. ~ When a lowly scholar hears about Dao, ~ He instantaneously bursts into laughter. ~ If it is not sneered at, ~ It cannot have been the real Dao. ~ Therefore, there was an ancient saying: ~ A person who knows about Dao appears to be dull. ~ A person who is advanced in Dao appears to be backward. ~ A person who travels smoothly along the path of Dao appears to be on a bumpy ride. ~ A person with excellent virtue appears to be quite shallow. ~ A person with immaculate virtue appears tarnished. ~ A person with great virtue appears to be inadequate. ~ A person with substantial virtue seems to be flimsy. ~ A person with genuine virtue appears to be shifty. ~ The greatest space has no corners. ~ A prodigal talent takes time to actualise. ~ The greatest sound is nature's sound of silence. ~ Dao has no form. ~ Dao is subtle, obscure, and indescribable. ~ Only Dao will give generously and help others to accomplish.

— [41c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ When people of the highest awareness hear the subtle Way of the universe, ~ they cultivate themselves diligently in order to live in accord with it. ~ When mediocre people hear the subtle Way of the universe, ~ they are unimpressed. ~ When people who are low hear the subtle Way of the universe, ~ they break into loud laughter. ~ If it were not laughed at, ~ it would not be the subtle Way of the universe. ~ Thus there is a traditional saying that he who understands the subtle Way of the universe seems dull of comprehension. ~ He who approaches the subtle Way of the universe seems to move away from it. ~ He who moves on the smooth path of the universe seems to go up and down as if traveling a rough road. ~ The deeply virtuous are like an empty, receptive valley. ~ The innocent appear to be sullied. ~ The abundant appear to be deficient. ~ The perfect appear to be defective. ~ The honest appear to be corrupt. ~ Hence, great space has no corners. ~ Great talent ripens late. ~ Great eloquence is silent. ~ Great form is shapeless. ~ The subtle essence of the universe is hidden and indefinable, yet its benefit is always subtly bestowed.

— [41c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ When a man of superior talent listens to Tao, he earnestly applies it. ~ When an ordinary man listens to Tao, he seems to believe it and yet not to believe it. ~ When the worst man listens to Tao, he greatly ridicules it. ~ If he did not ridicule it, it would not be Tao. ~ Therefore, in Ch'ien-yen we have: ~ Understand Tao as if you do not understand it; ~ Enter into Tao as if you are coming out of it; ~ Move smoothly with Tao as if you are having difficulties. ~ The highest attainment is as if it is no attainment. ~ All-embracing attainment is as if it is lacking attainment. ~ Rigorous attainment is as if it is indolent loafing. ~ Real essence is as if it is empty. ~ The great white is as if it is black. ~ The great square is without corners. ~ Great capacity is successful in its later days. ~ Great music is without sound. ~ The great image is without form. ~ Tao is concealed and without name. ~ Nevertheless, Tao furnishes all things and fulfills them.

— [41c38t] Henry Wei ~ Similarity and Difference ~ T'ung I ~ The first-rate scholar, on hearing Tao, ~ Is diligent in practicing it; ~ The second-rate scholar, on hearing Tao, ~ Wavers between faith and forgetfulness; ~ The third-rate scholar, on hearing Tao, ~ Bursts into loud laughter. ~ If not laughed at, it would not be Tao! ~ Hence the following proverbs - ~ He who understands Tao seems confounded by it. ~ He who advances toward Tao seems retreating from it. ~ He who follows plain Tao seems treading on rugged ground. ~ Superior virtue appears to be hollow. ~ Perfect purity appears to be tainted. ~ Vast virtue appears to be inadequate. ~ Solid virtue appears to be infirm. ~ Genuine substance appears to be spurious. ~ Vast space is devoid of corners. ~ Great talent is late in maturing. ~ A high note can hardly be heard. ~ The Great Form has no sign. ~ Tao is hidden and has no name; ~ Yet only Tao excels in contributing to achievement.

— [41c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ When the highest type of man hears Tao, ~ He practices it diligently. ~ When the middle type hears Tao, ~ He half believes and half disbelieves it. ~ When the lowest type hears Tao, ~ He laughs out loud. ~ If he didn't, ~ It couldn't possibly be considered Tao. ~ Therefore the Chien yen has it: ~ "The bright Tao looks dark; ~ The forward-moving Tao seems retreating; ~ The level Tao seems bumpy; ~ The highest Te is like a valley; ~ Perfect white looks soiled; ~ The broad Te seems insufficient; ~ The firm Te seems precarious; ~ The pure Te seems discolored; ~ The great square has no corners; ~ The great vessel takes long to complete; ~ The great sound is inaudible; ~ The great form is shapeless." ~ Tao is hidden and nameless. ~ Truly, Tao alone supports [all things] and brings them to completion.

— [41c40t] Tao Huang ~ When eminent persons hear of Tao, ~ They practice it faithfully; ~ When average persons hear of Tao, ~ It seems that they practice it, and it seems they do not; ~ When inferior persons hear of Tao, ~ They ridicule it. ~ Without such ridicule, it would not be Tao. ~ Thus, the aphorism that suggests the way is: ~ Knowing the Tao seems costly. ~ Entering Tao seems like retreating. ~ Becoming equal with Tao gives birth to paradoxes. ~ Eminent action is like a valley. ~ Complete understanding resembles being disgraced. ~ Vast action seems yielding. ~ Action that builds up seems remiss. ~ Pure integrity seems perverse. ~ The great square has no angles. ~ The great talent matures late. ~ The great voice sounds faint. ~ The great image has no form. ~ The Tao is praised but is unnameable. ~ Only Tao is good at beginning and good at completion.

— [41c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ The superior scholar hears of Dao, he may devote himself to it and follow it; ~ the average scholar hears of Dao, he sometimes understands it and sometimes he ignores it; ~ and the inferior scholar hears of Dao, he greatly ridicules it. ~ If it is not superior, it would not be Dao. ~ Thus, there are sayings in the Book of Establishment: ~ Enlightened Dao looks as if obscured; ~ advanced Dao looks as if retreating and the smooth way of Dao looks as if rugged; ~ high virtue looks as if common; ~ the superior distinction may seem indistinct; ~ abundant virtue looks as if insufficient; ~ vigorous virtue looks as if easy-going and pure virtue looks as if stupidity. ~ The superior square may seem to be cornerless. ~ The superior personality may be established late. ~ The superior sound may have no way to be heard. ~ The superior model may seem to be insignificant. ~ The function of Dao has no name. ~ It is Dao - the impartial law of nature that knows best how to help and accomplish.

— [41c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ When the highest type of men hear Tao, ~ They diligently practice it. ~ When the average type of men hear Tao, ~ They half believe in it. ~ When the lowest type of men hear Tao, ~ They laugh heartily at it. ~ If they did not laugh at it, it would not be Tao. ~ Therefore there is the established saying: ~ The Tao which is bright appears to be dark. ~ The Tao which goes forward appears to fall backward. ~ The Tao which is level appears uneven. ~ Great virtue appears like a valley (hollow). ~ Great purity appears like disgrace. ~ Far-reaching virtue appears as if insufficient. ~ Solid virtue appears as if unsteady. ~ True substance appears to be changeable. ~ The great square has no corners. ~ The great implement (or talent) is slow to finish (or mature). ~ Great music sounds faint. ~ Great form has no shape. ~ Tao is hidden and nameless. ~ Yet it is Tao alone that skillfully provides for all and brings them to perfection.

— [41c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Высший из мужей, слыша о Дао, усердно претворяет его в жизнь; ~ средний из мужей, слыша о Дао, пребывает в замешательстве; ~ низший из мужей, слыша о Дао, над ним насмехается. ~ Над чем не смеялись бы, то не было бы Дао. ~ Поэтому есть веские суждения. ~ Дао уясняют, словно помрачаются; ~ по нему идут вперед, как пятятся назад; ~ оно ровно, будто все в ухабах; ~ верх добродетели напоминает впадину долины; ~ пречистое походит на запятнанное; ~ бескрайность добродетели уподобляется изъяну; ~ добродетель делают незыблемой как бы невзначай; ~ безыскусная правдивость кажется чем-то превратным. ~ У великого квадрата нет углов, ~ великое изделие не скоро создается, ~ великая мелодия является беззвучной, ~ великий образ не имеет формы. ~ Дао скрытно, у него нет имени, но лишь оно умеет дать займы и довести до самого конца.

— [41c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Когда муж высоких способностей слышит о Дао, он усердно следует ему. ~ Когда муж средних способностей слышит о Дао, он порой сохраняет его, порой утрачивает. ~ Когда муж низких способностей слышит о Дао, он громко смеется над ним. ~ Если бы над ним не смеялись, было бы недостаточно, чтобы оно считалось истинным Дао. ~ Поэтому "Извечные суждения" гласят: ~ "Пресветлое Дао кажется тёмным. ~ Дао, ведущее вперёд, кажется влекущим назад. ~ Обыденное Дао кажется исключительным. ~ Высшая Благодать подобна долине. ~ Великая белизна кажется покрытой пятнами. ~ Всеохватная Благодать кажется недостаточной. ~ Подлинная Благодать кажется сокрытой. ~ Извечная истина кажется пустой. ~ Великий квадрат не имеет углов. ~ Великий сосуд долгов в изготовлении. ~ Великий Звук не часто услышишь. ~ Великий Образ не имеет формы". ~ Дао потаённо и безымянно. ~ И лишь потому, что это - Дао, оно может быть совершенным и в воздаянии, и в воплощении.

— [41c93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Когда муж высшего ума о Дао слышит, то стремится с усердием осуществлять его. ~ Когда муж среднего ума о Дао слышит, то сомневается - то ли оно есть, то ли его и нет вовсе. ~ Когда муж низшего ума о Дао слышит, то над ним смеется громко! ~ И если бы тот хохот не раздался, оно бы недостойно было Дао, Путем Великим, называться! ~ Поэтому попробую связать слова, чтобы сказать об этом: ~ Прозрение Дао - словно омрачение, ~ приближение к нему - словно отступление от него, ~ ровная поверхность Пути - как кочки и ухабы; ~ высшее Благо-Дэ - словно ложбина, ~ белизна великая - как очернение, ~ обширность Силы Благодатной - как недостаток, ~ утвержденная Благая Сила - словно ослабленная, ~ незапятнанное существо истины - как загрязненное. ~ Великий квадрат не имеет углов, ~ великий сосуд изготавливается последним, ~ голос великого звука столь утончен, ~ великий образ не имеет телесной формы и само Дао сокрыто в безымянности своей. ~ О, только Дао-Путь хорош бывает и вначале, и при завершении!

— [41c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Муж высокой учености, услышав о Дао, усердно следует ему. ~ Муж средней учености, услышав о Дао, то сохраняет, то теряет его. ~ Муж низкой учености, услышав о Дао, громко насмехается над ним. ~ Не осмеяв, и не будет считать за Дао, ибо среди незыблемых суждений есть таковые: ~ Светлое Дао подобно темному. ~ Наступающее Дао подобно отступающему. ~ Совершенное Дао подобно ущербному. ~ Верхнее Дэ подобно [нижнему] руслу. ~ Громкая слава подобна позору. ~ Обширное Дэ подобно недостаточному. ~ Закрытое Дэ подобно похищенному. ~ Чистая правда подобна мутной смеси. ~ Великий квадрат не имеет углов. ~ Великие замыслы рождаются в сумерки. ~ Великий звук не громогласен. ~ Великий образ не имеет формы. ~ Дао сокрыто и безымянно. ~ Только Дао одаривает добротой и завершается [природой].

— [41c95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Человек высшей учености, узнав о дао, стремится к его осуществлению. ~ Человек средней учености, узнав о дао, соблюдает его, то его нарушает. ~ Человек низшей учености, узнав о дао, подвергает его насмешке. ~ Если оно не подвергалось бы насмешке, не являлось бы дао. ~ Поэтому существует поговорка: ~ кто узнает дао, похож на темного; ~ кто проникает в дао, похож на отступающего; ~ кто на высоте дао, похож на заблуждающегося; ~ человек высшей добродетели похож на простого; ~ великий просвещенный похож на презираемого; ~ безграничная добродетельность похожа на ее недостаток; ~ распространение добродетельности похоже на ее расхищение; ~ истинная правда похожа на ее отсутствие. ~ Великий квадрат не имеет углов; ~ большой сосуд долго изготавливается; ~ сильный звук нельзя услышать; ~ великий образ не имеет формы. ~ Дао скрыто [от нас] и не имеет имени. ~ Но только оно способно помочь [всем существам] и привести их к совершенству.

— [41c96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Когда ученый услышит о Тао, то будет стараться осуществить услышанное (в жизни). ~ Когда человек средней руки услышит о Тао, то не будет соблюдать его до конца жизни. ~ Когда малоученный услышит о Тао, то он будет глумиться над ним. ~ Если бы над ним не глумились, то оно и не заслужило бы имени Тао. ~ Поэтому сказано следующее: ~ Тот, кто понимает очевидное Тао, кажется облеченным мраком; ~ тот, кто идет вперед, держась Тао, кажется идущим назад; ~ тот, кто на высоте Тао, кажется обыкновенным смертным. ~ Человек высшей добродетели похож на долину. ~ Человек высшей чистоты похож на презираемого. ~ Человек высшей нравственности похож на неспособного. ~ Совершающий добродетель похож на вора. ~ Испытывающий правду похож на похищающего вещи. ~ У большого четырехугольника не видно углов. ~ Большой сосуд не скоро делается. ~ Самый громкий голос не слышен. ~ Большое изображение не имеет никакой формы. ~ Тао скрыто от нас, поэтому оно не имеет имени. ~ Оно снабжает все существа (силой) и ведет их к усовершенствованию.

— [41c97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Высшие люди, узнав о Пути, являют усердие и претворяют его. ~ Обычные люди, узнав о Пути, отчасти следуют ему, отчасти нет. ~ Низшие люди, узнав о Пути, громко смеются над ним. ~ Если б они не смеялись, это не был бы Путь. ~ А потому издавна говорят так: ~ Пресветлый Путь кажется мраком. ~ Путь, ведущий вперед, кажется отступлением. ~ Ровный Путь самый труднопроходимый. ~ Высшее Совершенство подобно долине. ~ Великая чистота кажется позором. ~ Беспредельное совершенство кажется ущербностью. ~ Незыблемое совершенство кажется потворством. ~ Настоящая искренность кажется притворством. ~ Великий квадрат не имеет углов. ~ Великий сосуд делается всего дольше. ~ Великая музыка слышна всего меньше. ~ Великий образ не имеет формы. ~ Но только Великий Путь сокрыт и безымянен, ~ Он все дает и все завершает.

— [41c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Высший воин, внимая Пути, усердно движется по нему. ~ Средний воин, внимая Пути, то хранит, то утрачивает. ~ Низший воин, внимая Пути, громко смеется над ним. ~ Если не будет смеяться, не сможет осуществлять Путь. ~ Причинность: ~ Об этом говорится в устойчивых выражениях. ~ Просветление Пути отражается в тьме. ~ Продвижение по Пути отражается в отступлении. ~ Равномерность Пути отражается в изъятиях. ~ Ориентацию вверх Потенции отражает долина. ~ Великая белизна отражается в сраме. ~ Обширная Потенция отражается в недостаточности. ~ Напряженность Потенции отражается в халатности. ~ Простейшая истина отражается в текучести. ~ В большом квадрате - отсутствие углов. ~ Для большого инструмента - позднее завершение. ~ В большом звуке - разреженность голоса. ~ Большой образ - отсутствие формы. ~ Путь сокрыт в отсутствии имени. ~ Ведь только на Пути, совершенствуясь в зачине, еще и завершают.

— [42c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ The Way gave birth to the One. ~ The One gave birth to the Two. ~ The Two gave birth to the Three. ~ And the Three gave birth to {the ten thousand things}. ~ {The ten thousand things carry Yin on their backs and wrap their arms around Yang}. ~ Through the blending of ch'i they arrive at a state of harmony. ~ The things that are hated by the whole world ~ Are to be orphaned, widowed, and have no grain. ~ Yet kings and dukes take these as their names. ~ Thus with all things - some {are increased} by taking away; ~ While some are diminished by {adding on}. ~ Therefore, {what} other men teach, ~ [1] will also consider and then teach to others. ~ Thus, "The strong and violent do not come to a natural end." ~ I will take this as the father of my studies.

— [42c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ TAO gave birth to One, ~ One gave birth to Two, ~ Two gave birth to Three, ~ Three gave birth to all the myriad things. ~ All the myriad things carry the Yin on their backs and hold the Yang in their embrace, ~ Deriving their vital harmony from the proper blending of the two vital Breaths. ~ What is more loathed by men than to be "helpless," "little," and "worthless"? ~ And yet these are the very names the princes and barons call themselves. ~ Truly, one may gain by losing; ~ And one may lose by gaining. ~ What another has taught let me repeat: ~ "A man of violence will come to a violent end." ~ Whoever said this can be my teacher and my father.

— [42c03t] D. C. Lau ~ The way begets one; ~ One begets two; ~ Two begets three; ~ Three begets the myriad creatures. ~ The myriad creatures carry on their backs the yin and embrace in their arms the yang and are the blending of the generative forces of the two. ~ There are no words which men detest more than 'solitary', 'desolate', and 'hapless', yet lords and princes use these to refer to themselves. ~ Thus a thing is sometimes added to by being diminished and diminished by being added to. ~ What others teach I also teach. ~ 'The violent will not come to a natural end.' ~ I shall take this as my precept.

— [42c04t] R. L. Wing ~ The Tao produced the One. ~ The One produced the Two. ~ The Two produced the Three. ~ The Three produced All Things. ~ All Things carry Yin and hold to Yang; ~ Their blended Influence brings Harmony. ~ People hate to be alone, lonely, and unfavored; ~ And yet leaders take these names. ~ Thus in Natural Law ~ Some lose and in this way profit. ~ Some profit and in this way lose. ~ What others have taught, I also teach: ~ Those who are violent do not die naturally. ~ I will make this my chief teaching.

— [42c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ Tao gives birth to the unified thing (One), ~ The One splits itself into two opposite aspects (Two), ~ The Two gives birth to another (Three), ~ The newborn Third produces a myriad of things. ~ The myriad of things contain the Yin and Yang within themselves as opposite forces, ~ Both of them (Yin and Yang) are unified with harmony in the invisible breath. ~ People disdain the "orphaned," "solitary" or "unworthy," ~ And yet they are the very names by which kings and dukes call themselves. ~ Therefore all things may increase when purposely diminished, ~ And they may diminish when increased. ~ What people teach each other, I also teach: ~ "The violent and strong does not die his natural death," ~ I will make that fact the beginning of my teaching.

— [42c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ The Tao begot one. ~ One begot two. ~ Two begot three. ~ And three begot the ten thousand things. ~ The ten thousand things carry yin and embrace yang. ~ They achieve harmony by combining these forces. ~ Men hate to be "orphaned," "widowed," or "worthless," ~ But this is how kings and lords describe themselves. ~ For one gains by losing ~ And loses by gaining. ~ What others teach, I also teach; that is: ~ "A violent man will die a violent death!" ~ This will be the essence of my teaching.

— [42c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ The Dao gives birth to the One. ~ The One gives birth to the Two(yin and yang). ~ The Two give birth to the Three(heaven, earth, and man). ~ The Three give birth to all things as we know them. ~ All living things bear the female nature ~ And espouse the male nature. ~ In interacting with each other ~ these two natures result in a new harmony. ~ It is well known that people generally hate ~ to be lonely, widowed, or under-provided. ~ Yet kings and people who wield power ~ call themselves lonely, widowed, or under-provided. ~ Things may benefit people through imposing losses on them, ~ And may hurt them through bestowing apparent benefits. ~ I teach the same kind of people that others teach. ~ But by a single maxim that I teach, that ~ "Those who use sheer force to make their ways ~ Will not die a good death" ~ I should become the teacher of all teachers.

— [42c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ The DAO produces ONE; ~ ONE produces the YIN and YANG (TWO), ~ the YIN and YANG produce harmonic spirit (THREE), ~ harmonic spirit produces everything. ~ Everything is based on the YIN-YANG and is filled with harmonic spirit. ~ The things people dislike the most are the singles, the widowers, and the unkind. ~ However, the kings call themselves these bad names. ~ So, things sometimes get hurt but benefit, sometimes benefit but get hurt. ~ What others taught me I will now teach you: The bullies will die unnaturally. ~ I treat this as the base of my teaching.

— [42c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE CHANGES OF TAO ~ Tao emaned the One; the one emaned the Two; and the two emaned the Three. ~ From the Three all things have proceeded. ~ All things are backed by the Unmanifest and faced by the Manifest. ~ That which unites them is the immaterial breath. ~ Orphanage, isolation, and a chariot without wheels are shunned by the people; but kings and great men appropriate these names to themselves. ~ For things are increased by being deprived; and being added to they are diminished. ~ That which people teach by their actions I make use of to instruct them. ~ Those who are violent and headstrong, for example, do not die a natural death. ~ They teach a good lesson, and so I make use of them.

— [42c10t] James Legge ~ The Tao produced One; ~ One produced Two; ~ Two produced Three; ~ Three produced All things. ~ All things leave behind them the Obscurity (out of which they have come), and go forward to embrace the Brightness (into which they have emerged), while they are harmonised by the Breath of Vacancy. ~ What men dislike is to be orphans, to have little virtue, to be as carriages without naves; ~ and yet these are the designations which kings and princes use for themselves. ~ So it is that some things are increased by being diminished, and others are diminished by being increased. ~ What other men (thus) teach, I also teach. ~ The violent and strong do not die their natural death. ~ I will make this the basis of my teaching.

— [42c11t] David Hinton ~ Way gave birth to one, ~ and one gave birth to two. ~ Two gave birth to three, ~ and three gave birth to the ten thousand things. ~ Then the ten thousand things shouldered yin and embraced yang, ~ blending ch'i to establish harmony. ~ People all hate scraping by orphaned, destitute, ill-fated, but true dukes and emperors call themselves just that. ~ Some things gain by loss, and some lose by gain. ~ I only teach ~ what the people teach: ~ Tyranny and force never come to a natural end. ~ I've taken the people as my schoolmaster.

— [42c12t] Chichung Huang ~ The Tao generated one; ~ One generated two; ~ Two generated three; ~ Three generated the ten thousand things. ~ The ten thousand things, ~ Carrying yin and embracing yang, ~ Used the empty vapor to achieve harmony. ~ What people loathe most are ~ Inadequacy, deficiency and unworthiness, ~ Yet, kings and dukes use them ~ To refer to themselves. ~ People sometimes gain through losing; ~ Sometimes lose through gaining. ~ Therefore, what kings teach, ~ I also choose to teach kings: ~ "A brute does not die a natural death." ~ I shall use it as the father of learning.

— [42c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ Tao gives birth to one, ~ One gives birth to two, ~ Two gives birth to three, ~ Three gives birth to ten thousand beings. ~ Ten thousand beings carry yin on their backs and embrace yang in their front, ~ Blending these two vital breaths (ch'i) to attain harmony (ho). ~ What people hate most, ~ Are to be orphaned, widowed and unworthy. ~ Yet kings and dukes call themselves by these. ~ Thus things are either decreased so as to be increased, ~ Or increased (i) so as to be decreased (sun). ~ What others teach, ~ I also teach: ~ "The strong and violent (ch'iang liang) do not die a natural death." ~ This I shall hold as the father (fu) of my teaching.

— [42c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ In the beginning, Tao is Oneness [per se]; ~ Out of Oneness [after the inner split] twofold [contrasts, such as odd and even or steeliness and flexibility] were originated; ~ From these twofold threefold (odd, even and odd-even) were brought into existence; ~ Thence myriad things and creatures evolved ad infinitum through [combination] of threefold (odd, even and odd-even). ~ All things and creatures hold inwardly propensities (Yin), while they carry outwardly manifestations (Yang); ~ These two forces are amalgamated and harmonized [within a person to form his personal] bearings (vitality). ~ Therefore, the weakening of [either steeliness or flexibility elements] from a thing (project) may benefit it; ~ The strengthening [of either steeliness and flexibility elements] from a thing (project) may damage it. [It all depends on circumstances]. ~ My teaching is the unified theory based on my knowledge of [various] learnings of our forefathers taught to me [by scholars in court]; ~ [My motto is] "One who imposes his way by force to sit on top of others will die of unnatural causes (by violence)." ~ I shall always adopt this as the guideline of my teaching.

—[42c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ The Way gives birth to one. ~ One gives birth to two. ~ Two gives birth to three. ~ Three gives birth to ten thousand things. ~ All things carry the yin on their backs and embrace the yang in their arms. ~ They are harmony with each other because of these two null ethers. ~ What is more loathed by men than to be "solitary," "little," and "worthless"? ~ Yet these are the very names the kings and lords call themselves. ~ Therefore, one may gain by losing; and one may lose by gaining. ~ What ancients taught I repeat: "A man of violence will die an unnatural death." ~ Whoever said this is my teacher.

—[42c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ Tao produce unity. ~ Unity splits into two. ~ Two gives birth to three. ~ Three produces everything. ~ Everything carries Yin and embraces Yang. ~ Yin and Yang work together makes harmony. ~ Loneliness, friendlessness, and worthlessness are generally disliked. ~ Yet, kings and lords use these terms to describe themselves. ~ Things can benefit from damages. ~ Things can also be damaged from benefits. ~ Therefore, I can teach what the other taught me: ~ Those who act against the law of the Nature will never get what they want. ~ This is a basic principle for me to teach.

—[42c17t] Arthur Waley ~ Tao gave birth to the One; the One gave birth successively to two things, three things, up to ten thousand. ~ These ten thousand creatures cannot turn their backs to the shade without having the sun on their bellies, and it is on this blending of the breaths that their harmony depends. ~ To be orphaned, needy, ill-provided is what men most hate; yet princes and dukes style themselves so. ~ Truly, 'things are often increased by seeking to diminish them and diminished by seeking to increase them.' ~ The maxims that others use in their teaching I too will use in mine. ~ Show me a man of violence that came to a good end, and I will take him for my teacher.

—[42c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ The Dao begets the One; ~ the One begets two; ~ two beget three; ~ and three beget the myriad things. ~ The myriad things, bearing yin and embracing yang, form a unified harmony through the fusing of these vital forces. ~ What people most hate are "the orphan," "the widower," and "the unworthy," yet lords and princes use these terms to refer to themselves. ~ Thus it is that some are augmented by being diminished, and others are diminished by being augmented. ~ What others teach, I also teach. ~ The dangerously bold do not get to die a natural death, so I am going to use them as the fathers of my teaching.

—[42c19t] Lin Yutang ~ THE VIOLENT MAN ~ Out of Tao, One is born; ~ Out of One, Two; ~ Out of Two, Three; ~ Out of Three, the created universe. ~ The created universe carries the yin at its back and the yang in front; ~ Through the union of the pervading principles it reaches harmony. ~ To be "orphaned," "lonely" and "unworthy" is what men hate most. ~ Yet the princes and dukes call themselves by such names. ~ For sometimes things are benefited by being taken away from, ~ And suffer by being added to. ~ Others have taught this maxim, ~ Which I shall teach also: ~ "The violent man shall die a violent death." ~ This I shall regard as my spiritual teacher.

— [42c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ The Way gave birth to unity, ~ Unity gave birth to duality, ~ Duality gave birth to trinity, ~ Trinity gave birth to the myriad creatures. ~ The myriad creatures bear yin on their backs and embrace yang in their bosoms. ~ They neutralize these vapors ~ and thereby achieve harmony. ~ That which all under heaven hate most ~ Is to be orphaned, destitute, and hapless. ~ Yet kings and dukes call themselves thus. ~ Things may be diminished by being increased, increased by being diminished. ~ Therefore, ~ That which people teach, ~ After deliberation, I also teach people. ~ Therefore, ~ "The tyrant does not die a natural death." ~ I take this as my mentor.

— [42c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ The Tao gives birth to the One. ~ The One gives birth to two. ~ Two gives birth to three. ~ And three gives birth to the ten thousand things. ~ The ten thousand things have their backs in the shadow while they embrace the light. ~ Harmony is achieved by blending the breaths of these two forces. ~ People dislike the words "alone," "helpless," "worthless," yet this is how Princes describe themselves. ~ So it is that sometimes a thing is increased by being diminished and diminished by being increased. ~ What others teach I also teach: ~ "A violent person will not die a natural death." ~ I shall make this the basis of my teaching.

— [42c22t] David H. Li ~ From Direction, One is born. ~ From One, Two is born. ~ From Two, Three is born. ~ From Three, myriad matters are born. ~ Myriad matters turn their backs on yin and embrace yang. ~ The complement of their energy produces harmony. ~ What people dislike are loneliness, isolation, and ungraciousness, ~ yet this is how Dukes and Princes self-address. ~ Thus, a matter expands through contraction; ~ contracts through expansion. ~ This is what others have taught me; ~ let me teach others the same: "A violent person does not die in place." ~ This is the theme of my teaching.

— [42c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ The Tao, the wholeness, gives rise to oneness. ~ Oneness gives rise to complementary unity. ~ Complementary unity gives rise to complementary trinity. ~ Complementary trinity gives rise to everything in existence. ~ Everything consists of the complementarity of yang in the center and yin surrounding it. ~ From the balanced interchange between the two arises equilibrium in disequilibrium. ~ Ordinary people hate nothing more than to be powerless, unworthy, or destitute. ~ Yet this is what people in high position call themselves. ~ This means, in accordance with the principle of complementarity, ~ That to lose is to gain and to gain is to lose. ~ Let me repeat what others have taught: ~ The strong and violent, being out of balance, do not die natural deaths. ~ This is the very foundation of my teaching.

— [42c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ Your reputation or your person, which is closer to you? ~ Your person or your property, which is dearer to you? ~ Profit or loss, which is worse for you? ~ Over-eagerness leads to over-spending. ~ Too much property leads to too much loss. ~ Therefore, the person who is content with his lot will not know disgrace, ~ And the person who knows where to stop will never disappear, ~ He will exist forever.

— [42c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ The Tao gives birth to the One; ~ The One gives birth to the two; ~ The Two give birth to the three - ~ The Three give birth to every living thing. ~ All things are held in yin, and carry yang: ~ And they are held together in the ch'i of teeming energy.

— [42c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ The Tao begets the One; ~ The One consists of Two in opposition (the Yin and Yang); ~ The Two begets the Three; ~ The Three begets all things of the world. ~ All things connote the Yin and Yang. ~ The Yin and Yang keep acting upon each other ~ And thus things keep changing and unifying themselves. ~ Words like "the solitary", "the few" and "the unkind" ~ Are usually detested by people, ~ Yet lords and kings use them to call themselves. ~ That is why ~ A thing is sometimes added to when being reduced, ~ Or is reduced when being added to. ~ So I teach what I am taught: ~ "The violent will not come to a good end." ~ This I will take as the first lesson when I teach.

— [42c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ The Tao bears the 'One'. ~ The 'One' bears the 'Two'. ~ The 'Two' bears the 'Three'. ~ The 'Three' bears the myriad creatures. ~ The myriad creatures carry yin and embrace yang, which both melt into 'chi' - the energy of life - to achieve harmony. ~ People detest above all orphanhood and widowhood, yet the rulers use these titles to describe themselves. ~ That is why in losing much is gained, and in gaining much is lost. ~ What others teach, I teach also: ~ He who is a ferocious adversary does nothing else but cause his own death. ~ With these words I will maintain my teaching.

— [42c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ The Way produces one. ~ One produces two. ~ Two produces three. ~ Three produces everything. ~ Everything has polar elements in it ~ That interact to achieve harmony. ~ People all hate being isolated, helpless and wicked, ~ But kings use these words as their titles. ~ Therefore, things can gain from losses ~ And can lose because of gainings. ~ I just teach what I have been taught. ~ Those who willfully go against the Way ~ Will die an undue death, ~ And are fit to be my textbook.

— [42c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ Violent Man's Fate ~ Lao Tze says, ~ From Tao arises one; ~ from one arises two; ~ from two arises three, and from three arise all things. ~ All things leave behind them the obscurity (Ying), and go forward to embrace the brightness (Yang) and inherit the blending property of the two harmonized polarities. ~ What men dislike is to be called solitary, unworthy, virtueless; ~ and yet those kings and princes regard them matching to their status. ~ So those things are benefitted by being harmed, others are harmed by being benefitted. ~ While other men have taught their precept, I have my own, ~ - the violent man shall die a violent death. ~ I will make this the basis of my teaching.

— [42c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ Tao begets One; one begets two; two begets three; three begets all things. ~ All things are backed by the Shade (yin) and faced by the Light (yang), and harmonized by the immaterial Breath (ch'i). ~ What others teach, I also teach: ~ 'The daring and violent do not die a natural death.' ~ This (maxim) I shall regard as my instructor.

— [42c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ Tao begets One. ~ One begets Two. ~ Two begets Three. ~ Three begets all things. ~ All things carry the female and embrace the male. ~ And by breathing together, they live in harmony. ~ What the people hate is being orphaned, widowed, and starved. ~ But kings and dukes call themselves these names. ~ Therefore everything can be augmented when diminished, and diminished when augmented. ~ What the people teach, I teach too. ~ The violent and fierce cannot die a natural death. ~ I will become the father of teaching.

— [42c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ Tao produced The One; ~ The One produced Two; ~ Two produced Three; ~ Three produced the thousands of things. ~ The thousands of things: ~ Turn their backs on the quiet and dark, ~ and embrace the aggressive and bright. ~ An Empty ch'i brings Harmony. ~ What people look down upon: ~ to be orphaned, poor, destitute. ~ But the kings and princes ~ make these names into titles. ~ Yes, things: ~ Sometimes you reduce them, and they are enlarged; ~ sometimes you enlarge them, and they are reduced. ~ What another has taught, I also teach: ~ "A violent man will not reach his natural end." ~ I will make of this the father of my teaching.

— [42c33t] Cheng Lin ~ Truth gave birth to one; ~ one gave birth to two; ~ two gave birth to three; ~ three gave birth to the multitude of things which attain the state of harmony when the opposite elements of Ying and Yang are mingled in a well-balanced manner. ~ Men dislike to be called "The Virtueless" or "The Unworthy." ~ But these are the names with which the sovereigns style themselves. ~ Hence, a thing may seem diminished when it is actually augmented, and it may seem augmented when it is actually diminished. ~ What other men teach, I also teach: ~ "The violent and overbearing men will die an unnatural death." ~ This will form the main theme of my teaching.

— [42c34t] Yi Wu ~ The Way brings forth one, ~ One brings forth two, ~ Two bring forth three, ~ Three bring forth all things. ~ All things carry the dark and embrace the light ~ and make them harmonize with empty energy. ~ People dislike "the lonely one", "the little one", and "the worthless one", ~ But kings and dukes call themselves by these names. ~ Therefore, everything may gain by losing ~ and may lose by gaining. ~ What people teach, I also teach: ~ "The man of violence will not die well." ~ I will take this as the father of my teaching.

— [42c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ Dao engenders one. (Tai-chi) ~ One engenders two. (Yin and Yang) ~ Two engenders three. (combinations of Yin and Yang) ~ Three engenders everything. ~ Everything carries Yin and embraces Yang. ~ The mixing of Yin and Yang becomes an entity. ~ People dislike words like orphaned, widowed and unworthy. ~ Nevertheless, the lords use these terms as their titles. ~ An affair may finally turn out well despite a very bad start. ~ Conversely, it could turn out badly with a good start. ~ That is what I have learnt: nothing is certain in life. ~ I will use this to teach others. ~ However, I will still use ~ "Those who resort to violence will die by violence" as my principal teaching.

— [42c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ The universal subtle essence gave birth to One. ~ One gave birth to Two. ~ Two gave birth to Three. ~ Three gave birth to the Myriad Things. ~ All lives have their backs to the yin and embrace the yang. ~ There is nothing more loathed by people than to be orphaned, desolate, and hapless. ~ Yet the wise ancient kings, princes, and barons used such titles to refer to themselves. ~ A thing is sometimes benefitted by being humbled, ~ and diminished by being expanded. ~ What the ancients have taught, I also shall teach: ~ "A man of force and violence will come to a violent end." ~ Whoever said this can be my teacher and father.

— [42c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ From the Tao, one is created; ~ From one, two; ~ From two, three; ~ From three, ten thousand things. ~ All of them achieve harmony through the unification of affirmation and negation ~ Which is embraced by everything. ~ No one likes to be isolated (ku), without merit (kua), or worthless (pu ku), ~ Yet rulers refer to themselves with these names. ~ Thus, some things add to their value by reducing their value. ~ Some things reduce their value by adding to their value. ~ Other ancients have taught this; I teach it too. ~ "The man of violence will end his life in violence." ~ This is a basic motto.

— [42c38t] Henry Wei ~ Tao and Transformation ~ Tao Hua ~ Tao gave birth to One; ~ One gave birth to Two; ~ Two gave birth to Three; ~ Three gave birth to the ten thousand things. ~ The ten thousand things carry Yin and embrace Yang. ~ The two primordial breaths blend and produce harmony. ~ To be orphaned or lonely or unworthy ~ Is what all people detest; ~ Yet kings and nobles apply those terms to themselves. ~ Indeed, things sometimes benefit by an intended injury, ~ And sometimes receive injury from an intended benefit. ~ What others teach, I shall also teach: ~ "The strong and violent will die an unnatural death." ~ This will serve as my chief lesson.

— [42c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ Tao gives birth to One; ~ One gives birth to Two; ~ Two give birth to Three, ~ Three give birth to the ten thousand things. ~ The ten thousand things carry the yin on their backs and hold the yang in their arms; ~ And attain harmony through the blending of the two energies. ~ What people detest most ~ Is to be orphaned, widowed and ill-provided. ~ But that is how kings and princes call themselves. ~ Therefore, of things, some gain by losing, ~ Some lose by gaining. ~ What others teach ~ I also teach. ~ "The violent one will not attain his death." ~ I will take this to be my teacher.

— [42c40t] Tao Huang ~ Tao gives rise to one. ~ One gives rise to two. ~ Two gives rise to three. ~ Three gives rise to all things. ~ All things carry yin and embrace yang, ~ Drawing Chi together into harmony. ~ What the world hates is the widow and orphan without support. ~ But lords and rulers name themselves these. ~ Do not seek gain from losing, nor loss from gaining. ~ What people teach, after discussion becomes doctrine. ~ Those who excel in strength do not prevail over death. ~ I would use this as the father of teaching.

— [42c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ Dao gave birth to One - Existence: Heaven; ~ One gave birth to Two - Coexistence: Heaven and Earth; ~ Two gave birth to Three: Heaven, Earth and Life; ~ and Three gave birth to All Things. ~ All Things are sustained by Yin - the inactive cosmic gas, and are embraced by Yang - the active cosmic gas. ~ To produce these gases into orderly use is to harmonize them. ~ What the people hate are: "orphanhood", "widowhood" and "indigence". ~ Yet these terms are used as designations by rulers. ~ Materialistically, one may gain by losing, ~ Similarly, one may lose by gaining. ~ What people preach I also preach. ~ Then I shall be the master of preaching. ~ A violent person cannot die a natural death.

— [42c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ Tao produced the One. ~ The One produced the two. ~ The two produced the three. ~ And the three produced the ten thousand things. ~ The ten thousand things carry the yin and embrace the yang, and through the blending of the material force they achieve harmony. ~ People hate to be children without parents, lonely people without spouses, or men without food to eat, ~ And yet kings and lords call themselves by these names. ~ Therefore it is often the case that things gain by losing and lose by gaining. ~ What others have taught, I teach also: ~ "Violent and fierce people do not die a natural death." ~ I shall make this the father of my teaching.

— [42c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Дао порождает единицу, ~ единица родит двойку, ~ два рождает тройку, ~ три дает жизнь десяти тысячам вещей. ~ Все вещи, прислоняясь спиной к Тени (Инь), обнимают Свет (Ян), и дыхание (ци) пустоты приводит их к гармонии. ~ Что людям ненавистно - это оказаться "сырым", "вдовым" и "убогим", но так зовут себя цари с князьями. ~ Выходит, что ущербность может доставлять прибыль, прибыль - приносить ущерб. ~ Такое наставление я получаю от людей. ~ И я их тоже наставляю: за произвол, насилие ждет преждевременная смерть. ~ Это будет моим самым главным наставлением.

— [42c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Дао порождает одно. ~ Одно порождает два. ~ Два порождает три. ~ Три порождает мириады существ. ~ Мириады существ несут в себе инь и объедают ян, а пустотное ци приводит их в гармонию. ~ Нет слов, которых бы человек страшился больше, чем "сырый", "покинутый", "неудачник". ~ А ведь знать и правители именно так называют себя. ~ Поэтому вещи то принижаются, возвышаясь, то возвышаются, принижаясь. ~ Тому, чему учат другие, учу и я: "Сильные и жестокие не умирают своей смертью", ~ считаю это своим первейшим наставлением.

— [42c93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Дао рождает Одно. ~ Одно Двоих рождает. ~ Двое рождает Трех. ~ Трое рождает все сущее. ~ Все сущее носит на себе инь - силу темную и обнимает ян - силу светлую, так достигая гармонии энергий жизни и сил равновесия. ~ Теми именами, что люди так не любят: "сырыми", "одинокими", "недостойными", - цари и правящие князья сами себя зовут. ~ Поэтому таков существования принцип: вещь, умаляясь, возрастает, а возрастая - умаляется. ~ Тому же я учу, чему все люди учат: "Насильник и тиран своей не умирает смертью". ~ Вот мудрость эту я и сделаю своим учителем.

— [42c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Дао рождает один. ~ Один рождает два. ~ Два рождает три. ~ Три рождает десять тысяч вещей. ~ Вещи несут за плечами инь и на руках держат ян. ~ Пустота-энергия образует [условие их] гармонии (согласия). ~ То, что люди ненавидят, это быть сырыми, одинокими, несчастными. ~ А ваны и гуны называют себя так. ~ Это потому, что из вещей одни, ослабляя себя, усиливают себя, ~ другие, усиливая себя, ослабляют себя. ~ Чему надо научить людей, тому именно я и учу. ~ Тот же, кто препятствует [этому], не умирает своей смертью. ~ Я вскоре стану Отцом Учения.

— [42c95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Дао рождает одно, одно рождает два, два рожают три, а три рожают все существа. ~ Все существа носят в себе инь и ян, наполнены ци и образуют гармонию. ~ Люди не любят [имена] "одиноким", "сырым", "несчастливый". ~ Между тем гуны и ваны этими [именами] называют себя. ~ Поэтому вещи возвышаются, когда их принижают, и принижаются, когда их возвышают. ~ Чему учат люди, тому обучаю и я: ~ сильные и жестокие не умирают своей смертью. ~ Этим я руководствуюсь в своем обучении.

— [42c96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Тао произвело одно, одно - два, два - три, а три - все вещи. ~ Всякая вещь носит на себе инь и заключает в себе ян. ~ Находящийся в исступленном состоянии легко умиротворяется. ~ Люди ненавидят тех, которые оставляют сирот и бедняков без помощи. ~ Поэтому умные цари и князья помогают сиротам и беднякам; они же сделаются предметом похвалы (народа). ~ Потеря есть начало размножения, множество - начало потери. ~ Чему другие учили и учат по справедливости, тому и я учу людей. ~ Очень сильный не умирает естественною смертью. ~ Я сделаюсь отцом учения.

— [42c97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Путь рождает Одно, ~ Одно рождает Два, ~ Два рождает Три, ~ А Три рождает всю тьму вещей. ~ Все вещи несут в себе Инь и обнимают Ян, ~ Пустотное дыхание приводит их к согласию. ~ То, чего люди не любят, - ~ Это быть "сиротой", "одиноким", "беспомощным", ~ Но так называют себя цари и князья. ~ Посему тот, кто теряет, порою приобретает, ~ А кто приобретает - тот теряет. ~ Чему люди учили, я тоже учу: ~ "Злой и сильный умрет не своей смертью". ~ Пусть это будет мне отцом моих поучений.

— [42c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Путь рождает один. ~ Один рождает два. ~ Два рождает три. ~ Три рождает мириады существ. ~ Для мириад существ то, что давит на спину - Инь, а что обнимают спереди - Ян. ~ Через срединность дыхания-ци осуществляют гармонию. ~ Люди в первую очередь не любят быть сырыми, вдовыми, не-прикаянными, а правители и удельные князья так и называют себя. ~ Причинность: ~ Для сущности и убыль может обернуться прибылью. ~ А может и прибыль обернуться убылью. ~ Чему люди учат, тому учу и я. ~ Коль сильный хребет, то умрешь, так и не обрета. ~ Сущность моя - это и делает родителем своего учения.

— [43c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ The softest, most pliable thing in the world runs roughshod over the firmest thing in the world. ~ That which has no substance gets into that which has no spaces or cracks. ~ I therefore know {that there is} benefit in taking no action. ~ The {wordless} teaching, the benefit of taking no action - ~ Few in the world can realize these!

— [43c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ THE softest of all things ~ Overrides the hardest of all things. ~ Only Nothing can enter into no-space. ~ Hence I know the advantages of Non-Ado. ~ Few things under heaven are as instructive as the lessons of Silence, ~ Or as beneficial as the fruits of Non-Ado.

— [43c03t] D. C. Lau ~ The most submissive thing in the world can ride roughshod over the hardest in the world - ~ That which is without substance entering that which has no crevices. ~ That is why I know the benefit of resorting to no action. ~ The teaching that uses no words, the benefit of resorting to no action, these are beyond the understanding of all but a very few in the world.

— [43c04t] R. L. Wing ~ The most yielding parts of the world ~ Overtake the most rigid parts of the world. ~ The insubstantial can penetrate continually. ~ Therefore I know that without action there is advantage. ~ This philosophy without words, ~ This advantage without action - ~ It is rare, in the world, to attain them.

— [43c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ The softest thing under Heaven is able to run in and out of the hardest. ~ The invisible force is able to penetrate that in which there is no crevice. ~ Thereby I come to know the advantage of doing nothing. ~ The instructiveness of not speaking and the benefits of nonaction are incomparable under Heaven.

— [43c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ The softest thing in the universe ~ Overcomes the hardest thing in the universe. ~ That without substance can enter where there is no room. ~ Hence I know the value of non-action. ~ Teaching without words and work without doing ~ Are understood by very few.

— [43c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ The most gentle and the most flexible of the world ~ Certainly outperforms the strongest and the hardest. ~ What appears intangible and without substance ~ Can penetrate the narrowest gaps. ~ From this we can appreciate the benefits of not contriving. ~ The wordless teaching, and the benefits of not contriving, ~ Certainly find no match under heaven.

— [43c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ The DAO is the softest thing in the world, ~ But it can ride freely into the hardest places, ~ And there is nowhere it cannot go. ~ I thus know the benefits of WUWEI. ~ The DAO educates without lecturing, benefits with WUWEI; ~ There is nothing in the world that can compare with the DAO.

— [43c09t] Walter Gorn Old, UNLIMITED USEFULNESS ~ The gentlest thing in the world will override the strongest. ~ The Non-Existent pervades everything, though there be no inlet. ~ By this I comprehend how effectual is non-action. ~ To teach without words and to be useful without action, few among men are capable of this.

— [43c10t] James Legge ~ The softest thing in the world dashes against and overcomes the hardest; ~ that which has no (substantial) existence enters where there is no crevice. ~ I know hereby what advantage belongs to doing nothing (with a purpose). ~ There are few in the world who attain to the teaching without words, and the advantage arising from non-action.

— [43c11t] David Hinton ~ The weakest in all beneath heaven gallops through the strongest, and vacant absence slips inside solid presence. ~ I know by this the value of nothing's own doing. ~ The teaching without words, the value of nothing's own doing; few indeed master such things.

— [43c12t] Chichung Huang ~ The softest under heaven ~ Gallops over the hardest under heaven; ~ The formless penetrates into the spaceless. ~ I thereby know the benefit of nonaction. ~ The edification of speechlessness ~ The benefit of nonaction - ~ Nothing under heaven can match it.

— [43c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ The softest (chih jou) in the world, ~ Gallops (ch'ih ch'eng) in the hardest (chih chien) in the world. ~ That which is not penetrates that which has no crevice (wu yu ju wu chien). ~ I thereby know the benefit of no-action (wu-wei). ~ The teaching without words, ~ The benefit of no-action, ~ Hardly anything in the world can compare with them.

— [43c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ [Water] is the softest and most adaptive thing in the world, but it can flow around, over, and even through the hardest thing, i.e. rocks; ~ Furthermore, it can run around, over, and even through rocks like racing horses; ~ Its force came from nothing [we can describe]; ~ [All we know is that in due course] It can pierce through solid seamless rocks; ~ I therefore learn about the advantage of carrying out the principle of non-interference (abiding by natural forces). ~ [The above paragraph illustrates that:] ~ The [effectiveness of] educating people [through deeds] rather than through speeches, ~ And the advantage of helping [people] through non-interference [i.e. making use of natural propensities], ~ [All of the above are the best policies executed by Sages] ~ Hardly any other practice in this world can match [the extent of their conformity with Tao].

— [43c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ The softest in the world surpasses the hardest in the world. ~ Only Nothing can enter into no-space. ~ Hence, I know the advantages of non-doing. ~ The teaching of no-word, the beneficial of non-doing, - a very few in the world know.

— [43c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ The most flexible wins out over the stiffest. ~ The shapeless can be omnipresent. ~ I know it is beneficial not use brute force. ~ The best in the world teach without preaching, and act without using force.

—[43c17t] Arthur Waley ~ What is of all things most yielding ~ Can overwhelm that which is of all things most hard. ~ Being substanceless it can enter even where there is no space; ~ That is how I know the value of action that is actionless. ~ But that there can be teaching without words, ~ Value in action that is actionless, ~ Few indeed can understand.

—[43c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ The softest things under Heaven gallop through the hardest things. ~ That which has no physical existence can squeeze through where there is no space, so from this I know how advantageous it is to act without conscious purpose. ~ The teaching that is not expressed in words, the advantage that is had by acting without conscious purpose, rare is it that anyone under Heaven ever reaches them.

—[43c19t] Lin Yutang ~ THE SOFTEST SUBSTANCE ~ The softest substance of the world ~ Goes through the hardest. ~ That-which-is-without-form penetrates that-which-has-no-crevice; ~ Through this I know the benefit of taking no action. ~ The teaching without words ~ And the benefit of taking no action ~ Are without compare in the universe.

—[43c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ The softest thing under heaven gallops triumphantly over ~ The hardest thing under heaven. ~ Nonbeing penetrates nonspace. ~ Hence, ~ I know the advantages of nonaction. ~ The doctrine without words, ~ The advantage of nonaction - ~ few under heaven can realize these!

—[43c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ The most yielding of all things ~ overcomes the hardest of all things. ~ That which has no substance ~ enters where there is no crevice. ~ Hence, I know the value of action without striving. ~ Few things under heaven bring more benefit than the lessons learned from silence and the actions taken without striving.

—[43c22t] David H. Li ~ The world's tenderest is the master of the world's steeliest. ~ Null permeates Ull. ~ I thus know the benefits of laissez-faire. ~ Instructions without words and benefits of laissez-faire - few things in the world can top them.

—[43c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ The softest under heaven always prevails over the hardest. ~ For, having no fixed form, ~ It can penetrate even where there is no visible opening. ~ This is the power of balanced action through nonaction. ~ This is the benefit of balanced action through nonaction. ~ Nonaction teaches without words, and benefits without actions. ~ No power in the world can even come close to it.

—[43c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ When the learned scholar hears the Tao ~ He makes every effort to master it. ~ When the mediocre scholar hears the Tao ~ It will seem as if he grasps and loses it, alternately. ~ When the weak scholar hears the Tao ~ He laughs wildly, ~ If he had not laughed at it, it would not be worthy to be Tao. ~ Therefore it is written: ~ "The enlightened Tao seems dark, ~ The advanced Tao seems backward, ~ The direct Tao seems obscure, ~ The most exalted quality looks like a valley, ~ The most pristine white looks colorless, ~ The most superior virtue looks insufficient, ~ The most solid quality is like a fragile stalk, ~ The simplest nature looks changeable, ~ The largest square has no angles, ~ The largest vessel is never whole, ~ The loudest sound is hardly heard, ~ The largest image cannot be imagined. ~ Tao, since it is hidden, is nameless." ~ But only the Tao can improve and mend. ~ To separate is to be constructive; to be constructive is to be destructive. ~ All things, whether they are constructive or destructive, lead to the One again.

—[43c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ The very softest thing of all can ride like a galloping horse through the hardest of things. ~ Like water, like water penetrating rock. ~ And so the invisible enters in. ~ That is why I know it is wise to act by doing nothing. ~ And how few, how very few understand this! ~ People teach in the world what I know to be true: ~ if you live violently that is how you will die.

— [43c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ The most supple in the world ~ Can go through the hardest in the world. ~ What consists of no substance can enter what has no crevices. ~ I thus know the benefit of inaction. ~ Teaching without words, ~ The benefit of inaction, ~ Are what few people in the world can perform and obtain.

— [43c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ The softest under Heaven can ride roughshod over the hardest. ~ That without substance can enter even into the smallest space. ~ That is why I know the benefit of doing nothing. ~ Teaching without words, benefiting without doing: ~ there are unfortunately very few people under Heaven who can reach these goals.

— [43c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ The feeblest is the strongest ~ That can run everywhere in the world, ~ It can go through being and non-being alike ~ Without any effort. ~ I therefore come to know the good ~ Of doing nothing willfully. ~ The efficiency of wordless teaching and doing nothing ~ Is rarely matched.

— [43c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ The Softest Thing ~ Lao Tze says, ~ The softest thing in the world dashes against and overwhelms the hardest; ~ that which is without form can go through where there is no crevice. ~ Through this I know that acting without the intent to control fate can be advantageous. ~ The advantage of teaching without speech and acting without the intent to control fate is incomparable in the world.

— [43c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ The non-existent can enter into the impenetrable. ~ By this I know that non-action is useful. ~ Teaching without words, utility without action - ~ Few in the world have come to this.

— [43c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ The world's softest thing gallops to and fro through the world's hardest thing. ~ Things without substance can penetrate things without crevices. ~ Thus I know the benefit of inaction. ~ But teaching without words and benefitting without action are understood by few in the entire world.

— [43c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ The Softest thing in the world, ~ rides right over the Hardest things in the world. ~ What-has-No-Being, ~ enters what-leaves-no-opening. ~ This makes me realize the advantage of Not Doing. ~ Teaching done by not talking, ~ the advantage gained by Not Doing - ~ few things in the world can match this.

— [43c33t] Cheng Lin ~ The softest thing in the world can overcome the hardest. ~ Such a thing seems to issue forth from nowhere, and yet it penetrates everywhere. ~ From this I have learned the advantage of inaction. ~ Few men in this world have learned the precept of silence, and the advantage of inaction.

— [43c34t] Yi Wu ~ That which is softest in the world overrides that which is hardest in the world. ~ Only that which has no existence can enter that which has no crevice. ~ Therefore, I know the benefit of non-action. ~ Teaching without words ~ And benefit without action; ~ Few in the world attain it.

— [43c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ The world's softest can ride roughshod over the world's hardest. ~ The pervasive force which has no form (thickness) ~ Can penetrate through the substance that has no breach (crevice). ~ Hence, I understand the advantage of non-action. ~ The principles of teaching without words (speechless tuition) and the benefits of non-action (laissez faire) are peerless under the sun.

— [43c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ The softest of all things can overcome the hardest of all things. ~ Only the insubstantial can penetrate the spaceless. ~ Thus, we know the benefit of non-interference and the teaching of the subtle Way of the universe that does not rely on words. ~ Few people under Heaven can attain it.

— [43c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ The meekest in the world ~ Penetrates the strongest in the world. ~ As nothingness enters into that-which-has-no-opening. ~ Hence, I am aware of the value of non-action ~ And of the value of teaching with no words, ~ As for the value of non-action, ~ Nothing in the world can match it.

— [43c38t] Henry Wei ~ Universal Application ~ Pien Yung ~ The softest things in the world ~ Can match and overcome the hardest. ~ Non-being penetrates even the crackless. ~ Thus the value of non-interference is clear to me. ~ The teaching without words, ~ And the virtue of non-interference, ~ Can hardly be matched in the world.

— [43c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ The softest under Heaven ~ Rides roughshod over the hardest under Heaven. ~ The beingless [wu yu] penetrates the spaceless [wu chien]. ~ From this I know the advantage of no-action [wu-wei]. ~ The wordless teaching, ~ The advantage of no-action - ~ Nothing under Heaven exemplifies them better.

— [43c40t] Tao Huang ~ What is softest in the world penetrates what is hardest in the world. ~ Nonbeing enters where there is no room. ~ From this I know the riches of nonaction. ~ Wordless teaching and the riches of nonaction is matched by very little in the world.

— [43c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ The world's softest can over-run the world's hardest. ~ It comes from the unknown (non-existence) and it enters no space. ~ From this we know how advantageous is non-interference! ~ Thus, education by non-preaching and the policy of non-interference have merits with which nothing under heaven can compare.

— [43c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ The softest things in the world overcome the hardest things in the world. ~ Non-being penetrates that in which there is no space. ~ Through this I know the advantage of taking no action. ~ Few in the world can understand the teaching without words and the advantage of taking no action.

— [43c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Мягчайшее под Небесами проскакивает сквозь твердейшее. ~ Неналичие проходит в то, что не имеет промежутка. ~ Именно поэтому я знаю о полезности бездействия. ~ В Поднебесной редко кому удастся овладеть учением, невыразимым в слове, и полезностью бездействия.

— [43c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Самое мягкое в Поднебесной может одолеть самое твёрдое в Поднебесной. ~ То, что не имеет сущности, проникает туда, где нет даже щели. ~ Потому-то я и постиг пользу недеяния. ~ Но учение вне слов и пользу недеяния крайне редко встретишь в Поднебесной.

— [43c93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ В Поднебесной предельно мягкое управляет предельно твердым. ~ А не имеющее наличия входит в плотное, не имеющее промежутков. ~ Вот и я обладаю знанием того, что польза проистекает из недеяния. ~ Бессловесное учение, польза недеяния - о, как мало в Поднебесной людей, которые могут этого достичь!

— [43c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ То, что в Поднебесной стало мягким, гонит то, что в Поднебесной стало твердым. ~ Небытие и бытие входят в неразрывное пространственно-временное единство. ~ Вот откуда я знаю, что недеяние имеет пользу. ~ Обучать без слов, приносить пользу недеянием - ~ редко кто в Поднебесной достиг этого.

— [43c95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ В Поднебесной самые слабые побеждают самых сильных. ~ Небытие проникает везде и всюду. ~ Вот почему я знаю пользу от недеяния. ~ В Поднебесной нет ничего, что можно было бы сравнивать с учением, не прибегающим к словам, и пользой от недеяния.

— [43c96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Мир смирен: все люди едят и бегают над его твердыней. ~ Небытие поглощается беспромежуточным. ~ Поэтому я знаю, что бездеятельность имеет высокое достоинство. ~ Бессловесное учение и бездеятельность полезнее всего существующего между небом и землей.

— [43c97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Самое мягкое в мире покрывает самое твердое. ~ Невещественное войдет в то, что не имеет пустот. ~ Так узнаем, что от недеяния есть выгода. ~ Учение без слов, выгоду недеяния ~ В мире способны понять немногие.

— [43c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Предельно мягкое в Поднебесной опережает в гонке предельно твердое в Поднебесной. ~ Отсутствие наличия проникает в пространство отсутствия. ~ Сущность моя посредством этого знает наличие прибыли-пользы в осуществлении отсутствия. ~ Учение, не выраженное в словах, прибыль-польза от не-осуществления, - в Поднебесной редко достигают этого.

— [44c01t] Robert G. — [44c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ As for your name and your body, which is the dearer? ~ As for your body and your wealth, which is the more to be prized? ~ As for gain and loss, which is the more painful? ~ Thus, an excessive love for anything will cost you dear in the end. ~ The storing up of too much goods will entail a heavy loss. ~ To know when you have enough is to be immune from disgrace. ~ To know when to stop is to be preserved from perils. ~ Only thus can you endure long.

— [44c03t] D. C. Lau ~ Your name or your person, ~ Which is dearer? ~ Your person or your goods, ~ Which is worth more? ~ Gain or loss, ~ Which is a greater bane? ~ That is why excessive meanness ~ Is sure to lead to great expense; ~ Too much store ~ Is sure to end in immense loss. ~ Know contentment ~ And you will suffer no disgrace; ~ Know when to stop ~ And you will meet with no danger. ~ You can then endure.

— [44c04t] R. L. Wing ~ Which is dearer, ~ Name or life? ~ Which means more, ~ Life or wealth? ~ Which is worse, ~ Gain or loss? ~ The stronger the attachments, ~ The greater the cost. ~ The more that is hoarded, ~ The deeper the loss. ~ Know what is enough; ~ Be without disgrace. ~ Know when to stop; ~ Be without danger. ~ In this way one lasts for a very long time.

— [44c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ Which is more dear to me, credit or life? ~ Which is more valuable, life or wealth? ~ Which is more harmful, gain or loss? ~ Therefore the excessive stint must cause enormous expenses, ~ The rich hoard must suffer a serious loss. ~ Whoever is contented will meet no disgrace, ~ Whoever knows when and where to stop will meet no danger, ~ And he is able to endure long without worry.

— [44c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ Fame or self: Which matters more? ~ Self or wealth: Which is more precious? ~ Gain or loss: Which is more painful? ~ He who is attached to things will suffer much. ~ He who saves will suffer heavy loss. ~ A contented man is never disappointed. ~ He who knows when to stop does not find himself in trouble. ~ He will stay forever safe.

— [44c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ Which is the dearer, ~ Fame or the body? ~ Which means more, ~ The body or wealth? ~ Which can be called an ill, ~ To gain or to lose? ~ Greater cost comes with greater craving. ~ Greater loss comes with greater accumulation. ~ He who knows what he needs ~ will attract no dishonor. ~ He who knows when to stop ~ will come to no grief. ~ Such people can have a lasting life.

— [44c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ Fame or health, which is dearer to you? ~ Health or wealth, which is more important to you? ~ Gain or loss, which hurts you more? ~ The more you love something, the more you have to pay. ~ The more wealth you accumulate, the more likely you will lose it. ~ If you know when to be satisfied, you will not be insulted, ~ If you know when to stop, you will not be hurt, ~ This is how you last long.

— [44c09t] Walter Gorn Old, STANDING STILL ~ Which is the nearer to you, your name or your person? ~ Which is the more precious, your person or your wealth? ~ Which is the greater evil, to gain or to lose? ~ Great devotion requires great sacrifice. ~ Great wealth implies great loss. ~ He who is content can never be ruined. ~ He who stands still will never meet danger. ~ These are the people who endure.

— [44c10t] James Legge ~ Or fame or life, ~ Which do you hold more dear? ~ Or life or wealth, ~ To which would you adhere? ~ Keep life and lose those other things; ~ Keep them and lose your life: - which brings ~ Sorrow and pain more near? ~ Thus we may see, ~ Who cleaves to fame ~ Rejects what is more great; ~ Who loves large stores ~ Gives up the richer state. ~ Who is content ~ Needs fear no shame. ~ Who knows to stop ~ Incurs no blame. ~ From danger free ~ Long live shall he.

— [44c11t] David Hinton ~ Name or self: which is precious? ~ Self or wealth: which is treasure? ~ Gain or loss: which is affliction? ~ Indulge love and the cost is dear. ~ Keep treasures and the loss is lavish. ~ Knowing contentment you avoid tarnish, and knowing when to stop you avoid danger. ~ Try it and your life will last and last.

— [44c12t] Chichung Huang ~ Fame and life - which is dearer? ~ Life and wealth - which is weightier? ~ Gain and loss - which is drearier? ~ Excessive love entails enormous costs; ~ Abundant stores entail heavy losses. ~ Therefore, knowing content ~ Will exempt you from humiliation; ~ Knowing where to stop ~ Will exempt you from peril. ~ You may long endure.

— [44c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ Your name and your body (shen), which is dearer? ~ Your body and material goods, which is more abundant? ~ Gain and loss, which is illness? ~ Therefore in excessive love one necessarily goes to great expenses, ~ In hoarding much one necessarily loses heavily. ~ Knowing contentment (chih tsu) one does not suffer disgrace, ~ Knowing when to stop one does not become exhausted (tai). ~ This way one may last long.

— [44c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ Which is the dearest [to a person], fame or body? ~ Which is more important, body or goods? ~ Which is more sickening, gain or loss? ~ Therefore, the more a person would indulge in the love [of fame and body], the more will he be excessively wasteful; ~ The more a person would aggregates goods, the more will he be worried about losing them. ~ A person will live a long and perpetuated life if and only if: ~ He would free himself from the inferiority [complex of not having enough goods] by conscientiously drawing a line when his obtainment [of goods and wealth] provides him modestly comfortable life; ~ And he would also break off from the insecurity [complex] by ceasing and desisting [from accumulation of goods and wealth].

— [44c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ As for your name and your self, which is the dearer? ~ As for your self and your wealth, which is the more to be prized? ~ As for gain or loss, which is more painful? ~ Thus, extreme love leads to great cost. ~ Much storage leads to heavy loss. ~ To know when to have enough is to be immune from disgrace. ~ To know when to stop is to be preserved from danger. ~ Only thus can you last long.

— [44c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ Which is dearer, fame or health? ~ Which is more important, wealth or health? ~ Which is more damaging, obtaining the former or losing the latter? ~ Excessively loving results in great expense. ~ Excessive stocking leads to huge losses. ~ Therefore those who are not greedy can avoid disgrace. ~ Those who know where to stop can avoid failure. ~ They can have long-lasting success.

— [44c17t] Arthur Waley ~ Fame or one's own self, which matters to one most? ~ One's own self or things bought, which should count most? ~ In the getting or the losing, which is worse? ~ Hence he who grudges expense pays dearest in the end; ~ He who has hoarded most will suffer the heaviest loss. ~ Be content with what you have and are, and no one can despoil you; ~ Who stops in time nothing can harm. ~ He is forever safe and secure.

— [44c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ Reputation or one's person, which is dear? ~ One's person or what he possesses, which is more? ~ Gain or loss, which is harm? ~ Thus it is that extreme meanness is sure to result in great expense, and much hoarding is sure to result in heavy loss. ~ One who knows contentment will not suffer damage to his reputation, and one who knows how to stop will not place himself in danger. ~ As such, he will last long.

— [44c19t] Lin Yutang ~ BE CONTENT ~ Fame or one's own self, which does one love more? ~ One's own self or material goods, which has more worth? ~ Loss (of self) or possession (of goods), which is the greater evil? ~ Therefore: ~ He who loves most spends most, ~ He who hoards much loses much. ~ The contented man meets no disgrace; ~ Who knows when to stop runs into no danger - ~ He can long endure.

— [44c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ Name or person, which is nearer? ~ Person or property, which is dearer? ~ Gain or loss, which is drearier? ~ Many loves entail great costs, ~ Many riches entail heavy losses. ~ Know contentment and you shall not be disgraced, ~ Know satisfaction and you shall not be imperiled; ~ then you will long endure.

— [44c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ Your integrity or your body: ~ Which is more important? ~ Your body or your possessions: ~ Which is worth more? ~ Gain or loss: ~ Which is more harmful? ~ Thus it is that the miser will pay much. ~ The hoarder will suffer great loss. ~ Be content with what you have ~ and you will not be disgraced. ~ Know when to stop ~ and you will be preserved from danger. ~ Only in this way will you long endure.

— [44c22t] David H. Li ~ Fame and health - which is dearer? ~ Health and wealth - which is more valuable? ~ Gain and loss - which is more damaging? ~ Excessive love demands large outlay. ~ Overabundant wealth results in heavy loss. ~ Thus, ~ knowing contentment brings about no disgrace; ~ knowing moderation brings about no danger. ~ One lasts long.

— [44c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ Which is more precious, fame or health? ~ Which is more important, health or wealth? ~ Which is more painful, gaining or losing? ~ The more excessive is your attachment, ~ The greater is your suffering. ~ The more excessive is your possession, ~ The heavier is your loss. ~ To know what is enough is to be free from disgrace. ~ To know when to stop is to be free from danger. ~ Those who practice this will long endure.

— [44c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ Tao begets one, ~ One begets two, ~ Two begets three, ~ Three begets all things. ~ All things, back to the shade, front to the light, ~ The harmony between them is the breath of life. ~ What others teach, I also teach: ~ "The cruel and violent do not die a natural death." ~ I will use that sentence as my guide.

— [44c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ What really matters most, ~ Your image or your soul? ~ What do you care about, ~ Your money, or your life? ~ What's actually the best, ~ Making it - or losing? ~ If you pour all your energy into one thing, ~ You're sure to harm the rest of your being ~ And if you invest it all in profit - ~ You'll end up losing the whole lot. ~ If you're not always wanting, you can be at peace. ~ And if you're not always trying to be someone ~ You can be who you really are and go the whole way.

— [44c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ Which is dearer, your name or your body? ~ Which is more important, your body or your goods? ~ Which is more harmful, gain or loss? ~ Excessive stinginess will result in great expense; ~ Too much amassment leads to great loss; ~ Knowing contentment avoids disgrace; ~ Knowing when to stop avoids danger. ~ Thus one can be long in safety.

— [44c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ Fame or your self: which is dearer? ~ Your self or your possessions: which is more precious? ~ To have or to lose: which is more detrimental? ~ That is why the most beloved will cost a great deal. ~ The more one stores, the more one will lose. ~ He who is content will not meet disgrace. ~ He who knows when to stop will not face danger. ~ Only then is there longevity.

— [44c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ Which is more precious, the body or the name? ~ Which is more important, the body or the goods? ~ Which is more harmful, gains or losses? ~ One who cares for reputation pays more. ~ One who possesses much fears death most. ~ Therefore, ~ One who is easily satisfied is not a disgrace. ~ One who knows where to stop is not stopped in life.

— [44c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ Gain And Loss ~ Lao Tze says, ~ Which means more to you, fame or self? ~

Which brings more to you, self or property? ~ Which ails you more, gain or loss? ~ The cost of the thing which you love is dear. ~ The treasure unscrupulously laid up shall result in heavy loss. ~ However, the contented man will not suffer disgrace. ~ A man who knows his limitations will not incur danger. ~ Namely, he can survive forever.

— [44c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ Fame or your person, which is nearer to you? ~ Your person or wealth, which is dearer to you? ~ Gain or loss, which brings more evil to you? ~ Over-love of anything will lead to wasteful spending; ~ Amassed riches will be followed by heavy plundering. ~ Therefore, he who knows contentment can never be humiliated; ~ He who knows where to stop can never be perishable; ~ He will long endure.

— [44c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ Of fame and life, which is more dear? ~ Of life and wealth, which is more worthy? ~ Of gain and loss, which is more distressing? ~ Therefore, loving in excess incurs great cost. ~ Overhoarding brings heavy loss. ~ To know what is enough means to avoid disgrace. ~ To know where to stop is to avoid danger. ~ Thus one can last long and endure.

— [44c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ Your fame or your self, which is closer to you? ~ Your self or your possessions, which counts for more? ~ Gaining or losing, which brings the pain? ~ Indeed: ~ Very fond, much expended; ~ much hoarding, heavy loss. ~ Be content and there will be no disgrace. ~ Know to stop and there will be no danger. ~ And you can last very long.

— [44c33t] Cheng Lin ~ Fame and life, - which is the more precious? ~ Life and property, - which is the more important? ~ Gain and loss, - which is the more to be preferred? ~ Inordinate love will surely result in abandonment. ~ Over-hoarding will surely end in heavy loss. ~ He who knows contentment will not suffer disgrace. ~ He who knows when to stop will not incur danger.

— [44c34t] Yi Wu ~ Of fame and body, which is dearer? ~ Of body and property, which is worth more? ~ Of gain and loss, which is more troublesome? ~ Therefore, excessive love surely is great waste. ~ Much storing up surely is a heavy loss. ~ To know when you have enough ~ is to avoid disgrace. ~ To know when to stop ~ is to be free from danger. ~ Only thus can one long endure.

— [44c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ Personal glory or your life, ~ Which do you treasure more? ~ Your life or worldly possessions, ~ Which is more precious to you? ~ Gaining one but losing the other, which is more deleterious? ~ Therefore, wanting something badly can cost you dearly. ~ The more goods you hoard, the more you can possibly lose. ~ By being contented, you will never suffer any humiliation. ~ Knowing when to stop, you will never put your life in jeopardy. ~ Hence, you will have a long and wonderful life.

— [44c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ As for your fame and your life, which matters more? ~ As for your life and your wealth, which is more precious? ~ As for gain or loss, which is more damaging? ~ He who is most endeared to something must pay dearest for it. ~ He who has hoarded much will suffer great loss. ~ He who knows when enough is enough saves himself from humiliation. ~ He who knows when to stop protects himself from peril. ~ To know this is to be long enduring.

— [44c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ Man's name or man's self - which is closer to him? ~ Man's self or his property - which is more valuable to him? ~ Success or failure - which is more harmful to him? ~ Things that are cherished more, cost more. ~ The more that is kept, the more that is missed. ~ The man who is easily contented is free from shame. ~ The man who knows the right time to stop is free from danger. ~ Thus, he will last long.

— [44c38t] Henry Wei ~ Self-Imposed Abstinences ~ Li Chieh ~ Which is more dear: ~ Fame or health? ~ Which is more valuable: ~ Health or wealth? ~ Which is more baneful: ~ Gain or loss? ~ Excessive love is bound to cause great expense. ~ Immense hoarding is bound to end in heavy loss. ~ He who knows contentment is free from disgrace; ~ He who knows when to quit will be free from peril. ~ He can endure a long time.

— [44c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ Your name or your body, which is dearer? ~ Your body or your possessions, which is more valuable? ~ Gaining or losing, which worries you more? ~ Therefore, when your craving is excessive, your spending is extravagant. ~ When you store much, you are bound to lose much. ~ Know how to be content, and you will not be disgraced. ~ Know when to stop, and you will be free from danger. ~ Thus you will be long-lasting.

— [44c40t] Tao Huang ~ Which is more cherished, the name or the body? ~ Which is worth more, the body or possessions? ~ Which is more beneficial, to gain or to lose? ~ Extreme fondness is necessarily very costly. ~ The more you cling to, the more you lose. ~ So knowing what is sufficient averts disgrace. ~ Knowing when to stop averts danger. ~ This can lead to a longer life.

— [44c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ Between your fame and yourself, which is closer to you? ~ Between yourself and your wealth, which is more dear to you? ~ Between gain and loss, which is more of a burden to you? ~ Thus, excessive lust will cost one a great deal in the end. ~ Excessive wealth will make one suffer a heavy loss. ~ One who knows satisfaction will not be disgraced. ~ One who knows when to stop will not reach a perilous end. ~ Then he can rule everywhere and forever.

— [44c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ Which does one love more, fame or one's own life? ~ Which is more valuable, one's own life or wealth? ~ Which is worse, gain or loss? ~ Therefore he who has lavish desires will spend extravagantly. ~ He who hoards most will lose heavily. ~ He who is contented suffers no disgrace. ~ He who knows when to stop is free from danger. ~ Therefore he can long endure.

— [46c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ When the world has the Way, ambling horses are retired to fertilize [fields]. ~ When the world lacks the Way, war horses are reared in the suburbs. ~ Of crimes - none is greater than having things that one desires; ~ Of disasters - none is greater than not knowing when one has enough. ~ Of defects - none brings more sorrow than the desire to attain. ~ {Therefore, the contentment one has when he knows that he has enough,} is abiding contentment indeed.

— [46c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ WHEN the world is in possession of the Tao, ~ The galloping horses are led to fertilize the fields with their droppings. ~ When the world has become Taoless, ~ War horses breed themselves on the suburbs. ~ There is no calamity like not knowing what is enough. ~ There is no evil like covetousness. ~ Only he who knows what is enough will always have enough.

— [46c03t] D. C. Lau ~ When the way prevails in the empire, fleet-footed horses are relegated to ploughing the fields; ~ When the way does not prevail in the empire, war-horses breed on the border. ~ There is no crime greater than having too many desires; ~ There is no disaster greater than not being content; ~ There is no misfortune greater than being covetous. ~ Hence in being content, one will always have enough.

— [46c04t] R. L. Wing ~ When the world possesses the Tao, ~ Even fast horses are used for their dung. ~ When the world is without the Tao, ~ War-horses are raised in the suburbs. ~ There is no greater misfortune ~ Than not knowing what is enough. ~ There is no greater fault ~ Than desiring to acquire. ~ Therefore know that enough is enough. ~ There will always be enough.

— [46c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ When state politics are on the right track, war horses are used in farming. ~ When state politics are off track, even mares with foal have to be used in battle. ~ There is no calamity greater than discontentment. ~ There is no guilt greater than covetousness. ~ Therefore the contentment with knowing contentment is always contented.

— [46c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ When the Tao is present in the universe, ~ The horses haul manure. ~ When the Tao is absent from the universe, ~ War horses are bred outside the city. ~ There is no greater sin than desire, ~ No greater curse than discontent, ~ No greater misfortune than wanting something for oneself. ~ Therefore he who knows that enough is enough will always have enough.

— [46c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ When things under heaven follow the Dao, ~ Horses will roam freely, and their droppings will be found anywhere. ~ When things under heaven have departed from the Dao, ~ The horses will be reared in special stables away from the city. ~ No wrong is greater than having objects to crave for. ~ No disaster is greater than not knowing one's true needs. ~ No greater ill is invited than by craving to possess. ~ Thus, the satisfaction from knowing one's true needs and asking for no more is eternal.

— [46c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ When the DAO rules, even the great war horses are used to plow the field, ~ When the DAO is overruled, even the pregnant horses are used in battle. ~ The biggest disaster is not knowing when to be satisfied, ~ The biggest mistake is to always want more. ~ Therefore, knowing when to be satisfied is the ever-lasting satisfaction.

— [46c09t] Walter Gorn Old, CURBING DESIRE ~ When Tao is in the world, horses are used in the pasture land. ~ When Tao has left the world, chargers are reared in the wilderness. ~ There is no greater sin than indulging desire. ~ There is no greater pain than discontent. ~ There is nothing more disastrous than the greed of gain. ~ Hence the satisfaction of contentment is an everlasting competence.

— [46c10t] James Legge ~ When the Tao prevails in the world, they send back their swift horses to (draw) the dung-carts. ~ When the Tao is disregarded in the world, the war-horses breed in the border lands. ~ There is no guilt greater than to sanction ambition; ~ no calamity greater than to be discontented with one's lot; ~ no fault greater than the wish to be getting. ~ Therefore the sufficiency of contentment is an enduring and unchanging sufficiency.

— [46c11t] David Hinton ~ When all beneath heaven abides in Way, fast horses are kept to work the fields. ~ When all beneath heaven forgets Way, war horses are bred among the fertility altars. ~ What calamity is greater than no contentment, and what flaw greater than the passion for gain? ~ The contentment of fathoming contentment - there lies the contentment that endures.

— [46c12t] Chichung Huang ~ When the empire possessed the Tao, ~ Galloping horses were turned back to manure the fields; ~ When the empire has lost the Tao, ~ War-horses are bred on the frontier. ~ No crime is greater than indulging in greed; ~ No misfortune is greater than not knowing content; ~ No catastrophe is more grievous than thirsting for gain. ~ Therefore, the content of knowing content ~ Makes one constantly content.

— [46c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ When the world practices Tao, ~ Fast horses are used for their dung. ~ When the world does not practice Tao, ~ War horses give birth at the borders. ~ Among offenses (tsui), none is greater than having what is desirable. ~ Among calamities (huo), none is greater than not knowing contentment. ~ Among blames (chiu), none is greater than the desire for gain. ~ Therefore the contentment that comes from knowing contentment ~ Is a long lasting contentment.

— [46c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ When the world was on the right course, the best way people could make use of their good running horses was to walk them, so that they could collect their manure [as fertilizer or fuels]; ~ When the world was not on the right course, [even pregnant] horses were used for combat that they were compelled to give births amidst ruins in battlefields. ~ There is no greater sin than the sin caused by over-indulging oneself; ~ There is no more serious misfortune [one may have than being suffered from] greed; ~ There is no more condemnable fault one has committed than being obsessed with obtainment. ~ Accordingly, one who knows what is reasonably enough shall always hold adequate [Te to be in harmony with Tao].

— [46c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ When the world is reigned by the Way, the galloping horses are led to fertilize the fields with their droppings. ~ When the world is wayless, war horses breed themselves on the suburbs. ~ There is no greater calamity than not knowing "enough". ~ There is no greater evil than will to gain. ~ Therefore "enough" of knowing "enough" is constant "enough".

— [46c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ When Tao is dominant, the fast horse is used for farming. ~ When Tao is lost, the female horse is used for war and gives birth in the field. ~ The worst misfortune is insatiability. ~ The worst mistake is rapacity. ~ Therefore, content from knowing enough makes people always satisfied.

— [46c17t] Arthur Waley ~ When there is Tao in the empire ~ The galloping steeds are turned back to fertilize the ground by their droppings. ~ When there is not Tao in the empire ~ War horses will be reared even on the sacred mounds below the city walls. ~ No lure is greater than to possess what others want, ~ No disaster greater than not to be content with what one has, ~ No presage of evil greater than that men should be wanting to get more. ~ Truly: 'He who has once known the contentment that comes simply through being content, will never again be otherwise than contented'.

— [46c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ When the Dao prevails among all under Heaven, one relegates coursers to producing manure. ~ When the Dao does not prevail among all under Heaven, war horses are born in the fields outside towns. ~ Nothing causes greater disaster than not being content, and nothing brings about greater blame than craving something. ~ When contentment fills one perfectly, this is indeed constant contentment!

— [46c19t] Lin Yutang ~ RACING HORSES ~ When the world lives in accord with Tao, ~ Racing horses are turned back to haul refuse carts. ~ When the world lives not in accord with Tao, ~ Cavalry abounds in the countryside. ~ There is no greater curse than the lack of contentment. ~ No greater sin than the desire for possession. ~ Therefore he who is contented with contentment shall be always content.

— [46c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ When the Way prevails under heaven, ~ swift horses are relegated to fertilizing fields. ~ When the Way does not prevail under heaven, ~ war-horses breed in the suburbs. ~ No guilt is greater than giving in to desire, ~ No disaster is greater than discontent, ~ No crime is more grievous than the desire for gain. ~ Therefore, ~ Contentment that derives from knowing when to be content is eternal contentment.

— [46c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ When the Tao prevails in the world ~ swift horses are used to fertilize the fields. ~ When the Tao is unheeded ~ war horses are bred on the border lands. ~ There is no greater offense than harboring desires. ~ There is no greater disaster than discontent. ~ There is no greater misfortune than wanting more. ~ Hence, if you are content ~ You will always have enough.

— [46c22t] David H. Li ~ When the world is governed by Direction, horses haul manure. ~ When the world is not governed by Direction, mares foal near [war] location. ~ No calamity is greater than not being content; ~ No fault is greater than the desire to gain at any cost. ~ Thus, one who is content in being content is always content.

— [46c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ When the world follows the Tao, ~ Horses are used to fertilize the farm fields. ~ When the world does not follow the Tao, ~ Even mares are expended to breed in the battlefields. ~ When the individual follows the Tao, ~ Energy is used in his harmonious inner development. ~ When the individual does not follow the Tao, ~ Energy is expended in his continuous inner conflict. ~ There is no greater vice than giving in to greed, ~ No greater calamity than not knowing contentment, ~ No greater imputation than succumbing to covetousness. ~ Therefore, know and be content with what is enough, ~ Then you will always have enough.

— [46c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ When Tao rules the world ~ Racehorses are harnessed to the garbage cart in the fields. ~ When Tao does not rule the world ~ War-horses graze in the meadows on the outskirts of the city. ~ There is no greater sin than going after what man desires, ~ There is no greater sorrow than not knowing a measure of contentment, ~ There is no greater obstacle than falling into the pit of greed. ~ Therefore, it is sufficient for you to know a measure of contentment in order to know contentment in proportion, so as to satisfy your measure.

— [46c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ 'When the Tao runs the world, the horses work the farms.' ~ Without Tao the horses are led into war along the borders. ~ You see, if people want more and more it can only lead to disaster. ~ Greed is the seed of apocalypse - ~ it is the rocket-fuel of selfishness: me, me, me! ~ If people could only be glad with all they have, if they only knew it, they'd be happy.

— [46c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ When the Tao prevails in the world, ~ The battle steeds are returned to farmers for tilling the fields; ~ When the Tao does not prevail in the world, ~ Even pregnant mares are taken over for wars. ~ No crime is greater than greediness; ~ No disaster is greater than the lack of contentment; ~ Thus the contentment of feeling content ~ Is an eternal contentment.

— [46c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ When there is Tao under Heaven, fleet-footed horses are working in the fields. ~ When there is no Tao under Heaven, war horses appear outside the city. ~ There is no greater crime than having wrong desires. ~ There is no greater hardship than being discontent. ~ There is no greater misfortune than obtaining one's own triumph. ~ That is why he who feels content is always content.

— [46c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ With the Way, horses are used for farming. ~ With the Way lost, horses give births in battlefields. ~ No disaster is worse than greed. ~ No fault is worse than desire. ~ Therefore, one who can be easily satisfied ~ Will be always satisfied.

— [46c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ On Contentment ~ Lao Tze says, ~ When the world lives in accord with the Tao, racing horses are sent to the dung-cart. ~ When the world lives not in accord with the Tao, the war-horses breed on the border. ~ There is no sin greater than to sanction ambition; ~ no calamity greater than not being contented; ~ no fault greater than the wish to obtain. ~ Therefore, he who is content with contentment shall be always content.

— [46c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ When Tao reigns in the world, ~ Swift horses are curbed for hauling the dung-carts (in the field). ~ When Tao does not reign in the world, ~ War horses are bred on the commons (outside the cities). ~ There is no greater crime than seeking what men desire; ~ There is no greater misery than knowing no content; ~ There is no greater calamity than indulging in greed. ~ Therefore the contentment of knowing content will ever be contented.

— [46c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ In a world with Tao, ~ racing horses are drawn back [to the fields] for dung. ~ In a world without Tao, ~ war horses are raised outside the city. ~ No crime is greater than having desires. ~ No calamity is greater than not knowing contentment. ~ No fault is greater than longing for gain. ~ Therefore, the contentment of knowing contentment is always contentment.

— [46c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ When the world has Tao, ~ they have no use for saddle horses, ~ using them to haul manure. ~ When the world has no Tao, ~ they raise war horses on sacred ground. ~ Nothing is more crime producing than desirable things; ~ nothing is a worse misfortune than not being content; ~ nothing makes for more guilt than desire for gain. ~ Yes: ~ Be content with enough, and there will always be enough.

— [46c33t] Cheng Lin ~ When Truth prevails in this world, horses are employed to work on the farm. ~ When Truth fails to prevail in this world, horses employed in war are bred on the outskirts of the metropolis. ~ There is no error greater than that of having many desires. ~ There is no calamity greater than the feeling of discontent. ~ There is no fault greater than the desire for gain. ~ Therefore, he who knows contentment is always contented.

— [46c34t] Yi Wu ~ When the world is with the Way, ~ Galloping horses are sent back for dung. ~ When the world is without the Way, ~ War horses are raised in the suburbs. ~ No calamity is greater than not knowing contentment; ~ No trouble is greater than desiring gain. ~ Therefore, the contentment of knowing contentment is constant contentment.

— [46c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ When Dao prevails, thoroughbred horses plough the land. ~ When Dao is in decline, cavalry horses give birth near the battlefields. ~ There is no curse worse than insatiable greed. ~ There is no misfortune worse than unquenchable desire. ~ Only a person who knows when enough is enough is always contented.

— [46c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ When the people of the world live in accord with the subtle Way of the universe, ~ horses are used for agricultural purposes. ~ When the people of the world do not live in accord with the subtle Way of the universe, ~ then horses, even pregnant mares, are driven into the battlefield and bred there. ~ There is no greater calamity for a nation, or for an individual, ~ than not finding contentment with one's own sufficiency. ~ There is no greater mistake for a nation, or for an individual, ~ than to be covetous. ~ Hence, when one is content within one's own nature, one will always have enough.

— [46c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ When the world is governed according to Tao, ~ Horses are used to work on the farm. ~ When the world is not governed according to Tao, ~ Horses and weapons are produced for the frontier. ~ No crime is greater than that of ambition. ~ No misfortune is greater than that of discontentment. ~ No fault is greater than that of conquering. ~ Therefore, to know contentment through contentment ~ Is to always have enough.

— [46c38t] Henry Wei ~ Moderation of Desire ~ Chien Yu ~ When the world goes in accord with Tao, ~ Horses are used for hauling manure. ~ When the world is out of keeping with Tao, ~ Horses are reared in the suburbs for war. ~ No sin is greater than yielding to desires; ~ No misfortune greater than not knowing contentment; ~ No fault greater than hankering after wealth. ~ Therefore, know contentment! ~ He who knows contentment is always content.

— [46c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ When Tao prevails under Heaven, ~ Fleet-footed horses are taken out [of service] to fertilize the fields. ~ When Tao fails to prevail under Heaven, ~ War horses breed on the sacred mounds outside the city walls. ~ No misfortune is greater than not knowing contentment; ~ No calamity is greater than wanting to possess. ~ Therefore, he who knows the sufficiency of contentment ~ Is always contented.

— [46c40t] Tao Huang ~ When there is Tao in the world, work horses are used to fertilize the land. ~ Without Tao in the world, the war horse flourishes in the countryside. ~ There is no crime greater than fostering desire. ~ There is no disaster greater than not knowing when there is enough. ~ There is no fault greater than wanting to possess. ~ Knowing that sufficiency is enough always suffices.

— [46c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ When the world was under the rule of Dao, horses were distributed to cultivate farms. ~ When the world was without the rule of Dao, horses were armed and brought to battlefields. ~ No

— [47c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ Without going outside, you may know the whole world. ~ Without looking through the window, you may see the ways of heaven. ~ The farther you go, the less you know. ~ Thus the sage knows without traveling; ~ He sees without looking; ~ He works without doing.

— [47c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ Without stepping out of the door, ~ One can know the universal truth that pervades the universe. ~ Without peeping through the window, ~ One can see the Dao of Nature. ~ He who goes to a distant land in search of the Truth ~ Will only distant himself from the Truth. ~ The Sage knows it all without traveling afar. ~ He is illuminated without seeing with his physical eyes. ~ He accomplishes without ever contriving to accomplish.

— [47c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ Without traveling, you can know what happens in the world. ~ Without looking out the window, you can know what happens in the universe. ~ The more you travel, the less you know. ~ Therefore, the great men knew everything without traveling, ~ Recognized everything without seeing it personally, ~ Accomplished everything by WUWEI.

— [47c09t] Walter Gorn Old, LOOKING ABROAD ~ A man may know the world without leaving his own home. ~ Through his windows he can see the supreme Tao. ~ The further afield he goes the less likely is he to find it. ~ Therefore the wise man knows without travelling, names things without seeing them, and accomplishes everything without action.

— [47c10t] James Legge ~ Without going outside his door, one understands (all that takes place) under the sky; ~ without looking out from his window, one sees the Tao of Heaven. ~ The farther that one goes out (from himself), the less he knows. ~ Therefore the sages got their knowledge without travelling; ~ gave their (right) names to things without seeing them; ~ and accomplished their ends without any purpose of doing so.

— [47c11t] David Hinton ~ You can know all beneath heaven though you never step out the door, ~ and you can see the Way of heaven though you never look out the window. ~ The further you explore, the less you know. ~ So it is that a sage knows by going nowhere, names by seeing nothing, perfects by doing nothing.

— [47c12t] Chichung Huang ~ Without leaving the door, ~ You may know everything under heaven; ~

Without peeping through the window, ~ You may know heaven's Tao. ~ The farther you venture abroad, ~ The less you know. ~ Hence, the sage man ~ Knew without traveling, ~ Understood without seeing, ~ Accomplished without acting.

— [47c13t] Ellen M. — [47c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ We do not necessarily have to leave our house to learn about the world; ~ It is possible to understand heavenly Tao without looking through windows; ~ For the farther one travels, the less one knows; ~ Therefore, ~ A Sage would know the situation without necessarily being there himself - he can size up the circumstance without being needfully there; ~ [Most important of all] he can accomplish deeds without tampering with [Nature].

— [47c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ Without going out of your door, you are aware of the world. ~ Without looking out of your window, you see the Way of Heaven. ~ The farther one goes, the less one knows. ~ Thus, the sage knows without going out, sees without looking, and achieves without doing.

— [47c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ Without leaving home, one can know the world. ~ Without watching through window, one can know astronomy. ~ The farther one travels, the less one understands. ~ Therefore, the sage knows without traveling, understands without seeing, and succeeds without forcing.

— [47c17t] Arthur Waley ~ Without leaving his door ~ He knows everything under heaven. ~ Without looking out of his window ~ He knows all the ways of heaven. ~ For the further one travels ~ The less one knows. ~ Therefore the Sage arrives without going, ~ Sees all without looking, ~ Does nothing, yet achieves everything.

— [47c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ Know all under Heaven without even leaving your gate; ~ see the Dao of Heaven without even peering out your window. ~ The farther one goes out, the less he will know. ~ Thus it is that the sage knows without making a move and names without seeing. ~ He brings about the completion of things without taking action.

— [47c19t] Lin Yutang ~ PURSUIT OF KNOWLEDGE ~ Without stepping outside one's doors, ~ One can know what is happening in the world, ~ Without looking out of one's windows, ~ One can see the Tao of Heaven. ~ The farther one pursues knowledge, ~ The less one knows. ~ Therefore the Sage knows without running about, ~ Understands without seeing, ~ Accomplishes without doing.

— [47c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ Without going out-of-doors, ~ one may know all under heaven; ~ Without peering through windows, ~ one may know the Way of heaven. ~ The farther one goes, ~ The less one knows. ~ For this reason, ~ The sage ~ knows without journeying, ~ understands without looking, ~ accomplishes without acting.

— [47c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ Without going outside ~ you can know the ways of the world. ~ Without looking through the window ~ you can see the way of heaven. ~ The farther you go the less you know. ~ Therefore, ~ the True Person arrives without traveling, perceives without looking, and acts without striving.

— [47c22t] David H. Li ~ Without leaving home, one knows the world; ~ Without looking through the window, one discerns the cosmos's Direction. ~ The farther one moves about, the less one knows. ~ Thus, ~ the sage knows without moving about, ~ discerns without looking through the window, ~ accomplishes with laissez-faire.

— [47c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ Without going out the door, ~ You can know the ways of the world. ~ Without looking out the window, ~ You can know the ways of heaven. ~ The farther you go outward, the less you know. ~ Thus, the sage knows without going outward, ~ Understands without looking outward, ~ Accomplishes without acting outward.

— [47c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ Without crossing the threshold of the gate ~ It is possible to know the entire world. ~ Without looking through the window ~ It is possible to see the Tao of heaven. ~ The further the person goes, ~ The less he knows. ~ Therefore the sage ~ Knows everything without going through the streets, ~ Names everything without seeing it, ~ Accomplishes every task without doing anything.

— [47c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ Without going anywhere, ~ you can know the whole world. ~ Without even opening your window, ~ you can know the ways of Heaven. ~ You see: the further away you go, the less you know ... ~ The sage doesn't need to travel around: ~ Why? ~ Because he can still understand. ~ He sees without needing 'to see', ~ He never does anything, and yet it all happens.

— [47c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ Without stirring out of the house, ~ One can know everything in the world; ~ Without looking out of the window, ~ One can see the Tao of heaven. ~ The further one travels, ~ The less one knows. ~ That is why the sage ~ Knows everything without going out; ~ Sees the Tao of heaven without looking out of the window; ~ Succeeds without resorting to action.

— [47c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ Without going outside ~ one can know the whole world. ~ Without looking out of the window ~ one can see the Tao of Heaven. ~ The further one goes, the less one knows. ~ Therefore the sage ~ without walking, knows everything, ~ without seeing, identifies everything, ~ without doing, accomplishes everything.

— [47c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ Without going out of the door, ~ One can feel the world. ~ Without looking out of the window, ~ One can feel the universe. ~ The farther one goes, ~ The less one knows. ~ Therefore, ~ The wise person arrives without traveling, ~ Knows without seeing, ~ And achieves without willful actions.

— [47c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ Pursuit of Knowledge ~ Lao Tze says, ~ Without stepping outside the door, a man can know what has taken place in the world. ~ Without looking out the window, a man can discern the Tao of Heaven. ~ The farther a man goes out, the less he knows. ~ Therefore, the sages got their knowledge not through visiting there; ~ gave their names to things not because they had seen them; ~ and accomplished their ends not because they ever had intent to control fate.

— [47c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ Without going out of the door ~ One can know the whole world; ~ Without peeping out of the window ~ One can see the Tao of heaven. ~ The further one travels ~ The less one knows. ~ Therefore the Sage knows everything without travelling; ~ He names everything without seeing it; ~ He accomplishes everything without doing it.

— [47c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ Without going out-of-doors, ~ One can know the whole world. ~ Without looking out of windows, ~ One can see the Tao of heaven. ~ The farther one goes, the less one knows. ~ Therefore, the Sage does not go and yet knows, ~ Doesn't see and yet names, ~ Doesn't act and yet completes.

— [47c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ Understanding the world ~ without going out the door. ~ Understanding Heaven's Way ~ without looking out the window. ~ Traveling very widely, understanding very little. ~ And so the Wise Person: ~ Knows without any going, ~ names without any looking, ~ accomplishes without any doing.

— [47c33t] Cheng Lin ~ Without leaving the house, one may know everything about the world. ~ Without looking through the window, one may see the way of Heaven. ~ The further one travels, the less he knows. ~ Thus, the Sage possesses wisdom without seeking; ~ becomes famous without display; ~ achieves success without effort.

— [47c34t] Yi Wu ~ Without going out of doors, one can know the world. ~ Without looking out of windows, one can see the Way of Heaven. ~ The more one goes, the less one knows. ~ Therefore, the sage ~ knows without travelling, ~ names without looking, ~ achieves without action.

— [47c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ Without stepping out of the house, ~ You can know what is going on in the world. ~ Without peering out the window, ~ You can understand the way of Dao. ~ The farther you travel, the less you really know. ~ Therefore, the sage knows without having to travel. ~ Without seeing for himself, he can understand the law of nature. ~ Without meddling, he accomplishes easily.

— [47c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ Without going out of your door, you can know the ways of the world. ~ Without looking through your window, you can see the Way of Heaven. ~ The farther you go, the less you know. ~ Thus, one of deep virtue knows without going, ~ sees without looking, ~ and accomplishes without doing.

— [47c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ Without going out of the gate, ~ One is aware of the world. ~ Without peering outside, ~ One sees the way of heaven. ~ The farther away one is, ~ The less one is aware. ~ Therefore, the wise is aware of all things ~ Without moving a step. ~ He identifies all things ~ Without looking at them. ~ He completes all things ~ Without action.

— [47c38t] Henry Wei ~ Far Seeing ~ Chien Yuan ~ Without going out of doors, ~ One can know the world; ~ Without looking through the window, ~ One can realize the Way of Heaven. ~ The farther one goes, ~ The less one knows. ~ Therefore, the Sage knows without going out, ~ Discriminates without seeing, ~ And accomplishes without action.

— [47c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ Without leaving the door, ~ You may know all under Heaven. ~ Without looking out the window, ~ You may know the way of Heaven. ~ The further you go, ~ The less you know. ~ Therefore the sage ~ Knows without going, ~ Sees without looking, ~ Fulfills without doing.

— [47c40t] Tao Huang ~ In order to know the world, do not step outside the door. ~ In order to know the Tao of heaven, do not peer through the window. ~ The further out you go, the less you know. ~ So the sage knows without moving, identifies without seeing, accomplishes without acting.

— [47c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ Without leaving the door one may know the course of the world. ~ Without looking through the window one may see the law of nature. ~ The maximum extreme possesses a minimum of knowledge. ~ Hence a sage ruler knew without traveling; ~ designated without seeing; ~ and accomplished without interfering.

— [47c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ One may know the world without going out of doors. ~ One may see the Way of Heaven without looking through the windows. ~ The further one goes, the less one knows. ~ Therefore the sage knows without going about, ~ Understands without seeing, ~ And accomplishes without any action.

— [48c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ LEARNING consists in daily accumulating; ~ The practice of Tao consists in daily diminishing. ~ Keep on diminishing and diminishing, ~ Until you reach the state of No-Ado. ~ No-Ado, and yet nothing is left undone. ~ To win the world, one must renounce all. ~ If one still has private ends to serve, ~ One will never be able to win the world.

— [48c03t] D. C. Lau ~ In the pursuit of learning one knows more every day; ~ In the pursuit of the way one does less every day. ~ One does less and less until one does nothing at all, and when one does nothing at all there is nothing that is undone. ~ It is always through not meddling that the empire is won. ~ Should you meddle, then you are not equal to the task of winning the empire.

— [48c04t] R. L. Wing ~ To pursue the academic, add to it daily. ~ To pursue the Tao, subtract from it daily. ~ Subtract and subtract again, ~ To arrive at nonaction. ~ Through nonaction nothing is left undone. ~ The world is always held without effort. ~ The moment there is effort, The world is beyond holding.

— [48c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ The pursuit of learning is to increase (knowledge) day after day. ~ The pursuit of Tao is to decrease (knowledge) day after day. ~ Decreasing and decreasing again, till one has reached nonaction (wu-wei). ~ Nonaction and yet there is nothing that is not done by it. ~ To govern all under Heaven one usually should not take any arbitrary action. ~ If one tends to do anything arbitrarily, ~ One is not qualified to govern all under Heaven.

— [48c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ In the pursuit of learning, every day something is acquired. ~ In the pursuit of Tao, every day something is dropped. ~ Less and less is done ~ Until non-action is achieved. ~ When nothing is done, nothing is left undone. ~ The world is ruled by letting things take their course. ~ It cannot be ruled by interfering.

— [48c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ The more we learn, ~ The more things are plowed into our minds; ~ The more we follow the Dao, ~ The more things are taken out of our minds. ~ As we take more and more things out of our mind, ~ We finally arrive at the state of losing the sense of contriving and action. ~ At that point we be in the state of non-action. ~ At that point all actions will be done in the state of non-action. ~ To win the hearts of all under heaven, ~ We must always leave people alone. ~ If we do not leave them alone, ~ We will not win their adherence.

—[48c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ The more you study a subject, the more you know; ~ the more you study the DAO, the less you know; ~ Less and less, until at the end you achieve WUWEI. ~ By WUWEI, you can accomplish everything. ~ If you want to govern a country, always try to let nothing happen; ~ If you make things happen, you are not suitable for governing the country.

—[48c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE DISTRESS OF KNOWLEDGE ~ Bodily and mental distress is increased every day in the effort to get knowledge. ~ But this distress is daily diminished by the getting of Tao. ~ Do you continually curtail your effort till there be nothing of it left? ~ By non-action there is nothing which cannot be effected. ~ A man might, without the least distress, undertake the government of the world. ~ But those who distress themselves about governing the world are not fit for it.

—[48c10t] James Legge ~ He who devotes himself to learning (seeks) from day to day to increase (his knowledge); ~ he who devotes himself to the Tao (seeks) from day to day to diminish (his doing). ~ He diminishes it and again diminishes it, till he arrives at doing nothing (on purpose). ~ Having arrived at this point of non-action, there is nothing which he does not do. ~ He who gets as his own all under heaven does so by giving himself no trouble (with that end). ~ If one take trouble (with that end), he is not equal to getting as his own all under heaven.

—[48c11t] David Hinton ~ To work at learning brings more each day. ~ To work at Way brings less each day, ~ less and still less ~ until you're doing nothing yourself. ~ And when you're doing nothing yourself, there's nothing you don't do. ~ To grasp all beneath heaven, leave it alone. ~ Leave it alone, that's all, ~ and nothing in all beneath heaven will elude you.

—[48c12t] Chichung Huang ~ He who pursues learning daily increases; ~ He who hears the Tao daily decreases. ~ He decreases and decreases ~ Until he acts not ~ And has no intention to act. ~ He who wishes to win all under heaven ~ Never creates disturbances. ~ If he creates disturbances, ~ He is no longer fit to win all under heaven.

—[48c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ To pursue (wei) learning one increases daily. ~ To pursue (wei) Tao one decreases daily. ~ To decrease and again to decrease, ~ Until one arrives at not doing (wu-wei). ~ Not doing (wu-wei) and yet nothing is not done. ~ Always take the empire when there are no businesses. ~ If there are businesses, ~ It is not worthwhile to take the empire.

—[48c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ In order to enhance his scholarship, a person must strive for improvement all the time; ~ To enrich his cultivation of Te, a person must chip off [his selfishness] day after day; ~ [A Sage] reduces his [selfishness] bit by bit, until he is finally capable of practicing the principle of non-interference; ~ [After he has habitually internalized the above three self-improvements] he will be able to administer whatever tasks properly [without transgressing the principle of non-interference]. ~ Those [kings and lords], who had won over the world did not originally set out [with the intention] to triumph over the world; ~ [On the other hand] Those [kings and lords], who primarily intended to conquer the world, had for this reason have their arete pared too much that they are not able to accomplish such grand tasks of winning over the whole world.

—[48c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ By learning, one advances day by day. ~ By practicing the Way, one reduces day by day. ~ Reducing and reducing, until you reach the state of non-doing. ~ Non-doing, and yet not not doing. ~ To win over the world, one must "have no work". ~ If one still has work, one will never be able to win over the world.

— [48c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ Studying can be of benefit from day to day. ~ Following Tao one uses less force day after day. ~ Less and less, one uses no force. ~ Yet, he succeeds in everything. ~ To govern the world, one interferes nothing. ~ If he interferes, he is unqualified to govern the world.

— [48c17t] Arthur Waley ~ Learning consists in adding to one's stock day by day; ~ The practice of Tao consists in ~ 'Subtracting day by day, ~ Subtracting and yet again subtracting ~ Till one has reached inactivity. ~ But by this very inactivity ~ Everything can be activated.' ~ Those who of old won the adherence of all who live under heaven ~ All did so by not interfering. ~ Had they interfered, ~ They would never have won this adherence.

— [48c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ The pursuit of learning means having more each day, ~ But the pursuit of the Dao means having less each day. ~ Having less upon having less, eventually one reaches the point where one engages in no conscious action, yet nothing remains undone. ~ One who takes all under Heaven as his charge always tends to matters without deliberate action. ~ But when it comes to one who does take conscious action, ~ Such a one is not worthy to take all under Heaven as his charge.

— [48c19t] Lin Yutang ~ CONQUERING THE WORLD BY INACTION ~ The student of knowledge (aims at) learning day by day; ~ The student of Tao (aims at) losing day by day. ~ By continual losing ~ One reaches doing nothing (laissez-faire). ~ By doing nothing everything is done. ~ He who conquers the world often does so by doing nothing. ~ When one is compelled to do something, ~ The world is already beyond his conquering.

— [48c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ The pursuit of learning results in daily increase, ~ Hearing the Way leads to daily decrease. ~ Decrease and again decrease, until you reach nonaction. ~ Through nonaction, no action is left undone. ~ Should one desire to gain all under heaven, ~ One should remain ever free of involvements. ~ For, ~ Just as surely as one becomes involved, ~ One is unfit for gaining all under heaven.

— [48c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ In the pursuit of learning, ~ every day something is added. ~ In the pursuit of the Tao, ~ every day something is dropped. ~ Less and less is done ~ until you come to action with striving. ~ When you follow this practice, ~ nothing remains undone. ~ All under heaven is won by letting things take their course. ~ Nothing can be gained by interfering.

— [48c22t] David H. Li ~ Aiming at study, one's avarice gains day by day; ~ Aiming at Direction, one's avarice loses day by day. ~ Losing [avarice] upon losing [avarice], one ends with laissez-faire. ~ Laissez-faire permeates everything. ~ To govern the world, one always practices laissez-faire. ~ Without laissez-faire, one is unfit to govern the world.

— [48c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ The practice of ordinary learning increases complexity daily. ~ The practice of the Tao increases simplicity daily. ~ Simplicity leads to more simplicity, ~ Until it reaches the state of pristine nonaction. ~ Then nothing is done, yet nothing remains undone. ~ Thus, one who wins the world does so ~ By not meddling with it, through nonaction, with simplicity. ~ One who loses the world does so ~ By meddling with it, through action, with complexity.

— [48c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ The person who pursues his studies ~ Will be wiser with every passing day, ~ The person who seeks the Tao ~ Will decrease with every passing day. ~ Less and less, he will continue to decrease, ~ Until he reaches the state of non-action, ~ And by non-action it is possible to do everything. ~ Li Chia-mou said: ~ "He who pursues learning acquires knowledge; he who seeks the Tao casts off his ignorance. ~ The more the person knows, the more he has to get rid of. ~ Therefore, adding means nothing more than decreasing."

— [48c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ Usually, people read because they want to know - ~ but the more you study the Tao, the less you want knowledge. ~ And as you want less and less, you come closer to not-doing. ~ Wuwei - this is the way to get things done. ~ The best way to run the world is to let it take its course ~ - and to get yourself out of the way of it!

— [48c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ He who seeks learning must increase his knowledge every day; ~ He who seeks the Tao must reduce his knowledge every day; ~ He reduces and reduces until he reaches the state of inaction. ~ When reaching the state of inaction, one can succeed in everything. ~ To govern the world well, one must take inaction as the principle. ~ If one governs with too much action, one is not a worthy governor.

— [48c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ In the course of learning, one increases every day. ~ In the course of Tao, one decreases every day. ~ Decreasing and decreasing, until doing nothing. ~ Doing nothing, yet everything is done. ~ That is why he who aims at rulership should let things take their course. ~ Should he try to interfere, he is not worthy of aiming at rulership.

— [48c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ Those who approach being academically ~ Will become filled in mind day by day. ~ Those who approach non-being for the Way ~ Will become freed in mind day by day. ~ When one is freed of all wanton ideas and desires ~ One arrives at the state of no willful action. ~ One who does nothing out of personal will ~ Can achieve all purposes at the same time. ~ It is only when no willful actions are needed, ~ That one can win the world. ~ When a person must act willfully to achieve a purpose, ~ That person has not the sufficient conditions to be a leader.

— [48c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ Govern The World By No Business ~ Lao Tze says, ~ He who devotes himself to learning from day to day increases his knowledge. ~ He who devotes himself to the Tao from day to day diminishes his intention. ~ He diminishes it and again diminishes it, till he arrives at doing without intention. ~ Having arrived at this point of doing without intention, there is nothing left undone. ~ He who manages the world's affairs does so by giving himself no trouble. ~ If he troubles himself, he is not qualified to manage the world's affairs.

— [48c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ He who pursues learning will increase every day; ~ He who pursues Tao will decrease every day. ~ He will decrease and continue to decrease, ~ Till he comes to non-action; ~ By non-action everything can be done.

— [48c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ The pursuit of learning increases daily. ~ The pursuit of Tao decreases daily, ~ Decreasing more and more ~ Until it reaches the point of inaction. ~ Inaction: then nothing cannot be done by it, ~ Therefore the capture of the world should always be done by inactivity. ~ As for activity, it is insufficient to capture the world.

— [48c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ "Doing Learning, one profits everyday." ~ Doing Tao, one suffers a loss everyday - ~ loses, and loses some more, ~ and so arrives at not doing anything. ~ Doing nothing, nothing will remain not done. ~ Taking over the world: only by not working. ~ A person who sets to working, ~ doesn't have what it takes to take over the world.

— [48c33t] Cheng Lin ~ With learning one aims at constant augmentation. ~ With Truth one aims at constant diminution. ~ The diminution continues and continues until the state of inaction is reached. ~ Because of inaction, nothing is left undone. ~ When one constantly abides by inaction, he can win an Empire. ~ If he does not abide by inaction, he will never be able to win an Empire.

— [48c34t] Yi Wu ~ To pursue learning is to increase daily. ~ To practice the Way is to decrease daily. ~ Decreasing and more decreasing, ~ One arrives at non-action. ~ Non-action, but nothing is left undone. ~ To have the world, one always should be in doing nothing. ~ If one is busy in doing something, ~ One cannot have the world.

— [48c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ In the pursuit of knowledge, your rapacity increases every day. ~ In the pursuit of Dao, your desire decreases daily. ~ It will continue to decrease until it reaches a state of wu-wei. ~ Adhering to non-action, you can accomplish everything easily. ~ You must stick to the principle of non-interference in order to rule a nation. ~ Once you become meddlesome, you become unfit to govern a nation.

— [48c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ Learning builds daily accumulation, ~ but the practice of the Way of spiritual integration with the subtle essence of the universe builds daily simplification. ~ Simplify and simplify, until all contamination from relative, contradictory thinking is eliminated. ~ Then one does nothing, yet nothing is left undone. ~ One who wins the world does so by not meddling with it. ~ One who meddles with the world loses it.

— [48c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ To learn, ~ One accumulates day by day. ~ To study Tao, ~ One reduces day by day. ~ Through reduction and further reduction ~ One reaches non-action, ~ And everything is acted upon. ~ Therefore, one often wins over the world ~ Through non-action. ~ Through action, one may not win over the world.

— [48c38t] Henry Wei ~ Forgetting Knowledge ~ Wang Chih ~ To learn, one increases day by day; ~ To cultivate Tao, one reduces day by day. ~ Reduce and reduce and keep on reducing, ~ Till the state of non-action is reached. ~ With non-action there is nothing that cannot be done. ~ Therefore, he who wins the world ~ Always resorts to non-action. ~ Once he resorts to action, ~ He will not be qualified to win the world.

— [48c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ When you pursue learning, you gain day by day. ~ When you pursue Tao, you lose day by day. ~ You lose more and more, ~ Until you reach thereby the point of no-action. ~ You do nothing yet leave nothing undone. ~ You take all under Heaven ~ Always through no activity. ~ Should you rely on activity, ~ You will find it insufficient to take all under Heaven.

— [48c40t] Tao Huang ~ Having a zest for learning yields an increase day by day. ~ Hearing the Tao brings a loss day by day. ~ Losing more and more until inaction results. ~ Inaction results, yet everything is done. ~ Managing the world always involves nonengagement. ~ As soon as there is engagement, there is never enough of it to manage the world.

— [48c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ To learn daily will increase desires. ~ To follow Dao will daily reduce desires. ~ Reduce and reduce desires until there is no coveting. ~ Dao contrives nothing yet it provides everything. ~ Therefore to lead the world is to be persistently with no intervention. ~ If there is any intervention, it will be impossible to lead the world.

— [48c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ The pursuit of learning is to increase day after day. ~ The pursuit of Tao is to decrease day after day. ~ It is to decrease and further decrease until one reaches the point of taking no action. ~ No action is undertaken, and yet nothing is left undone. ~ An empire is often brought to order by having no activity. ~ If one (likes to) undertake activity, he is not qualified to govern the empire.

— [48c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Когда учатся, имеют каждый день прибыль, ~ а занимаясь Дао, ежедневно терпят умаление. ~ Умаление следует за умалением, и так доходят до бездействия. ~ Но в состоянии бездействия непременно действуют. ~ Поднебесную берут неизбежно посредством недеяния. ~ А кто при помощи деяний собирается взять Поднебесную, тому для этого их никогда не хватит.

— [48c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Следуя учению, день ото дня обретают. ~ Следуя Дао, день ото дня теряют. ~ Теряя и вновь теряя, достигают недеяния. ~ В недеянии нет того, что не вершилось бы само собой. ~ Не свершая дел, неизменно овладевают Поднебесной. ~ Лишь предашься делам - как станешь недостойн овладеть Поднебесной.

— [48c93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Кто следует учености, тот день за днем возрастает. ~ Кто следует Дао-Пути, тот день за днем умалется: так достигает он недеяния. ~ Он пребывает в недеянии, но нет ничего им не сделанного. ~ Такой человек, дел никаких не делая, легко берет Поднебесную: ведь совершения дел недостаточно, чтобы взять Поднебесную.

— [48с94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Кто посвящает себя учебе, с каждым днем прибавляет. ~ Кто посвящает себя Дао, с каждым днем уменьшает. ~ Уменьшает и уменьшает до тех пор, пока не достигнет недеяния: недеяния и не недеяния. ~ Чтобы овладеть Поднебесной, постоянно осуществляй неслужение (бездействие). ~ А кто прибегнет к службе (делам), тому не достанет того, чтобы овладеть Поднебесной.

— [48с95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Кто учится, с каждым днем увеличивает [свои знания]. ~ Кто служит дао, изо дня в день уменьшает [свои желания]. ~ В непрерывном уменьшении [человек] доходит до недеяния. ~ Нет ничего такого, что бы не делало недеяние. ~ Поэтому овладение Поднебесной всегда осуществляется посредством недеяния. ~ Кто действует, не в состоянии овладеть Поднебесной.

— [48с96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Учение прибавляется со дня на день, но Тао теряется со дня на день. ~ Эта потеря увеличится и дойдет до желания неделания. ~ Когда человек дойдет до неделания, то нет того, чего бы не было сделано. ~ Если в мире все в порядке, то следует завладеть им, но если нет, то не следует.

— [48с97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Посвящать себя учению - значит каждый день приобретать. ~ Посвящать себя Пути - значит каждый день терять. ~ Потеряй и еще потеряй - так дойдешь до недеяния. ~ Ничего не будешь делать - и все будет делаться. ~ Завладеет миром тот, кто никогда не занимается делами, ~ А тот, кто занимается делами, никогда не завладеет миром.

— [48с98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Осуществляя учение, ежедневно прибавляют. ~ Осуществляя Путь, ежедневно убавляют. ~ Убавляя еще и от убавления, достигают отсутствия осуществления. ~ В отсутствии осуществления отсутствует не-осуществленное. ~ Овладевая нисхождением Небес, будь постоянно в отсутствии ситуаций. ~ Когда же возникает состояние наличия ситуаций, этого недостаточно для овладения нисхождением Небес.

— [49с01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ {The Sage} constantly has no [set] mind; ~ He takes the mind of the common people as his mind. ~ Those who are good he regards as good; ~ Those who are not good he also regards as good. ~ [In this way] {he attains} goodness. ~ Those who are trustworthy he trusts; ~ And those who are not trustworthy he also trusts. ~ [In this way] he gets their trust. ~ As for the Sage's presence in the world - he is one with it. ~ And with the world he merges his mind. ~ The common people all fix their eyes and ears on him. ~ And the Sage treats them all as his children.

— [49с02t] John C. H. Wu ~ THE Sage has no interests of his own, ~ But takes the interests of the people as his own. ~ He is kind to the kind; ~ He is also kind to the unkind: ~ For Virtue is kind. ~ He is faithful to the faithful; ~ He is also faithful to the unfaithful: ~ For Virtue is faithful. ~ In the midst of the world, the Sage is shy and self-effacing. ~ For the sake of the world he keeps his heart in its nebulous state. ~ All the people strain their ears and eyes: ~ The Sage only smiles like an amused infant.

— [49с03t] D. C. Lau ~ The sage has no mind of his own. ~ He takes as his own the mind of the people. ~ Those who are good I treat as good. ~ Those who are not good I also treat as good. ~ In so doing I gain in goodness. ~ Those who are of good faith I have faith in. ~ Those who are lacking in good faith I also have faith in. ~ In so doing I gain in good faith. ~ The sage in his attempt to distract the mind of the empire seeks urgently to muddle it. ~ The people all have something to occupy their eyes and ears, and the sage treats them all like children.

— [49с04t] R. L. Wing ~ Evolved Individuals have no fixed mind; ~ They make the mind of the People their mind. ~ To those who are good, I am good; ~ To those who are not good, I am also good. ~ Goodness is Power. ~ Of those who trust, I am trusting; ~ Of those who do not trust, I am also trusting. ~ Trust is Power.

~ The Evolved Individuals in the world ~ Attract the world and merge with its mind. ~ The People all focus their eyes and ears; ~ Evolved Individuals all act as infants.

— [49c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ The sage has no fixed personal will, ~ He regards the people's will as his own. ~ I take the people's will, if it is good, as good. ~ I take the people's will, if it is not good, as good too. ~ Thus goodness is attained. ~ I believe the people's will, if it is believable. ~ I also believe the people's will, even if it is unbelievable. ~ Thus faith is attained. ~ The sage dwells under Heaven, harmoniously keeping all the people under Heaven in confusion, ~ (While all the people concentrate upon their own eyes and ears). ~ Thus the sage treats them all as ignorant infants without desires.

— [49c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ The sage has no mind of his own. ~ He is aware of the needs of others. ~ I am good to people who are good. ~ I am also good to people who are not good. ~ Because Virtue is goodness. ~ I have faith in people who are faithful. ~ I also have faith in people who are not faithful. ~ Because Virtue is faithfulness. ~ The sage is shy and humble - to the world he seems confusing. ~ Men look to him and listen. ~ He behaves like a little child.

— [49c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ The Sage does not have a fixed mind different from that of others. ~ He takes the mind of any of his people as his own mind. ~ If people are good, I shall be good to them. ~ If people are not good, I shall also be good to them. ~ This way I am really good. ~ If people are truthful, I shall be truthful to them. ~ If people are not truthful, I shall also be truthful to them. ~ This way I am really truthful. ~ The Sage keeps an indiscriminating mind ~ for the sake of all under heaven. ~ While people use their eyes and ears to discriminate, ~ The Sage's mind is always unsuspecting and innocent like an infant's.

— [49c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ The great men did not have a fixed will; ~ they made the people's will their own. ~ When people are kind, I treat them kindly; ~ when people are unkind, I still treat them kindly; ~ this is called the kindness of DE. ~ When people are credible, I have faith in them; ~ when people are not credible, I still have faith in them; ~ this is called the faith of DE. ~ The great men were very cautious when governing their country; ~ They made the people simple and plain. ~ The people focused on their every movement, and the great men treated them like their children.

— [49c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE VIRTUE OF CONCESSION ~ The wise man has no fixed opinions to call his own. ~ He accommodates himself to the minds of others. ~ I would return good for good; I would also return good for evil. ~ Virtue is good. ~ I would meet trust with trust; I would likewise meet suspicion with confidence. ~ Virtue is trustful. ~ The wise man lives in the world with modest restraint, and his heart goes out in sympathy to all men. ~ The people give him their confidence, and he regards them all as his children.

— [49c10t] James Legge ~ The sage has no invariable mind of his own; ~ he makes the mind of the people his mind. ~ To those who are good (to me), I am good; ~ and to those who are not good (to me), I am also good; ~ - and thus (all) get to be good. ~ To those who are sincere (with me), I am sincere; ~ and to those who are not sincere (with me), I am also sincere; ~ - and thus (all) get to be sincere. ~ The sage has in the world an appearance of indecision, and keeps his mind in a state of indifference to all. ~ The people all keep their eyes and ears directed to him, and he deals with them all as his children.

— [49c11t] David Hinton ~ A sage's mind is never his own: ~ he makes the hundred-fold people's mind his mind. ~ I treat the noble with nobility ~ and the ignoble too: ~ such is the nobility of Integrity. ~ I treat the sincere with sincerity ~ and the insincere too: ~ such is the sincerity of Integrity. ~ A sage dwells within all beneath heaven ~ at ease, mind mingled through it all. ~ The hundred-fold people devote their eyes and ears, ~ but a sage inhabits it all like a child.

— [49c12t] Chichung Huang ~ The sage man never had a predisposed heart, ~ Taking the hundred family's heart ~ To be the concern of his heart. ~ Good people - he was good to them; ~ Evil people - he was also good to them. ~ Goodness was attained. ~ Honest people - he was honest to them; ~ Dishonest people - he was also honest to them. ~ Honesty was attained. ~ When the sage man presided over the empire, ~ Unbiased, he muddled their hearts ~ For all under heaven. ~ The hundred family names ~ All lent him their ears and eyes; ~ The sage man turned them all into infants.

—[49c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ The sage has no set mind (ch'ang hsin), ~ He takes the mind of the people as his mind. ~ The good (shan) I am good to them, ~ The not good I am also good to them. ~ This is the goodness of nature (te). ~ The trustworthy (hsin) I trust them, ~ The not trustworthy I also trust them. ~ This is the trust of nature (te). ~ The sage in the world, ~ Mixes (hun) the minds (hsin) of all. ~ The people lift up their eyes and ears, ~ The sage treats them all like children.

—[49c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ A Sage's heart (will) is not fixed on any permanent intentions, ~ His heart is attuned to the desires [for survival] of his people. ~ [A Sage maintains the following guiding principles:] ~ "I am good to good people, as well as to people who are not good; ~ Because virtuous behavior will induce more Te among people! ~ I keep my promise to trustworthy people, as well as to untrustworthy people; ~ Because virtuous behavior will incite people to be truthful!" ~ When a Sage takes action in the world, he harmonizes people's hearts (desires) with great caution and sensitivity; ~ People, in return, will collect and inform him all their observations and opinions; ~ A Sage will then [weigh all options and] treat all people equally as if they were all his own children.

—[49c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ The sage has no heart of his own, but takes the heart of the people as his own. ~ He is good to the good; he is also good to the not-good: for Virtue is good. ~ He is faithful to the faithful; he is also faithful to the unfaithful: for Virtue is faithful. ~ In the midst of the world, the sage recoils. ~ For the sake of the world he keeps his heart nebulous. ~ All the people strain their ears and eyes: he treats them as innocent children.

—[49c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ Sages have no mind-set. ~ They take common people's concerns as theirs. ~ Good people, I treat them well. ~ Bad people, I also treat them well. ~ This is the virtue of kindness. ~ Good people, I trust them properly. ~ Bad people, I also trust them properly. ~ This is virtue of trust. ~ Sages in the world have no bias. ~ They mix their mind with that of common people. ~ This is why people follow them. ~ Sages treat people as if they were their own children.

—[49c17t] Arthur Waley ~ The Sage has no heart of his own; ~ He uses the heart of the people as his heart. ~ Of the good man I approve, ~ But of the bad I also approve, ~ And thus he gets goodness. ~ The truthful man I believe, but the liar I also believe, ~ And thus he gets truthfulness. ~ The Sage, in his dealings with the world, seems like one dazed with fright; ~ For the world's sake he dulls his wits. ~ The Hundred Families all the time strain their eyes and ears, ~ The Sage all the time sees and hears no more than an infant sees and hears.

—[49c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ The sage has no constant heart/mind [changxin] but takes the heart/mind of the common folk as his heart/mind. ~ The good I regard as good; ~ those who are not good I also regard as good. ~ This is to transform goodness into virtue. ~ The trustworthy I trust; ~ those who are not trustworthy I also trust. ~ This is to transform trust into virtue. ~ The sage resides among all under Heaven with perfect equanimity and impartiality and for the sake of all under Heaven merges his heart/mind with theirs. ~ [The common folk all fix their ears and eyes on him,] ~ And the sage treats them all as his children.

—[49c19t] Lin Yutang ~ THE PEOPLE'S HEARTS ~ The Sage has no decided opinions and feelings, ~ But regards the people's opinions and feelings as his own. ~ The good ones I declare good; ~ The bad ones I also declare good. ~ That is the goodness of Virtue. ~ The honest ones I believe; ~ The liars I also believe. ~ That is the faith of Virtue. ~ The Sage dwells in the world peacefully, harmoniously. ~ The people of the world are brought into a community of heart, ~ And the Sage regards them all as his own children.

— [49c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ The sage never has a mind of his own; ~ He considers the minds of the common people to be his mind. ~ Treat well those who are good, ~ Also treat well those who are not good; ~ thus is goodness attained. ~ Be sincere to those who are sincere, ~ Also be sincere to those who are insincere; ~ thus is sincerity attained. ~ The sage is self-effacing in his dealings with all under heaven, and bemuddles his mind for the sake of all under heaven. ~ The common people all rivet their eyes and ears upon him, ~ And the sage makes them all chuckle like children.

— [49c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ The True Person does not have an individual heart but uses the heart of the people. ~ I am kind to those who are kind. ~ I am also kind to those who are not kind. ~ Thus, ~ there is an increase in kindness. ~ I keep faith with those who are in good faith. ~ I also keep faith with those who lack good faith. ~ Thus, ~ there is an increase of good faith. ~ The True Person is detached and humble and to the world appears confusing. ~ The people all strain their eyes and ears, yet the True Person remains childlike.

— [49c22t] David H. Li ~ The sage has no preconceived notion at any time; ~ the people's notion is the sage's notion. ~ I treat a person, who is good, well; ~ I treat a person, who is not good, also well. ~ This is for goodness's sake. ~ I trust a person who is worthy of trust; ~ I also trust a person who is not worthy of trust. ~ This is for trustworthiness's sake. ~ The sage, in governing the world, holds back personal notions in favor of the people's. ~ The sage treats the people, focusing on themselves, as infants.

— [49c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ The sage does not have a set mind. ~ His mind is unconditioned, and ~ He regards the minds of all people as his own. ~ He is good to those who are good. ~ He is good to those who are not good. ~ For his virtue is goodness itself. ~ He is in integrity with those of integrity. ~ He is in integrity with those without integrity. ~ For his virtue is integrity itself. ~ The sage, to serve this world, ~ In compassion merges his mind with all minds. ~ People rivet their eyes and ears upon differences amongst them. ~ The sage, with childlike innocence, sees one humanity in all.

— [49c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ The sage has no self that he can call "mine," ~ He turns the self of the people into his own. ~ I act with goodness toward the good, ~ I act with goodness toward the bad, too, ~ And so the good is contagious. ~ I relate with trust to the person who is worthy of trust, ~ I relate with trust to the person who is not worthy of trust, too, ~ And so trust is contagious. ~ The sage lives in the world in his victory and rules the world with his simplicity. ~ But when all the people look at him and listen to him, ~ The sage takes care of them, like a mother takes care of her children.

— [49c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ "The sage is never opinionated, ~ He listens to the mind of the people." ~ I am kind to people when they are kind to me. ~ I am kind to them even if they hate me. ~ Virtue - te - is its own reward. ~ I trust those who trust me, ~ I also trust those who have no faith in me: ~ What I give, I receive. ~ A sage is self-effacing and mindful of offence. ~ He sets himself as his own example. ~ How shall I treat you, my son? ~ Like a child.

— [49c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ The sage often has no will, ~ He takes the people's will as his own. ~ What is good I treat with goodness; ~ What is not good I also treat with goodness. ~ Thus I obtain goodness. ~ Those who are of faith, I put faith in; ~ Those who are of no faith, I also put faith in. ~ Thus I obtain faith. ~ When the sage governs the world, ~ He simplifies his as well as the people's minds. ~ The people are all preoccupied with their eyes and ears, ~ The sage helps them return to the childhood state.

— [49c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ The sage has no mind of his own. ~ He takes the minds of the people as his own. ~ Whatever others like, he likes too. ~ Whatever others dislike, he likes too. ~ This is what is meant by virtuous goodness. ~ Whatever others trust, he trusts too. ~ Whatever others mistrust, he trusts too. ~ This is what is meant by virtuous trust. ~ The sage leads his life with vigilance. ~ He merges his mind with all others' under Heaven. ~ People are used to hearing and seeing the behaviour of the sage and so they are influenced, and become pure again, as a newborn child.

— [49c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ The best ruler has no personal ideas ~ And what the people think is what he/she thinks. ~ He/She is good to people that are good. ~ He/She is also good to people that are not good. ~ It is the goodness typical of the Way server. ~ He/She trusts people that are trustworthy. ~ He/She also trusts people that are not trustworthy. ~ It is the trust typical of the Way server. ~ The best ruler gives each breath of his/her life to the world. ~ He/She holds to just a simple mind, ~ But is looked up to and listened to. ~ He/She takes the whole world to be his/her children.

— [49c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ People's Minds ~ Lao Tze says, ~ The sage doesn't have an invariable mind, he takes people's minds as his own mind. ~ Those who are good to him; ~ he treats well; ~ and those who are not good to him; ~ he treats well too; ~ thus all become good to each other. ~ To those who are sincere; ~ he is sincere; ~ and to those who are not sincere; ~ he is also sincere; ~ thus all become sincere. ~ The sage in the world pays scrupulous attention to everything. ~ However, he treats his living with indifference. ~ The people all offer their eyes and ears to help him, and he deals with them all as his children.

— [49c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ The Sage has no self (to call his own); ~ He makes the self of the people his self. ~ To the good I act with goodness; ~ To the bad I also act with goodness: ~ Thus goodness is attained. ~ To the faithful I act with faith; ~ To the faithless I also act with faith: ~ Thus faith is attained. ~ The Sage lives in the world in concord, and rules over the world in simplicity. ~ Yet what all the people turn their ears and eyes to, ~ The Sage looks after as a mother does her children.

— [49c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ The Sage has no constant heart [mind]. ~ He takes the people's heart as his heart. ~ Good men, I treat well. ~ Bad men, I also treat well. ~ Therein I attain goodness. ~ Honest men, I trust. ~ Dishonest men, I also trust. ~ Therein I attain trust. ~ The Sage in his position in the world, ~ Yieldingly harmonizes the people's heart with simplicity. ~ The people all strain their ears and eyes. ~ And the Sage regards them all as infants.

— [49c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ The Wise Person is always a man without a mind - ~ he takes the mind of the hundred clans as his mind. ~ Those who are good, I am good to them; ~ those who are not good, I am also good to them - ~ Te is good. ~ Those who are honest, I am honest with them; ~ those who are not honest, I am also honest with them - ~ Te is honest. ~ The Wise Person, ~ lives in the world all drawn in, ~ for the world's sake he keeps his mind muddled. ~ The hundred clans, ~ all strain their eyes and ears toward him. ~ The Wise Person treats them all as his children.

— [49c33t] Cheng Lin ~ The Sage has no fixed prejudices, but always regards the hearts of all mankind as his own. ~ Those who are good, he treats well; ~ those who are not good, he also treats well. ~ Thus he finds only good men. ~ Those who are sincere, he believes; ~ those who are not sincere, he also believes. ~ Thus he finds only sincere men. ~ The Sage wishes that all men in this world will soon return to simplicity. ~ While people in general strain their ears and eyes, the Sage wishes to have them all sealed.

— [49c34t] Yi Wu ~ The sage's mind is not unchangeable; ~ He regards the people's mind as his mind. ~ He is good to those who are good; ~ He also is good to those who are not good. ~ This is the virtue of goodness. ~ He trusts those who are trustworthy; ~ He also trusts those who are not trustworthy. ~ This is the virtue of trustfulness. ~ The sage, in the world, ~ Harmoniously merges his mind with the world's. ~ The people all strain their ears and eyes; ~ The sage regards them as children.

— [49c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ The sage has no preconceived ideas. ~ He simply takes the lead from his subjects. ~ He treats the good people with kindness. ~ He also treats the bad people with kindness. ~ He thus cultivates the virtue of kindness. ~ He treats those who are trustworthy with sincerity. ~ He also treats those who are not trustworthy with sincerity. ~ Thus, he is cultivating the virtue of sincerity. ~ The sage always handles his affairs in an amicable way. ~ He steers his subjects towards a simple and unpretentious life. ~ Everyone pays attention to him and asks for guidance. ~ He nurtures them tenderly as if caring for babies. — [49c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ One with wholeness of virtue has an unconditioned mind. ~ He regards the mind of all being as his own mind. ~ He is kind to the kind. ~ He is also kind to the unkind, ~ for the subtle nature of the universe is kind. ~ He is faithful to the faithful. ~ He is also faithful to the unfaithful, ~ for the integral virtue of the universe is undecieving. ~ In the midst of the world, ~ he dissolves all minds into harmonious Oneness. ~ All people strain their eyes and ears for excitement. ~ One of deep virtue brings all people back to their childlike-heartedness.

— [49c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ The wise man is free from his own mind, ~ But identifies the people's minds as mind. ~ He considers good as good, ~ But he also considers not-good as good. ~ Thus, his attainment of non-differentiation is successful. ~ He considers truth as truth, ~ But he also considers not-truth as truth. ~ Thus, his attainment of non-differentiation is perfected. ~ In the world, the wise conscientiously non-differentiates ~ The minds of the people. ~ Because people rely on their senses of hearing and seeing, ~ The wise treats them as innocent children.

— [49c38t] Henry Wei ~ Trust in Virtue ~ Ren Teh ~ The Sage has no fixed state of mind; ~ His reflects the state of mind of the people. ~ To the good, I show goodness; ~ To the not good, I also show goodness; ~ Hence goodness is realized. ~ To the sincere, I show sincerity; ~ To the insincere, I also show sincerity; ~ Hence sincerity is realized. ~ While in the world, the Sage is very anxious ~ To harmonize his mind for the harmony of the world. ~ To him all the people turn their eyes and ears; ~ He treats them all alike as children.

— [49c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ The sage has no fixed mind; ~ He takes the people's mind as his own. ~ I accept as good those who are good; ~ I also accept as good those who are not good. ~ Such is Te's goodness. ~ I trust those who trust; ~ I also trust those who do not trust. ~ Such is Te's trust. ~ The sage, in ruling all under Heaven, ~ Makes his mind one with it. ~ All his subjects set their ears and eyes on him. ~ He regards them all as his children.

— [49c40t] Tao Huang ~ The sage is always without his own mind. ~ He uses people's minds as his mind. ~ He is kind to those who are kind. ~ He is also kind to those who are not kind. ~ It is the kindness of Action itself. ~ He is trustworthy to those who are trustworthy. ~ He is also trustworthy to those who are not trustworthy. ~ It is the trust of Action itself. ~ In the world, the sage inhales. ~ For the world, the sage keeps the mind simple. ~ All people are fixated on the ears and eyes, ~ While the sage always smiles like a child.

— [49c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ The sage ruler had no prejudice of his own. ~ He made his mind to be based on the mind of the people. ~ If it was perfect, he liked it; ~ if it was not perfect, he also liked it: ~ then perfection was attained. ~ If it was true, he understood it; ~ if it was not true, he also understood it: ~ then truth was attained. ~ Indifferently, indifferently sage rulers were in the world. ~ Effortlessly, effortlessly they ruled the world. ~ The people turned their eyes and ears toward them. ~ Sage rulers treated all people like their own children.

— [49c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ The sage has no fixed (personal) ideas. ~ He regards the people's ideas as his own. ~ I treat those who are good with goodness, ~ And I also treat those who are not good with goodness. ~ Thus goodness is attained. ~ I am honest to those who are honest, ~ And I am also honest to those who are not honest. ~ Thus honesty is attained. ~ The sage, in the government of his empire, has no subjective viewpoint. ~ His mind forms a harmonious whole with that of his people. ~ They all lend their eyes and ears, and he treats them all as infants.

— [49c91t] И. И. Семененко ~ Премудрый человек не ведает незыблемости сердца. ~ Сердцем для него являются сердца простых людей. ~ С добрыми я добр, но и с недобрыми я тоже добр. ~ К добру приводит добродетель. ~ Кто честен, тем я доверяю, но и нечестным я тоже доверяю. ~ К честности приводит добродетель. ~ Премудрый человек под Небесами беспристрастен и ради Поднебесной мутит свое сердце. ~ При нем все по-детски улыбаются.

— [49c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Мудрец не имеет постоянного сердца. ~ Его сердце - сердце людей. ~ Для добрых я добр. ~ Для недобрых я тоже добр. ~ И так достигаю добра. ~ Искренним я верю. ~ Неискренним я верю тоже. ~ И так достигаю искренности. ~ Мудрец, правя в Поднебесной, делает своё сердце безыскусным и приводит его в согласие с Поднебесной. ~ Люди внемлют ему слухом и взором. ~ Он же смотрит на них как на своих детей.

— [49c93t] Е. А. Торчинов ~ Нет постоянного разума-сердца у совершенномудрого. ~ Сердца всех людей Поднебесной образуют его разум-сердце. ~ Добрым людям я делаю добро, и злым людям я также делаю добро: ~ Благая Сила преисполнена добра. ~ Достойным доверия я верю, и недостойным доверия я также верю: ~ Благая Сила преисполнена доверия. ~ Совершенный мудрец спокойно и мирно живет в Поднебесной; ~ все чаяния народа стекаются в его глаза и уши, и всех людей считает совершенномудрый детьми своими.

— [49c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Совершенномудрый человек не имеет обычного сердца ~ и сердца ста родов человеческих делает [своим] сердцем. ~ Кто добр, я к тому отношусь с добром. ~ Кто не добр, я к тому также отношусь с добром. ~ В этом проявляется доброта Дэ. ~ Кто доверяет, я к тому отношусь с доверием. ~ Кто не доверяет, я к тому также отношусь с доверием. ~ В этом проявляется доверие Дэ. ~ Когда совершенномудрые люди находятся в Поднебесной, [они] ради Поднебесной вдыхают хаос своим сердцем, ~ и все совершенномудрые люди становятся ее детьми.

— [49c95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Совершенномудрый не имеет постоянного сердца. ~ Его сердце состоит из сердец народа. ~ Добрым я делаю добро и недобрым также делаю добро. ~ Таким образом и воспитывается добродетель. ~ Искренним я верен и неискренним также верен. ~ Таким образом и воспитывается искренность. ~ Совершенномудрый живет в мире спокойно и в своем сердце собирает мнения народа. ~ Он смотрит на народ, как на своих детей.

— [49c96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Святые люди не имеют определенного (чувства), ибо они принимают чувство простолюдина как свое. ~ Добрых людей я принимаю уже потому одному, что они добры. ~ Злых принимаю, как добрых. ~ Искренним людям я верю; ~ также и верю неискренним, ~ ибо в этом и состоит верх искренности. ~ Когда святые живут на земле, то они просты и тихи; ~ они питают ко всем одинаковое чувство. ~ Для (блага) мира они делают свои сердца темными. ~ Простые люди будут смотреть на них (как на своих учителей) и будут слушать сказание о их делах. ~ Святые смотрят на народ, как на младенца.

— [49c97t] В. В. Малявин ~ У премудрого человека нет постоянного мнения. ~ Его помышления таковы же, как помышления всех. ~ Тех, кто добр, я считаю добрыми, ~ Тех, кто недобр, я тоже считаю добрыми: ~ Так торжествует добро. ~ Тем, кто заслуживает доверия, я верю, ~ Тем, кто доверия не заслуживает, я тоже верю: ~ Так торжествует доверие. ~ Премудрый человек, царствуя в мире, ~ Все вмещает в себя и ради мира замутняет свое сердце. ~ Все люди напрягают зрение и слух, ~ А он привечает их, словно детей.

— [49c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ В сердце-сознании человека мудрости - постоянство отсутствия. ~ Способен осуществлять сердцем-сознанием сердца-сознания ста родов. ~ С совершенствующимися сущность моя совершенствуется. ~ С несовершенствующимися сущность моя тоже совершенствуется. ~ Это Потенция совершенствования. ~ С верующими сущность моя верует. ~ С неверующими сущность моя тоже верует. ~ Это Потенция веры. ~ Человек мудрости в пространстве нисхождения Небес воспринимает-впитывает, осуществляя нисхождение Небес в завихрении своего сердца-сознания. ~ Сто родов всегда направляют внимание в свои уши и глаза. ~ Человек мудрости всегда ограждается от этого.

—[50c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ {We come out into} life and go back into death. ~ {The companions} of life {are thirteen}; ~ The companions of {death} are thirteen; ~ And yet people, because they regard life as LIFE, in all of their actions move toward the thirteen that belong to the realm of death. ~ Now, why is this so? ~ It's because they regard life as LIFE. ~ You've no doubt heard of those who are good at holding on to life: ~ When walking through hills, they don't avoid rhinos and tigers; ~ When they go into battle, they don't put on armor or shields; ~ The rhino has no place to probe with its horn; ~ The tiger finds no place to put its claws. ~ And weapons find no place to hold {their blades}. ~ {Now}, why is this so? ~ Because there is no place for death in them.

—[50c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ WHEN one is out of Life, one is in Death. ~ The companions of life are thirteen; ~ the companions of Death are thirteen; ~ and, when a living person moves into the Realm of Death, his companions are also thirteen. ~ How is this? ~ Because he draws upon the resources of Life too heavily. ~ It is said that he who knows well how to live meets no tigers or wild buffaloes on his road, and comes out from the battle-ground untouched by the weapons of war. ~ For, in him, a buffalo would find no butt for his horns, a tiger nothing to lay his claws upon, and a weapon of war no place to admit its point. ~ How is this? ~ Because there is no room for Death in him.

—[50c03t] D. C. Lau ~ When going one way means life and going the other means death, three in ten will be comrades in life, three in ten will be comrades in death, and there are those who value life and as a result move into the realm of death, and these also number three in ten. ~ Why is this so? Because they set too much store by life. ~ I have heard it said that one who excels in safeguarding his own life does not meet with rhinoceros or tiger when travelling on land nor is he touched by weapons when charging into an army. ~ There is nowhere for the rhinoceros to pitch its horn; ~ There is nowhere for the tiger to place its claws; ~ There is nowhere for the weapon to lodge its blade. ~ Why is this so? Because for him there is no realm of death.

—[50c04t] R. L. Wing ~ As life goes out, death comes in. ~ Life has thirteen paths; ~ Death has thirteen paths. ~ Human life arrives at the realm of death ~ Also in thirteen moves. ~ Why is this so? ~ Because life is lived lavishly. ~ Now, as it is well known, ~ Those skilled in attracting life Can travel across the land ~ And not meet a rhinoceros or tiger. ~ When the military comes in, ~ Their defense cannot be attacked. ~ The rhinoceros is without a place to thrust its horn. ~ The tiger is without a place to affix its claw. ~ The military is without a place to admit its blade. ~ Why is this so? ~ Because they are without the realm of death.

—[50c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ When one is born, he will eventually naturally meet his death. ~ Three out of every ten people will enjoy long life, ~ While three out of every ten people will meet premature death. ~ Chances that one strives to live and will die are also three out of ten. ~ And for what reason? ~ Because that one intensively craves life (and contrarily he fails to attain his objective). ~ I heard that one who is good at preserving his life is not afraid of meeting tigers or rhinoceroses when traveling on the land, and he will not be injured or killed in fighting battles. ~ (To those who are good at preserving their lives) ~ The rhinoceros cannot butt its horns against him, ~ The tiger cannot fasten its claws in him, ~ And weapons cannot thrust their blades into him. ~ For what reason are all these? ~ Because he is out of the range of death.

—[50c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ Between birth and death, ~ Three in ten are followers of life, ~ Three in ten are followers of death, ~ And men just passing from birth to death also number three in ten. ~ Why is this so? ~ Because they live their lives on the gross level. ~ He who knows how to live can walk abroad ~ Without fear of rhinoceros or tiger. ~ He will not be wounded in battle. ~ For in him rhinoceroses can find no place to thrust their horn, ~ Tigers no place to use their claws, ~ And weapons no place to pierce. ~ Why is this so? ~ Because he has no place for death to enter.

—[50c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ Anyone who is born dies. ~ If 13 people are born ~ All 13 people will eventually die. ~ From birth to life, ~ From life to death, ~ The great earth will afford the places to live and to die for exactly 13. ~ Why is this so? ~ It is because the mind cherishes the belief ~ that living is a privilege and not a natural right. ~ I have heard that those who are good at conserving and preserving life ~ Seldom meet tigers and horned animals when they move around. ~ If they should join the military forces, ~ They would not have the need to combat. ~ Horned animals will have no way to cast their horns on their bodies, ~ Nor will tigers find a place to lay their claws. ~ Even soldiers' swords will not hurt them. ~ Why is this so? ~ Because such people will never die.

—[50c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ Of people's lives from beginning to end, ~ One-third live long, ~ One-third die young, ~ And one-third live in the beginning, but cause their deaths half way by themselves. ~ Why do people die in the middle of their lives? ~ Because they live too well and do not cherish their lives. ~ It is said that those who know how to live long never come across a rhinoceros or a tiger; ~ When they are in battle, they never get hurt. ~ The rhinoceros has no place to impale them with its horn, ~ The tiger has no place to attack them with its claws, ~ And the weapon has no place to hurt them with its blade. ~ Why is this? ~ Because they never get themselves into these deadly places.

—[50c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE VALUE OF LIFE ~ Men go forth from Life and enter into Death. ~ The Gates of Life are thirteen in number; and the same are the Gates of Death. ~ By as many ways does Life pass quickly into Death. And wherefore? ~ Because men strive only after the Sensuous Life. ~ It has been said that one who knows how to safeguard Life can go through the country without protection against the rhinoceros and tiger. ~ He may enter into battle without fear of the sword. ~ The rhinoceros finds no place wherein to drive his horn. ~ The tiger finds no place wherein to fix his claws. ~ The sword finds no place wherein to thrust itself. ~ Why is this? ~ It is because he has overcome Death.

—[50c10t] James Legge ~ Men come forth and live; ~ they enter (again) and die. ~ Of every ten three are ministers of life (to themselves); ~ and three are ministers of death. ~ There are also three in every ten whose aim is to live, but whose movements tend to the land (or place) of death. ~ And for what reason? ~ Because of their excessive endeavours to perpetuate life. ~ But I have heard that he who is skilful in managing the life entrusted to him for a time travels on the land without having to shun rhinoceros or tiger, and enters a host without having to avoid buff coat or sharp weapon. ~ The rhinoceros finds no place in him into which to thrust its horn, nor the tiger a place in which to fix its claws, nor the weapon a place to admit its point. ~ And for what reason? ~ Because there is in him no place of death.

—[50c11t] David Hinton ~ People born into life enter death. ~ Constant companion in life ~ and in death, ~ this body is the kill-site animating their lives. ~ And isn't that because ~ they think life is the fullness of life? ~ I've heard those who encompass the whole of life ~ could walk on and on without meeting rhinoceros or tiger, ~ could charge into armies without feeling shield or sword. ~ A rhinoceros would find nowhere to gore them, ~ a tiger nowhere to claw them, ~ a sword nowhere to slice them. ~ And isn't that because ~ for them there's no kill-site?

—[50c12t] Chichung Huang ~ People emerge into life and enter into death. ~ The category of life constitutes three tenths; ~ The category of death constitutes three tenths; ~ And those who, seeking extravagant living, ~ All move to the realm of death ~ Also constitute three tenths. ~ Why so? ~ Because they seek extravagant living. ~ I hear that those who excel in preserving life, ~ Walking in mountains, ~ Shun neither rhinoceros nor tiger; ~ Entering a battle, ~ Incur wounds from neither weapon nor armor. ~ The rhinoceros has nowhere to thrust its horn; ~ The tiger has nowhere to press its claws; ~ Weapons have nowhere to lodge their blades. ~ Why so? ~ Because they do not belong to the realm of death.

—[50c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ From coming out to life to going back to death: ~ Those companions (t'u) of life, ~ They are one-third (shih-yu-san); ~ Those companions of death, ~ They are one-third; ~ Those living but moving toward the place of death, ~ They are also one-third. ~ Why? ~ Because of the intense (hou) life-producing activity. ~ I have heard that one who knows how to nourish life, ~ On land meets no tigers or wild buffaloes, ~ In battle needs to wear no armors or weapons, ~ A wild buffalo has nowhere to butt its horns, ~ A tiger has nowhere to sink its claws, ~ A weapon has nowhere to enter its blade. ~ Why? ~ Because such a one has no place of death.

—[50c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ Birth is the movement of coming out [of the obscurity to join the world]; ~ Death is the movement of going in [to the obscurity from this world]; ~ For every ten people [of the existing population], three more new-borns will join them; ~ For every ten people [of the existing population], three will die [naturally]; ~ Among the living, due to rash movements (wars and bad governments), three out of ten will also die unnaturally; ~ Why is the living condition of most people so [lamentable]? ~ It is all because people, in order to survive, must suffer enormously merely to make ends meet! ~ I have heard that those, who know how to conserve life, would evade [confrontation with] fierce rhinos and tigers when walking in the wild; ~ They would also avoid wearing armor and carrying weapons when they were in the army; ~ In this manner: ~ Fierce rhinos have no chance to use their horns, ~ Ferocious tigers have no occasion to brandish their claws, ~ And enemies have no opportunity to utilize their blades (weapons). ~ Why? ~ All of the above are examples of enhancing people's chances of survival through evading deadly situations.

—[50c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ "Out" is life; "In" is death. ~ Three in ten are followers of life. ~ Three in ten are followers of death. ~ Three in ten live as man but act in the realm of death. ~ How is this? ~ Because they all crave life. ~ It is said that he who knows well how to live meets no tigers or rhinoceroses on his road, and comes into the battlefield untouched by the weapons. ~ For, in him, a rhinoceros would find no place for his horns, a tiger no place to lay his claws upon, and a weapon no place to lodge its point. ~ How is this? ~ Because there is no room for death in him.

—[50c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ In the life and death cycle, ~ Three in ten enjoy natural longevity, ~ Three in ten die normally. ~ There are some, three in ten, who die unnaturally. ~ Why it is so? ~ Because they indulge themselves excessively. ~ It is well known that those who are good at protect themselves steer clear of rhinos and tigers when walking, And hardly hurt by armed enemy. ~ This is because rhinos cannot find them to gore, ~ Tigers cannot find them to claw, ~ Enemies cannot get a chance to use weapons upon them. ~ What is the reason? ~ They never put themselves into a fatal situation.

—[50c17t] Arthur Waley ~ He who aims at life achieves death. ~ If the 'companions of life' are thirteen, so likewise are the 'companions of death' thirteen. ~ How is it that the 'death-spots' in man's life and activity are also thirteen? ~ It is because men feed life too grossly. ~ It is said that he who has a true hold on life, when he walks on land does not meet tigers or wild buffaloes; in battle he is not touched by weapons of war. ~ Indeed, a buffalo that attacked him would find nothing for its horns to butt, a tiger would find nothing for its claws to tear, a weapon would find no place for its point to enter in. ~ And why? ~ Because such men have no 'death-spot' in them.

—[50c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ We emerge into life, enter into death. ~ Three out of ten are adherents of life; ~ three out of ten are adherents of death; ~ and there are three out of ten whose way of life also leads them to death. ~ Why is this so? ~ It is due to placing too much emphasis on life. ~ For I have heard that one good at preserving life, when traveling by land, does not encounter the wild buffalo and, when entering the army, suffers no wound from weapons. ~ The wild water buffalo has no way to strike at him with horn, the tiger has no way to strike at him with claw, and weapons of war have no way to use point or edge against him. ~ Why is this so? ~ It is due to the fact that he stays free of the land of death.

—[50c19t] Lin Yutang ~ THE PRESERVING OF LIFE ~ Out of life, death enters. ~ The companions (organs) of life are thirteen; ~ The companions (organs) of death are (also) thirteen. ~ What send man to death in this life are also (these) thirteen. ~ How is it so? ~ Because of the intense activity of multiplying life. ~ It has been said that he who is a good preserver of his life ~ Meets no tigers or wild buffaloes on land, ~ Is not vulnerable to weapons in the field of battle. ~ The horns of the wild buffalo are powerless against him; ~ The paws of the tiger are useless against him; ~ The weapons of the soldier cannot avail against him. ~ How is it so? ~ Because he is beyond death.

—[50c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ A person comes forth to life and enters into death. ~ Three out of ten are partners of life, ~ Three out of ten are partners of death, ~ And the people whose every movement leads them to the land of death because they cling to life ~ Are also three out of ten. ~ Now, ~ What is the reason for this? ~ It is because they cling to life. ~ Indeed, ~ I have heard that ~ One who is good at preserving life does not avoid tigers and rhinoceroses when he walks in the hills; ~ nor does he put on armor and take up weapons when he enters a battle. ~ The rhinoceros has no place to jab its horn, ~ The tiger has no place to fasten its claws, ~ Weapons have no place to admit their blades. ~ Now, ~ What is the reason for this? ~ Because on him there are no mortal spots.

—[50c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ When going off one way means living ~ and going off the other way means dying, ~ three in ten are companions of Life, ~ three in ten are companions of Death, ~ and three in ten value Life but drift toward Death. ~ Why is all this so? ~ Because, these people are too greedy about living. ~ It is said: ~ People who are skillful in caring ~ for the life that has been given to them ~ travel abroad without fear of wild ox or tiger, ~ and enter a battle without concern for sharp weapons. ~ There is no place for the wild ox to thrust its horns, ~ there is no place for the tiger to put its claws, ~ there is no place for a weapon to lodge. ~ How is this so? ~ Because, there is no place for Death to enter in!

—[50c22t] David H. Li ~ People are born and people die. ~ Three in ten live long; ~ Three in ten die young; ~ Three in ten move [prematurely] into death's realm. ~ Why so? ~ Because they care for their lives too well. ~ Those who care for themselves, it is said, are unlikely to encounter rhinoceroses or tigers on land, or face weaponry and soldiers in war. ~ Rhinoceroses have no occasion to use their horns; ~ tigers have no occasion to use their claws; ~ soldiers have no occasion to use their bayonets. ~ Why so? ~ Because they care for themselves to not move into death's realm.

—[50c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ Life is appearance; death is disappearance. ~ Three out of ten live a long life. ~ Three out of ten live a short life. ~ Three out of ten bring upon themselves an untimely death, ~ Because they cling too much to outer pleasures of life. ~ He who maintains a balanced life in accordance with the Tao, ~ Does not meet tigers or rhinoceroses in the wilderness, ~ Does not suffer attacks from the enemy in the battlefield. ~ Upon him the tiger has no place to fasten its claws, ~ The rhinoceros has no place to jab its horn, ~ The weapon has no place to pierce its blade. ~ Why is this so? ~ Because in him there is no room for death to enter.

—[50c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ It is easy to hold something that is motionless, ~ It is easy to create a mold for something that is not lacking, ~ It is easy to break something that is breakable, ~ It is easy to scatter a thing that is small. ~ Take care of a thing before it happens, ~ Arrange a thing before it gets out of hand. ~ The simple man generally fails in his affairs on the verge of success. ~ Take care of the end as you do of the beginning, ~ And you will not fail.

—[50c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ In the normal way of things every three in ten live long, ~ while every three in ten die young - ~ and for those just passing through their lives (that is, every three in ten) the chances are the same. ~ Why is this? ~ Well, it all depends on how identified they are with the mundane world of matter. ~ People who know how to live will never do things that threaten their lives, ~ any more than a traveller who knows will run into a tiger or a wild buffalo. ~ Living well is like wearing a kind of armour that nothing can penetrate. ~ Living badly is like being attacked! ~ A practised sage is invulnerable to attacks ~ that punch like a buffalo's horn, ~ that claw like a leaping tiger - ~ or that stab like a knife in the back. ~ And why is this? ~ Because he is impeccable.

—[50c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ Men live when given to birth ~ And die when being buried. ~ One third of them are long-lived; ~ One third of them are short-lived; ~ One third of them die from their own choices though they could have lived longer; ~ Why in such cases? ~ Because they are too eager to live longer. ~ It is heard that he who is good at preserving his life ~ Does not meet with the rhinoceros or tiger when traveling on land, ~ Nor is he wounded in war, ~ For the rhinoceros has no use for its horns ~ And the tiger has no use for its claws; ~ The weapons have no use for their blades. ~ Why in such cases? ~ Because there is no realm of death for him to enter.

—[50c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ Emotions and longings are life. ~ Passions and desires are death. ~ There are thirteen kinds of life: ~ seven are emotions and they refer to the gates of the mind; ~ six are longings and they refer to the gates of the body. ~ There are also thirteen kinds of death: ~ seven are passions and they refer to the gates of the mind; ~ six are desires and they refer to the gates of the body. ~ These thirteen kinds of life and death rule also human beings, because one treasures life. ~ He who is good at conserving his life will not meet the rhinoceros and the tiger on his journey. ~ He can enter a battle without being hurt. ~ The rhinoceros cannot attack him with its horn, ~ the tiger cannot scratch him with its claws, ~ troops cannot use their swords against him. ~ That is only because he has no place for death to enter.

—[50c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ Life and death co-exist in the same process. ~ The chance for life is thirty percent. ~ The chance for death is thirty percent. ~ The chance for death in the life's area is also thirty percent. ~ Why? ~ Because some live too actively for their lives. ~ It has been said that people good at living ~ Do not meet with tigers on land, ~ Or receive hits in battle. ~ Tigers can have no chance to apply their paws. ~ Weapons can have no chance to exert their edges. ~ Why? ~ Because people good at living have no chance of death.

—[50c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ The Preserving of Life ~ Lao Tze says, ~ Men come forth from their mothers' wombs and live; ~ and they enter dust, and die. ~ Those men who depend on the three and ten to live; ~ die by the three and ten also. ~ Those who were living will be sent to the place of death by the three and ten. ~ And for what reason? ~ Because they made excessive stores to perpetuate their life. ~ For I have heard it is said that one who excels in safeguarding his own life does not shun the rhinoceros or tiger when travelling on land, nor does he avoid buff coat and sharp weapon at entering a host. ~ The rhinoceros finds no place to fix its claw on him, nor the weapon a place to admit its point on him. ~ And for what reason? ~ Because there is no place of death on him.

—[50c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ Men go out of life and enter into death. ~ The parts (proportions) of life are three in ten; the parts of death are also three in ten. ~ Men that from birth move towards the region of death are also three in ten. ~ Why is it so? ~ Because of their redundant effort in seeking to live. ~ But only those who do nothing for the purpose of living are better than those who prize their lives. ~ For I have heard that he who knows well how to conserve life, when travelling on land, does not meet the rhinoceros or the tiger; when going to a battle he is not attacked by arms and weapons. ~ The rhinoceros can find nowhere to drive his horn; the tiger can find nowhere to put his claws; the weapons can find nowhere to thrust their blades. ~ Why is it so? ~ Because he is beyond the region of death.

—[50c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ Coming out means life; going in means death. ~ Three-tenths of men are disciples of life. ~ Three-tenths of men are disciples of death. ~ Three-tenths of men actually have life, but strive for death through activity. ~ Why is this so? ~ Because they over-nourish themselves. ~ So I have heard that he who is capable of sustaining life ~ Can travel on land without ever encountering a rhinoceros or tiger; ~ Can enter a battle without ever being touched by arms and weapons. ~ The rhinoceros cannot charge him with its horns. ~ The tiger cannot attack him with its claws. ~ Weapons have no place to lodge their blades. ~ Why is this so? ~ Because he has no grounds for death.

—[50c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ "Setting out to live is entering into death." ~ "Thirteen are the life givers, ~ thirteen are the death bringers." ~ The thirteen body parts are also death spots in people's life and activity. ~ Why? ~ Because they live life so lavishly. ~ So we hear: ~ One who Excels at fostering life, ~ "travels on land without meeting rhinoceros or tiger, ~ enters combat without armor or weapon." ~ The rhinoceros finds no place to jab its horn, ~ the tiger finds no place to lay its claws, ~ a weapon finds no place where its point can enter. ~ Why? ~ Because he has no death spot.

—[50c33t] Cheng Lin ~ Man begins with life, and ends with death. ~ During the span of man's existence, ~ three-tenths of it are passed in the processes of growth; ~ three-tenths are passed in the processes of decay. ~ That which is meant for the development of life but which is passed in the processes of decay also constitutes three-tenths. ~ Why is this so? ~ Because man over-taxes the life force. ~ It has been said that he who knows how to preserve life avoids the rhinoceros and tigers when travelling by land; ~ dodges arms and weapons when engaged in battle with a hostile army. ~ He sees to it that the rhinoceros have no opportunity to use their horns; ~ that tigers have no opportunity to use their claws; ~ that enemies have no opportunity to use their weapons. ~ Why is this so? ~ Because man avoids the risks of death.

—[50c34t] Yi Wu ~ From birth to death, ~ One-third are fellows of life, ~ One-third are fellows of death, ~ And one-third are fellows of life who move to grounds for death. ~ Why is this? ~ Because they are overly attached to their lives. ~ It is said that those who are good at sustaining life ~ Travel on land without meeting wild buffalos or tigers, ~ Enter battle without protection of armor or weapons. ~ In them, a wild buffalo finds no place to gore with its horns, ~ A tiger finds no place to seize with its claws, ~ A weapon finds no place to pierce with its blade. ~ Why is this? ~ Because they have no grounds for death.

—[50c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ From the time you were born, you are dying. ~ About one-third of people are luxuriating in longevity, ~ Another third are enjoying a normal life span but travelling along the path towards a natural death. ~ The other third are heading on the path towards a premature death. ~ The cause of premature death is due to overindulgence in life. ~ I have heard that people, who master the art of living, ~ Can avoid meeting a rhinoceros or tiger in the jungle. ~ They can avoid getting hurt by any sharp weapons in a battle. ~ The rhinoceros cannot employ its horn against them. ~ The tiger cannot attack them with its paws. ~ Sharp weapons cannot inflict injury on them. ~ Why is this so? ~ They simply manage to stay away from the circle of death.

—[50c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ That one's physical life will begin with birth and end in death seems a surety. ~ Also, in an individual life, the special opportunities of life and death are very much equal. ~ When there is an opportunity for death, ~ there is an opportunity for life also. ~ When there is an unusual opportunity for life, ~ it pulls one's life closer to death. ~ Aside from such opportunities, ~ there is the personal effort to maintain normalcy. ~ This is much more reliable than the special opportunities which place one's life on the verge of life and death. ~ People of awareness value normalcy and forsake seeking special opportunities which hold the promise of increasing the strength of living. ~ Such things are eventually only ways to speed up one's life. ~ One who can enjoy his natural life is content with the life of simple normalcy. ~ As I was told, one who knows how to tend his life with simple normalcy, ~ does not meet wild animals on the road or know the touch of weapons during war. ~ The mighty horns of the rhinoceros, ~ the powerful claws of the tiger, ~ the sharp blades of weapons, ~ find nowhere to pierce him. ~ Why is this so? ~ Because his mind holds no uncanny thoughts he gives death no opportunity.

—[50c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ To live or to die: ~ Three out of ten men live, ~ While three out of ten men die. ~ Further, three out of ten men cling to life, ~ But they lose it. ~ Why? ~ Because they all crave life. ~ He who knows how to safeguard his life ~ Does not encounter tigers or rhinoceroses. ~ In the battlefield ~ He does not avoid dangerous weapons. ~ Rhinoceroses cannot gore him, ~ Tigers cannot claw him, ~ Dangerous weapons cannot harm him. ~ Why? ~ Because there is no place in him for death.

—[50c38t] Henry Wei ~ Importance of Life ~ Kuei Sheng ~ As life emerges, death enters. ~ The agents of life are thirteen; ~ The agents of death are likewise thirteen; ~ The thirteen also may make men move in a death spot. ~ Why so? ~ Because life is lived in too intense a manner. ~ I have heard that - ~ He, who is adept in guarding his life, ~ Will not come across rhinoceros and tigers, ~ When travelling on land; ~ And when in the armed forces, ~ Will not get wounded by deadly weapons. ~ In him the rhinoceros can find no place to butt, ~ Nor can the tiger find any place to claw, ~ Nor can the weapons find any place to injure. ~ Why so? ~ Because there is no death spot in him.

—[50c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ You come out to life and enter death. ~ The companions of life are three in ten; ~ The companions of death are three in ten: ~ The way humans live, ~ There are those who move into death-spots. ~ They too are three in ten. ~ Why is this so? ~ It is because of their hoarding of life. ~ I hear that those who nurture life well, ~ When traveling on land, do not meet wild buffaloes or tigers, ~ Nor do they, when going into battle, put on armor or shields. ~ The wild buffalo would find no place to thrust its horns; ~ The tiger would find no place to place its claws; ~ The sword would find no place to lodge its blade. ~ Why is this so? ~ Because for such men there are no death-spots.

—[50c40t] Tao Huang ~ We live, we die. ~ The companions of life are three and ten. ~ The companions of death are three and ten. ~ That people live their active life necessarily leading to the ground of death is three and ten. ~ Why so? ~ It is the nature of life itself. ~ As a matter of fact, I hear of those who are good at preserving their lives: ~ Walking through, not avoiding rhinos and tigers. ~ Entering battle without wearing armaments. ~ The rhino has no place to dig its horns. ~ The tiger has no place to drag its claws. ~ The soldier has no place to thrust his blade. ~ Why is this so? ~ Because they have no place to die.

—[50c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ Throughout human life, from birth to death: ~ There are one third who die naturally; ~ There are one third who die from disease; ~ And the other one third who die by speeding to death. ~ For what reasons have they done so? ~ Because they live by overdrawing upon their lives heavily. ~ As I used to hear that: ~ "One who takes good care of his life will not meet a rhinoceros or a tiger when he is traveling on land. ~ He does not need to wear armour or carry weapons when he is leading an army." ~ The rhinoceros finds no place to insert its horn. ~ The tiger finds no place to put its claws. ~ Weapons of war find no place to thrust their blades. ~ For what reasons? ~ Because one never lets himself be in a vulnerable situation.

—[50c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ Man comes in to life and goes out to death. ~ Three out of ten are companions of life. ~ Three out of ten are companions of death. ~ And three out of ten in their lives lead from activity to death. ~ And for what reason? ~ Because of man's intensive striving after life. ~ I have heard that one who is a good preserver of his life will not meet tigers or wild buffaloes, ~ And in fighting will not try to escape from weapons of war. ~ The wild buffalo cannot butt its horns against him, ~ The tiger cannot fasten its claws in him, ~ And weapons of war cannot thrust their blades into him. ~ And for what reason? ~ Because in him there is no room for death.

— [50c91t] И. И. Семененко ~ Выходят, чтобы жить; ~ входя обратно, умирают. ~ Из каждых десяти лишь три вступают в жизнь и три, уж находясь в конце ее, вышагивают к смерти. ~ И те, чья человеческая жизнь является лишь местом смерти, по которому им двигаться, тоже составляют три из десяти. ~ Чем это объясняется? ~ Тем, что они всего превыше ценят жизнь. ~ Говорят, есть человек, умеющий заботиться о жизни. ~ Когда идет по суше, на него не нападает носорог и тигр, вступая в войско, он не запасается оружием и латами. ~ Носорогу некуда его ударить рогом, тигру негде в него впитаться когтями, мечу некуда в него вонзиться острием. ~ Чем это объясняется? ~ Тем, что в нем нет места для смерти.

— [50c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Появляясь - живём, уходя - умираем. ~ Трое из десяти последуют жизни. ~ Трое из десяти последуют смерти. ~ Тех, кто стремится к жизни и потому часто сталкивается со смертью, - также трое из десяти. ~ Почему это так? ~ Потому что они излишне стремятся к жизни. ~ Я слышал, что искущённый в сбережении своей жизни, в своих странствиях не столкнётся с носорогами и тиграми. ~ В сражении его не задеть ударом оружия. ~ Носорогам некуда воткнуть свой рог. ~ Тиграм некуда вонзить свои когти. ~ Воину некуда направить своё оружие. ~ Почему это так? ~ Потому что в нём нет места смерти.

— [50c93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Рождаясь, чтобы жить, люди устремляются к смерти. ~ Учеников жизни - трое из десятка. ~ Учеников смерти - трое из десятка. ~ Тех людей, что рождены для жизни, но стремятся в царство смерти, - трое из десятка. ~ И по какой причине это? ~ По той причине, что жадны до жизни люди. ~ Я слышал, что умеющий жизнь свою беречь, идя по суше, не столкнется с тигром или носорогом, а вступая в войско, может он не опасаться оружия и лат. ~ Ведь носорогу некуда свой рог вонзить, тигру некуда когти свои запустить, оружию некуда клинок вонзить. ~ И по какой причине это? ~ По той причине, что для таких людей не существует царства смерти.

— [50c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Приходят жизнью, уходят смертью. ~ Придут жизнью тринадцать, уйдут смертью тринадцать, из живущих людей движущихся к месту смерти тоже тринадцать. ~ Почему это так? ~ Из-за их обильного рождения и размножения. ~ Как-то слышал, что тот, кто искусно (посредством добра-шань) управляет жизнью, идя по суше, не избегает носорогов и тигров, ~ вступая в бой, неуязвим для латников. ~ Носорогу некуда вонзить свой рог, тигру некуда запустить свои когти, ~ латнику некуда ударить своим мечом. ~ Почему это так? ~ Потому что у него нет места смерти [ни на нем, ни на земле].

— [50c95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ [Существа] рождаются и умирают. ~ Из десяти человек три [идут] к жизни, три - к смерти. ~ Из каждых десяти еще имеются три человека, которые умирают от своих деяний. ~ Почему это так? ~ Это происходит оттого, что у них слишком сильно стремление к жизни. ~ Я слышал, что, кто умеет овладевать жизнью, идя по земле, не боится носорога и тигра, вступая в битву, не боится вооруженных солдат. ~ Носорогу некуда вонзить в него свой рог, тигру негде наложить на него свои когти, а солдатам некуда поразить его мечом. ~ В чем причина? ~ Это происходит оттого, что для него не существует смерти.

— [50c96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ (Все существа), уходя из жизни, входят в смерть. ~ Жизнь имеет 13 ступеней своего развития; смерть также имеет 13 ступеней. ~ Ступеней человеческой жизни, которая постоянно стремится к смерти, опять 13. ~ Это почему? ~ Потому что стремление к жизни слишком сильно. ~ Я слышал, что ведущий воздержную жизнь не боится ни носорога, ни тигра, ни быть на поле сражения без воинского наряда, ибо на нем нет места, куда носорог мог бы ударить рогом, тигр мог бы вонзить свои острые когти и воин мог бы нанести удар мечом. ~ Это почему? ~ Потому что для ведущего жизнь воздержную не существует смерти.

— [50c97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Вот: выходят в жизнь и входят в смерть. ~ Товарищей по жизни - три из десяти, ~ Товарищей по смерти - три из десяти. ~ Жизнь свою в смерть обращающих - тоже три из десяти. ~ А почему? ~ Все из-за жажды быть живым в этой жизни. ~ Известно: тот, кто постиг мудрость сбереженья жизни, ~ В пути не встретит тигра или носорога, ~ Вступив в сражение, избежит разящего клинка. ~ В нем носорогу некуда воткнуть свой рог, ~ Тигру некуда вонзить свои когти, ~ Воину некуда направить свой меч. ~ Почему так? ~ Потому что смерти негде поселиться в нем.

— [50c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Выход - рождение. ~ Вход - смерть. ~ Попутчиков рождения - на десять есть три. ~ Попутчиков смерти - на десять есть три. ~ Людей, рождающих движение, ведущее в Землю смерти, тоже - на десять есть три. ~ И какова же причинность? ~ Это мощь порождения порождающего. ~ Так, внимающий совершенствованию накопления порождающего, он, двигаясь по суше, не встретит носорога и тигра. ~ Войдя в войско, он не столкнется с вооруженным воином. ~ Для носорога отсутствует место, куда приложить свой рог. ~ Для тигра отсутствует место, куда применить свои когти. ~ Для воина отсутствует место, куда вонзить свой клинок. ~ И какова же причинность: ~ Из-за отсутствия в нем Земли смерти.

— [51c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ The Way gives birth to them and Virtue nourishes them; ~ Substance gives them form and their unique capacities complete them. ~ Therefore the ten thousand things venerate the Way and honor Virtue. ~ As for their veneration of the Way and their honoring of Virtue - ~ No one rewards them for it; it's constantly so on its own. ~ The Way gives birth to them, nourishes them, matures them, completes them, rests them, rears them, supports them, and protects {them}. ~ {It gives birth to them but} doesn't try to own them; ~ It acts on their behalf but doesn't make them dependent; ~ It matures them but doesn't rule them. ~ This we call Profound Virtue.

— [51c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ TAO gives them life, ~ Virtue nurses them, ~ Matter shapes them, ~ Environment perfects them. ~ Therefore all things without exception worship Tao and do homage to Virtue. ~ They have not been commanded to worship Tao and do homage to Virtue, ~ But they always do so spontaneously. ~ It is Tao that gives them life: ~ It is Virtue that nurses them, grows them, fosters them, shelters them, comforts them, nourishes them, and covers them under her wings. ~ To give life but to claim nothing, ~ To do your work but to set no store by it, ~ To be a leader, not a butcher, ~ This is called hidden Virtue.

— [51c03t] D. C. Lau ~ The way gives them life; ~ Virtue rears them; ~ Things give them shape; ~ Circumstances bring them to maturity. ~ Therefore the myriad creatures all revere the way and honour virtue. ~ Yet the way is revered and virtue honoured not because this is decreed by any authority but because it is natural for them to be treated so. ~ Thus the way gives them life and rears them; ~ Brings them up and nurses them; ~ Brings them to fruition and maturity; ~ Feeds and shelters them. ~ It gives them life yet claims no possession; ~ It benefits them yet exacts no gratitude; ~ It is the steward yet exercises no authority. ~ Such is called the mysterious virtue.

— [51c04t] R. L. Wing ~ The Tao produces; ~ Its Power supports; Its Natural Law forms; Its influence completes. ~ Thus All Things without exception ~ Respect the Tao and value its Power. ~ To respect the Tao and value its Power - ~ No one demands this, and it comes naturally. ~ Therefore the Tao produces and its Power supports; ~ It advances, cultivates, comforts, matures, nourishes, and protects. ~ Produce but do not possess. ~ Act without expectation. ~ Advance without dominating. ~ These are called the Subtle Powers.

—[51c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ Tao begets all beings, ~ And De fosters them. ~ The physical gives them forms, ~ And the vessels mark them accomplished. ~ Therefore all beings without exception venerate Tao and value De. ~ The veneration of Tao and valuing of De, is not out of obedience to any orders, but is always like this. ~ Therefore Tao begets all beings, ~ And De fosters them, grows and raises them, makes them fruitful and mature, breeds them and protects them. ~ To give birth to them without taking possession of them, ~ To put them in motion without vaunting this as its merits, ~ And to be their sovereign without controlling them, ~ - These are called the profound De.

—[51c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ All things arise from Tao. ~ They are nourished by Virtue. ~ They are formed from matter. ~ They are shaped by environment. ~ Thus the ten thousand things all respect Tao and honor Virtue. ~ Respect of Tao and honor of Virtue are not demanded, ~ But they are in the nature of things. ~ Therefore all things arise from Tao. ~ By Virtue they are nourished, ~ Developed, cared for, ~ Sheltered, comforted, ~ Grown, and protected. ~ Creating without claiming, ~ Doing without taking credit, ~ Guiding without interfering, ~ This is Primal Virtue.

—[51c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ The Dao gives them birth. ~ The Virtue rears them. ~ They get their shapes from substance. ~ They become what they are from the working of various forces. ~ For these reasons all living things pay homage to the Dao, ~ And respect the Virtue. ~ The stately status of the Dao and that of the Virtue ~ Are such that they are at the command of no one, ~ And are always in their natural states. ~ The Dao gives birth; ~ The Virtue rears them; ~ Raises and nourishes them; ~ Brings them up and lets them down; ~ Claims no ownership even though it brings them to life. ~ The Dao accomplishes but is never arrogant; ~ It lets them grow but never dictates their fates. ~ This is known as the Mystical Virtue.

—[51c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ The DAO gives birth to everything, the DE looks after everything, ~ The elements give a shape to everything, and nature makes everything grow and mature. ~ Therefore, everything respects the DAO and values the DE. ~ The dignity of the DAO and the nobleness of the DE are not forced upon anything, but allow everything to be natural. ~ So, the DAO gives birth to everything, the DE looks after everything; ~ They grow and cultivate everything, making them complete and mature; ~ They bring everything up and protect them. ~ Giving birth to everything but not owning them, ~ Taking care of everything but not claiming the credit, ~ Leading everything but not controlling them; ~ This is called real DE.

—[51c09t] Walter Gorn Old, CHERISHING VIRTUE ~ Tao brings forth, and Teh nourishes. ~ All things take up their several forms, and natural forces bring them to perfection. ~ Therefore all things conspire to exalt Tao and to cherish virtue. ~ But this regard of Tao and Teh is not in deference to any mandate. ~ It is unconstrained, and therefore it endures for ever. ~ For Tao produces all things, and Teh nourishes, increases, feeds, matures, protects, and watches over them. ~ To produce without possessing; to work without expecting; to enlarge without usurping; this is the sublime virtue!

—[51c10t] James Legge ~ All things are produced by the Tao, and nourished by its outflowing operation. ~ They receive their forms according to the nature of each, and are completed according to the circumstances of their condition. ~ Therefore all things without exception honour the Tao, and exalt its outflowing operation. ~ This honouring of the Tao and exalting of its operation is not the result of any ordination, but always a spontaneous tribute. ~ Thus it is that the Tao produces (all things), nourishes them, brings them to their full growth, nurses them, completes them, matures them, maintains them, and overspreads them. ~ It produces them and makes no claim to the possession of them; ~ it carries them through their processes and does not vaunt its ability in doing so; ~ it brings them to maturity and exercises no control over them; ~ - this is called its mysterious operation.

—[51c11t] David Hinton ~ Way gives birth to them and Integrity nurtures them. ~ Matter shapes them and conditions complete them. ~ That's why the ten thousand things always honor Way and treasure Integrity. ~ Honoring Way and treasuring Integrity ~ isn't obedience to command, ~ it's occurrence perennially appearing of itself. ~ Way gives birth to them and Integrity nurtures them: ~ it fosters and sustains them, harbors and succors them, nourishes and shelters them. ~ Giving birth without possessing, ~ animating without subjecting, ~ fostering without dominating: ~ this is called dark-enigma Integrity.

—[51c12t] Chichung Huang ~ The Tao generates them, ~ Virtue nurtures them, ~ Matter forms them, ~ And instruments complete them. ~ Hence, the ten thousand things ~ Honor the Tao and treasure virtue. ~ That the Tao is honored ~ And virtue is treasured is not because ~ Anyone has conferred titles upon them; ~ It is constantly the way things are. ~ The Tao generates them, ~ Nurtures them, ~ Grows them, ~ Raises them, ~ Shapes them, ~ Solidifies them, ~ Stores them, ~ Covers them. ~ It generates without possessing, ~ Assists without taking credit, ~ Leads without dominating. ~ This is called deep and remote virtue.

—[51c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ Tao gives birth, ~ Te rears (hsü), ~ Things (wu) shape, ~ Circumstances (shih) complete. ~ Therefore the ten thousand things, ~ None do not respect Tao and treasure te. ~ Tao is respected, ~ Te is treasured, ~ Not by decree (ming), ~ But by spontaneity (tzu-jan). ~ Therefore Tao gives birth, ~ Te keeps, grows, nurtures, matures, ripens, covers and buries. ~ To give birth without possession, ~ To act (wei) without holding on to, ~ To grow (chang) without lording over, ~ This is called the dark te.

—[51c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ Tao originates [each and every thing]; ~ Te cultivates [each and every thing]; ~ The material world gives the form [to each and every thing]; ~ The situation completes the formation [of each and every thing]. ~ For this reason, each and every thing must resort to venerating Tao and treasuring Te; ~ The omnipotence of Tao and the invaluable-ness of Te [are so compelling]; ~ Even though people are not required to recognize the omnipotence of Tao and the invaluable-ness of Te, they shall always [propelled to] follow their rules, because this is the way of Nature. ~ Accordingly, Tao originates [each and everything]; ~ Te cultivates, grows, nourishes, fulfills, ripens, nurtures and shelters [each and everything]. ~ [I have therefore said before, if a person carries out any of the following practices:] ~ Helping [others] to live [better lives] without being possessive; ~ Stimulating [others] (to maximize their potentials) without claiming the contribution; ~ Leading [others with the best guidance] without being manipulative; ~ This person has performed [successfully in accord with] the profound Te!

—[51c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ The Way gives birth [to all things]; Virtue nourishes; matter shapes; environment perfects. ~ Therefore all things without exception revere the Way and honor Virtue, although they are not commanded, but left to do so naturally. ~ Hence, the Way gives birth; Virtue nurses, grows, fosters, shelters, comforts, nourishes, and guards. ~ It gives birth but does not claim as its own; it does but does not claim its doing; it grows but does not claim to be master. ~ This is called hidden Virtue.

—[51c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ Everything is born from Tao, and nurtured by Te; shaped by substance, and completed by environment. ~ Thus, everything follows Tao and is guided by Te. ~ Tao is honored. ~ Te is valued. ~ This is not the result of promotion, but occurs naturally. ~ This is why everything is born by Tao and nurtured by Te. ~ Te raises, educates, mentors, coaches, nourishes, and protects everything. ~ Giving lives without possessing them, ~ Guiding without forcing, ~ Developing without controlling, ~ This is called Profound Te.

—[51c17t] Arthur Waley ~ Tao gave them birth; ~ The 'power' of Tao reared them, ~ Shaped them according to their kinds, ~ Perfected them, giving to each its strength. ~ Therefore of the ten thousand things there is not one that does not worship Tao and do homage to its 'power'. ~ No mandate ever went forth that accorded to Tao the right to be worshipped, nor to its 'power' the right to receive homage. ~ It was always and of itself so. ~ Therefore as Tao bore them and the 'power' of Tao reared them, made them grow, fostered them, harboured them, brewed for them, so you must ~ 'Rear them, but not lay claim to them, ~ Control them, but never lean upon them, ~ Be chief among them, but not manage them. ~ This is called the mysterious power.'

—[51c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ The Dao gives life to them; virtue nurtures them, matter gives them physical form, and characteristic potential completes them. ~ This is why the myriad things without exception must honor the Dao and esteem virtue. ~ This honoring of the Dao and this esteeming of virtue, none are ordered to do so, yet it always happens spontaneously. ~ The Dao gives them life, and virtue nurtures them, that is, grows them, rears them, ensures them their proper shapes, matures them, and protects them. ~ He gives them life yet possesses them not. ~ He acts, yet they do not depend on him. ~ They mature, yet he is not their steward. ~ This we call mysterious virtue.

—[51c19t] Lin Yutang ~ THE MYSTIC VIRTUE ~ Tao gives them birth, ~ Teh (character) fosters them. ~ The material world gives them form. ~ The circumstances of the moment complete them. ~ Therefore all things of the universe worship Tao and exalt Teh. ~ Tao is worshipped and Teh is exalted ~ Without anyone's order but is so of its own accord. ~ Therefore Tao gives them birth, ~ Teh fosters them, ~ Makes them grow, develops them, ~ Gives them a harbor, a place to dwell in peace, ~ Feeds them and shelters them. ~ It gives them birth and does not own them, ~ Acts (helps) and does not appropriate them, ~ Is superior, and does not control them. ~ This is the Mystic Virtue.

—[51c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ The Way gives birth to them and integrity nurtures them. ~ Matter forms them and function completes them. ~ For this reason, ~ The myriad creatures respect the Way and esteem integrity. ~ Respect for the Way and esteem for integrity are by no means conferred upon them but always occur naturally. ~ The Way ~ gives birth to them, ~ nurtures them, ~ rears them, ~ follows them, ~ shelters them, ~ toughens them, ~ sustains them, ~ protects them. ~ It ~ gives birth but does not possess, ~ acts but does not presume, ~ rears but does not control. ~ This is what is called "mysterious integrity."

—[51c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ The Tao gives life to all things, ~ and its Virtue nourishes them, forms each according to its nature and gives to each its inner strength. ~ Therefore, ~ the ten thousand things all venerate the Tao and honor its Virtue. ~ It has never been decreed that the Tao be venerated and its Virtue be honored; ~ they have always been so treated spontaneously. ~ Thus, ~ the Tao gives life to all things; ~ and its Virtue raises them, nourishes them, brings them to their full growth, feeds, shelters, and protects them. ~ Giving life without claiming authority, ~ benefiting without demanding gratitude, ~ guiding without control. ~ This is called hidden Virtue.

—[51c22t] David H. Li ~ Cultivated by Direction, reared by virtue; ~ formed by matter, completed by interaction. ~ Thus, myriad matters revere Direction and value virtue. ~ The reason Direction is revered and virtue valued is that they do not command but let myriad matters visit Nature. ~ Thus, ~ Direction cultivates, ~ virtue rears, nurtures, guides, comforts, protects, cares, shelters. ~ Cultivating without possessing, ~ providing without claiming, ~ nurturing without dominating, ~ This is the Profoundest Virtue.

—[51c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ The Tao begets existence. ~ Intelligence nurtures existence. ~ Substance forms existence. ~ Forces complete existence. ~ For this reason, ~ Everything in existence, without exception, ~ Reveres the Tao and honors Intelligence, ~ Not by any decree, but with utter spontaneity. ~ Thus, the Tao begets everything in existence, ~ And Intelligence nurtures it, ~ Rears it, ~ Develops it, ~ Completes it, ~ Ripens it, ~ Sustains it, ~ Protects it. ~ Giving birth without possessing, ~ Availing life without claiming, ~ Promoting growth without controlling, ~ These are the Profound Virtues of Kosmic Intelligence.

—[51c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ The Tao created all things, ~ The way of the Tao nourished them, ~ All things emerge in different forms, ~ Each of them is perfect in the nature of the Tao within it. ~ Therefore, there is not one among the myriad of things ~ That does not honor the Tao and cherish its way. ~ Honoring the Tao and cherishing its way are not dictated by law, ~ But rather come from within. ~ Therefore the Tao creates them, makes them grow, nourishes them, ~ Guards them, lifts them, and protects them. ~ When all things are created, the Tao does not reject them. ~ It creates them without owning them. ~ It operates without depending on them, and raises them without controlling them. ~ When its work is completed, it does not lay any claim to them. ~ Since it does not lay claim to them, it does not lose them.

—[51c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ Everything streams from the Tao, ~ Everything is nurtured by Te, ~ Everything is made out of substance, ~ Everything is created by the Tao of Nature ~ - and from everything on earth that surrounds it. ~ So every living thing should bow to the Tao, the Tao and its Virtue because they are what it is. ~ Everything that breathes comes from the Tao, ~ And the Virtue feeds and takes care of it. ~ They grace things without possessing them, ~ They benefit everything but ask for nothing back, ~ They give themselves into everything without seeking control. ~ This is the essence of the original intention.

—[51c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ The Tao begets all creatures; ~ The virtue rears them; ~ Substance gives them shape; ~ Forces in opposition accomplish them. ~ Therefore all creatures worship the Tao and honor virtue. ~ This worship and honor stems from the fact ~ That the Tao and virtue never unnaturally ~ Impose their influence on all creatures. ~ In this way ~ The Tao begets all creatures; ~ The virtue rears them, ~ Promotes them, natures them, ~ Brings them to fruition and maturity, ~ Meanwhile maintains and defends them. ~ Giving them life without claiming to be their owner; ~ Availing them without claiming to be their benefactor; ~ And being their head without ruling them; ~ All these are called the most intrinsic Teh (virtue).

—[51c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ The Tao creates. ~ The virtue nourishes. ~ The things form. ~ The environment shapes them to completion. ~ That is why the myriad creatures all respect the Tao, and value virtue. ~ When the Tao is respected, virtue is valued. ~ No one can command them but the Tao. ~ That is why the Tao creates myriad creatures. ~ Virtue nourishes them, cultivates them, educates them, completes them, ripens them, supports them, carries them. ~ The Tao creates them without possessing them, benefits them without profiting from them, guides them without commanding them. ~ That is what profound virtue means.

—[51c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ Things are produced by the Way, ~ Cultivated by their accumulation through time, ~ Realized in their forms by substances, ~ And guided in their development ~ By the potential in specific circumstances. ~ Therefore, everything respects the Way ~ And values what has been accumulated in the culture. ~ In the respected Way and valued accumulation, ~ Things grow and develop ~ By following their natural courses. ~ That's why we say that things are produced by the Way, ~ And, through diachronic accumulation, reared, ~ Cultivated, developed, matured, and protected naturally. ~ That process is the basic moral model for providers: ~ Produce without possessing anything, ~ Achieve without showing off anything, ~ And lead without making personal decisions.

—[51c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ The Mystic Virtue ~ Lao Tze says, ~ The Tao is the one to give existence; ~ and its attribute, the Teh, is responsible for nurturing it. ~ In this way all things are formed. ~ They are brought forth to maturity according to their condition. ~ Therefore, all existence without exception honors the Tao and exalts the Teh. ~ This honoring of the Tao and exalting of the Teh is not decreed through an authority, but through spontaneous tribute. ~ So it is that the Tao gives existence; ~ and its attribute, the Teh, completes, matures, maintains and shelters. ~ It gives life but doesn't claim the possession of it. ~ It carries all things through their processes but does not boast its ability. ~ It brings them to maturity, but does not control them. ~ This is called the mystic virtue.

—[51c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ Tao produces them (all things); ~ Virtue feeds them; ~ All of them appear in different forms; ~ Each is perfected by being given power. ~ Therefore none of the numerous things does not honour Tao and esteem virtue. ~ The honouring of Tao and the esteem of virtue are done, not by command, but always of their own accord. ~ Therefore Tao produces them, makes them grow, nourishes them, shelters them, brings them up and protects them. ~ When all things come into being Tao does not reject them. ~ It produces them without holding possession of them. ~ It acts without depending upon them, and raises without lording it over them. ~ When merits are accomplished it does not lay claim to them. ~ Because it does not lay claim to them, therefore it does not lose them.

—[51c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ Tao begets them. ~ Virtue nurtures them. ~ Matter gives them form. ~ Circumstances bring them into completion. ~ Therefore all things not only respect Tao but also value virtue. ~ Yet Tao is respected and virtue is valued. ~ Without being ordered, they come naturally. ~ Therefore Tao begets them. ~ Virtue nurtures them, grows them and rears them, perfects them and ripens them, nourishes them and shelters them. ~ Begetting without possessing; ~ Acting without asserting; ~ Developing without controlling; ~ This is called mystical virtue.

—[51c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ Tao produces them, ~ Te rears them, ~ events shape them, ~ talents complete their development. ~ And so: ~ Among the thousands of things, ~ there are none that do not honor Tao and treasure Te. ~ This honoring Tao and treasuring Te - ~ no one commands it, it always happens naturally. ~ Tao produces them, ~ Te rears them, makes them grow, nurses them, settles them, heals them, sustains them, protects them. ~ Produces but does not possess; ~ works but does not rely on this; ~ presides but doesn't rule. ~ This is mysterious Te.

—[51c33t] Cheng Lin ~ It is Truth that gives both life and form to things. ~ The nature of a thing determines its individuality and perfection. ~ Therefore, as regards all things, Truth and Nature are the most important. ~ The importance of Truth and Nature is a matter of course, and requires no comment. ~ Truth gives birth to life. ~ Nature determines the individuality, growth, development, completion, maturity, protection, and security of a thing. ~ The mysterious Nature is that which lives without the desire for ownership, gives without the wish for return, rules without claiming lordship.

—[51c34t] Yi Wu ~ The Way brings them forth, ~ Virtue nurtures them, ~ Matter shapes them, ~ Environment forms them. ~ Therefore, all things without exception venerate the Way and value virtue. ~ The Way's venerability and virtue's value ~ are that they do not command but constantly are natural. ~ Therefore, the Way brings them forth, ~ Virtue nurtures them, ~ Grows them and rears them, ~ Matures them and ripens them, ~ Nourishes them and shelters them. ~ Producing without possessing, ~ Acting without taking credit, ~ Growing without controlling, -- ~ This is called mystical virtue.

—[51c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ Dao produces everything. ~ De nourishes everything. ~ Dao and De work in tandem and things begin to take shape. ~ Things begin to evolve according to the circumstances. ~ Hence, all beings respect and venerate Dao and De. ~ Dao and De are so venerated because they do not exert control. ~ Everything is allowed to develop naturally. ~ Therefore, Dao procreates everything; De nurtures. ~ De facilitates growth, development, fruition and ripening. ~ It also nourishes and protects. ~ Dao procreates but does not possess. ~ De accomplishes but does not claim credit. ~ It facilitates growth but does not exert control. ~ This is known as "inconspicuous virtue".

—[51c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ The natural essence of the universe gives life to all things. ~ Virtue nurses them. ~ Matter shapes them. ~ The natural environment brings them to maturity. ~ Therefore, all things without exception revere the subtle essence and honor virtue. ~ Though the subtle essence deserves reverence, ~ it does not demand it. ~ And though virtue ought to be honored, ~ it, too, does not demand it. ~ Thus, it is the subtle essence that gives life to all things, and with its virtue nurses them, grows them, fosters them, shelters them, comforts them, nourishes them and embraces them. ~ It does all this, yet it claims no possession, ~ expects no gratitude, and desires no lordship. ~ This is called the subtle virtue of the universe.

—[51c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ Tao creates all things; ~ Tê cultivates them. ~ Things are shaped according to their natures; ~ Relational conditions fulfill them. ~ Therefore, ten thousand things all venerate the source of Tao ~ And value the potentialities of Tê. ~ Tao is venerated and Tê is valued spontaneously; ~ No one orders that it be so. ~ Thus, Tao creates all things; ~ Tê cultivates them. ~ They give them birth. ~ They nourish them. ~ They give them shape. ~ They give them quality. ~ They shelter them. ~ They guard them. ~ They create them but do not possess them. ~ They work for them but expect no reward. ~ They bring them to maturity but do not control them. ~ This is called invisible attainment.

—[51c38t] Henry Wei ~ Nourishing Virtue ~ Yang Teh ~ Tao produces all things; ~ Teh (virtue) rears them; ~ Material elements shape them; ~ Environmental forces perfect them. ~ That's why of the ten thousand things, ~ None does not honor Tao and exalt Teh. ~ Tao is honored and Teh is exalted, ~ Not in obedience to anyone's command, ~ But always in accord with Innate Freedom. ~ Thus while Tao produces things, Teh rears them, ~ Brings them up, develops them, perfects them, ~ Matures them, feeds them, and shelters them. ~ To produce but not to claim ownership, ~ To act but not to presume on the result, ~ To lead but not to manipulate - ~ This is called Mystic Virtue.

—[51c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ Tao gives life [to the ten thousand things]; ~ Te nurtures them. ~ Materiality shapes them; ~ The circumstances fulfill them. ~ Therefore, of the ten thousand things ~ None fails to revere Tao and honor Te. ~ The revering of Tao, ~ The honoring of Te - ~ No one orders it. ~ It is always so of itself [tzu-jan]. ~ Therefore Tao gives them life; ~ Te nurtures them. ~ Makes them flourish and grow; ~ Gives them security and comfort; ~ Feeds and shelters them. ~ To give them life, without possessing them; ~ To rule them, without depending on them; ~ To lead them, without presiding over them - ~ This is called the mysterious Te.

—[51c40t] Tao Huang ~ Tao enlivens. ~ Action nourishes. ~ Matter forms. ~ Mechanism completes. ~ For that reason, all things worship Tao and exalt Action. ~ The worship of Tao and exaltation of Action are not conferred, but always arise naturally. ~ Tao enlivens and nourishes, develops and cultivates, integrates and completes, raises and sustains. ~ It enlivens without possessing. ~ It acts without relying. ~ It develops without controlling. ~ Such is called mystic Action.

—[51c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ Dao gives birth to All Things. ~ Its virtue nourishes them. ~ Its Matter forms them, and its Forces perfect them. ~ Thus among All Things there is none which does not esteem Dao and envy its virtues. ~ To esteem Dao and envy its Virtues do not take any order whatever, but follow the eternity of Nature. ~ Since Dao gives life; ~ and its virtues nourish it, grow it, cultivate it, accomplish it, mature it, nurse it, and protect it. ~ It produces All Things but it does not possess them. ~ It provides everything for them but it does not take anything from them. ~ It leads them but does not lord over them. ~

It is called "the Profound Virtue".

— [51c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ Tao produces them. ~ Virtue fosters them. ~ Matter gives them physical form. ~ The circumstances and tendencies complete them. ~ Therefore the ten thousand things esteem Tao and honor virtue. ~ Tao is esteemed and virtue is honored without anyone's order! ~ They always come spontaneously. ~ Therefore Tao produces them and virtue fosters them. ~ They rear them and develop them. ~ They give them security and give them peace. ~ They nurture them and protect them. ~ (Tao) produces them but does not take possession of them. ~ It acts, but does not rely on its own ability. ~ It leads them but does not master them. ~ This is called profound and secret virtue.

— [51c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Дао рождает, добродетель взращивает, вещь оформляется, обстоятельства приводят к завершению. ~ Поэтому-то среди десяти тысяч вещей нет ни одной, которая не почитала бы Дао и не ценила добродетель. ~ Чтить Дао, ценить добродетель - это не чей-либо приказ, а незыблемая самость. ~ Дао рождает, добродетель взращивает. ~ Она растит, лелеет, совершенствует, делает зрелым, содержит, укрывает. ~ Чему давать жизнь, не иметь, ~ на свои действия не опираться, ~ быть старшим, но не властвовать ~ - это называют сокровенной добродетелью.

— [51c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Дао порождает, Благодать вскармливает. ~ В вещах оформляется, в обстоятельствах воплощается. ~ Поэтому мириады существ не только почитают Дао, но и ценят Благодать. ~ Почитают Дао и ценят Благодать не за то, что они предопределяют судьбу, а потому, что извечно следуют естественности. ~ Вот поэтому Дао порождает, Благодать вскармливает. ~ Взращивает и воспитывает, классифицирует и укрепляет, пестует и оберегает, порождает, но не обладает этим, свершает и не требует воздаяния, взращивает [мириады вещей] и не властвует над ними. ~ Оттого и зовётся это сокровенной Благодатью.

— [51c93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Дао-Путь все порождает. ~ Благая Сила-Дэ все вскармливает. ~ Вещественность все оформляет. ~ Сила все доводит до свершения. ~ Таким образом, среди всего сущего нет ни одного существа, что не почитало бы Дао-Пути и не ценило бы Благой Силы-Дэ. ~ Дао-Путь почитаем, а Благая Сила-Дэ ценима потому, что никому они не отдают велений, но постоянно пребывают в самоестественности свободной. ~ Поэтому Дао-Путь все порождает, Благая Сила-Дэ все вскармливает. ~ Они все взращивают и все пестуют, все завершают и все до зрелости доводят; ~ они все выхаживают и все собою покрывают; ~ рожают, но не обладают; ~ вершат, но преднамеренно не замышляют своих свершений; ~ взращивают все, но не господствуют над ним. ~ Вот что такое Сокровенная Благая Сила-Дэ!

— [51c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Дао рождает их, Дэ пестует их, вещество оформляет их, условия завершают их. ~ Поэтому среди мириад вещей нет таких, которые не почитали бы Дао и не ценили Дэ. ~ Дао почитаемо, Дэ ценимо, нет над ними судьбы, они в постоянной естественности. ~ Дао рождает вещи, Дэ пестует их, растит их, воспитывает их, классифицирует их, упорядочивает их, вскармливает и оберегает их. ~ Порождающее и не обладающее [ими], ~ воздвигательское и ни на что не опирающееся, ~ главенствующее и не карающее - ~ это и есть изначально-сокровенное Дэ.

— [51c95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Дао рождает [вещи], Дэ вскармливает [их]. ~ Вещи оформляются, формы завершаются. ~ Поэтому нет вещи, которая не почитала бы дао и не ценила бы дэ. ~ Дао почитаемо, дэ ценимо, потому что они не отдают приказаний, а следуют естественности. ~ Дао рождает [вещи], дэ вскармливает [их], взращивает их, воспитывает их, совершенствует их, делает их зрелыми, ухаживает за ними, поддерживает их. ~ Создавать и не присваивать, творить и не хвалиться, являясь старшим, не повелевать - вот что называется глубочайшим дэ.

—[51c96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Тао производит существа, добродетель кормит их; ~ они дают им вещественную форму, а могущество их совершенствует вещи. ~ Поэтому все существа почитают Тао и добродетель. ~ Никто не сообщал Тао его достоинства, а добродетели - ее ценности, но они сами собой вечно обладают ими. ~ Поэтому Тао производит вещи, питает их, дает им расти, совершенствует, делает зрелыми, кормит и защищает. ~ Оно производит их и не делает их своими; ~ делает их тем, что они есть, и не хвалится ими; ~ оно царствует над ними и оставляет их свободными. ~ Вот что называют глубокой добродетелью.

—[51c97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Путь рождает их, Совершенство возвращает, ~ Вещество придает им формы, сила обстоятельств их завершает: ~ Вот почему все вещи почитают Путь и ценят Совершенство. ~ Путь почитают и Совершенство ценят не по приказу: ~ Так всегда происходит само собой; ~ Посему Путь рождает их, Совершенство возвращает, ~ Они вынашивают их и вскармливают их, ~ Дают им вырасти, дают им созреть, ~ Пестуют их, оберегают их. ~ Все рождает и ничем не обладает. ~ Всему поспешествует, а не ищет в том опоры, ~ Всех старше, а ничем не повелевает: ~ Вот что зовется сокровенным совершенством.

—[51c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Путь порождает это. ~ Потенция накапливает это. ~ Сущности-вещи оформляют это. ~ Энергия-сила завершает это. ~ Это дает: ~ Из мириад сущностей нет не почитающих Путь и не возвышающих Потенцию. ~ Почитание Пути и возвышение Потенции делается не по чьему-то наставлению, а является самопроизвольной естественностью постоянства. ~ Причинность: ~ Путь порождает это, Потенция накапливает это, возвращает это, питает это, распределяет это, регулирует это, вскармливает это, покрывает это. ~ Порождая, не вступай в отношения обладания. ~ Осуществляя, не отождествляйся. ~ Возрастая, не главенствуй. ~ Это определяется: ~ Мистическая потенция.

—[52c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ The world had a beginning, ~ Which can be considered the mother of the world. ~ Having attained the mother, in order to understand her children, ~ If you return and hold on to the mother, till the end of your life you'll suffer no harm. ~ Block up the holes; ~ Close the doors; ~ And till the end of your life you'll not labor. ~ Open the holes; ~ Meddle in affairs; ~ And till the end of your life you'll not be saved. ~ To perceive the small is called "discernment." ~ To hold on to the pliant is called "strength." ~ If you use the rays to return to the bright light, ~ You'll not abandon your life to peril. ~ This is called Following the Constant.

—[52c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ ALL-under-Heaven have a common Beginning. ~ This Beginning is the Mother of the world. ~ Having known the Mother, ~ We may proceed to know her children. ~ Having known the children, ~ We should go back and hold on to the Mother. ~ In so doing, you will incur no risk ~ Even though your body be annihilated. ~ Block all the passages! ~ Shut all the doors! ~ And to the end of your days you will not be worn out. ~ Open the passages! ~ Multiply your activities! ~ And to the end of your days you will remain helpless. ~ To see the small is to have insight. ~ To hold on to weakness is to be strong. ~ Use the lights, but return to your insight. ~ Do not bring calamities upon yourself. ~ This is the way of cultivating the Changeless.

—[52c03t] D. C. Lau ~ The world had a beginning ~ And this beginning could be the mother of the world. ~ When you know the mother ~ Go on to know the child. ~ After you have known the child ~ Go back to holding fast to the mother, ~ And to the end of your days you will not meet with danger. ~ Block the openings, ~ Shut the doors, ~ And all your life you will not run dry. ~ Unblock the openings, ~ Add to your troubles, ~ And to the end of your days you will be beyond salvation. ~ To see the small is called discernment; ~ To hold fast to the submissive is called strength. ~ Use the light ~ But give up the discernment. ~ Bring not misfortune upon yourself. ~ This is known as following the constant.

—[52c04t] R. L. Wing ~ The beginning of the world ~ May be regarded as the Mother of the world. ~ To apprehend the Mother, ~ Know the offspring. ~ To know the offspring ~ Is to remain close to the Mother, ~ And free from harm throughout life. ~ Block the passages, Close the doors; ~ In the end, life is idle. ~ Open the passages, ~ Increase undertakings; ~ In the end, life is hopeless. ~ To perceive the small is called insight. ~ To remain yielding is called strength. ~ If, in using one's brightness, ~ One returns to insight, ~ Life will be free of misfortune. ~ This is called learning the Absolute.

—[52c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ All the things in the world have their origin in something, which is their foundation (mother). ~ Having grasped the Mother as the foundation of all things, one can know her children as all things. ~ Having grasped the children as the thing, one must hold to the Mother as the foundation of all things. ~ Thus one will never encounter danger all his life. ~ Blocking the vent (of knowledge) and closing the door (of knowledge) can keep one from sickness all his life. ~ Opening the vent (of knowledge) and completing the enterprise (of knowledge) will make one helpless all his life. ~ So, perceiving the minute is "sagaciousness," ~ Remaining soft and weak is "powerfulness." ~ Using one's contained light and reverting to one's sagaciousness of knowing the minute, ~ And thus keeping oneself from disaster, is to become accustomed to the eternal Way.

—[52c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ The beginning of the universe ~ Is the mother of all things. ~ Knowing the mother, one also knows the sons. ~ Knowing the sons, yet remaining in touch with the mother, ~ Brings freedom from the fear of death. ~ Keep your mouth shut, ~ Guard the senses, ~ And life is ever full. ~ Open your mouth, ~ Always be busy, ~ And life is beyond hope. ~ Seeing the small is insight; ~ Yielding to force is strength. ~ Using the outer light, return to insight, ~ And in this way be saved from harm. ~ This is learning constancy.

—[52c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ Everything under heaven has a beginning. ~ That beginning we take as our mother. ~ Now that we know our mother, ~ We can begin to know our role as sons(and daughters). ~ Since we know our role as sons(and daughters), ~ We must guard and stay with our mother, ~ This way, even if our bodies perish, ~ We will never die. ~ Let the passages be blocked. ~ Let the doors be closed. ~ (So long as we stay with our mother,) ~ Till the end of life no worry need bother us. ~ (If we do the contrary,) ~ Then even though the roads are opened up, ~ And help is available, ~ Till the end of our lives we will still be doomed. ~ To be able to see the small things is to be illuminated; ~ To adhere to the principle of flexibility and suppleness is to be strong. ~ Let people use their own light to illuminate and restore their understanding. ~ Let them leave nothing to regret about when their bodies perish. ~ This is called the gradual realization of the Eternal.

—[52c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ Since the beginning of the world, the DAO has been the mother of everything. ~ If you know the mother, the DAO, you know the child, the world. ~ Knowing the world, but also keeping the DAO, will prevent disasters throughout your life. ~ If you shut off your senses and desires, you will not have any trouble throughout your life; ~ If you open your senses and you do things for your own purposes, you cannot be saved throughout your life. ~ By focusing on the minor and subtle, your vision is clear; ~ By staying on the side of weak, you are strong. ~ Using the "light" of the world, but also keeping the "light source" of the DAO, ~ Will bring no harm to you and make you natural and long-lasting.

—[52c09t] Walter Gorn Old, GOING BACK TO THE CAUSE ~ That from which the universe sprang may be looked upon as its Mother. ~ By knowing the Mother you have access to the child. ~ And if, knowing the child, you prefer the Mother, though your body perish, yet you will come to no harm. ~ Keep your mouth shut, and close up the doors of sight and sound, and as long as you live you will have no vexation. ~ But open your mouth, or become inquisitive, and you will be in trouble all your life long. ~ To perceive things in the germ is intelligence. ~ To remain gentle is to be invincible. ~ Follow the light that guides you homeward, and do not get lost in the darkness. ~ This I call using the eternal.

—[52c10t] James Legge ~ (The Tao) which originated all under the sky is to be considered as the mother of them all. ~ When the mother is found, we know what her children should be. ~ When one knows that he is his mother's child, and proceeds to guard (the qualities of) the mother that belong to him, to the end of his life he will be free from all peril. ~ Let him keep his mouth closed, and shut up the portals (of his nostrils), and all his life he will be exempt from laborious exertion. ~ Let him keep his mouth open, and (spend his breath) in the promotion of his affairs, and all his life there will be no safety for him. ~ The perception of what is small is (the secret of) clear-sightedness; ~ the guarding of what is soft and tender is (the secret of) strength. ~ Who uses well his light, ~ Reverting to its (source so) bright, ~ Will from his body ward all blight, ~ And hides the unchanging from men's sight.

—[52c11t] David Hinton ~ There's a source all beneath heaven shares: call it the mother of all beneath heaven. ~ Once you fathom the mother you understand the child, and once you understand the child you abide in the mother, ~ self gone, free of danger. ~ If you block the senses and close the mind, you never struggle. ~ If you open the senses and expand your endeavors, nothing can save you. ~ Seeing the small is called enlightenment, and abiding in the gentle strength. ~ Wielding radiance return to enlightenment, then you're beyond all harm. ~ This is the cultivation of constancy.

—[52c12t] Chichung Huang ~ All under heaven have a beginning, ~ Which is considered the mother of all under heaven. ~ Having found their mother, ~ You thereby know her children. ~ Having known her children, ~ You revert and adhere to their mother, ~ A lifetime without peril. ~ Stop your hole, ~ Close your door, ~ A lifetime without end. ~ Open your hole, ~ Increase your disturbances, ~ A lifetime without remedy. ~ Seeing tiny things is clear-sightedness. ~ Adhering to softness is strength. ~ Use its light, ~ Withdraw your own clear-sightedness, ~ And you shall bring yourself no calamity. ~ This is called following the constant.

—[52c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ The world (t'ien hsia) has an origin (shih), ~ Which is the world's (t'ien hsia) mother (mu). ~ Having reached the mother, ~ (We) know her child. ~ Having known the child, ~ Return and abide by its mother. ~ (In this way) one loses the body without becoming exhausted. ~ Stop the apertures (tui), ~ Close the doors, ~ (In this way) one's whole life (shen) is without toil (ch'in). ~ Open the apertures, ~ Going about the affairs, ~ (In this way) one's whole life (shen) cannot be saved. ~ To see the small is called illumination (ming). ~ To abide by the soft is called strength. ~ Use the bright light (kuang), ~ But return to the dim light (ming), ~ Do not expose your life (shen) to perils, ~ Such is to follow (hsi) the everlasting (ch'ang).

—[52c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ This world must have begun in certain way; ~ We may thenceforth consider it the origin (mother) of our world; ~ Once we manage to ascertain the origin, we could [apply it] to study its offsprings; ~ After we learn more about the offsprings, we may reciprocally eke out our knowledge about the mother (the origin); ~ This is my never-ending life-long quest. ~ If paths and openings of one's connections [to the outside world] are blocked, he will never be aroused to do anything in life; ~ If paths and openings of one's connections [to the outside world] are unlocked and he is properly motivated, he will never cease [from the quest described above]. ~ One who perceives subtleties is brilliant; ~ One who maintains humility is strong. ~ One who would use [the light of Tao] to illuminate his [potential] brilliance will thus leave behind nothing that could cause misfortune to later generations. ~ A person, who achieves all of the above described fulfillment, is what I called the person with embodiment of the perpetual [Te].

—[52c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ The world has its root. ~ This root is the mother of the world. ~ If you know the mother, you know her children. ~ If you know the children, you should go back and hold on to the mother. ~ In so doing, to the end of your days you will incur no risk. ~ Block all the passages, shut all the doors: to the end of your days you will not be worn out. ~ Open the passages, multiply your activities: to the end of your days you will remain helpless. ~ To see the small is to have insight. ~ To hold on to weakness is to be strong. ~ To use the lights, to return to insight, not to bring calamities upon oneself, this is the way of cultivating the constant.

—[52c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ The world has an origin. ~ The origin is the mother. ~ Knowing the mother, we know the son. ~ Knowing the son, we deduce the mother. ~ This way, we can be successful. ~ Plugging leakages, ~ Closing openings, ~ We can never be depleted. ~ Opening leakages, ~ Making too many commitments, ~ We can be hopeless. ~ Those who pay attention to details are wise. ~ Those who exercise flexibility are strong. ~ Use the light, ~ Things are illuminated. ~ Thus we can avoid mistakes. ~ This is called normal behavior.

—[52c17t] Arthur Waley ~ That which was the beginning of all things under heaven ~ We may speak of as the 'mother' of all things. ~ He who apprehends the mother ~ Thereby knows the sons. ~ And he who has known the sons ~ Will hold all the tighter to the mother, ~ And to the end of his days suffer no harm: ~ 'Block the passages, shut the doors, ~ And till the end your strength shall not fail. ~ Open up the passages, increase your doings, ~ And till your last day no help shall come to you.' ~ As good sight means seeing what is very small ~ So strength means holding on to what is weak. ~ He who having used the outer-light can return to the inner-light ~ Is thereby preserved from all harm. ~ This is called resorting to the always-so.

—[52c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ All under Heaven has a generatrix, which we regard as the mother of all under Heaven. ~ Once one has access to the mother, through it he can know the child. ~ Once one knows the child, if he again holds on to the mother, as long as he lives, no danger shall befall him. ~ Block up your apertures; close your door, ~ And to the end of your life you will never be exhausted. ~ But if you open your apertures and deal consciously with things, to the end of your life you will never have relief. ~ To see the small is called "perspicacious." ~ To hold on to softness is called "strength." ~ Make use of its brightness, ~ But always let its brightness revert. ~ Never let one's person be exposed to disaster: this is a matter of practicing constancy.

—[52c19t] Lin Yutang ~ STEALING THE ABSOLUTE ~ There was a beginning of the universe ~ Which may be regarded as the Mother of Universe. ~ From the Mother, we may know her sons. ~ After knowing the sons, keep to the Mother. ~ Thus one's whole life may be preserved from harm. ~ Stop its apertures, ~ Close its doors, ~ And one's whole life is without toil. ~ Open its apertures, ~ Be busy about its affairs, ~ And one's whole life is beyond redemption. ~ He who can see the small is clear-sighted; ~ He who stays by gentility is strong. ~ Use the light, ~ And return to clear-sightedness - ~ Thus cause not yourself later distress. ~ This is to rest in the Absolute.

—[52c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ Everything under heaven has a beginning which may be thought of as the mother of all under heaven. ~ Having realized the mother, you thereby know her children. ~ Knowing her children, go back to abide with the mother. ~ To the end of your life, you will not be imperiled. ~ Stopple the orifices of your heart, ~ Close your doors; ~ your whole life you will not suffer. ~ Open the gate of your heart, ~ Meddle with affairs; ~ your whole life you will be beyond salvation. ~ Seeing what is small is called insight, ~ Abiding in softness is called strength. ~ Use your light to return to insight, ~ Be not an inheritor of personal calamity. ~ This is called "following the constant."

—[52c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ All things under heaven had a common beginning, ~ and that beginning could be considered the Mother of all things. ~ When you know the Mother you will also know the children. ~ Know the children, yet hold fast to the Mother, ~ and to the end of your days you will be free from danger. ~ Block the passages! ~ Shut the doors! ~ And, to the end of your days your strength will not fail you. ~ Open the passages! ~ Increase your activities! ~ And, to the end of your days you will be beyond help. ~ See the small and develop clear vision. ~ Practice yielding and develop strength. ~ Use the outer light to return to the inner light, and save yourself from harm. ~ This is known as following the Always-so.

—[52c22t] David H. Li ~ The world has a beginning; it is the mother to the world. ~ By knowing the mother, one knows her children. ~ By knowing the children, one returns to their mother. ~ One is without danger in life. ~ Stuffing channels to block portals [to avarice], one is without concern in life. ~ Opening channels to facilitate contact [with avarice], one is without hope in life. ~ Seeing the tiniest is discernment. ~ Holding onto tenderness is strength. ~ Use one's light, reflect upon one's discernment, leave nothing to one's regret. ~ This is Eternal Direction.

—[52c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ The universe has an origin, the Matrix of Creation, ~ Functioning as the Mother of the world. ~ If you know the Mother, you will know her children. ~ If you know her children while abiding with the Mother, ~ Though your body may be dissolved, ~ Your life-energy will remain inexhaustible. ~ Close the cracks, close the doors of the senses, ~ Then, till the end of your life you will not be drained of energy. ~ Open the cracks and react to external stimulations, ~ Then, till the end of your life you will not be saved from suffering. ~ To perceive the subtle is enlightenment. ~ To abide in gentleness is strength. ~ Use your inner light to return to enlightenment ~ And you will not inherit any harm. ~ This is called "learning the eternal lesson."

—[52c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ People leave life and enter death. ~ Life's portion is three out of ten. ~ Death's portion is also three out of ten. ~ People who move from the day of birth into the realm of death, ~ Their portion is also three out of ten. ~ Why is that? ~ Because of their futile efforts to seek eternal life. ~ However, only those who do nothing to prolong their life, ~ Are better off than those who do everything in order to live longer. ~ I have heard that the person who knows how to preserve his life ~ When traveling the earth, ~ Will not encounter a rhinoceros or a tiger, ~ And when he goes into battle, ~ He will not be wounded by a weapon or an arrow. ~ The rhinoceros will not target him with its horn, ~ The tiger will not tear him apart with its claws, ~ Weapons will not find their mark on his body ~ Where they can pierce him with their blades and arrowheads. ~ Why is that? ~ Because he is out of the realm of death.

—[52c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ Every living thing ~ Comes from the Mother of Us All: ~ If we can understand the Mother ~ Then we can understand her children; ~ And if we know ourselves as children ~ We can see the source is Her. ~ And, well, if your body dies - ~ there's nothing to be frightened about. ~ If you keep your mouth shut ~ And stay inside - ~ Then you'll live a long time. ~ If you blurt out ~ What you think to everyone, ~ Then you won't last long. ~ Value littleness. ~ This is wisdom. ~ To bend like a reed in the wind ~ - that is real strength. ~ Use your mind, but stay close to the light ~ And it will lengthen its glow right through your life.

—[52c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ The universe has a beginning (Tao); ~ The beginning functions as the mother of all things. ~ If you know the mother, ~ You can get to know her children (all things); ~ If, while knowing the children, ~ You keep the mother, ~ You will be a sage all your life. ~ Block the openings (of knowledge), ~ Shut the door (of desires), ~ And you will be free from illness all your life. ~ Unlock the openings, ~ Add to your cares, ~ And you will be incurable all your life. ~ To be able to perceive the minute is called discernment; ~ To be able to play the role of the weak is called the strong. ~ Use the light ~ To return to the intrinsic discernment ~ And you will be free from disasters. ~ This is called the eternal Tao.

—[52c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ The world had a beginning. ~ This beginning is the mother of the world. ~ Once you know the mother ~ you know the children. ~ When you know the children ~ you will return to embrace the mother. ~ Then you will live lifelong without danger. ~ Close the mouth, and the spirit will not escape. ~ Seal the ears, and the mind will not escape. ~ You will live lifelong without struggle. ~ Open the mouth, and take action for every matter, and you will live lifelong beyond hope. ~ To see the small is called clarity. ~ To know how to yield is called strength. ~ Use virtue outside the mind but return to virtue in the mind, ~ and you will live lifelong without danger. ~ This is what is called practising constancy.

—[52c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ The earliest beginning we can trace ~ Can be taken as the mother. ~ When we have come to know the mother, ~ We can then trace the son. ~ When we have found the son, ~ We should go back to stay with the mother. ~ Staying with the mother, ~ We are on the safest spot for our life. ~ Shut the eyes and cover the ears, ~ And one can stay away from worry all one's life. ~ Opening the door and rushing about all the time ~ Will not help save one from cares and trouble. ~ One who understands subtle details is wise. ~ One who keeps weakness is strong. ~ By adopting that subtle insight in the world, ~ One can avoid any danger. ~ That is called the inheritance of what is eternal.

—[52c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ Learning The Absolute ~ Lao Tze says, ~ Since the beginning of the universe, there was the Tao which may be regarded as the mother of all existence. ~ When a man knows about the mother, he has to know about the son. ~ When he knows about the son, he proceeds to guard the mother that belongs to him, to the end of his life he will be free from all peril. ~ Let him keep his mouth closed, and shut up his eyes, and all his life he will be exempt from toil. ~ Let him keep his mouth open, and his eyes be used to examine the affairs, and all his life there will not be safety for him. ~ The perception of smallness is clear-sighted; ~ the guard of the soft and tender grows strong. ~ He who uses his light reverting to become bright, will ward all blight from his eyesight. ~ This is the so-called learning of the absolute.

—[52c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ The beginning of the Universe, when manifested, may be regarded as its Mother. ~ When a man has found the Mother, he will know the children accordingly; ~ Though he has known the children, he still keeps to the Mother: ~ Thus, however his body may decay, he will never perish. ~ If he shuts his mouth and closes his doors, ~ He can never be exhausted. ~ If he opens his mouth and increases his affairs, ~ He can never be saved. ~ To see the minuteness of things is called clarity of sight; ~ To keep to what is weak is called power. ~ Use your light, but dim your brightness; ~ Thus you will cause no harm to yourself. ~ This is called following the eternal (Tao).

—[52c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ The world had a beginning ~ Which was the mother of the world. ~ Having known the mother, we know the son. ~ Having known the son, we keep the mother. ~ Thus, through life, we are without danger. ~ Block the passage; ~ Shut the door; ~ Throughout life there will be no toil. ~ Open the passage; ~ Multiply the activities; ~ Throughout life there will be no cure. ~ To discern the small is called enlightenment; ~ To preserve weakness is called strength. ~ Use the light; ~ Return to enlightenment; ~ Leave nothing to harm the body; ~ This is called practicing the constant.

—[52c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ The world has a Source, the Mother of the World. ~ Once you get the Mother, ~ then you understand the children. ~ Once you understand the children, ~ turn back and watch over the Mother. ~ As to destroying the self, ~ there will be nothing to fear. ~ Close your eyes, ~ shut your doors, ~ till the end of your life you will not get tired. ~ Open your eyes, ~ carry on your business, ~ till the end of your life you will not be safe. ~ Keeping your eyes on the Small Thing is called Clarity; ~ watching over Weakness is called strength. ~ Engage with the flashing things, ~ turn back to Clarity, ~ do not deliver yourself to disaster. ~ This is cultivating Steadiness.

—[52c33t] Cheng Lin ~ There was something which preceded the birth of the universe. ~ When the primary cause is grasped, the effects may be understood. ~ One's whole life can be secure if knowing the effects, one still holds fast to the primary cause. ~ Stop up all the orifices of lust, shut out all forms of distraction, - then one's whole life will be free from harm. ~ Open all the orifices of lust, attend to the gratification of desires, - then one's whole life will be beyond salvation. ~ The clear-sighted is he who can discern even the minute things. ~ The strong is he who can abide by meekness. ~ Following the light, reverting to the source of illumination, doing no harm to oneself, - these are the ways of attaining what is normal.

—[52c34t] Yi Wu ~ The world has a beginning; ~ It is the mother of the world. ~ Having the mother, ~ One can know the son. ~ Having known the son, ~ One should stay with the mother; ~ Then, to the end of one's life, there will be no danger. ~ Block the passages; ~ Shut the doors; ~ To the end of one's life, there will be no toil. ~ Open the passages; ~ Do all things; ~ To the end of one's life, there will be no salvation. ~ To know the small is called enlightenment; ~ To keep to the soft is called strength. ~ Use brightness and return to enlightenment. ~ Do not bring calamities upon oneself. ~ This is to practice constancy.

—[52c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ The world has its beginning. ~ It is the mother of the world (Dao). ~ Once you have understood the mother, ~ You should then begin to learn more about the son (evolution). ~ While learning more about the son, ~ You must always stick to the principles of Dao (mother). ~ Thus, you will never be in any danger in your whole life. ~ If you block out your senses, you will be calm and insouciant. ~ If you allow your cognitive processes to intervene with your daily affairs, you will be irremediably mired by harassment. ~ You have insightful wisdom if you are able to discern the minutiae in every affair. ~ Adhering to the principle of yielding, you are resolutely strong. ~ Igniting the spark of intuitive mindfulness, you thus rekindle your insightful wisdom. ~ Consequently, you will never court any disaster. ~ This is simply following the way of Dao.

—[52c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ All of creation has a common beginning. ~ This common beginning is the Mysterious Mother of all. ~ If we know the Mother, we may know her offspring. ~ Know the offspring, yet stay with the Mother, ~ and the essence of your life will never be exhausted, even though your body be dissolved. ~ Block the openings, shut the doors, ~ and to the end of your days, you will not be worn out. ~ Unblock the openings, multiply your activities, ~ and to the end of your days, you will be beyond remedy. ~ Thus it is said: ~ To perceive the subtle is to have true vision. ~ To be soft is to be truly strong. ~ Use the outer light, but return to the inner. ~ In this way, you will restore your integral virtue, ~ and be preserved from all harm.

—[52c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ The world has its beginning, ~ Which may be called the origin of the world. ~ When one is aware of the origin, ~ One knows its manifestations. ~ When one is aware of its manifestations, ~ Yet abides with its origin, ~ One never falls short in all of one's life. ~ Ceasing verbal expressions, ~ Stopping the entry of sensations, ~ One is never exhausted. ~ On the contrary, when one is full of words ~ And entangled with one's affairs, ~ One is never able to save one's self. ~ To see what is invisible is to be awakened. ~ To remain gentle is to be strong. ~ Apply illumination and return to awakening. ~ Then one is free from disaster. ~ This is called living in accordance with reality.

—[52c38t] Henry Wei ~ Return to the Origin ~ Kuei Yuan ~ The world has a beginning as its mother. ~ Having got hold of the mother, ~ Know her children; ~ And having known the children, ~ Further hold on to the mother, ~ And you will survive the disappearance of the body. ~ Stop up the aperture of the vessel (tui), ~ And shut the doors (of the senses), ~ And you will not be devitalized all your life. ~ Open the aperture of the vessel, ~ And fulfill your carnal affairs, ~ And your whole life will be beyond salvation. ~ To be able to see the minute is to have keen vision; ~ To be able to remain docile is to be strong. ~ Make use of the light, ~ Withdraw its brilliance inward, ~ Cause no injury to your body - ~ This is called "Abide by the Immutable."

—[52c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ All under Heaven has its beginning, ~ Which may be regarded as the mother of all under Heaven. ~ Having recognized its mother, ~ You know the child, also; ~ Having known the child, ~ You hold fast to its mother, also. ~ Thus you will be free of danger till the end of your life. ~ Block the holes, ~ Shut the gates, ~ And you will never be spent till your last day. ~ Open up the holes, ~ Busy yourself with activities, ~ And you will never be saved till your last day. ~ To see what is small is called clear sight; ~ To hold fast to what is soft is called strength. ~ Use the light, ~ Return to clear sight, ~ And you will never bring misfortune upon yourself. ~ This is called following the constant.

—[52c40t] Tao Huang ~ The world begins with the mother as its source. ~ When you have the mother, you know the son. ~ When you know the son, return to preserve the mother. ~ Although the body dies, there is no harm. ~ By closing your mouth and shutting the door, there would be no wearing down of life. ~ When opening the mouth and pursuing your affairs, life cannot be preserved. ~ Seeing what is small is discernment. ~ Preserving subtleness is strength. ~ Using the light enables one to return to discernment. ~ Without losing the center of the body is called penetrating the eternal.

—[52c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ The universe has its mother - Dao, ~ The world has its mother - the universe. ~ As we already know the mother of the universe - Dao, we should know how to rule her son - the world. ~ As we already know her son - the world, we should know how to follow his mother - Dao. ~ By so doing, there will be no discontinuation of life even though a human body will die. ~ Close the entrances to attractions and control the excess of desires, till the end of life, there will be no effort to work. ~ Open the entrances to attractions, multiply excess of desires, till the end of life, there will be no completion of work. ~ One who knows a limited truth is intelligent. ~ To be gentle is to be strengthened. ~ One who uses his bright senses and recovers his enlightenment will not let himself be in a perilous situation. ~ This is called the awareness of eternity.

—[52c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ There was a beginning of the universe ~ Which may be called the Mother of the universe. ~ He who has found the mother (Tao) ~ And thereby understands her sons (things), ~ And having understood the sons, ~ Still keeps to its mother, ~ Will be free from danger throughout his lifetime. ~ Close the mouth. ~ Shut the doors (of cunning and desires). ~ And to the end of life there will be (peace) without toil. ~ Open the mouth. ~ Meddle with affairs. ~ And to the end of life there will be no salvation. ~ Seeing what is small is called enlightenment. ~ Keeping to weakness is called strength. ~ Use the light. ~ Revert to enlightenment. ~ And thereby avoid danger to one's life - ~ This is called practicing the eternal.

—[52c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ У Поднебесной есть начало, и оно становится ей матерью. ~ Дитя, только окажется пред матерью, и мать сразу же его узнает, а узнает, и дитя вновь будет ее слушаться и до скончания жизни не изведает опасности. ~ Закрыв отверстия и запевев врата, до самого конца избавишься от тягот, ~ а если распахнешь их и возьмешься за дела, не испытаешь никогда спасения. ~ Видеть малое значит быть в просвете, ~ в сбереженной мягкости заключено могущество. ~ Пользуясь сиянием Дао, вновь возвращаются в его просвет и не причиняют себе зла. ~ Это называют навыком к незыблемому.

—[52c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Поднебесная имеет начало. ~ которое является Матерью Поднебесной. ~ Когда достигнута мать, - познаешь и её детей. ~ Когда познаны дети, - вновь возвращаешься для сбережения матери. ~ И тогда до конца дней своих не встретишь опасности. ~ Закрой отверстия, запри двери - и в твоём теле более не родятся болезни. ~ Открой отверстия, предайся делам - и твоё тело уже не спасти. ~ То, что видится малым, назову пресветлым. ~ Сохраняющее гибкость назову укрепленным. ~ Используй его сияние, возвращайся к его свету - и не причинишь себе вреда. ~ Это и зовётся овладением постоянством.

— [52c93t] Е. А. Торчинов ~ У Поднебесной есть начало, и оно - Мать Поднебесной. ~ И тот, кто знает Мать, знает и дитя ее. ~ А тот, кто знает дитя ее, тот может блюсти и Мать. ~ Тогда до самой смерти он не узнает никаких несчастий. ~ О, заслони свои отверстия, запри свои врата, и до конца жизни не будешь изнурен. ~ А того, кто отверзает свои отверстия и вмешивается во все дела на свете, не спасет ничто, пока он не умрет. ~ Того, кто созерцает мельчайшее, зовут просветленно-мудрым. ~ Того, кто блюдет мягкое, зовут сильным. ~ Используй свой свет - и возвратишься к просветленности, а также не подвергай себя невзгодам - это называют "упражнением в постоянстве".

— [52c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Поднебесная имеет начало, и оно есть Мать Поднебесной. ~ Достигнешь Матери - познаешь и ее детей. ~ Познаешь ее детей - вернешься и к сохранению их Матери. ~ Бестелесное не истощается. ~ Закроешь своих чувств отверстия, запрешь к ним доступ извне - ~ до конца жизни не будешь испытывать страданий. ~ Откроешь своих чувств отверстия, направишь их на пользу дела, - ~ вовек не отыщешь спасения. ~ Видение малого называю просветленностью. ~ Сохранение мягкости называю могуществом. ~ Пользуйся этим светом, возвращайся к этой просветленности ~ (Вариант перевода: ~ Станешь младенцем - назову просветленным. ~ Сохранишь мягкость - назову могущественным. ~ Пользуйся его светом, возвращайся к его просветленности) ~ и тогда не обречешь себя на погибель. ~ Это и есть овладение постоянством.

— [52c95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ В Поднебесной имеется начало, и оно - мать Поднебесной. ~ Когда будет постигнута мать, то можно узнать и ее детей. ~ Когда уже известны ее дети, то снова нужно помнить о их матери. ~ В таком случае до конца жизни [у человека] не будет опасности. ~ Если [человек] оставляет свои желания и освобождается от страстей, то до конца жизни не будет у него усталости. ~ Если же он распускает свои страсти и поглощен своими делами, то не будет спасения [от бед]. ~ Видение мельчайшего называется зоркостью. ~ Сохранение слабости называется могуществом. ~ Следовать сиянию [дао], постигать его глубочайший смысл, не навлекать [на людей] несчастья - это и есть соблюдение постоянства.

— [52c96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Вселенная имеет начало, которое и есть мать всего мира. ~ По матери можно знать ее сына. ~ Когда сын известен, то и мать будет сохранена невредимо. ~ Хотя тело умирает, но (сущность его) никогда не уничтожается. ~ Кто закрывает уши и глаза, тот останется без употребления во всю жизнь. ~ Кто прислушивается ко всему изящному и старается удовлетворить страстям, тот никогда не спасется. ~ Могущий разбирать мельчайшие вещи называется ясновидцем. ~ Сохраняющий мягкость называется могущественным. ~ Употребляющий свет называется блестящим. ~ Тело истлевет, не оставляя ничего после себя. ~ Это и есть наследие вечности.

— [52c97t] В. В. Малявин ~ В мире есть начало, ~ Его можно считать Матерью вселенной. ~ Тот, кто постигает мать, чтобы знать ее дитя, ~ И познает дитя, чтобы держаться за мать, ~ До конца своих дней избежит опасности. ~ Завали свои дыры, затвори свои ворота - ~ И до конца жизни не будешь знать забот. ~ Раскрой дыры, нагрузи себя делами - ~ И до конца жизни себя не спасешь. ~ Прозреть малое зовется просветленностью, ~ Держаться мягкости зовется силой. ~ Воспользуйся свечением, чтобы вернуться к светочу - ~ Так избавишься от опасности для жизни: ~ Вот что значит претворять постоянство.

— [52c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ При наличии начала в Поднебесной тем самым осуществляется материнская функция Поднебесной. ~ Когда же постигают свою материнскую функцию, тогда узнают о своей детской функции. ~ Узнав свою детскую функцию, возвращаются к тому, чтобы руководствоваться своей материнской функцией. ~ Тело исчезнет, а не погибнешь. ~ Закрываешь свои отверстия; ~ запираешь свои врата. ~ До кончины тела не будет напряжения. ~ Открываешь свои отверстия; ~ улаживаешь свои дела-ситуации. ~ До кончины тела не будет избавления. ~ Видение малого выражает ясность. ~ Руководство слабостью выражает силу. ~ Применяй свой свет. ~ Возвращаясь, приходи к своей ясности. ~ Отсутствует беда утраты тела. ~ Это определяется: ~ Постоянство преемственности.

—[53c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ Were I to have the least bit of knowledge, in walking on a Great Road, it's only going astray that I would fear. ~ The Great Way is very level; ~ But people greatly delight in tortuous paths. ~ The courts are swept very clean; ~ While the fields are full of weeds; ~ And the granaries are all empty. ~ Their clothing - richly embroidered and colored; ~ While at their waists they carry sharp swords. ~ They gorge themselves on food, and of possessions and goods {they have plenty}. ~ {This is called} thievery! ~ {And thievery} certainly isn't {the Way}!

—[53c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ IF only I had the tiniest grain of wisdom, ~ I should walk in the Great Way, ~ And my only fear would be to stray from it. ~ The Great Way is very smooth and straight; ~ And yet the people prefer devious paths. ~ The court is very clean and well garnished, ~ But the fields are very weedy and wild, ~ And the granaries are very empty! ~ They wear gorgeous clothes, ~ They carry sharp swords, ~ They surfeit themselves with food and drink, ~ They possess more riches than they can use! ~ They are the heralds of brigandage! ~ As for Tao, what do they know about it?

—[53c03t] D. C. Lau ~ Were I possessed of the least knowledge, I would, when walking on the great way, fear only paths that lead astray. ~ The great way is easy, yet people prefer by-paths. ~ The court is corrupt, ~ The fields are overgrown with weeds, ~ The granaries are empty; ~ Yet there are those dressed in fineries, ~ With swords at their sides, ~ Filled with food and drink, ~ And possessed of too much wealth. ~ This is known as taking the lead in robbery. ~ Far indeed is this from the way.

—[53c04t] R. L. Wing ~ Using only a little knowledge, I would travel the Great Way And fear only of letting go. ~ The Great Way is very even; Yet people love the byways. ~ When an organization is divided, Fields are overgrown, Stores are empty, ~ Clothes are extravagant, Sharp swords are worn, Food and drink are excessive, ~ Wealth and treasure are hoarded. ~ This is called stealing and exaggeration And certainly not the Way!

—[53c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ If I have a certain knowledge, ~ I will go along the highway (Great Tao), ~ And I will be afraid of nothing but the oblique way. ~ The highway is very even, ~ But the people are fond of the shortcut. ~ (Those who make) ~ the palace very clear and neat, ~ the field uncultivated and weedy, ~ the granary empty and vacant, ~ wearing glorious and coloured clothes, ~ carrying precious and sharp swords, ~ satiated with exquisite food and drink, ~ possessing an abundance of wealth and property, ~ can be called chieftains of robbers. ~ That is contrary to rationality (Tao).

—[53c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ If I have even just a little sense, ~ I will walk on the main road and my only fear ~ will be of straying from it. ~ Keeping to the main road is easy, ~ But people love to be sidetracked. ~ When the court is arrayed in splendor, ~ The fields are full of weeds, ~ And the granaries are bare. ~ Some wear gorgeous clothes, ~ Carry sharp swords, ~ And indulge themselves with food and drink; ~ They have more possessions than they can use. ~ They are robber barons. ~ This is certainly not the way of Tao.

—[53c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ What makes me know what I know, ~ And adhere to the Dao ~ Is the fear of departing from it. ~ The Dao is level and straight. ~ Yet people prefer to go on their devious paths. ~ When the court is busy with granting honors to its dignitaries, ~ And not caring for the fields that are overgrown by weeds, ~ While the granaries are empty; ~ When the officers of the nation dress themselves up beautifully, ~ And carry sharp swords with an air of superiority and power; ~ While excessive dining and drinking go hand in hand with excessive consumption and waste, ~ You know this is arrogance at the Dao.

~ This is certainly not the Dao.

—[53c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ If one day I am to have desires, ~ As I am walking along a big road, I am only afraid of straying into the small alleys. ~ The big road is so smooth, but people prefer to take the small alleys. ~ The government is a mess, the fields are barren, and the barns are empty, ~ But they wear bright and colorful clothing, carrying sharp swords, overeat and overdrink; ~ They steal countless treasures, so they are the heads of thieves. ~ This is completely against the DAO!

—[53c09t] Walter Gorn Old, INCREASING EVIDENCE ~ Ah that I were wise enough to follow the great Tao!
~ Administration is a great undertaking. ~ The great Tao is extremely simple, but the people prefer the complex ways. ~ While the palace is extremely well appointed, the fields may be full of tares, and the granaries may be empty. ~ To dress grandly, to carry sharp swords, to eat and drink excessively, and to amass great wealth, this I call stylish theft. ~ That it is not Tao is certain.

—[53c10t] James Legge ~ If I were suddenly to become known, and (put into a position to) conduct (a government) according to the Great Tao, what I should be most afraid of would be a boastful display. ~ The great Tao (or way) is very level and easy; but people love the by-ways. ~ Their court(-yards and buildings) shall be well kept, but their fields shall be ill-cultivated, and their granaries very empty. ~ They shall wear elegant and ornamented robes, carry a sharp sword at their girdle, pamper themselves in eating and drinking, and have a superabundance of property and wealth; ~ - such (princes) may be called robbers and boasters. ~ This is contrary to the Tao surely!

—[53c11t] David Hinton ~ Understanding sparse and sparser still I travel the great Way, nothing to fear unless I stray. ~ The great Way is open and smooth, but people adore twisty paths: ~ Government in ruins, fields overgrown and graineries bare, ~ they indulge in elegant robes ~ and sharp swords, ~ lavish food and drink, ~ all those trappings of luxury. ~ It's vainglorious thievery - ~ not the Way, not the Way at all.

—[53c12t] Chichung Huang ~ Were I but firmly enlightened, ~ Walking along the great Tao, ~ My only fear would be going astray. ~ The great Tao is exceedingly even, ~ But the sovereign is exceedingly fond of gullies. ~ While the court is exceedingly well-kept, ~ The fields are exceedingly weedy, ~ And the granaries exceedingly empty. ~ Clad in elegant and colorful attire, ~ Wearing a sharp sword, ~ And sated with food, ~ He has enough wealth and to spare. ~ Such a man is called the chieftain of bandits; ~ Being the chieftain of bandits goes against the Tao.

—[53c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ If I have a little (chieh-jan) knowledge (chih), ~ To walk the great path (Tao), ~ I shall fear this: ~ The great path (Tao) is very flat and easy, ~ Yet others (jen) are fond of bypaths. ~ The courts are very neat, ~ The fields are very weedy, ~ The granaries are very empty. ~ Wearing embroidered clothes, ~ Carrying sharp swords, ~ Being surfeited with foods and drinks. ~ To accumulate wealth and treasures in excess, ~ This is called robbery and crime. ~ This is not to follow Tao.

—[53c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ Even if I realize that I am unmistakably proceeding on the [right path of] the great Tao; ~ I still would be vigilant since I may go astray [inadvertently]. ~ The path of the great Tao is fundamentally very flat, still people prefer to take by-paths; ~ [For instance:] ~ In the Court, officers are frequently replaced, ~ In outskirts, fields are inadequately planted, ~ National granaries are running empty, ~ [Civil servants implore the fashion of] wearing beautifully embroidered clothes, ~ [Military officers pride themselves on] carrying sharp swords, ~ [People indulge on] gourmandizing endlessly; ~ [General public rush to] accumulate personal wealth and goods excessively. ~ All of the above signifies nothing but shameless vanities of the superficial people, ~ Behaviors of the above exemplified pattern signalize the repudiation of Tao (the right way for the survival of humanity)!

—[53c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ If only I had a slight wisdom, I should walk in the great Way, and my only fear would be to stray from it. ~ The great Way is very smooth and straight; and yet the people prefer circuitous paths. ~ Nowadays people like circuitous paths, even though these paths bring many evil crimes. ~ The court is extremely elegant; but the fields are extremely weedy and wild, and the granaries are extremely empty. ~ They wear gorgeous clothes, they carry sharp swords, they surfeit themselves with food and drink, they possess more riches than they can use. ~ This is boastful robbery. ~ And it is indeed against the Way.

—[53c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ I firmly believe that I must follow Tao. ~ What I fear is to wander astray. ~ Tao is like a boulevard. ~ Yet, some people prefer small trails. ~ The yards are excessively clean, the fields full of weeds, and the warehouses nearly empty. ~ Dressing extravagantly, carrying sharp swords, wasting food, excessively collecting money or properties are the worst sins. ~ These do not conform to Tao.

—[53c17t] Arthur Waley ~ He who has the least scrap of sense, once he has got started on the great highway has nothing to fear so long as he avoids turnings. ~ For great highways are safe and easy. ~ But men love by-paths. ~ So long as the Court is in order ~ They are content to let their fields run to weed ~ And their granaries stand empty. ~ They wear patterns and embroideries, ~ Carry sharp swords, glut themselves with drink and food, have more possessions than they can use. ~ These are the riotous ways of brigandage; they are not the Highway.

—[53c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ If, with firm resolve, I had the knowledge to travel on the great Dao [Way], I need only fear that I might try to meddle with it. ~ The great Dao [Way] might be very smooth, yet the common folk prefer byways. ~ The court is kept in good order, ~ But the fields are overgrown with weeds, the granaries empty. ~ Garbed in patterned and colorful clothes, wearing sharp swords, satiated with food and drink, and overflowing with wealth and goods: all this is stolen extravagance and has nothing to do with the Dao!

—[53c19t] Lin Yutang ~ BRIGANDAGE ~ If I were possessed of Austere Knowledge, ~ Walking on the Main Path (Tao), ~ I would avoid the by-paths. ~ The Main Path is easy to walk on, ~ Yet people love the small by-paths. ~ The (official) courts are spic and span, ~ (While) the fields go untilled, ~ And the (people's) granaries are very low. ~ (Yet) clad in embroidered gowns, ~ And carrying fine swords, ~ Surfeited with good food and drinks, ~ (They are) splitting with wealth and possessions. ~ This is to lead the world toward brigandage. ~ Is it not the corruption of Tao?

—[53c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ If I were possessed of the slightest knowledge, traveling on the great Way, ~ My only fear would be to go astray. ~ The great Way is quite level, ~ but the people are much enamored of mountain trails. ~ The court is thoroughly deserted, ~ The fields are choked with weeds, ~ The granaries are altogether empty. ~ Still there are some who wear clothes with fancy designs and brilliant colors, ~ sharp swords hanging at their sides, ~ are sated with food, ~ overflowing with possessions and wealth. ~ This is called "the brazenness of a bandit." ~ The brazenness of a bandit is surely not the Way!

—[53c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ If I have even a little sense, ~ I will walk upon the great path of Tao and only fear straying from it. ~ This Great Way is straight and smooth ~ yet people often prefer the side roads. ~ The courtyard is well kept ~ but the fields are full of weeds, and the granaries stand empty. ~ Still, there are those of us ~ who wear elegant clothes, carry sharp swords, pamper ourselves with food and drink and have more possessions than we can use. ~ These are the actions of robbers. ~ This is certainly far from the Tao.

—[53c22t] David H. Li ~ This little I know: ~ In moving toward the Grand Direction, the only fear is moving astray. ~ The Grand Direction is straight forward; still, people go astray. ~ The court is not filled; the field is not tilled. ~ Storehouses are empty, but gorgeous gowns are aplenty. ~ Bearing sharp swords, tired of exquisite boards, ~ With wealth to the burst, they are bandits at their worst. ~ This is not Direction.

—[53c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ With clear, appreciative discernment, ~ I choose to walk the great way of the Tao, ~ And fear naught save going astray. ~ The great way is very smooth and straight, ~ Yet people prefer uneven and winding by-paths, and thus go astray. ~ Therefore, in the world that has gone astray, ~ While the courts are clean and decorated, ~ The fields are untilled and the granaries are empty. ~ If the ruler wears fancy clothes, ~ Carries around sharp swords, ~ Indulges in extravagant food and drink, ~ And possesses more riches than he needs, ~ He is indeed a brazen bandit. ~ This is contrary to the great way of the Tao.

—[53c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ The beginning of the universe, when materialized, is considered to be a mother. ~ When a man finds the mother, he will know the children, accordingly. ~ Even though he knows the children, he still clings to the mother: ~ Therefore, although his body wanes, he never perishes. ~ The person who shuts his mouth and closes his doors ~ Will never perish. ~ If he opens his mouth and increases his affairs, ~ He will never be saved. ~ The person who sees the tiniest thing possesses clear vision, ~ The person who adheres to the weak possesses strength. ~ Use your light, but dim your brightness, ~ In this way you will not do yourself any harm. ~ This is called following the eternal Tao.

—[53c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ If all I know is a fraction - ~ then my only fear is of losing the thread ... ~ The Great Way is easy ~ but people are forever being taken down sidetracks. ~ They look after the palaces, ~ But ignore the fields! ~ The granaries are empty ~ - but they wear wonderful clothes! ~ They go about with arms and gorge themselves on fine food and drink. ~ How rich they are - ~ and they have stolen it all from the poor. ~ They are the robber barons of now - ~ This is not the real Tao!

—[53c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ If I have acquired a little knowledge, ~ I will be afraid of going astray ~ When I walk on the road. ~ The road is even, ~ Yet people prefer to take by-paths. ~ While the court is corrupt, ~ The fields lie waste; ~ The granaries are empty; ~ There are persons who are still dressed gaudily, ~ Wearing ornamented swords, ~ Satiated with fine food and drink, ~ In possession of extravagant goods. ~ They can be called the chieftains of robbers. ~ What a phenomenon against the Tao!

—[53c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ Should I know just a fraction of Tao, ~ I would walk on the great way, fearing to impose upon the people. ~ The main road is smooth to walk but the people prefer the smaller footpath. ~ That is why the court is corrupt, ~ the fields lie in waste, the granaries are empty. ~ Yet the rulers wear clothes adorned with finery, ~ carry sharp swords decorated with patterns, ~ possess storehouses overflowing with goods and wealth. ~ This is to rule by stealing. ~ This is not the Tao.

—[53c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ Unless an utter fool, a person should know that ~ It is not wise to wander here and there ~ While walking on a wide road. ~ The wide road is the flattest and safest, ~ But rulers like to stray from this safe road. ~ Their courts are luxuriously constructed; ~ And, while the fields are neglected, ~ The barns are empty. ~ They fuss about clothes and ornaments, ~ Carry sharp swords wherever they go, ~ Gobble down best food to excess, ~ And care only for goods and money. ~ They are robbers rather than rulers. ~ Being robbers, they are doing things against the Way.

—[53c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ Taoku or Tao ~ Lao Tze says, ~ Make me have sudden enlightenment, ~ I can implement great Tao in government. ~ Still I am afraid I might go astray. ~ Great Tao is a smooth and easy highway, ~ My noblemen like to walk on its trails. ~ Your courtyards are new and pretty, ~ Your people's farms are still unfilled. ~ There is nothing in their barns. ~ You wear your embroidered gowns, ~ Walk with sharp-bladed swords. ~ You satiate with good food and drink, ~ Collect abundant wealth beyond your deserving. ~ I shall call you Taoku, the bandit's chief, ~ For you have never practiced the way of the Tao.

—[53c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ Let me have sound knowledge and walk on the great way (Tao); ~ Only I am in fear of deviating. ~ The great way is very plain and easy, ~ But the people prefer by-paths. ~ While the royal palaces are very well kept, ~ The fields are left weedy ~ And the granaries empty. ~ To wear embroidered clothes, ~ To carry sharp swords, ~ To be satiated in drink and food, ~ To be possessed of redundant riches - ~ This is called encouragement to robbery. ~ Is it not deviating from Tao?

—[53c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ If only I could have a little knowledge, I would walk in the Great Tao, ~ Being afraid only of acting on it. ~ The Great Tao is very smooth, ~ But people prefer the by-paths; ~ The court is very well kept; ~ The fields are full of weeds; ~ And the granaries are extremely empty. ~ To wear embroidered clothes, ~ To carry sharp weapons, ~ To be satiated in food and drink, ~ And to have excessive treasures and goods - ~ This is called robbery and extravagance. ~ Really, this is not Tao.

—[53c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ If I had the least bit of understanding, ~ I would walk on the great Way. ~ Only display will be dangerous. ~ The great Way is very smooth, ~ but people love bypaths. ~ The court is very well kept, ~ the fields are very weedy, ~ the granaries very empty. ~ "Their clothes are fine and colorful, on their belts are sharp swords, they are filled with food and drink" - ~ a superabundance of expensive goods. ~ This is robbers boasting, ~ certainly not the Way.

—[53c33t] Cheng Lin ~ If I am truly enlightened and travel the way of great Truth, I should always feel apprehensive lest I deviate from it. ~ The way of great Truth is most easy to travel, yet men prefer the by-paths. ~ The Court is very corrupt, the fields are much neglected, the granaries are much depleted; ~ yet there are men who still don expensive dresses, carry sharp swords, gorge themselves with food and wine, and wallow in superfluous wealth. ~ These men may be called the captains of robbers.

—[53c34t] Yi Wu ~ If I, subtly, have knowledge, ~ Walking in the great Way, ~ My only fear is to act on it. ~ The great Way is very level, ~ But the people prefer short cuts. ~ The court is very remote; ~ The fields are very weedy; ~ The storehouses are very empty. ~ But officials wear gorgeous garments, ~ Carry sharp swords, ~ Are surfeited with food and drink, ~ And possess more money and goods than they can use. ~ This is called, "to steal reputation." ~ This is not the Way!

—[53c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ Even if I confidently know that I am on the right path, I will still tread gingerly for fear of deviating from it. ~ The correct path of Dao is smooth and easily accessible. ~ However, people still choose to travel on the small paths. ~ While the magnificent imperial palace is immaculate and pristine, ~ The paddy fields are neglected and the granaries empty. ~ Yet, the ruler still dresses elegantly, wears fine swords and feasts in style. ~ He continues to amass great personal wealth. ~ This is the behaviour of a chief of robbers. ~ He is not following the way of Dao.

—[53c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ If I had even the tiniest grain of insight, ~ I should live in accordance with the subtle Way of the universe; ~ my only fear would be to stray from it. ~ The Integral Way of the universe is very smooth and straight, yet people's minds prefer devious bypaths. ~ The courts are polished and decorated, ~ while the fields are untilled, ~ and the granaries are empty. ~ People wear fine clothes to adorn their external appearance. ~ They carry sharp swords at their sides and worship might rather than righteousness. ~ They know only to make merry by indulging in food and drink. ~ They crave to possess more riches than they could ever use. ~ This is the committing of robbery and is not the Universal Integral Way of natural life.

—[53c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ If I had even a slight awareness, ~ And practiced the great Way, ~ What I would fear would be deviating from it. ~ The great Way is a very level road, ~ But men like to take circuitous paths. ~ Thus, the palaces are extremely elegant, ~ But the people's farms are extremely desolate, ~ And there is no grain reserved in the storehouses. ~ The rulers wear expensive garments, ~ Carry fine swords, ~ Sate themselves with food and drink, ~ And possess inordinate riches and precious things. ~ This is the greatest robbery, ~ And is indeed against the great Way.

—[53c38t] Henry Wei ~ Increasing Evidence ~ I Cheng ~ If I were determined, with the knowledge I have, ~ To walk along the Great Highway, ~ My only fear would be to stray from it. ~ The Great Highway is very safe and plain; ~ Yet people prefer the bypaths. ~ While the Court is very magnificent, ~ The fields have become very barren, ~ And the granaries have become very empty; ~ Yet officials are dressed in gorgeous garments, ~ Carry sharp swords, ~ Gorge themselves with sumptuous food and drink, ~ And possess a superabundance of precious articles. ~ Such patent robbery is the usher of other robberies. ~ Verily it goes contrary to Tao.

—[53c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ Let me have even the slightest of wisdom. ~ Traveling the great way [Tao], ~ I will only fear going astray. ~ The great way is level. ~ Yet people prefer small paths. ~ The court is overrun with corruption; ~ The fields are overgrown with weeds; ~ The granaries are utterly empty; ~ Yet the officials wear embroidered clothes, ~ Carry sharp swords, ~ Feast on food and wine, ~ Possess more goods than they need. ~ This is called the robber's extravagance. ~ It is indeed contrary to Tao!

—[53c40t] Tao Huang ~ Through discrimination, I have the knowledge to walk in the great Tao. ~ The only fear is what is other than that. ~ The great Tao is quite smooth, yet people prefer a short-cut. ~ The court is so busy legislating that the fields go uncultivated and granaries are all empty. ~ They wear the magnificent clothing, girdle the sharp swords. ~ They are gorged with food and possess many brides. ~ Their bounty suffices but they continue to steal. ~ This is opposite of Tao.

—[53c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ If I have just a little wisdom to lead me to approach the superior way of Dao, I fear that I may stray from it. ~ The superior way of Dao is plain and yet man prefers devious paths. ~ When government officers are very neglected; ~ farm lands are very weedy; ~ public granaries are very empty; ~ yet, brilliant clothes are displayed; ~ sharp swords are carried; ~ and excessive food and drinks are over used, and personal wealth and treasures are abundant. ~ This is called "Exhibition of Robbery". ~ Really it is aberration of Dao!

—[53c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ If I had but little knowledge ~ I should, in walking on a broad way, ~ Fear getting off the road. ~ Broad ways are extremely even, ~ But people are fond of bypaths. ~ The courts are exceedingly splendid, ~ While the fields are exceedingly weedy, ~ And the granaries are exceedingly empty. ~ Elegant clothes are worn, ~ Sharp weapons are carried, ~ Foods and drinks are enjoyed beyond limit, ~ And wealth and treasures are accumulated in excess. ~ This is robbery and extravagance. ~ This is indeed not Tao (the Way).

—[53c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Знай я совсем немного, вступил бы на Великий Путь и лишь боялся бы с него сойти. ~ Великий Путь отменно ровен, но людям нравятся тропинки. ~ Когда дворец блещет убранством, поля заполняют сорняки и житницы стоят совсем пустые. ~ И надевать при этом яркие наряды, ~ носить отборные клинки, ~ чревоугодничать, ~ купаться в роскоши ~ - это зовется воровской кичливостью. ~ В ней все противоречит Дао.

—[53c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Когда я обрету мельчайшее знание, я буду следовать Великому Пути, не боясь заблудиться. ~ Великое Дао просто, но люди предпочитают узкие тропинки. ~ Когда двор роскошествует, а поля поросли сорняками и амбары пусты; ~ когда знать, опоясавшись драгоценными мечами, излишествует в напитках и еде, в избытке владея всяким добром, - это зовется грабительством и бахвальством. ~ О, сколь отлично это от Дао!

—[53c93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Если бы я знанием обладал, то шел бы по Великому Пути. ~ Единственное, чего я боюсь, это сбиться с пути. ~ Великий Путь сокрыт и неуловим, но народ ему предпочитает тропы. ~ Если при дворе роскошествуют, то поля покрываются сорняками и пустеют амбары. ~ Знать одевается в одежды из узорчатых тканей, ~ носит у пояса острые мечи, ~ вкушает только изысканные яства и увеличивает имущество свое сверх всякой меры. ~ Это называется разбоем и бахвальством. ~ О, это не истинный Путь!

— [53с94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Для того чтобы я твердо овладел знанием, последую за Великим Дао. ~ И только петляний надо бояться. ~ Великое Дао - словно широкий путь, а люди любят тропинки. ~ Аудиенции совсем прекращены, поля сплошь заросли, амбары до дна опустели. ~ [А правители] одеваются в красочные шелка, ~ препоясываются острыми мечами, пресыщаются питьем и едой, богатства копят с излишком. ~ Все это - грабеж и разврат, не-Дао.

— [53с95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Если бы я владел знанием, то шел бы по большой дороге. ~ Единственная вещь, которой я боюсь, - это узкие тропинки. ~ Большая дорога совершенно ровна, но народ любит тропинки. ~ Если дворец роскошен, то поля покрыты сорняками и хлебохранилища совершенно пусты. ~ [Знать] одевается в роскошные ткани, носит острые мечи, не удовлетворяется [обычной] пищей и накапливает излишние богатства. ~ Все это называется разбоем и бахвальством. ~ Оно является нарушением дао.

— [53с96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Я беззаботен, но имею ум, поэтому живу в великом Тао. ~ Я раздаю милостыню в великом страхе. ~ Большая дорога (Тао) гладка и ровна, но люди любят ходить по тропинкам. ~ Когда правительство перестанет заботиться о благосостоянии народа, то поля опустеют и государственное хлебохранилище не наполнится никогда; ~ люди будут надевать на себя разноцветные одежды, носить острые мечи и питаться изысканными блюдами. ~ Все это совокупно называется разбойничьей гордостью. ~ Ужели это есть Тао?!

— [53с97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Имей я толику знания, то, идя Путем, ~ Боялся бы только сбиться с него. ~ Великий Путь так ровен, так широк, ~ Но люди любят кривые тропинки. ~ Палаты царские так чисто прибраны, ~ Поля же заросли бурьяном, житницы пусты. ~ Носят шелка, расшитые узорами, на поясе мечи, ~ Вкусно едят и пьют, в домах избыток всякого добра. ~ Вот что я зову великим разбоем, ~ Великого Пути здесь нет в помине!

— [53с98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Ниспошли мне четкого наличия знания, как двигаться по великому Пути. ~ Страшусь лишь отклониться от него. ~ Великий Путь максимально рассеян, и народ предпочитает дорожки. ~ Приемные очень опрятны. ~ Поля совсем заросли. ~ Хранилища совершенно пусты. ~ Одежда в цветных узорах. ~ На поясе острые мечи. ~ Пресыщение питьем и пищей. ~ Наличие избытка товаров, предметов. ~ Это определяется: ~ Воровской беспредел. ~ Но ведь это же отрицание Пути.

— [54с01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ What is firmly set up {can't be} pulled down; ~ {What is firmly embraced cannot slip free}. ~ And your sons and grandsons, as a result, will sacrifice without end. ~ When you cultivate it in your person, your virtue will then be genuine; ~ When you cultivate it in your family, your virtue will then overflow; ~ When you cultivate it in your village, your virtue will then be long lasting; ~ When you cultivate it in your state, your virtue will then be abundant; ~ And when you cultivate it throughout the world, your virtue will then be widespread. ~ Use the individual to examine the individual; ~ Use the family to examine the family; ~ Use the village to examine the village; ~ Use the state to examine the state; ~ And use the world to examine the world; ~ How do I know that the world is so? ~ By {this}.

— [54с02t] John C. H. Wu ~ WHAT is well planted cannot be uprooted. ~ What is well embraced cannot slip away. ~ Your descendants will carry on the ancestral sacrifice for generations without end. ~ Cultivate Virtue in your own person, ~ And it becomes a genuine part of you. ~ Cultivate it in the family, ~ And it will abide. ~ Cultivate it in the community, ~ And it will live and grow. ~ Cultivate it in the state, ~ And it will flourish abundantly. ~ Cultivate it in the world, ~ And it will become universal. ~ Hence, a person must be judged as person; ~ A family as family; ~ A community as community; ~ A state as state; ~ The world as world. ~ How do I know about the world? ~ By what is within me.

—[54c03t] D. C. Lau ~ What is firmly rooted cannot be pulled out; ~ What is tightly held in the arms will not slip loose; ~ Through this the offering of sacrifice by descendants will never come to an end. ~ Cultivate it in your person ~ And its virtue will be genuine; ~ Cultivate it in the family ~ And its virtue will be more than sufficient; ~ Cultivate it in the hamlet ~ And its virtue will endure; ~ Cultivate it in the state ~ And its virtue will abound; ~ Cultivate it in the empire ~ And its virtue will be pervasive. ~ Hence look at the person through the person; ~ Look at the family through the family; ~ Look at the hamlet through the hamlet; ~ Look at the state through the state; ~ Look at the empire through the empire. ~ How do I know that the empire is like that? ~ By means of this.

—[54c04t] R. L. Wing ~ What is skillfully established will not be uprooted; ~ What is skillfully grasped will not slip away. ~ Thus it is honored for generations. ~ Cultivate the inner self; Its Power becomes real. ~ Cultivate the home; Its Power becomes abundant. ~ Cultivate the community; Its Power becomes greater. ~ Cultivate the organization; Its Power becomes prolific. ~ Cultivate the world; Its Power becomes universal. ~ Therefore through the inner self, ~ The inner self is conceived. ~ Through the home, ~ The home is conceived. ~ Through the community, ~ The community is conceived. ~ Through the organization, ~ The organization is conceived. ~ Through the world, ~ The world is conceived. ~ How do I know the world? ~ Through this.

—[54c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ He who is good at building cannot be shaken, ~ And he who is good at holding can lose nothing. ~ (According to the principle,) he can enjoy the sacrifice for posterity forever. ~ His "De" can be pure and true by carrying out the principle in his person; ~ His "De" can be abundant by carrying it out in the family; ~ His "De" can lead by carrying it out in the neighbourhood; ~ His "De" can be powerful by carrying it out in the state; ~ His "De" can be universal by carrying it out in the kingdom; ~ So (we should) ~ Know a person in the perspective of a person, ~ Know a family in the perspective of a family, ~ Know a neighbourhood in the perspective of a neighbourhood, ~ Know a state in the perspective of a state, ~ Know the kingdom in the perspective of a kingdom. ~ How do I know the situation of all the things under Heaven? ~ By the method mentioned above.

—[54c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ What is firmly established cannot be uprooted. ~ What is firmly grasped cannot slip away. ~ It will be honored from generation to generation. ~ Cultivate Virtue in your self, ~ And Virtue will be real. ~ Cultivate it in the family, ~ And Virtue will abound. ~ Cultivate it in the village, ~ And Virtue will grow. ~ Cultivate it in the nation, ~ And Virtue will be abundant. ~ Cultivate it in the universe, ~ And Virtue will be everywhere. ~ Therefore look at the body as body; ~ Look at the family as family; ~ Look at the village as village; ~ Look at the nation as nation; ~ Look at the universe as universe. ~ How do I know the universe is like this? ~ By looking!

(same and serious attitude).

—[54c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ The people who are good at building things do not budge, ~ The people who are good at protecting thing do not lose any part, ~ So their descendents can celebrate and remember them forever. ~ If a person can build such a DE, the DE will be real; ~ If a family can build such a DE, the DE will be plentiful; ~ If a town can build such a DE, the DE will last long; ~ If a country can build such a DE, the DE will be bountiful; ~ If the entire world can build such a DE, the DE will be everywhere. ~ Therefore, you know others by looking at yourself; ~ You know other families by looking at your family; ~ You know other towns by looking at your town; ~ You know other countries by looking at your country; ~ You know the past and future by looking at the present. ~ How do I know everything in the world? This is how.

—[54c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE ROOT AND ITS BRANCHES ~ He who plants rightly never uproots. ~ He who lays hold rightly never relinquishes. ~ His posterity will honour him continually. ~ Whoever develops the Tao in himself will be rooted in virtue. ~ Whoever develops the Tao in his family will cause his virtue to spread. ~ Whoever develops the Tao in his village will increase prosperity. ~ Whoever develops the Tao in the kingdom will make good fortune prevalent. ~ Whoever develops Tao in the world will make virtue universal. ~ I observe myself, and so I come to know others. ~ I observe my family, and all others grow familiar. ~ I study this world, and others come within my knowledge. ~ How else should I come to know the laws which govern all things, save thus, that I observe them in myself?

—[54c10t] James Legge ~ What (Tao's) skilful planter plants ~ Can never be uptorn; ~ What his skilful arms unfold, ~ From him can ne'er be borne. ~ Sons shall bring in lengthening line, ~ Sacrifices to his shrine. ~ Tao when nursed within one's self, ~ His vigour will make true; ~ And where the family it rules ~ What riches will accrue! ~ The neighbourhood where it prevails ~ In thriving will abound; ~ And when 'tis seen throughout the state, ~ Good fortune will be found. ~ Employ it the kingdom o'er, ~ And men thrive all around. ~ In this way the effect will be seen in the person, by the observation of different cases; ~ in the family; ~ in the neighbourhood; ~ in the state; ~ and in the kingdom. ~ How do I know that this effect is sure to hold thus all under the sky? ~ By this (method of observation).

—[54c11t] David Hinton ~ Something planted so deep it's never rooted up, ~ something held so tight it's never stolen away: ~ children and grandchildren will pay it homage always. ~ Cultivated in yourself it makes Integrity real. ~ Cultivated in your family it makes Integrity plentiful. ~ Cultivated in your village it makes Integrity enduring. ~ Cultivated in your nation it makes Integrity abundant. ~ Cultivated in all beneath heaven it makes Integrity all-encompassing. ~ So look through self into self, ~ through family into family, ~ through village into village, ~ through nation into nation, ~ through all beneath heaven into all beneath heaven. ~ How can I know all beneath heaven as it is? ~ Through this.

—[54c12t] Chichung Huang ~ He who excels in planting something - ~ Nobody can pull it up; ~ He who excels in embracing something - ~ Nobody can snatch it away. ~ His offspring will thereby offer sacrifices without end. ~ Cultivate it in your own person, ~ Your virtue will be genuine; ~ Cultivate it in your own fief, ~ Your virtue will be more than enough; ~ Cultivate it in your own prefecture, ~ Your virtue will be long-enduring; ~ Cultivate it in your own state, ~ Your virtue will be abundant; ~ Cultivate it in the empire, ~ Your virtue will be universal. ~ Observe other persons from your own person; ~ Observe other fiefs from your own fief; ~ Observe other prefectures from your own prefecture; ~ Observe other states from your own state; ~ Observe the empire from all under heaven. ~ How do I know what the empire is like? ~ From this.

—[54c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ One who is well established is not uprooted, ~ One who embraces firmly cannot be separated from, ~ Thus sons and grandsons shall perform sacrifices without interruptions. ~ In cultivating this in one's person, ~ The person's te becomes genuine; ~ In cultivating this in the family, ~ The family's te has more to spare (yü); ~ In cultivating this in the village, ~ The village's te grows strong; ~ In cultivating this in the state, ~ The state's te becomes abundant; ~ In cultivating this in the world (t'ien hsia), ~ The world's te becomes universal. ~ Therefore observe (kuan) the person by the person, ~ Observe the family by the family, ~ Observe the village by the village, ~ Observe the state by the state, ~ Observe the world by the world. ~ How do I know such is the case in the world? ~ Through this.

—[54c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ An excellent builder would make sure that houses he builds can not be knocked over [even by hurricanes]; ~ A person with a strong grip [of his project] makes it impossible to slip out of his grasp; ~ Consequently, to such a thoughtful person [whose solid accomplishments] will be offered thanks by later generations ceaselessly. ~ If a person cultivates the above mentioned practice for his own personal satisfaction, his Te is genuine; ~ If a person advances it within his family, their [jointly aggregated] Te will be more than enough to benefit other families; ~ If it is promoted in a village, the villagers' [reciprocally enhanced] Te will extend its growth [to other villages]; ~ If this practice thrives in a country, the [collective] Te of its people will further flourish [that their Te will spill over to other countries]; ~ When it is upheld in the world, their [jointly summative] Te will spread universally [in Universe]. ~ Accordingly: ~ [The cultivation of Te] by an individual sets a good example to his family; ~ [The promotion of Te] within a family exemplifies Te to other families; ~ [The advancement of Te] in a village manifests [the goodness of Te] to other villages; ~ [The broadening of Te] in a country demonstrates [the benefit of Te] to other countries; ~ [The expansion of Te] in a world would manifest [the greatness of Te] to other worlds. ~ How do I know that things work this way? ~ It is all because of this (the observation stated in the previous paragraphs of this Chapter).

—[54c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ What is well planted cannot be uprooted. ~ What is well embraced cannot slip away. ~ The descendants will carry on the ancestral sacrifice from generation to generation. ~ Cultivate Virtue in your own person, and it will be genuine. ~ Cultivate it in the family, and it will be more than sufficient. ~ Cultivate it in the village, and it will last long. ~ Cultivate it in the state, and it will flourish abundantly. ~ Cultivate it in the world, and it will become universal. ~ Hence, a person must be perceived as person; a family as family; a village as village; a state as state; the world as world. ~ How do I know about the world? ~ It is through this.

—[54c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ What is established cannot be uprooted. ~ What is well held cannot slip. ~ Likewise, descendents will continue to perform traditional rituals. ~ Cultivating oneself, Te is genuine. ~ Cultivating the family, Te is plentiful. ~ Cultivating the village, Te is long lasting. ~ Cultivating the kingdom, Te is prevailing. ~ Cultivating the world, Te is ubiquitous. ~ Therefore, observe all individuals through one individual. ~ Observe all families through one family. ~ Observe all villages through one village. ~ Observe all kingdoms through one kingdom. ~ Observe all worlds through the world. ~ How do I know the world is so? ~ By using the above observation(s).

—[54c17t] Arthur Waley ~ What Tao plants cannot be plucked, ~ What Tao clasps, cannot slip. ~ By its virtue alone can one generation after another carry on the ancestral sacrifice. ~ Apply it to yourself and by its power you will be freed from dross. ~ Apply it to your household and your household shall thereby have abundance. ~ Apply it to the village, and the village will be made secure. ~ Apply it to the kingdom, and the kingdom shall thereby be made to flourish. ~ Apply it to an empire, and the empire shall thereby be extended. ~ Therefore just as through oneself one may contemplate Oneself, ~ So through the household one may contemplate the Household, ~ And through the village, one may contemplate the Village, ~ And through the kingdom, one may contemplate the Kingdom, ~ And through the empire, one may contemplate the Empire. ~ How do I know that the empire is so? ~ By this.

—[54c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ The well-founded will not be pulled up. ~ The well-embraced will not get dropped. ~ Such a one's descendants, accordingly, will never let sacrifices to him cease. ~ If you cultivate it within your own person, your virtue will be authentic. ~ If you cultivate it within your family, your virtue will exceed all need. ~ If you cultivate it within your village, your virtue will endure. ~ If you cultivate it within your state, your virtue will be abundant. ~ If you cultivate it among all under Heaven, your virtue will reach everywhere. ~ Look at the person from the point of view of the person. ~ Look at the family from the point of view of the family. ~ Look at the village from the point of view of the village. ~ Look at the state from the point of view of the state. ~ Look at all under Heaven from the point of view of all under Heaven. ~ How do I know that all under Heaven is so? ~ It is by this.

—[54c19t] Lin Yutang ~ THE INDIVIDUAL AND THE STATE ~ Who is firmly established is not easily shaken. ~ Who has a firm grasp does not easily let go. ~ From generation to generation his ancestral sacrifices ~ Shall be continued without fail. ~ Cultivated in the individual, character will become genuine; ~ Cultivated in the family, character will become abundant; ~ Cultivated in the village, character will multiply; ~ Cultivated in the state, character will prosper; ~ Cultivated in the world, character will become universal. ~ Therefore: ~ According to (the character of) the individual, judge the individual; ~ According to (the character of) the family, judge the family; ~ According to (the character of) the village, judge the village; ~ According to (the character of) the state, judge the state; ~ According to (the character of) the world, judge the world. ~ How do I know the world is so. ~ By this.

—[54c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ What is firmly established cannot be uprooted; ~ What is tightly embraced cannot slip away. ~ Thus sacrificial offerings made by sons and grandsons will never end. ~ Cultivated in the person, integrity is true. ~ Cultivated in the family, integrity is ample. ~ Cultivated in the village, integrity lasts long. ~ Cultivated in the state, integrity is abundant. ~ Cultivated everywhere under heaven, integrity is vast. ~ Observe other persons through your own person. ~ Observe other families through your own family. ~ Observe other villages through your own village. ~ Observe other states through your own state. ~ Observe all under heaven through all under heaven. ~ How do I know the nature of all under heaven? ~ Through this.

—[54c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ What is well rooted cannot be pulled up. ~ What is firmly grasped will not slip loose. ~ It will be honored from generation to generation. ~ When cultivated in your person, Virtue will be real. ~ When cultivated in your household, Virtue will be plentiful. ~ When cultivated in your village, Virtue will endure. ~ When cultivated in your country, Virtue will abound. ~ When cultivated in your world, Virtue will be universal. ~ Hence, ~ through yourself look at Self. ~ Through your household look at Household. ~ Through your community look at Community. ~ Through your country look at Country. ~ Through your world look at World. ~ How do I know that the world is like this? ~ Because of what is within me.

—[54c22t] David H. Li ~ What is well planted will not uproot; ~ What is firmly held will not drop. ~ Descendants will not discontinue remembrance ceremonies. ~ Cultivating it in self, virtue is true; ~ Cultivating it in the family, virtue overflows; ~ Cultivating it in the village, virtue lasts; ~ Cultivating it in the state, virtue is abundant; ~ Cultivating it in the world, virtue is universal. ~ Thus, ~ look at self through self; ~ look at the family through the family; ~ look at the village through the village; ~ look at the state through the state; ~ look at the world through the world. ~ How do I know the world? ~ Because it is so.

—[54c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ What is firmly established within cannot be uprooted. ~ What is firmly embraced within cannot be disengaged. ~ The Tao, thus firmly established and embraced within you, ~ Will be respected for generations to come. ~ Cultivate the Tao in your character, ~ Then its virtues will be genuine. ~ Cultivate the Tao in your family, ~ Then its virtues will abound. ~ Cultivate the Tao in your community, ~ Then its virtues will endure. ~ Cultivate the Tao in your country, ~ Then its virtues will flourish. ~ Cultivate the Tao in the world, ~ Then its virtues will pervade. ~ Therefore, you can observe the virtues of the Tao, ~ In your character, if you cultivate it in your character; ~ In your family, if you cultivate it in your family; ~ In your community, if you cultivate it in your community; ~ In your country, if you cultivate it in your country; ~ And in the world, if you cultivate it in the world. ~ How can you know how the state of the world is? ~ Simply by thus observing.

—[54c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ Let me have knowledge and follow the great way of the Tao, ~ I alone am afraid of straying from this path. ~ The great way is easy and simple, ~ But people prefer byways. ~ The royal palaces are wonderfully maintained, ~ But the people's fields are full of thorns, ~ And the barns are empty. ~ There are those who wear expensive clothes, ~ There are those who carry polished swords, ~ There are those who gorge themselves on food and drink, ~ There are those who amass property and possessions: ~ This is called encouraging the robbers. ~ Is this not straying from the path of the Tao?

—[54c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ What is built on rock cannot be pulled down; ~ What is held lightly can never be lost. ~ Meditate on virtue within yourself, and you will find the benefit of virtue. ~ Use it as the ground for the family, ~ and your virtue will last for generations. ~ Take it as your guidance for the village, ~ and the place will blossom for years to come. ~ Use it to guide the nation, ~ and that nation will create abundance. ~ Be guided by it for the Whole, ~ and it will flood its way over the world. ~ So, look at someone else as you would yourself ~ And treat other families as you would your own; ~ See your community in other communities, ~ Think of all countries as part of your being ~ And treasure the world as the round centre of everything ~ How can I see the world like this? ~ Because I have eyes.

—[54c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ What is well planted cannot be pulled out; ~ What is well held cannot be disengaged; ~ The principle being observed, ~ The offering of sacrifice by descendants will be kept making for ever. ~ Similarly cultivating the principle in oneself, ~ One can purify his virtue; ~ Cultivating it in the family, ~ One makes his own virtue more than enough; ~ Cultivating it in the village, ~ One can have the virtue to be the leader; ~ Cultivating it in the state, ~ One can have the prodigious virtue; ~ Cultivating it in the world, ~ One can have the virtue widely known. ~ Hence I can have an insight ~ Into other individuals by examining myself; ~ Into other families by examining my family; ~ Into other villages by examining my village; ~ Into other states by examining my state; ~ Into other worlds by examining my world. ~ How do I know about the whole world? ~ By employing the method above.

—[54c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ He who is well established cannot be uprooted. ~ He who is holding tight cannot slip away. ~ His descendants will never cease to honour him. ~ He who cultivates the moral character, his virtue will be clear. ~ He who cultivates his own family, his virtue will flourish. ~ He who cultivates the village, his virtue will endure. ~ He who cultivates the country, his virtue will be abundant. ~ He who cultivates the land, his virtue will be widespread. ~ Therefore look at others as at your own person. ~ Look at other families as at your own family. ~ Look at other villages as at your own village. ~ Look at other countries as at your own country. ~ Look at other lands as at your own land. ~ How do I know it is like this under Heaven? ~ By means of this.

—[54c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ A well-founded establishment cannot be uprooted, ~ And a well-preserved tradition can not be dissolved: ~ Each will go on generation after generation. ~ One has true being when one keeps the Way body and soul, ~ Effective being when one extends the Way over the family, ~ Long being when one extends the Way over the community, ~ Rich being when one extends the Way over a nation, ~ Universal being when one extends the Way over the world. ~ Therefore, one knows others by looking at one's self, ~ Other communities by looking at one's own community, ~ Other states through the comparison with one's own state ~ And other worlds by inferring from one's own world. ~ That's how I come to know the world.

—[54c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ The Individual and The World ~ Lao Tze says, ~ He who is skillful in establishment shall establish the Tao in his heart so that no one can pluck it. ~ He who is skillful in enfolding arms shall enfold the Teh in his arms so that no one can take it. ~ From generation to generation his ancestral sacrifices shall be continued without fail. ~ When this precept is applied by whomever to instruct himself, his character will be made true; ~ applied to his neighborhood, his neighborhood will thrive; ~ applied to the state, his state will find good fortune; ~ applied to the world, the world will inherit with good traditions. ~ In this way he can observe the others in comparison with the self; ~ observe others' families in comparison with his own family; ~ observe others' neighborhoods in comparison with his own neighborhood; ~ observe others' states in comparison with his own state; ~ observe the world before in comparison with what it is now. ~ How do I know that this effect is sure to hold all in the world? ~ By observation.

—[54c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ What is planted by the best planter can never be removed; ~ What is embraced by the best embracer can never be loosened. ~ Thus his children and grandchildren will be able to continue their ancestral sacrifice for endless generations. ~ If he applies Tao to himself his virtue will be genuine; ~ If he applies it to his family his virtue will be abundant; ~ If he applies it to his village his virtue will be lasting; ~ If he applies it to his country his virtue will be full; ~ If he applies it to the world his virtue will be universal. ~ Therefore by one's person one may observe persons; ~ By one's family one may observe families; ~ By one's village one may observe villages; ~ By one's country one may observe countries; ~ By one's world one may observe worlds. ~ How do I know that the world may be so (governed by Tao)? ~ By this (observation).

—[54c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ To be built well is not to be toppled. ~ To be held fast is not to slip. ~ With this, children and grandchildren will never stop offering sacrifice to their ancestors. ~ With this to cultivate oneself, one's virtue will be true; ~ With this to cultivate the family, its virtue will be plentiful; ~ With this to cultivate the community, its virtue will last long; ~ With this to cultivate the nation, its virtue will be abundant; ~ With this to cultivate the world, its virtue will be good. ~ Therefore, ~ Examine a person with a person, ~ Examine a family with a family, ~ Examine a community with a community, ~ Examine a nation with a nation, ~ Examine a world with a world. ~ How can I know this is the way of the world? ~ By this.

—[54c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ Excellently founded: it will not be uprooted; ~ Excellently embraced and cared for: it will not slip away; ~ so sons and grandsons will never cease to offer the sacrifices. ~ Cultivate It in your person, its Te will be pure; ~ cultivate It in the clan, its Te will be abundant; ~ cultivate It in the village, its Te will be lasting; ~ cultivate It in the state, its Te will be ample; ~ cultivate It in the empire, its Te will be all-embracing. ~ Yes: ~ Judge a person taking that person as the measure, ~ judge a clan taking that clan as the measure, ~ judge a village taking that village as the measure, ~ judge a state taking that state as the measure, ~ judge the world taking the world as the measure. ~ How do I know the nature of the world? ~ By this.

—[54c33t] Cheng Lin ~ He who knows how to establish himself cannot be uprooted. ~ He who knows how to hold fast cannot lose his grip. ~ The descendants of such a man will worship him without cease. ~ When one's conduct is in accordance with Truth, the inherent qualities become real. ~ When a whole family follows Truth, the inherent qualities become abundant. ~ When a whole village follows Truth, the inherent qualities become enduring. ~ When the whole State follows Truth, the inherent qualities become superabundant. ~ When a whole Empire follows Truth, the inherent qualities become universal. ~ Thus, ~ one man is the measure of other men, ~ one family is the measure of other families, ~ one village is the measure of other villages, ~ one State is the measure of other States, ~ and one Empire is the measure of other Empires.

—[54c34t] Yi Wu ~ What is well established cannot be uprooted. ~ What is well embraced cannot slip away. ~ [Practicing these], one's descendants will offer sacrifices without end. ~ Cultivate them in oneself, one's virtue will be true. ~ Cultivate them in the family, one's virtue will increase. ~ Cultivate them in the community, one's virtue will develop. ~ Cultivate them in the country, one's virtue will be abundant. ~ Cultivate them in the world, one's virtue will be universal. ~ Therefore, ~ by the self, contemplate the self; ~ by the family, contemplate the family; ~ by the community, contemplate the community; ~ by the country, contemplate the country; ~ by the world, contemplate the world. ~ How can I know about the world as such? ~ By these.

—[54c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ A person who is adept at increasing virtue will adhere to it unswervingly. ~ A person who holds steadfastly to his virtue will resolutely persist with it. ~ His deeds will endure because his progeny will continue to commemorate him for generations to come. ~ If he diligently cultivates his personal virtue, the virtue will be genuine. ~ Diligently cultivating virtue in a family, the virtue will be abundant. ~ Diligently cultivating virtue in a community, the virtue will be expansive. ~ Diligently cultivating virtue throughout the country, the virtue will be prolific. ~ Diligently cultivating virtue throughout the world, the virtue will be ubiquitous. ~ Therefore, looking from the individual perspective, you can see the benefit. ~ From the respective viewpoints of family, community, country or the world, the benefits are also obvious. ~ How do you know cultivating virtue will benefit the world? ~ It is through this inference.

—[54c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ What is well planted cannot be pulled up. ~ What is closely embraced cannot slip away. ~ The wise establish virtue firmly within themselves, and are honored for generations ever after. ~ Apply natural, integral virtue to your own character, ~ and it will be genuine. ~ Apply natural, integral virtue to the family, ~ and it will abound. ~ Apply natural, integral virtue to the state, ~ and it will flourish abundantly. ~ Apply natural, integral virtue to the world, ~ and it will be pervasive. ~ Understand other people's lives by means of your own life. ~ Understand other people's families by means of your own family. ~ Understand other societies by means of your own society. ~ Understand other countries by means of your own country. ~ How can you know what is right for the world? ~ By knowing what is right for your own life.

—[54c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ Nothing can be taken away if it is well-founded. ~ Nothing can be lost if it is well-grasped. ~ For generations to come, the worship will not be discontinued. ~ To cultivate (Tao) in one's self makes attainment real. ~ To cultivate (Tao) in one's family makes attainment a surplus. ~ To cultivate (Tao) in one's community makes attainment long-lasting. ~ To cultivate (Tao) in one's nation makes attainment abundant. ~ To cultivate (Tao) in one's world makes attainment all-embracing. ~ Thus, through the self, one contemplates the self. ~ Through the family, one contemplates the family. ~ Through the community, one contemplates the community. ~ Through the nation, one contemplates the nation. ~ Through the world, one contemplates the world. ~ How do I know the world as world? ~ It is through this.

—[54c38t] Henry Wei ~ Rectifying Viewpoints ~ Hsiu Kuan ~ Those adept in establishing themselves ~ Cannot be plucked up; ~ Those adept in the act of embracing ~ Cannot be made to relax their hold. ~ They are worshipped for generations in a row. ~ Cultivate Tao in one's person, ~ And its virtue will be genuine; ~ Cultivate Tao in one's family, ~ And its virtue will be overflowing; ~ Cultivate Tao in one's village, ~ And its virtue will be long enduring; ~ Cultivate Tao in one's state, ~ And its virtue will be abundant; ~ Cultivate Tao in one's empire, ~ And its virtue will be pervasive. ~ Therefore, ~ By one's person, one sizes up other persons; ~ By one's family, one sizes up other families; ~ By one's village, one sizes up other villages; ~ By one's state, one sizes up other states; ~ By one's empire, one sizes up other empires. ~ How do I know this is so with the empire? ~ By this.

—[54c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ What is firmly planted cannot be pulled out; ~ What is tightly held in the arms cannot slip away, ~ So that the descendants will never stop offering ancestral sacrifice. ~ Cultivate it in yourself, ~ And its Te will be genuine. ~ Cultivate it in the household, ~ And its Te will be more than sufficient. ~ Cultivate it in the village, ~ And its Te will be long-lasting. ~ Cultivate it in the state, ~ And its Te will be plentiful. ~ Cultivate it in all under Heaven, ~ And its Te will be all-encompassing. ~ Therefore, observe yourself through yourself; ~ The household through the household; ~ The village through the village; ~ The state through the state; ~ All under Heaven through all under Heaven. ~ How do I know that all under Heaven is so? ~ With this.

—[54c40t] Tao Huang ~ What is well-built is not pulled down. ~ What is well-fastened is not separated. ~ Sons and grandsons worship unceasingly. ~ Cultivate the self, and the Action is pure. ~ Cultivate the family, the Action is plentiful. ~ Cultivate the community, the Action endures. ~ Cultivate the nation, the Action is fruitful. ~ Cultivate the world, the Action is all-pervading. ~ Treat the self by the standard of self. ~ Treat the family by the standard of family. ~ Treat the community by the standard of community. ~ Treat the nation by the standard of nation. ~ Treat the world by the standard of world. ~ How do I know how the world is such? ~ Thus.

—[54c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ What is perfectly planted will not be uprooted. ~ What is perfectly held will not slip away. ~ Through generations the family's memorial service will not be discontinued. ~ Thus, ~ by cultivating Dao in a person, virtues become manifest; ~ by cultivating Dao in a family, virtues become abundant; ~ by cultivating Dao in the community, virtues become enduring; ~ by cultivating Dao in a country, virtues become flourishing; ~ and by cultivating Dao in the world, virtues become universal. ~ Thus, ~ by taking care of one's self, one takes care of others; ~ by taking care of one's family, one takes care of others' families; ~ by taking care of one's own community, one takes care of others' communities; ~ by taking care of one's own country, one takes care of others' countries; ~ and by taking care of the world, one takes care of the universe. ~ How do we know in what way the world should be ruled? ~ Through this.

—[54c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ He who is well established (in Tao) cannot be pulled away. ~ He who has a firm grasp (of Tao) cannot be separated from it. ~ Thus from generation to generation his ancestral sacrifice will never be suspended. ~ When one cultivates virtue in his person, it becomes genuine virtue. ~ When one cultivates virtue in his family, it becomes overflowing virtue. ~ When one cultivates virtue in his community, it becomes lasting virtue. ~ When one cultivates virtue in his country, it becomes abundant virtue. ~ When one cultivates virtue in the world, it becomes universal. ~ Therefore the person should be viewed as a person. ~ The family should be viewed as a family. ~ The community should be viewed as a community. ~ The country should be viewed as a country. ~ And the world should be viewed as the world. ~ How do I know this to be the case in the world? ~ Through this.

—[54c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Умеющего крепко встать не шелохнуть, ~ умеющего охватить не оторвать. ~ Сыновья и внуки будут непрестанно поминать их жертвами. ~ У того, кто это совершенствует в себе, добродетель делается подлинной; ~ у того, кто это совершенствует в семье, добродетель достигает изобилия; ~ у того, кто это совершенствует в селении, добродетель возрастает; ~ у того, кто это совершенствует в уделе, добродетель процветает; ~ у того, кто это совершенствует и в Поднебесной, добродетель делается всеобъемлющей. ~ Поэтому-то зрят себя собою, семью семьей, селение селением, удел уделом, Поднебесную всей Поднебесной. ~ Откуда мне известно истинное состояние Поднебесной? ~ Отсюда.

— [54с92t] А. А. Маслов ~ То, что глубоко посадил, нельзя выдернуть. ~ То, что крепко обхватил, трудно отнять. ~ Поэтому нельзя положить конец ритуальным подношениям сыновей и внуков своим предкам. ~ Пестуй это в своём теле - и Благость [в тебе] обретёт истинность. ~ Пестуй это в семье - и Благость будет в достатке. ~ Пестуй это в своём государстве - и Благости будет в избытке. ~ Пестуй это в Поднебесной - и Благость станет повсеместной. ~ Поэтому смотри на других людей через самого себя. ~ Смотри на другие семьи через свою семью. ~ Смотри на другие деревни через свою деревню. ~ Смотри на другие государства через своё государство. ~ Смотри на Поднебесную через Поднебесную. ~ Откуда мне знать, что Поднебесная такова? ~ Из неё же самой.

— [54с93t] Е. А. Торчинов ~ Умеющего стоять - не опрокинуть. ~ Из обхвата умеющего обхватить - не высвободиться. ~ Жертвоприношения предкам, приносимые детьми и внуками такого умельца, никогда не оскудеют. ~ Кто это умение в себе совершенствует, у того Благая Сила станет истинной. ~ Кто это умение в семье совершенствует, у того Благая Сила станет обильной. ~ Кто это умение в селении совершенствует, у того Благая Сила станет возвращенной. ~ Кто это умение в государстве совершенствует, у того Благая Сила станет превеликой. ~ Кто это умение во всей Поднебесной совершенствует, Благая Сила того распространится повсюду. ~ Поэтому ~ если я посредством себя самого буду зреть себя, ~ если я посредством семьи буду зреть семью, ~ если я посредством селения буду зреть селение, ~ если я посредством государства буду зреть государство, ~ если я посредством Поднебесной буду зреть Поднебесную, ~ то откуда я узнаю, что Поднебесная именно такова? ~ Именно из этого созерцания.

— [54с94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Что установлено твердыней - того не искоренить. ~ Что незыблемо соблюдается - с тем не порвать. ~ Вот почему сыновья и внуки продолжают непрестанно приносить ритуальные жертвы предкам. ~ Кто совершенствует это в себе - его Дэ подлинно. ~ Кто совершенствует это в семье - его Дэ еще полнее. ~ Кто совершенствует это в селении - его Дэ еще больше. ~ Кто совершенствует это в царстве - его Дэ еще пышнее. ~ Кто совершенствует это в Поднебесной - его Дэ всеобщее. ~ Поэтому: ~ по себе сужу о себе, ~ по семье сужу о семье, ~ по селению сужу о селении, ~ по царству сужу о царстве, ~ по Поднебесной сужу о Поднебесной. ~ Откуда я знаю, что Поднебесная такова? ~ Из того, что сказано.

— [54с95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Кто умеет крепко стоять, того нельзя опрокинуть. ~ Кто умеет опереться, того нельзя свалить. ~ Сыновья и внуки вечно сохраняют память о нем. ~ Кто совершенствует [дао] внутри себя, у того добродетель становится искренней. ~ Кто совершенствует [дао] в семье, у того добродетель становится обильной. ~ Кто совершенствует [дао] в деревне, у того добродетель становится обширной. ~ Кто совершенствует [дао] в царстве, у того добродетель становится богатой. ~ Кто совершенствует [дао] в Поднебесной, у того добродетель становится всеобщей. ~ По себе можно познать других; ~ по одной семье можно познать остальные; ~ по одной деревне можно познать остальные; ~ по одному царству можно познать другие; ~ по одной стране можно познать всю Поднебесную. ~ Каким образом я узнаю, что Поднебесная такова? ~ Поступая так.

— [54с96t] Д. П. —[55c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ One who is steeped in natural virtue is akin to a newborn babe. ~ Wasps and poisonous serpents do not sting it. ~ Fierce beasts do not seize it. ~ Birds of prey do not maul it. ~ Its bones are tender, its muscles soft, yet its grip is firm. ~ It has not known the union of male and female, yet its male member will stir naturally. ~ This is because its vitality is perfectly whole. ~ It can howl and scream all day long without becoming hoarse. ~ This is because it embodies perfect harmony. ~ To know harmony is to know natural virtue. ~ To recognize the natural virtue of the universe is to have insight. ~ To overprotect one's life is to invite danger. ~ To follow the fantasy of the mind is to drain away one's life energy. ~ To hasten growth is to hasten decay. ~ All of this is against the Way of natural virtue. ~ Whatever is against the Universal Way of life soon ceases to be.

—[55c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ When man is enriched with Tê, ~ He may be identified with an innocent child. ~ He is free from the stings of insects, ~ Free from the claws of wild beasts, ~ Free from the attacks of devouring birds. ~ None of his bones or muscles are said to be strong, ~ But the grip of his hand is always firm. ~ Nothing concerning the union of male and female is yet known, ~ But potentiality is evident. ~ The essence of his life is perfect. ~ He can cry all the time without losing his voice. ~ His inner harmony is supreme. ~ To be aware of inner harmony is to abide with reality. ~ To abide with reality is to be enlightened. ~ However, to push life to the full leads to evil. ~ The mind forcing one's potential is artificial. ~ When things are artificial, they lead to decay. ~ This deviates from Tao. ~ That which deviates from Tao ends life soon.

—[55c38t] Henry Wei ~ The Mystic Charm ~ Hsuan Fu ~ He who is profoundly endowed with virtue ~ May be compared to an infant. ~ Poisonous insects do not sting him; ~ Wild beasts do not seize hold of him; ~ Birds of prey do not pounce upon him. ~ Weak in bone and soft in sinews, ~ He yet has a firm grip. ~ Though ignorant of intercourse between the sexes, ~ His genital organ is yet firm and strong, ~ Indicating the plenitude of his vital essence. ~ He may scream all day, ~ Yet his voice does not become hoarse, ~ Indicating the plenitude of his inner harmony. ~ To know harmony is to accord with the Immutable; ~ To accord with the Immutable means enlightenment. ~ Improvement in health is a good omen; ~ Mental control of the breath means strength. ~ Things begin to decay after reaching the prime. ~ Decay indicates disregard of Tao. ~ Whatever disregards Tao soon vanishes.

—[55c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ He who possesses Te in abundance ~ May be likened to a newborn baby. ~ Bees, scorpions and vipers do not sting it; ~ Ferocious beasts do not seize it; ~ Birds of prey do not attack it. ~ Its bones are weak and its sinews soft, yet its grip is firm. ~ It doesn't yet know the union of male and female, yet its organ is erect. ~ Its vital energy is perfect. ~ It screams all day yet never becomes hoarse. ~ Its harmony is perfect. ~ To know harmony is called [to know the] constant. ~ To know the constant is called enlightenment. ~ To improve upon one's life is called ill omen. ~ When the mind dictates the vital breath, it is called forcing. ~ When a thing reaches its prime, it becomes old. ~ Forcing is called contrary to Tao. ~ What is contrary to Tao expires early.

—[55c40t] Tao Huang ~ Action in its profundity is like a newborn baby. ~ Poisonous insects and venomous snakes do not sting it. ~ Predatory birds and ferocious animals do not seize it. ~ Its bones are soft and its sinews supple, yet its grasp is firm; ~ Without knowing the union of male and female, its organs become aroused. ~ Its vital essence comes to the point; ~ Crying all day, its voice never becomes hoarse. ~ Its harmony comes to the point. ~ Harmony is eternal. ~ Knowing harmony is discernment. ~ Enhancing life is equanimity. ~ Generating vitality through mind is strength. ~ When things reach their climax, they are suddenly old. ~ This is "Non-Tao." ~ "Non-Tao" dies young.

—[55c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ The inherited abundance of tender virtues is comparable to a new-born baby: ~ the poisonous insects may not sting him; ~ the fierce animals may not touch him; ~ and birds of prey may not snatch him. ~ His bones are soft and his muscles are tender, yet, he can hold firm. ~ It is like an infant who has the organ of reproduction but does not know its function. ~ This is the perfection of natural vitality. ~ It is like an infant who cries all day without growing hoarse. ~ This is the perfection of natural harmony. ~ To comprehend this harmony is to know the eternal function of Dao. ~ One who knows the eternities is enlightened. ~ One who overdoes his living is unlucky. ~ One whose will overcomes his temper is strong. ~ A matured living body will soon grow old. ~ These are called "the aberration of Dao". ~ The aberration of Dao leads to early extinction.

—[55c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ He who possesses virtue in abundance ~ May be compared to an infant. ~ Poisonous insects will not sting him. ~ Fierce beasts will not seize him. ~ Birds of prey will not strike him. ~ His bones are weak, his sinews tender, but his grasp is firm. ~ He does not yet know the union of male and female, ~ But his organ is aroused, ~ This means that his essence is at its height. ~ He may cry all day without becoming hoarse, ~ This means that his (natural) harmony is perfect. ~ To know harmony means to be in accord with the eternal. ~ To be in accord with the eternal means to be enlightened. ~ To force the growth of life means ill omen. ~ For the mind to employ the vital force without restraint means violence. ~ After things reach their prime, they begin to grow old, ~ Which means being contrary to Tao. ~ Whatever is contrary to Tao will soon perish.

—[55c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Кто преисполнен добродетели, походит на младенца. ~ Его не ужалит ядовитая змея, не схватит лютый зверь, не заклюёт пернатый хищник. ~ Его кости слабы, сухожилия мягки, но держит в горсти крепко. ~ Хотя ему еще неизвестна связь самца и самки, он всецело развит. ~ Его сгущенность совершенна. ~ Он может целый день кричать и не охрипнуть. ~ Гармония в нем совершенна. ~ Знание гармонии зовут незыблемым, знание незыблемого называется просветом. ~ Становиться взрослым, отходя от состояния младенца, значит предрекать себе несчастье. ~ Когда сердце властвует дыханием, это говорит о силе возмужалости. ~ Но ей на смену спешит старость. ~ Это значит действовать вопреки Дао. ~ А тому, кто действует вопреки Дао, конец приходит рано.

—[55c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Постигший глубину Благости уподобляется новорождённому. ~ Ядовитые насекомые не жалят его. ~ Дикие звери не бросаются на него. ~ Хищные птицы не клюют его. ~ Его кости слабы, а мышцы податливы, но хватка крепка. ~ Он не знает о союзе мужского и женского, но пенис его уже воспрял, ибо семя его достигло совершенства. ~ Он кричит весь день, но голос его не хрипнет, ибо гармония его достигла совершенства. ~ Познание гармонии зовётся достижением постоянства. ~ Познание постоянства зовётся просветлением. ~ Избыток жизни зовётся [недобрым] знаменем. ~ Регулирование [круговорота] ци сердцем зовётся укреплением. ~ Вещи, исполняясь силы, стареют, и это считается противоречащим Дао. ~ То, что противоречит Дао, рано приходит к своему концу.

—[55c93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Того, кто крепко держится за Силу-Дэ благую, сравню я с новорожденным младенцем. ~ Пчелы, пауки и змеи ядовитые его не жалят. ~ Хищные звери его не тронут, хищные птицы его не клюют. ~ Его кости мягки, его мышцы слабы, но хватает он крепко. ~ Ничего не знает он о союзе самца и самки, но уд его вздымается, ибо его семя-энергия предельно совершенно. ~

Гармония - источник постоянства, а постоянство - корень просветления. ~ Стремление к пестованию жизни зовется благовещим. ~ Контроль сознания над жизненной энергией дарит силу. ~ Коль существо сильно и вдруг стареет - оно отвергло истинный Путь-Дао, значит. ~ Тот, кто с Пути сворачивает, гибнет рано.

— [55с94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Таящий в себе полноту Дэ подобен новорожденному: ~ ядовитые насекомые и змеи не ужалят, свирепые звери не схватят, хищные птицы не унесут. ~ Кости [у него] нежные, мышцы мягкие, но цепляется [он] крепко. ~ Не знает союза самца и самки, но все творит - ~ это совершенство семени-энергии (цзин). ~ Весь день голосит, но не хрипнет - ~ это совершенство созвучия (гармонии). ~ Знание созвучия называю постоянством. ~ Знание постоянства называю просветленностью. ~ Богатую жизнь называю счастьем. ~ Управление сердцем (разумом) энергией (ци) называю могуществом. ~ Если вещь в расцвете сил, а стара, называю это не-Дао. ~ Не-Дао рано умирает.

— [55с95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Кто содержит в себе совершенное дэ, тот похож на новорожденного. ~ Ядовитые насекомые и змеи его не ужалят, свирепые звери его не схватят, хищные птицы его не заклюют. ~ Кости у него мягкие, мышцы слабые, но он держит [дао] крепко. ~ Не зная союза двух полов, он обладает животворящей способностью. ~ Он очень чуток. ~ Он кричит весь день, и его голос не изменяется. ~ Он совершенно гармоничен. ~ Знание гармонии называется постоянством. ~ Знание постоянства называется мудростью. ~ Обогащение жизни называется счастьем. ~ Стремление управлять чувствами называется упорством. ~ Существо, полное сил, стареет - это называется нарушением дао. ~ Кто дао не соблюдает, тот погибает раньше времени.

— [55с96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Достигший нравственного совершенства похож на младенца. ~ Вредоносные насекомые не укусят его; дикие звери не сделают ему вреда; ~ хищные птицы не вопьются в него своими когтями. ~ Хотя у него кости мягки и мышцы слабы, но он будет держать предмет очень крепко. ~ Хотя он не знает, как совокупляется самец с самкой и как образуется зачаток во чреве, но ему известно до подробности все, что совершается в мире. ~ Хотя он кричит целый день, но голос его никогда не ослабеет, ибо в нем (голосе) существует полнейшая гармония. ~ Знание гармонии называется постоянством. ~ Знание постоянства называется очевидностью. ~ Творить приятное только для плоти называется нечистотой. ~ Душа, могущая господствовать над своим настроением, есть сильная (душа). ~ Вообще, цветущее отцветает, ибо в нем нет Тао. ~ Где нет Тао, там скоро наступит конец.

— [55с97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Тот, кто хранит в себе глубину совершенства, ~ Подобен новорожденному младенцу: ~ Ни скорпионы, ни осы, ни змеи его не ужалят, ~ Хищные птицы и дикие звери его не схватят. ~ Его кости и сухожилия мягки, а хватка крепка, ~ О соитии не знает, а мужская сила в нем есть - ~ Ибо семя в нем пребывает сполна. ~ Целый день кричит, а не хрипнет - ~ Ибо согласие в нем не имеет изъяна. ~ Знать согласие означает "быть постоянным", ~ Пребывать в постоянстве означает "быть просветленным", ~ Прибавлять что-то к жизни - это предвестье несчастья, ~ Когда ум повелевает жизненной силой - это насилие. ~ Кто накопит силу, тот одряхлеет: ~ Это означает "противиться Пути". ~ А кто противится Пути, тот быстро погибнет.

— [55с98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Если вмещаешь полноту Потенции, то приближаешься к состоянию новорожденного. ~ Ядовитые твари не ужалят. ~ Лютые звери не утащат. ~ Хищные птицы не вцепятся. ~ Кости мягкие, сухожилия слабые, а хватает крепко. ~ Еще не осознает единения самки и самца, а в действиях целостен. ~ Это предельное выражение семени. ~ До конца дня кричит, а горло не садится. ~ Это предельное выражение гармонии. ~ Осознание гармонии выражается в постоянстве. ~ Осознание постоянства выражается в ясности. ~ Прибыль в жизни выражается благими знаменьями. ~ Управление дыхания-ци сердцем выражается в силе. ~ Сущность, став крепкой, начинает стареть. ~ Это определяется: ~ Не Путь. ~ Если не Путь, устранийся пораньше. —[56c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ Those who know don't talk about it; those who talk don't know it. ~ He blocks up his holes, ~ Closes his doors, ~ Softens the glare, ~ Settles the dust, ~ Files down the sharp edges, ~ And unties the tangles. ~ This is called Profound Union. ~ Therefore, there is no way to get intimate with him, ~ But there is also no way to shun him. ~ There is no way to benefit him, ~ But there is also no way to harm him. ~ There is no way to ennoble him, ~ But there is also no way to debase him. ~ For this very reason he's the noblest thing in the world.

—[56c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ HE who knows does not speak. ~ He who speaks does not know. ~ Block all the passages! ~ Shut all the doors! ~ Blunt all edges! ~ Untie all tangles! ~ Harmonize all lights! ~ Unite the world into one whole! ~ This is called the Mystical Whole, ~ Which you cannot court after nor shun, ~ Benefit nor harm, honour nor humble. ~ Therefore, it is the Highest of the world.

—[56c03t] D. C. Lau ~ One who knows does not speak; ~ One who speaks does not know. ~ Block the openings; ~ Shut the doors. ~ Blunt the sharpness; ~ Untangle the knots; ~ Soften the glare; ~ Let your wheels move only along old ruts. ~ This is known as mysterious sameness. ~ Hence you cannot get close to it, nor can you keep it at arm's length; ~ You cannot bestow benefit on it, nor can you do it harm; ~ You cannot ennoble it, nor can you debase it. ~ Therefore it is valued by the empire.

—[56c04t] R. L. Wing ~ Those who know do not speak. ~ Those who speak do not know. ~ Block the passages. ~ Close the door. ~ Blunt the sharpness. ~ Untie the tangles. ~ Harmonize the brightness. ~ Identify with the ways of the world. ~ This is called Profound Identification. ~ It cannot be gained through attachment. ~ It cannot be gained through detachment. ~ It cannot be gained through advantage. ~ It cannot be gained through disadvantage. ~ It cannot be gained through esteem. ~ It cannot be gained through humility. ~ Hence it is the treasure of the world.

—[56c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ He who knows does not speak, ~ And he who speaks does not know. ~ Blocking the vent (of knowledge), ~ closing the door (of knowledge), ~ covering the cutting-edge, ~ going beyond entanglement, ~ containing the light, ~ and mixing with the dust, ~ - These can be called "the mysterious agreement." ~ So, (the person with "the mysterious agreement") ~ Cannot be treated intimately, ~ Cannot be estranged, ~ Cannot be given profits, ~ Cannot be injured, ~ Cannot be raised to nobility, ~ And cannot be made humble, ~ And can therefore be esteemed by all the people under Heaven.

—[56c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ Those who know do not talk. ~ Those who talk do not know. ~ Keep your mouth closed. ~ Guard your senses. ~ Temper your sharpness. ~ Simplify your problems. ~ Mask your brightness. ~ Be at one with the dust of the earth. ~ This is primal union. ~ He who has achieved this state ~ Is unconcerned with friends and enemies, ~ With good and harm, with honor and disgrace. ~ This therefore is the highest state of man.

—[56c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ Those who know do not speak much. ~ Those who speak much do not know. ~ Block the passage of exchange with the outside world. ~ Close the doors; ~ Blunt the protruding points; ~ Absolve the disputes; ~ Tone down the dazzling light; ~ Receive outside stimuli with an equanimous mind. ~ This is called the mystical union. ~ With a non-possessive mind we get together; ~ With a non-possessive mind we separate. ~ With a non-possessive mind we experience what seems advantageous to us; ~ With a non-possessive mind we experience what seems disadvantageous; ~ With a non-possessive mind we experience high positions; ~ With a non-possessive mind we experience low positions. ~ This way we achieve the most valuable under heaven.

—[56c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ People who have knowledge do not talk about it; ~ people who like to talk about it do not have knowledge. ~ Shut off your senses, block your desires, ~ Dull your sharpness, untie your knots with the outside world, ~ Dim your brightness, and make yourself as low as dust; ~ This will lead you to the world of the DAO. ~ Therefore, no one can own the DAO, ~ No one can cast it away, ~ No one can benefit it, ~ No one can hurt it, ~ No one can make it noble, ~ No one can make it low; ~ This is why the DAO is the noblest.

—[56c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE MYSTERIOUS VIRTUE ~ He who knows the Tao does not discuss it, and those who babble about it do not know it. ~ To keep the lips closed, to shut the doors of sight and sound, to smooth off the corners, to temper the glare, and to be on a level with the dust of the earth, this is the mysterious virtue. ~ Whoever observes this will regard alike both frankness and reserve, kindness and injury, honour and degradation. ~ For this reason he will be held in great esteem of all men.

—[56c10t] James Legge ~ He who knows (the Tao) does not (care to) speak (about it); ~ he who is (ever ready to) speak about it does not know it. ~ He (who knows it) will keep his mouth shut and close the portals (of his nostrils). ~ He will blunt his sharp points and unravel the complications of things; ~ he will attemper his brightness, and bring himself into agreement with the obscurity (of others). ~ This is called 'the Mysterious Agreement.' ~ (Such an one) cannot be treated familiarly or distantly; ~ he is beyond all consideration of profit or injury; ~ of nobility or meanness: ~ - he is the noblest man under heaven.

—[56c11t] David Hinton ~ Those who know don't talk, and those who talk don't know. ~ Block the senses and close the mind, ~ blunt edges, loosen tangles, soften glare, mingle dust: ~ this is called dark-enigma union. ~ It can't be embraced and can't be ignored, ~ can't be enhanced and can't be harmed, ~ can't be treasured and can't be despised, ~ for it's the treasure of all beneath heaven.

—[56c12t] Chichung Huang ~ He who knows does not speak; ~ He who speaks does not know. ~ Stop your hole, ~ Close your door, ~ Soften your brightness, ~ Mingle with the dust, ~ File your sharpness, ~ And unravel your entanglements. ~ This is called deep and remote concord. ~ Therefore, neither can anyone become intimate with you, ~ Nor can anyone become alienated from you; ~ Neither can anyone benefit you, ~ Nor can anyone harm you; ~ Neither can anyone exalt you, ~ Nor can anyone debase you. ~ Therefore, you are exalted by all under heaven.

—[56c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ One who knows does not speak, ~ One who speaks does not know. ~ Stop the apertures, ~ Close the door; ~ Blunt the sharp, ~ Untie the entangled; ~ Harmonize the bright, ~ Make identical the dust. ~ This is called the mystical identity (hsüan t'ung). ~ Therefore with this person you cannot get intimate (ch'in), ~ Cannot get distant, ~ Cannot benefit, ~ Cannot harm, ~ Cannot exalt, ~ Cannot humiliate. ~ Therefore such person is the exalted of the world.

—[56c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ A person who knows [comprehensively] would not be garrulous; ~ A person who is garrulous is not wise [he may likely base his bloated talks on his incomprehensive knowledge]. ~ [People's garrulity, as described above, can be equalized in the following fashion:] ~ By blocking their passages and openings [i.e. connections to the outside world]; ~ By blunting [their excessive] sharpness [i.e. their arrogance]; ~ By untying entanglements [i.e. disputes they have produced]; ~ By tempering the disturbing ray [i.e. harms they have caused]; ~ By pushing [sophistry to] where it belongs, i.e. the dust. ~ All of this is meant to accentuate [our knowledge after Tao] in a profound manner. ~ Therefore: ~ One shall not wanting to achieve Tao for the purpose of practicing favoritism; ~ One shall not use Tao for the purpose of distancing himself from people he dislikes; ~ One shall not exploit Tao for the purpose of profiting himself; ~ One shall not employ Tao for the purpose of harming others; ~ One shall not gain Tao for the purpose of promoting himself; ~ One shall not apply Tao for the purpose of debasing others. ~ This is why Tao originates the most valuable [canon for] the world.

—[56c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ He who knows does not speak. ~ He who speaks does not know. ~ Blocking all the passages; shutting all the doors, blunting all edges, untying all tangles, harmonizing all lights, uniting the worldly dusts. ~ This is called the mysterious One. ~ Hence, you cannot have it by nearness, by distance, by benefit, by harm, by praise, by dislike. ~ Therefore, it is the most prized of the world.

—[56c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ Knowledgeable people rarely show off. ~ Boastful people are not truly knowledgeable. ~ Block up leakages; ~ Close doors; ~ Smooth out sharp edges; ~ Resolve conflicts; ~ Harmonize glares; ~ And blend into the base. ~ These are profound concords. ~ Do not become intimate when receiving the desired. ~ Do not become alienating when receiving the undesired. ~ Do not become greedy when obtaining profit. ~ Do not retaliate when receiving hostility. ~ Do not prize when obtaining the precious. ~ Do not debase when receiving humility. ~ Doing so can gain respect from others.

—[56c17t] Arthur Waley ~ Those who know do not speak; ~ Those who speak do not know. ~ Block the passages, ~ Shut the doors, ~ Let all sharpness be blunted, ~ All tangles untied, ~ All glare tempered, ~ All dust smoothed. ~ This is called the mysterious levelling. ~ He who has achieved it cannot either be drawn into friendship or repelled, ~ Cannot be benefited, cannot be harmed, ~ Cannot either be raised or humbled, ~ And for that very reason is highest of all creatures under heaven.

—[56c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ He who knows does not speak. ~ He who speaks does not know. ~ Block up your apertures; ~ Close your door; ~ Blunt your sharpness; ~ Cut away the tangled; ~ Merge with the brilliant; ~ Become one with the very dust. ~ We call this "one with mystery." ~ Thus one can neither get close to such a one nor get distant from him. ~ One can neither benefit nor harm him. ~ One can neither ennoble him nor debase him. ~ Thus such a one is esteemed by all under Heaven.

—[56c19t] Lin Yutang ~ BEYOND HONOR AND DISGRACE ~ He who knows does not speak; ~ He who speaks does not know. ~ Fill up its apertures, ~ Close its doors, ~ Dull its edges, ~ Untie its tangles, ~ Soften its light, ~ Submerge its turmoil - ~ This is the Mystic Unity. ~ Then love and hatred cannot touch him. ~ Profit and loss cannot reach him. ~ Honor and disgrace cannot affect him. ~ Therefore is he always the honored one of the world.

—[56c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ One who knows does not speak; ~ One who speaks does not know. ~ He ~ Stopples the openings of his heart, ~ Closes his doors, ~ Diffuses the light, ~ Mingles with the dust, ~ Files away his sharp points, ~ Unravels his tangles. ~ This is called "mysterious identity." ~ Therefore, ~ Neither can one attain intimacy with him, ~ Nor can one remain distant from him; ~ Neither can one profit from him, ~ Nor can one be harmed by him; ~ Neither can one achieve honor through him, ~ Nor can one be debased by him. ~ Therefore, ~ He is esteemed by all under heaven.

—[56c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ Those who know do not speak. ~ Those who speak do not know. ~ Block the passages! ~ Shut the doors! ~ Blunt the sharpness! ~ Untangle the knots! ~ Soften the glare! ~ Settle with the dust! ~ This is the Mystery of Evenness. ~ Those who have achieved this cannot be enclosed nor kept at a distance; ~ they cannot be benefited nor harmed, honored nor disgraced. ~ Therefore, ~ this is the noblest state under heaven.

—[56c22t] David H. Li ~ One who knows is reticent; one who glib is ignorant. ~ Stuff channels, block portals; ~ blunt sharpness, resolve conflicts; ~ harmonize brightness, mingle with dust. ~ This is the Profoundest Assimilation. ~ Thus, after gaining possession, ~ one does not patronize, nor slight, nor take advantage of, nor damage, nor treasure, nor debase. ~ Thus, one is treasured by the world.

—[56c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ Those who know do not talk. ~ Those who talk do not know. ~ Close the openings of your senses, ~ Blunt the sharpness of your intellect, ~ Untie the tangles of your attachment, ~

Soften the brightness of your knowledge. ~ Be one with the dust of the world. ~ This is to be one with the Tao. ~ He who is one with the Tao cannot be courted, cannot be distanced, cannot be bought, cannot be harmed, cannot be honored, cannot be humiliated. ~ For this reason, he becomes the true treasure of the world.

—[56c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ The person who is blessed with great virtue can be compared to a child. ~ He will not be bitten by an insect or a snake, ~ He will not be devoured by wild animals, ~ Birds of prey will not swoop down on him. ~ His bones are fragile, his tendons soft, but his grip is strong. ~ He is not familiar with the union of man and woman, but he possesses reproductive powers. ~ This means that he is at the peak of his vitality. ~ He can weep all day and not become hoarse. ~ This means that he is in perfect harmony. ~ Being familiar with this harmony brings him closer to eternity, ~ Being familiar with eternity enables man to attain enlightenment. ~ Increasing life invites trouble, ~ Let your heart become addicted to the breath of the spirit, and you will be filled with potency.

—[56c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ If you know what it is, don't talk it away: ~ If you do, then you don't understand. ~ Hush, keep it in, and your doorway shut - ~ Steer clear of sharpness and untangle the knots. ~ Feel your lightness and let it merge with others, ~ This, we say, is our basic oneness. ~ The sage who does this doesn't have to worry about people called 'friends' or 'enemies', with profit or loss, honour or disgrace - ~ He is a Master of Life, instead.

—[56c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ He who is wise will not speak; ~ He who speaks is not wise. ~ When one blocks the openings (of knowledge), ~ Shuts the door (of desires), ~ Dulls sharpness, ~ Stays away from entanglements, ~ Glows with veiled radiance, ~ Mingles with dust, ~ That is called subtle identification. ~ Hence you are in no way ~ To be friends with him, ~ To estrange him, ~ To benefit him, ~ To harm him, ~ To honor him, ~ To debase him. ~ That is why he is held in esteem in the world.

—[56c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ One who knows does not speak. ~ One who speaks does not know. ~ He closes his mouth, seals his ears. ~ He subdues his sharpness, releases his worries. ~ He blends himself with the light, he becomes one with the dust. ~ This is what is called mysterious identity. ~ Therefore he regards things out of his reach as dear. ~ He regards things out of his reach as distant, ~ he perceives unreachable things with harm, ~ he perceives unreachable things with value, ~ he perceives unreachable things with humbleness. ~ That is why he values everything under Heaven.

—[56c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ One who knows says nothing. ~ One who says knows nothing. ~ Cover the ears, close the eyes; ~ Blunt the sharpness, dissolve the currents; ~ Soften the light, blend the substances. ~ And the result is called the profound sameness. ~ One who holds that sameness cannot be ~ Approached too close, ~ Or estranged too far, ~ Or favored too much, ~ Or harmed too badly, ~ Or valued too high, ~ Or degraded too low. ~ And is therefore the most appreciated in the world.

—[56c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ The Noblest One ~ Lao Tze says, ~ He who knows the Tao does not care to speak about it; ~ he who is ever ready to speak about it does not know it. ~ Therefore the Tao practician would rather close his eyes and shut up his mouth, in order to frustrate his ambition and untie the confused knot in his heart. ~ Further, he proceeds to temper his brightness, and brings himself into agreement with obscurity. ~ Then he deserves to be called the one in accordance with Heaven. ~ Such a one cannot be treated familiarly nor distantly, rendered with profit or injury, made noble or mean. ~ Hence he is regarded as the noblest one in the world.

—[56c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ Blunt all that is sharp; ~ Cut all that is divisible; ~ Blur all that is brilliant; ~ Mix with all that is humble as dust; ~ This is called absolute equality. ~ Therefore it cannot be made intimate; ~ Nor can it be alienated. ~ It cannot be benefited; ~ Nor can it be harmed. ~ It cannot be exalted; ~ Nor can it be debased. ~ Therefore it is the most valuable thing in the world.

—[56c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ The one who knows does not speak. ~ The one who speaks does not know. ~ Block the passage. ~ Close the door. ~ Dull the sharpness. ~ Loosen the tangles. ~ Blend with light. ~ Become one with the dust. ~ This is called mystical identity. ~ Hence, ~ One can be neither close to it, nor far from it; ~ One can neither benefit it, nor harm it; ~ One can neither value it, nor despise it. ~ Therefore, it is valued by the world.

—[56c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ Those who understand are not talkers, ~ talkers don't understand. ~ Close your eyes, ~ shut your doors. ~ Dampen the passion, ~ untie the tangles, ~ make the flashing things harmonious, ~ make the dust merge together. ~ This is called the mysterious Merging. ~ Yes: ~ You cannot get close, ~ you cannot stay away, ~ you cannot help It, ~ you cannot harm It, ~ you cannot treasure It, ~ you cannot look down on It. ~ Yes: ~ It is the Treasure of the World.

—[56c33t] Cheng Lin ~ Those who know do not speak; those who speak do not know. ~ Stop up all the orifices of lust, ~ shut out all forms of distraction, ~ repress all manner of cunning, ~ unravel all causes of confusion, ~ eliminate all opportunities for rivalry, ~ remove all kinds of inequality, ~ - then there is great harmony. ~ When there is no cause for favour or disfavour, gain or loss, honour or disgrace, ~ the world will become rectified.

—[56c34t] Yi Wu ~ One who is wise does not speak; ~ One who speaks is not wise. ~ Blocking the passages, ~ Shutting the doors, ~ Blunting the sharpness, ~ Untying the tangles, ~ Tempering the brightness, ~ Uniting with the dust, -- ~ This is called the mystical union. ~ Therefore, ~ There is no way to get close to it; ~ There is no way to leave it; ~ There is no way to benefit it; ~ There is no way to harm it; ~ There is no way to value it; ~ There is no way to despise it; ~ Therefore, it is revered in the world.

—[56c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ He who really knows does not speak. ~ He who speaks does not know. ~ You must block the portals to your sensory organs. ~ You must also blunt the sharp edge and reduce the complexity. ~ You must attenuate the glares and mix with commoners. ~ This is to attain "the divine oneness". ~ Henceforth, you are not concerned about intimacy or estrangement. ~ You have no concerns about advantage and disadvantage. ~ You have no concerns about nobility and lowliness. ~ Everyone treasures you.

—[56c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ One who knows does not speak. ~ One who speaks does not know. ~ The one who knows is the one whose doors are shut, whose openings are blocked, whose sharpness is blunted, and whose glare is softened. ~ He is one with the subtle truth of the universe. ~ Thus you cannot get close to such a person by your love to do so, ~ nor can you keep away from him by your desire to do so. ~ You cannot bestow benefit on him, ~ nor can you do him harm, ~ because he holds the subtle essence of the universe.

—[56c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ One who is aware does not talk. ~ One who talks is not aware. ~ Ceasing verbal expressions, ~ Stopping the entry of sensations, ~ Dulling its sharpness, ~ Releasing its entanglements, ~ Tempering its brightness, ~ And unifying with the earth: ~ This is called the identity of Tao. ~ Hence, no nearness can reach him nor distance affect him. ~ No gain can touch him nor loss disturb him. ~ No esteem can move him nor shame distress him. ~ Thus, he is the most valuable man in the world.

—[56c38t] Henry Wei ~ Mystic Virtue ~ Hsuan Teh ~ Those who know do not speak; ~ Those who speak do not know. ~ Stop up the aperture of the vessel, ~ Shut the doors of the senses, ~ Blunt the sharp, ~ Unravel the tangled, ~ Harmonize with the light, ~ Merge with the dust, - ~ This is called Mystic Assimilation. ~ Men with this attainment, therefore, are ~ Above endearment or estrangement, ~ Above enrichment or impoverishment, ~ And above exaltation or degradation. ~ Therefore they are highly honored by the world.

—[56c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ He who knows does not speak; ~ He who speaks does not know. ~ Block the holes, ~ Shut the gates. ~ [He] blunts the sharpness, ~ Unravels the tangles, ~ Softens the brilliance, ~ Identifies with the dust. ~ This is called mysterious identity. ~ Therefore you can neither befriend him, ~ Nor alienate him, ~ Nor benefit him, ~ Nor harm him, ~ Nor exalt him, ~ Nor humble him. ~ That is why he is the noblest of all under Heaven.

—[56c40t] Tao Huang ~ Those who know, do not say. ~ Those who say, do not know. ~ Close the mouth. ~ Shut the door. ~ Merge into light. ~ As ordinary as dust. ~ Blunt the sharpness. ~ Unravel the entanglements. ~ This is called mysterious sameness. ~ You are not intimate by acquiring it; ~ You are not distant in not acquiring it. ~ You do not profit by acquiring it; ~ You do not lose it by not acquiring it. ~ You are not ennobled by acquiring it; ~ You are not disgraced by not acquiring it. ~ This enables the nobility of the world.

—[56c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ One who knows may not preach. ~ One who preaches may not know. ~ Close the entrances to attractions and control the excess of desires. ~ It blunts all sharpness. ~ It settles all disputes. ~ It harmonizes all lights. ~ It unites all lands. ~ They are the "Profound Similarities" of Dao. ~ Thus, ~ It cannot be involved, nor can it be ignored. ~ It cannot be utilized, nor can it be harmed. ~ It cannot be honored, nor can it be disgraced. ~ Thus, it is cherished by all things under the heaven.

—[56c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ He who knows does not speak. ~ He who speaks does not know. ~ Close the mouth. ~ Shut the doors. ~ Blunt the sharpness. ~ Untie the tangles. ~ Soften the light. ~ Become one with the dusty world. ~ This is called profound identification. ~ Therefore: ~ It is impossible either to be intimate and close to him or to be distant and indifferent to him. ~ It is impossible either to benefit him or to harm him. ~ It is impossible either to honor him or to disgrace him. ~ For this reason he is honored by the world.

—[56c91t] И. И. — [57с01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ Use the upright and correct to order the state; ~ Use surprise tactics when you use troops; ~ Use unconcern with affairs to take control of the world. ~ How do I know that this is so? ~ Well, the more taboos and prohibitions there are in the world, the poorer the people will be; ~ The more sharp weapons the people possess, the more muddled the states will be; ~ The more knowledge {and skill} people have, the more novel things {will appear}; ~ The more {legal} matters are made prominent, {the more} robbers and thieves {there will be}. ~ Therefore, the words of the {Sage} say: ~ I do nothing, and the people of themselves are transformed; ~ I love tranquility, and the people of themselves are upright; ~ I'm unconcerned with affairs, and the people of themselves become rich; ~ I desire not to desire, and the people of themselves are [genuine and simple, like] uncarved wood.

— [57с02t] John C. H. Wu ~ You govern a kingdom by normal rules; ~ You fight a war by exceptional moves; ~ But you win the world by letting alone. ~ How do I know that this is so? ~ By what is within me! ~ The more taboos and inhibitions there are in the world, ~ The poorer the people become. ~ The sharper the weapons the people possess, ~ The greater confusion reigns in the realm. ~ The more clever and crafty the men, ~ The oftener strange things happen. ~ The more articulate the laws and ordinances, ~ The more robbers and thieves arise. ~ Therefore, the Sage says: ~ I do not make any fuss, and the people transform themselves. ~ I love quietude, and the people settle down in their regular grooves. ~ I do not engage myself in anything, and the people grow rich. ~ I have no desires, and the people return to Simplicity.

—[57c03t] D. C. Lau ~ Govern the state by being straightforward; ~ Wage war by being crafty; ~ But win the empire by not being meddlesome. ~ How do I know that it is like that? ~ By means of this. ~ The more taboos there are in the empire ~ The poorer the people; ~ The more sharpened tools the people have ~ The more benighted the state; ~ The more skills the people have ~ The further novelties multiply; ~ The better known the laws and edicts ~ The more thieves and robbers there are. ~ Hence the sage says, ~ I take no action and the people are transformed of themselves; ~ I prefer stillness and the people are rectified of themselves; ~ I am not meddlesome and the people prosper of themselves; ~ I am free from desire and the people of themselves become simple like the uncarved block.

—[57c04t] R. L. Wing ~ Lead the organization with correctness. ~ Direct the military with surprise tactics. ~ Take hold of the world with effortlessness. ~ How do I know it is so? ~ Through this: ~ Too many prohibitions in the world, ~ And people become insufficient. ~ Too many sharp weapons among people, ~ And the nation grows confused. ~ Too much cunning strategy among people, ~ And strange things start to happen. ~ Too obvious a growth in laws and regulations, ~ And too many criminals emerge. ~ Thus Evolved Individuals say: ~ Look to nonaction, ~ And people will be naturally influenced. ~ Look to refined tranquillity, ~ And people will be naturally correct. ~ Look to effortlessness, ~ And people will be naturally affluent. ~ Look to nondesire, ~ And people will be naturally simple.

—[57c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ A state should be governed in a normal way, ~ A war should be prosecuted in an unusual way, ~ And the kingdom should be controlled by doing nothing. ~ How do I know that it is so? ~ On the grounds: ~ In the kingdom the more prohibitive enactments there are, the poorer the people become; ~ The more weapons the people have, the greater disorder the state and clan fall into; ~ The more crafts and technics men possess, the more strange contrivances appear; ~ The more display of statutes there is, the more robbers and thieves there are. ~ So the sage said: ~ "I do nothing, then the people submit spontaneously, ~ I am fond of keeping still, then the people are righteous spontaneously, ~ I take no trouble, and the people naturally enrich themselves, ~ I have no desires, then the people naturally remain in primitive simplicity."

—[57c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ Rule a nation with justice. ~ Wage war with surprise moves. ~ Become master of the universe without striving. ~ How do I know that this is so? ~ Because of this! ~ The more laws and restrictions there are, ~ The poorer people become. ~ The sharper men's weapons, ~ The more trouble in the land. ~ The more ingenious and clever men are, ~ The more strange things happen. ~ The more rules and regulations, ~ The more thieves and robbers. ~ Therefore the sage says: ~ I take no action and people are reformed. ~ I enjoy peace and people become honest. ~ I do nothing and people become rich. ~ I have no desires and people return to the good and simple life.

—[57c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ We rule a nation with the straight mind. ~ We deploy the military forces with surprises. ~ We win the hearts of all under heaven with non-intervention. ~ How do I know that this should be so, with this: ~ The more prohibitions that are imposed by the emperor, ~ The poorer the people become. ~ The more clever products that people own, ~ The less clever the nation becomes. ~ The more people use their tricks and knacks, ~ The more odd products there are, and ~ The more rules and laws there are, ~ It is likely that there are the more thieves and bandits. ~ The Sage says: "I do not contrive, and people automatically become cultured and well-mannered. ~ I keep still, and people automatically become straight; ~ I do not intervene, and people automatically become rich; ~ I do not crave, and people automatically lead a simple life."

—[57c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ When governing a country you must be fair and just; ~ When fighting a battle, you must use tricks; ~ When taking over the world, you must practice WUWEI. ~ How do I know everything in this world? This is how. ~ The more restrictions the government sets, the more people become poor; ~ The more people have dangerous weapons, the more the country falls into chaos; ~ The more people become clever, the more bizarre things happen; ~ The more severe the law becomes, the more thieves there are. ~ So the great men said: "If I practice WUWEI, the people will govern themselves; ~ If I am always peaceful, the people will be upright by themselves; ~ If I do not initiate things for my own purposes, the people will become rich by themselves; ~ If I do not have desires, the people will become simple and plain by themselves."

—[57c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE GENUINE GOVERNMENT ~ The righteous man may rule the nation. ~ The strategic man may rule the army. ~ But the man who refrains from active measures should be the king. ~ How do I know how things should be? ~ I know by this:- ~ When the actions of the people are controlled by prohibited laws, the country becomes more and more impoverished. ~ When the people are allowed the free use of arms, the Government is in danger. ~ The more crafty and dexterous the people become, the more do artificial things come into use. ~ And when these cunning arts are publicly esteemed, then do rogues prosper. ~ Therefore the wise man says:- ~ I will design nothing; and the people will shape themselves. ~ I will keep quiet; and the people will find their rest. ~ I will not assert myself; and the people will come forth. ~ I will discountenance ambition; and the people will revert to their natural simplicity.

—[57c10t] James Legge ~ A state may be ruled by (measures of) correction; ~ weapons of war may be used with crafty dexterity; ~ (but) the kingdom is made one's own (only) by freedom from action and purpose. ~ How do I know that it is so? ~ By these facts: ~ - In the kingdom the multiplication of prohibitive enactments increases the poverty of the people; ~ the more implements to add to their profit that the people have, the greater disorder is there in the state and clan; ~ the more acts of crafty dexterity that men possess, the more do strange contrivances appear; ~ the more display there is of legislation, the more thieves and robbers there are. ~ Therefore a sage has said, ~ 'I will do nothing (of purpose), and the people will be transformed of themselves; ~ I will be fond of keeping still, and the people will of themselves become correct. ~ I will take no trouble about it, and the people will of themselves become rich; ~ I will manifest no ambition, and the people will of themselves attain to the primitive simplicity.'

—[57c11t] David Hinton ~ You may govern the nation through principle ~ and lead armies to victory through craft, ~ but you win all beneath heaven through indifference. ~ How can I know this to be so? ~ Through this. ~ The more prohibitions rule all beneath heaven the deeper poverty grows among the people. ~ The more shrewd leaders there are the faster dark confusion fills the nation. ~ The more cleverness people learn the faster strange things happen. ~ The faster laws and decrees are issued the more bandits and thieves appear. ~ Therefore a sage says: ~ I do nothing ~ and the people transform themselves. ~ I cherish tranquility ~ and the people rectify themselves. ~ I cultivate indifference ~ and the people enrich themselves. ~ I desire nothing ~ and the people return of themselves to uncarved simplicity.

—[57c12t] Chichung Huang ~ Use the norm to govern the state; ~ Use the abnormal to conduct warfare; ~ Use nondisturbance to win all under heaven. ~ How do I know it should be so? ~ For the more prohibitions and taboos in the empire, ~ The poorer the people; ~ The more sharp weapons the sovereign has, ~ The more chaotic state and fief; ~ The craftier the sovereign, ~ The more perverse things will arise; ~ The more ostentatious royal processions, ~ The more robbers and thieves there will be. ~ Hence, the sage man's saying goes: ~ "If I implement nonaction, ~ The people will live and grow spontaneously; ~ If I love stillness,

~ The people will turn aright spontaneously; ~ If I create no disturbances, ~ The people will become rich spontaneously; ~ If I desire to be desireless, ~ The people will turn into unhewn logs spontaneously."

—[57c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ Govern a state by (i) the normal (cheng); ~ Conduct warfare as (i) the abnormal (ch'i); ~ Take the empire when (i) there is no business. ~ How do I know such should be the case? ~ By the following: ~ In an empire with many prohibitions, ~ People are often poor; ~ When people have many sharp weapons, ~ The state is in great darkness (tzu hun); ~ When persons abound in ingenuity (ch'iao), ~ Abnormal (ch'i) objects multiply (tzu ch'i); ~ When laws are abundantly promulgated (tzu chang), ~ There are many thieves and brigands. ~ Therefore the sage says: ~ I do not act (wei), ~ Hence the people transform by themselves (tzu-hua); ~ I love tranquillity (ching), ~ Hence the people are normal by themselves (tzu-cheng); ~ I have no business, ~ Hence the people grow rich by themselves; ~ I have no desire, ~ Hence the people are like the uncarved wood by themselves (tzu-p'u).

—[57c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ A country is [most properly] governed by a ruler who believes in the principle of righteousness; ~ A military operation is [most efficiently] executed with the strategy which generates surprises; ~ The world has been [most often] won by leaders who were not motivated by the desire to conquer others. ~ How do I know that the above statements are accountable? ~ [I shall explain next.] ~ In this world, the more restrictions and prohibition [a government imposes], the poorer its people are; ~ The more people possessing lethal weapons, the more chaotic the country is; ~ The more cunning and artful people are, the more outrageous occurrences flourish; ~ The more laws and their [hairsplitting] multiplication [a state has], the more beneficial will it be for robbers and thieves to thrive. ~ Therefore a Sage once said: ~ "If I practice the principle of non-interference, people shall yield voluntarily to the influence of the natural force; ~ If I demonstrate that I love Serenity [i.e. I'll restrain myself from using my power,] people will choose right courses spontaneously; ~ If I do not use my power to control people, people will prosper naturally; ~ If I diminish my selfish desires, people will be motivated to be simple and truthful accordingly."

—[57c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ You govern a state by straightness. ~ You engage in war by rare operations. ~ It is by non-doing that you win the world. ~ How do I know that this is so? ~ By the fact it is so. ~ The more restrictions and inhibitions there are in the world, the poorer the people become. ~ The sharper the weapons the people possess, the more disordered the nation is. ~ The more skills the people have, the more strange things happen. ~ The more articulate the laws and rules, the more thieves and robbers there are. ~ Therefore, the sage says: ~ I do not do, and the people transform themselves. ~ I love quietude, and the people become straight by themselves. ~ I do not engage myself in anything, and the people grow rich by themselves. ~ I have no desires, and the people return to simplicity.

—[57c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ Govern the kingdom by the normal way. ~ Fight the battle by the unexpected way. ~ And one can win the world without using force. ~ How do I know this is so? ~ By the following: ~ When there are too many restrictions and regulations, people become poor. ~ When there are too many weapons, the kingdom is in disarray. ~ When there are too many tricks, bizarre things happen. ~ When there are too many decrees, the crime rate increases. ~ This is why the sage says: ~ "I do not force my way, and people live peacefully. ~ I keep quiet, and people live normally. ~ I do not interfere, and people become rich. ~ I do not covet anything, and people would be honest."

—[57c17t] Arthur Waley ~ 'Kingdoms can only be governed if rules are kept; ~ Battles can only be won if rules are broken.' ~ But the adherence of all under heaven can only be won by letting-alone. ~ How do I know that it is so? ~ By this. ~ The more prohibitions there are, the more ritual avoidances, ~ The poorer the people will be. ~ The more 'sharp weapons' there are, ~ The more benighted will the whole land grow. ~

The more cunning craftsmen there are, ~ The more pernicious contrivances will be invented. ~ The more laws are promulgated, ~ The more thieves and bandits there will be. ~ Therefore a sage has said: ~ So long as I 'do nothing' the people will of themselves be transformed. ~ So long as I love quietude, the people will of themselves go straight. ~ So long as I act only by inactivity the people will of themselves become prosperous. ~ So long as I have no wants the people will of themselves return to the 'state of the Uncarved Block'.

—[57c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ If one governs the state with governance, he will use the military with perversity. ~ It is by tending to matters without conscious purpose that one takes all under Heaven as his charge. ~ How do I know that this is so? ~ It is by this: ~ The more all under Heaven are beset with taboos and prohibitions, the poorer the common folk grow. ~ The more the common folk are beset with sharp instruments, the more muddled the state becomes. ~ The more people have skill and cleverness, the more often perverse [ji] things will happen. ~ The more laws and ordinances are displayed, the more thieves and robbers there will be. ~ Thus the sage says: ~ I engage in no conscious effort, and the common folk undergo moral transformation spontaneously. ~ I love quietude, and the common folk govern themselves. ~ I tend to matters without conscious purpose, and the common folk enrich themselves. ~ I am utterly free of desire, and the common folk achieve pristine simplicity by themselves.

—[57c19t] Lin Yutang ~ THE ART OF GOVERNMENT ~ Rule a kingdom by the Normal. ~ Fight a battle by (abnormal) tactics of surprise. ~ Win the world by doing nothing. ~ How do I know it is so? ~ Through this: ~ The more prohibitions there are, ~ The poorer the people become. ~ The more sharp weapons there are, ~ The greater the chaos in the state. ~ The more skills of technique, ~ The more cunning things are produced. ~ The greater the number of statutes, ~ The greater the number of thieves and brigands. ~ Therefore the Sage says: ~ I do nothing and the people are reformed of themselves. ~ I love quietude and the people are righteous of themselves. ~ I deal in no business and the people grow rich by themselves. ~ I have no desires and the people are simple and honest by themselves.

—[57c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ Rule the state with uprightness, ~ Deploy your troops with craft, ~ Gain all under heaven with noninterference. ~ How do I know this is actually so? ~ Now, ~ The more taboos under heaven, the poorer the people; ~ The more clever devices people have, the more confused the state and ruling house; ~ The more knowledge people have, the more strange things spring up; ~ The more legal affairs are given prominence, the more numerous bandits and thieves. ~ For this reason, ~ The sage has a saying: ~ "I take no action, yet the people transform themselves; ~ I am fond of stillness, yet the people correct themselves; ~ I do not interfere in affairs, yet the people enrich themselves; ~ I desire not to desire, yet the people of themselves become simple as unhewn logs."

—[57c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ Govern the country by being straightforward. ~ Wage war by being crafty. ~ Win all under heaven by not meddling. ~ How do I know that this is so? ~ By what is within me. ~ The more restrictions there are, ~ the poorer are the people. ~ The more pointed the people's weapons, ~ the more disorder there is in the country. ~ The more ingenious and clever the people, ~ the more strange the contrivances that appear. ~ The more laws and edicts that are posted, ~ the more thieves and robbers that arise. ~ Hence an Old One has said: ~ I act without striving and the people transform themselves. ~ I love stillness and the people straighten themselves. ~ I do not meddle and the people prosper by themselves. ~ I am free from desires and the people themselves return to the simplicity of the Uncarved Block.

—[57c22t] David H. Li ~ Govern a state with orthodoxy; ~ fight a war with heterodoxy; ~ take the world with laissez-faire. ~ How do I know this is so? ~ Because: ~ The world is full of prohibitions, yet the populace is poor; ~ People are stacked with weapons, yet the states are in turmoil; ~ People are loaded with cleverness, yet strange schemes sprout; ~ Rules are stringent and well known, yet robbers and thieves abound. ~ Thus, the sage says: ~ Let me practice laissez-faire, and the populace self-develop; ~ Let me seek serenity, and the populace self-manage; ~ Let me be without fanfare, and the populace self-prosper; ~ Let me discard avarice, and the populace self-simplify.

—[57c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ Govern a nation with enduring justice. ~ Command troops with unpredictable moves. ~ Lead the world with empowering noninterference. ~ How do I know this to be so? ~ From witnessing the following: ~ The more restrictions there are in the world, the poorer people become. ~ The more weapons people possess, the darker nations become. ~ The more cunning and cleverness there is, the more there are anomalous things. ~ The more rules and regulations there are, the more there are thieves and robbers. ~ Therefore the sage says: ~ I take no action, and people are naturally transformed. ~ I delight in stillness, and people naturally do what is right. ~ I do not interfere, and people on their own prosper. ~ I have no greed, and people on their own return to simplicity.

—[57c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ Make all the weapons blunt, ~ Cut everything that is tangled, ~ Make everything that is shiny dull, ~ Mix with anything that is as humble as dust, ~ And this is called absolute equality. ~ Therefore ~ One cannot get close to it ~ Nor can one get away from it. ~ It is impossible to derive benefit from it, ~ Nor to be harmed by it. ~ It does not publicize a person's honor, ~ Nor does it publicize a person's shame. ~ Therefore it is the most exalted thing in the world.

—[57c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ To rule a nation, use justice ~ To win a battle - cunning, ~ But remember: wu-wei is the only true way. ~ How do I know this? ~ I will explain: ~ The more rules you have, the more unhappy people are; ~ And the more weapons there are, the worse things happen. ~ The more we want luxuries, the more we abandon simplicity; ~ And the more laws you pass, the more we will break them. ~ So the sage says: ~ I do nothing, and the people come together; ~ By leaving them alone I let them be on the path; ~ By not using my power, they become rich in themselves; ~ And if I want nothing, they will return to the essence of their being.

—[57c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ Rule the state with peace and inaction; ~ Wage a war with crafty tricks; ~ Governing the world by not troubling the people. ~ How do I know it is the right way? ~ The reason is as follows: ~ The more prohibitions there are in the world, ~ The poorer the people; ~ The more weapons the people own, ~ The more chaotic the state; ~ The more skills the people have, ~ The more strange things occur; ~ The more laws and orders are issued, ~ The more thieves and robbers there are. ~ Thus the sage says, ~ If I prefer inaction, ~ The people will naturally crave for peace; ~ If I act little, ~ The people will be naturally rectified; ~ If I am not meddlesome, ~ The people will naturally become rich; ~ If I get rid of desires, ~ The people will naturally become simple.

—[57c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ Govern the nation with correctness. ~ Resort to arms with surprise manoeuvres. ~ Obtain the land under Heaven without tiring out the people. ~ How do I know this? ~ Because: ~ The more rules there are in the country, ~ the poorer the people will become. ~ The more power the people hold, ~ the more confused the country will become. ~ The more skills and intelligence the people possess, ~ the more valuable goods will be created and the more strict the laws will become, ~ yet the more thieves and robbers will breed. ~ That is why the sage says: ~ 'I do nothing, and the people are nurtured by themselves.' ~ 'I do not tire people and drain the treasury, and the people become rich by themselves.' ~ 'I prefer quietness, and the people behave correctly by themselves.' ~ 'I have no desire, and the people return to the simple life by themselves.' ~ 'I have no emotions, and the people become pure by themselves.'

—[57c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ A nation should be governed with simplicity. ~ A war should be directed with sophistication. ~ The world should be won without any action. ~ Why should I think that? ~ Here are the reasons: ~ The more prohibitions there are, ~ The poorer people are; ~ The more weapons there are, ~ The more confused the social order is; ~ The more skills and tricks there are, ~ The more confusing machines are invented; ~ The more laws there are, ~ The more thieves there can appear. ~ That is why the wise would say: ~ "I stay idle, and the world will be naturally changed; ~ I stay quiet, and the world will be naturally restrained; ~ I do nothing, and the world will be naturally provided; ~ I desire nothing, and the world will be naturally simplified."

—[57c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ The Art of Government ~ Lao Tze says, ~ A state may be ruled by measures of justice; ~ the military force may be handled with tactics of surprise; ~ but the world is kept in peace by freedom from action and purpose. ~ How do I know that is so? ~ Through these: ~ In the world the multiplication of prohibitive enactments increases the poverty of the people. ~ The more assertions are put into influencing the people's thinking, the greater chaos there is in the state. ~ The more acts of crafty dexterity men possess, the more cunning things are produced. ~ The larger the number of statues displayed, the more thieves and robbers there are. ~ That is why a sage has said, ~ 'I will do by acting without intent to control fate, and the people will be transformed of themselves. ~ I will be fond of keeping still, and the people will be righteous of themselves. ~ I will take no trouble about it, and the people will become rich of themselves. ~ I have no desire, and the people will strive for the pristine simplicity of themselves.'

—[57c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ Albeit one governs the country by rectitude, ~ And carries on wars by stratagems, ~ Yet one must rule the empire by meddling with no business. ~ The empire can always be ruled by meddling with no business. ~ Otherwise, it can never be done. ~ How do I know it is so? ~ By this: ~ The more restrictions and avoidances are in the empire, ~ The poorer become the people; ~ The more sharp implements the people keep, ~ The more confusions are in the country; ~ The more arts and crafts men have, ~ The more are fantastic things produced; ~ The more laws and regulations are given, ~ The more robbers and thieves there are. ~ Therefore the Sage says: ~ Inasmuch as I betake myself to non-action, the people of themselves become developed. ~ Inasmuch as I love quietude, the people of themselves become righteous. ~ Inasmuch as I make no fuss, the people of themselves become wealthy. ~ Inasmuch as I am free from desire, the people of themselves remain simple.

—[57c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ Rule the state with rectitude. ~ Direct the army with trickery. ~ Capture the world through inactivity. ~ How can I know it shall be so? ~ By this: ~ When the world is full of taboos and prohibitions, ~ The people will become very poor. ~ When the people possess many sharp weapons, ~ The nation will become more chaotic. ~ When the people possess much craftiness, ~ Trickery will flourish. ~ When law and order become more conspicuous, ~ There will be more robbers and thieves. ~ Therefore the Sage says: ~ I do not act and the people reform themselves; ~ I love serenity and the people rectify themselves; ~ I employ inactivity and the people become prosperous themselves; ~ I have no desires and the people become simple by themselves.

—[57c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ "Rule the kingdom by the norm; ~ wage war by the unexpected." ~ Take over the world by Not Working. ~ How do I know it is so? ~ By this. ~ In the world: ~ The more rules and restrictions there are, ~ the poorer the people will be. ~ The people: ~ The more 'sharp weapons' they have, ~ the more disordered the state and the clans will be. ~ Men: ~ The more clever and skillful they are, ~ the more weird things will start to happen. ~ The more you publicize rules and laws, ~ the more robbers and thieves you will have. ~ Yes, the Wise Person says: ~ I Do Nothing, ~ and the people transform themselves. ~ I love Stillness, ~ and the people bring themselves to correctness. ~ I do No Work, ~ and the people enrich themselves. ~ I have no desires, ~ and the people by themselves become Simple.

—[57c33t] Cheng Lin ~ When one rules the State with uprightness, and uses stratagem in war, ~ he cannot hope to win over a whole Empire. ~ How do I know that this is true? ~ Because of the following: ~ When there are many prohibitory statutes in the Empire, the people become the more impoverished. ~ When the people possess numerous weapons of war, the State becomes more chaotic. ~ When men possess much skill and cunning, there is an increase of fanciful goods. ~ When there is a profusion of laws and regulations, banditry becomes rife. ~ Therefore, one of the Sages said: ~ "I abide by inaction, and the people reform themselves. ~ I esteem quietude, and the people rectify themselves. ~ I make no effort, and the people enrich themselves. ~ I have no desires, and the people of their own accord practise simplicity."

—[57c34t] Yi Wu ~ Govern the country correctly, ~ Use the army trickily, ~ Have the world by doing nothing. ~ How can I know that is so? ~ By these: ~ The more taboos and prohibitions there are in the world, ~ the poorer the people are. ~ The more sharp weapons the people have, ~ the more chaotic the nation is. ~ The more craft and skill people have, ~ the more strange things happen. ~ The more laws and commands a nation has, ~ the more robbers and thieves there are. ~ Therefore, the sage says: ~ I am in non-action, and the people transform themselves. ~ I like to be tranquil, and the people correct themselves. ~ I do not interfere, and the people prosper naturally. ~ I have no desires, and the people return naturally to simplicity.

—[57c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ You should govern a country by moral rectitude. ~ You should fight a war by employing stratagems. ~ You should follow the principle of non-intervention to rule a country. ~ How do I know all these are going to work? ~ Let us look at the followings: ~ The more rules and regulations you establish, the more destitute the people become. ~ The more intense the machination amongst the ruling classes, the more discordant the country will become. ~ The more cunning the people, the more outlandish things they do. ~ The more laws you proclaim, the more thieves you produce. ~ Therefore, the sage says: ~ "I follow non-action, and thus my people will live harmoniously. ~ I remain calm, and thus my people become righteous. ~ I do not meddle, and thus my people become more prosperous. ~ I have no desire, and thus my people will be simple and contented."

—[57c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ When serving the public, use upright means. ~ When commanding troops in war, employ the principle of surprise. ~ To win the world, do nothing to interfere with it. ~ Why? ~ Because the more prohibitions and inhibitions that are imposed on people, ~ the more difficult their lives become. ~ The more destructive weapons a nation or its people possess, ~ the poorer the people of that country become, ~ and the greater is the chaos that occurs in the world. ~ The more clever and crafty people become, ~ the more often strange things happen. ~ The more laws and ordinances there are, ~ the more criminals and dissidents will arise. ~ Therefore, the ancient sages of natural virtue said: ~ "I do nothing, and people's contention dissolves by itself. ~ I enjoy serenity, and people rectify themselves. ~ I make no effort, and people enrich themselves. ~ I have no desire, and people return to simplicity."

—[57c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ Guide the country through tranquillity. ~ Engage in war with rare operations. ~ Win over the world through non-action. ~ How am I aware that this ought to be so? ~ Because of this, the more restrictions and limitations there are, ~ The more impoverished men will be. ~ The more arms men possess, ~ The more disordered the country will be. ~ The more scheming and deceitful men are, ~ The more strange things will occur. ~ The more rules and precepts are enforced, ~ The more bandits and crooks will be produced. ~ Hence, we have the words of the wise: ~ Through my non-action, ~ Men are spontaneously transformed. ~ Through my quiescence, ~ Men spontaneously become tranquil. ~ Through my non-interfering, ~ Men spontaneously increase their wealth. ~ Through my non-willing, ~ Men spontaneously return to original simplicity.

—[57c38t] Henry Wei ~ Atmosphere of Innocence ~ Ch'un Feng ~ Use justice to rule a country; ~ Use strange tactics to conduct battles; ~ Use non-assertion to win the world. ~ How do I know this should be the case? ~ By this - ~ When the world abounds in prohibitions, ~ The people will become impoverished. ~ When men have plenty of weapons in hand, ~ The state will be in great confusion. ~ When men have plenty of techniques and skills, ~ Queer articles will crop up in abundance. ~ When laws and decrees are numerous and manifest, ~ Bandits and robbers will increase and multiply. ~ Therefore, the Sage has said - ~ I practice non-interference, ~ And the people reform themselves; ~ I love to be quiescent, ~ And the people become upright; ~ I do not assert myself, ~ And the people become wealthy; ~ I cherish no desires, ~ And the people become simple and innocent.

—[57c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ "Govern the state according to what is right; ~ Use the troops by surprise tactics." ~ But take all under Heaven through no-action. ~ How do I know this is so? ~ Because of this - ~ The more bans and taboos under Heaven, ~ The poorer the people; ~ The more sharp instruments in the hands of the people, ~ The more trouble for the state; ~ The more skills the people have, ~ The more fanciful inventions appear; ~ The more laws and decrees, ~ The more thieves and robbers. ~ Therefore the sage says: ~ "I engage in no-action, and the people transform of themselves; ~ I love stillness, and the people correct themselves; ~ I engage in no work, and the people prosper of themselves; ~ I am free from desire, and the people turn into the uncarved block of themselves."

—[57c40t] Tao Huang ~ Using the right lawfulness to govern the country. ~ Using unexpectancy to conduct the battle. ~ Using disengagement to take over the world. ~ How do I know this is so? ~ Thus. ~ The more prohibitions there are in the world, the poorer people will be. ~ The more destructive weapons people have, the more chaotic the nation will become. ~ The more know-how people have, the more bizarre things will appear. ~ The more rules and demands that flourish, the more thefts there will be. ~ Therefore the sage says: ~ When I am inactive, people transform themselves. ~ When I abide in stillness, people organize themselves lawfully. ~ When I am disengaged, people enrich themselves. ~ When I choose nondesire, people remain simple.

—[57c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ By positive policy rule the kingdom, by negative strategy conduct the war and by unselfish design lead the world. ~ How do we know that is so? ~ By this: ~ Where there were more taboos and inhibitions in the country, the general public was getting poorer and poorer. ~ Where there were more new tools and techniques in the hands of certain people, there were more confusions and injustices in the government. ~ The more laws and decrees were issued, the more robbers and crooks were propagated. ~ Thus a Sage ruler said: ~ "If I do not interfere, the people will cultivate themselves naturally. ~ If I love to be inactive, the people will govern themselves automatically. ~ If I do not look for display, the people will enrich themselves automatically. ~ If I have no excessive desires, the people will return themselves to the Pure Matter naturally. ~ If I have no emotional needs, the people will tranquilize themselves automatically."

—[57c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ Govern the state with correctness. ~ Operate the army with surprise tactics. ~ Administer the empire by engaging in no activity. ~ How do I know that this should be so? ~ Through this: ~ The more taboos and prohibitions there are in the world, ~ The poorer the people will be. ~ The more sharp weapons the people have, ~ The more troubled the state will be. ~ The more cunning and skill man possesses, ~ The more vicious things will appear. ~ The more laws and orders are made prominent, ~ The more thieves and robbers there will be. ~ Therefore the sage says: ~ I take no action and the people of themselves are transformed. ~ I love tranquility and the people of themselves become correct. ~ I engage in no activity and the people of themselves become prosperous. ~ I have no desires and the people of themselves become simple.

—[57c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Порядок в княжестве наводят прямо, в военном деле прибегают к

хитрости, ~ Поднебесную берут посредством недеяния. ~ Откуда это мне известно? ~ Отсюда. ~ В Поднебесной множатся запреты, и народ все более беднеет; ~ в народе много острого оружия, и в стране усиливается разлад; ~ у людей искусность увеличивается, и каверзы становятся в почете; ~ законы и приказы возрастают, и воров с разбойниками появляется все больше. ~ Поэтому Премудрый человек и говорит: ~ "Я нахожусь в бездействии, и народ сам преобразуется; ~ я предаюсь покою, и народ сам исправляется; ~ я пребываю в недеянии, и народ сам богатеет; ~ у меня не появляется желаний, и народ сам обретает перевозданность".

— [57с92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Управляй государством строгостью. ~ Используй армию с умением. ~ Но покоряй Поднебесную, не действуя. ~ Откуда я знаю это? ~ Из него же самого. ~ Чем больше запретов в Поднебесной, тем беднее становится народ. ~ Чем больше оружия у народа, тем сильнее смута в государстве. ~ Чем больше люди искусны в ремесле своём, тем больше творится несправедливых дел. ~ Чем лучше знают законы, тем больше становится воров и бандитов. ~ Поэтому мудрец говорит: ~ "Я пребываю в недеянии, а народ сам преображается. ~ Я люблю покой, а народ сам исправляется. ~ Я не предпринимаю действий, а народ сам богатеет. ~ Я не имею желаний, а народ сам опрощается".

— [57с93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Прямотою упорядочивается государство, хитростью война ведётся, и бездействием берётся Поднебесная. ~ Откуда знаю я, что это так и есть? ~ Отсюда знаю это: ~ Когда в Поднебесной много запретов и ограничений, народ нищает и беднеет; ~ когда у людей много смертоносного оружия, государство и семья погружаются в брань и смуты; ~ когда среди людей много искусников-умельцев, влечение к дорогим диковинам растёт; ~ когда закон издается за законом, разбойники и воры множатся на воле. ~ Поэтому совершенный мудрец так говорит: ~ Я буду пребывать в недеянии, ~ и народ начнет самоизменяться. ~ Я буду любить покой, ~ и народ исправится сам собой. ~ Я буду в бездействии, ~ и народ тогда разбогатеет. ~ Я буду в бесстрастии, ~ и народ сам вернется к исконной простоте.

— [57с94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Царство управляется прямотой. ~ Война ведётся хитростью. ~ Поднебесная берётся бездействием. ~ Откуда я знаю, что это так? ~ Исходя из следующего: ~ когда в Поднебесной растёт число запретов и табу, ~ народ все более беднеет; ~ когда у народа растёт число острого оружия, ~ в царстве и царствующем доме все больше смут; ~ когда растёт число людей умелых и искусных, ~ все больше возникает невиданных вещей; ~ когда множатся статьи законов и приказов, ~ все больше появляется воров и разбойников. ~ Вот почему совершенномудрый человек говорит: ~ "Я не дею, и народ сам развивается. ~ Я совершенно спокоен, и народ сам выпрямляется. ~ Я не служу, и народ сам богатеет. ~ Я бесстрастен, и народ сам становится простым".

— [57с95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Страна управляется справедливостью, война ведётся хитростью. ~ Поднебесную получают во владение посредством недеяния. ~ Откуда я знаю все это? ~ Вот откуда: ~ когда в стране много запретительных законов, народ становится бедным. ~ Когда у народа много острого оружия, в стране увеличиваются смуты. ~ Когда много искусных мастеров, умножаются редкие предметы. ~ Когда растут законы и приказы, увеличивается число воров и разбойников. ~ Поэтому совершенномудрый говорит: ~ "Если я не действую, народ будет находиться в самоизменении; ~ если я спокоен, народ сам будет исправляться. ~ Если я пассивен, народ сам становится богатым; ~ если я не имею страстей, народ становится простодушным".

— [57с96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Без справедливости нельзя управлять страной. ~ Для того чтобы вести войну успешно, необходима ловкость. ~ Когда в стране нет (еще) беспорядка, (тогда) следует им овладеть. ~ Как я могу постигнуть, почему в мире такой порядок, а не иной? ~ Когда в стране много такого, что должно быть уничтожено, народ обеднеет. ~ Когда в стране много удобных машин, то народ перестает работать. ~ Когда в народе много искусных мастеров, то увеличится число чудовищных вещей. ~ Когда в государстве много законов и постановлений, то число преступников увеличится. ~ Отсюда учит и святой: ~ "Когда я ничего не делаю (т.е. не предпринимаю ничего нового), то народ делается лучше; ~ когда я спокоен, то народ делается справедливым; ~ когда я не предпринимаю ничего нового, то народ обогащается; ~ когда во мне не будет никакой страсти, то народ сделается простодушным".

— [57c97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Государством управляй прямо, ~ На войне применяй хитрость ~ И посредством бездействия завладевай Поднебесной. ~ Отчего мне известно, что это так? ~ Вот отчего: ~ Чем больше в мире запретов, тем люди беднее. ~ Чем больше народ знает о выгоде, тем больше в царстве смуты. ~ Чем больше в народе мастерства и сноровки, тем больше безделиц. ~ Чем больше в стране законов и приказов, тем больше разбойников. ~ Посему премудрые люди говорили: ~ Я не действую, а люди сами становятся лучше, ~ Я привержен покою, а люди сами себя выправляют, ~ Я не вмешиваюсь в дела, а люди сами богатеют, ~ Я не имею желаний, а люди сами блюдут простоту.

— [57c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Посредством нормального упорядочивают государство. ~ Посредством аномального применяют оружие. ~ Посредством отсутствия дел-ситуаций овладевают Поднебесной. ~ Каким образом сущность моя знает, что это так? ~ А так оно и есть. ~ В Поднебесной растет количество запретов и табу, а народ становится беднее. ~ У народа увеличивается количество полезной утвари, а в государстве и семье все больше беспорядка. ~ Чем больше у людей мастерства и хитрых приемов, тем больше возникает аномальных явлений. ~ Чем больше издают указов и распоряжений, тем больше появляется воров и разбойников. ~ Причинность: ~ Человек мудрости говорит: ~ Я - в отсутствии осуществления, и народ сам изменяется. ~ Я - в стремлении к покою, и народ сам себя исправляет. ~ Я - в отсутствии дел-ситуаций, и народ сам богатеет. ~ Я - в отсутствии стремлений, и народ сам приходит к изначальной целостности.

— [58c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ When the government is muddled and confused, ~ The people are genuine and sincere. ~ When the government is discriminate and clear, ~ The state is crafty and cunning. ~ Disaster is that on which good fortune depends. ~ Good fortune is that in which disaster's concealed. ~ Who knows where it will end? ~ {For} there is no [fixed] "correct." ~ The "correct" {turns into the "deviant"}; ~ And "good" turns into {"evil."} ~ {People's} state of confusion ~ Has certainly existed for a long time. ~ Therefore be square but don't cut; ~ Be sharp but don't stab; ~ Be straightforward but not unrestrained; ~ Be bright but don't dazzle.

— [58c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ WHERE the ruler is mum, mum, ~ The people are simple and happy. ~ Where the ruler is sharp, sharp, ~ The people are wily and discontented. ~ Bad fortune is what good fortune leans on, ~ Good fortune is what bad fortune hides in. ~ Who knows the ultimate end of this process? ~ Is there no norm of right? ~ Yet what is normal soon becomes abnormal, ~ And what is auspicious soon turns ominous. ~ Long indeed have the people been in a quandary. ~ Therefore, the Sage squares without cutting, carves without disfiguring, straightens without straining, enlightens without dazzling.

— [58c03t] D. C. Lau ~ When the government is muddled ~ The people are simple; ~ When the government is alert ~ The people are cunning. ~ It is on disaster that good fortune perches; ~ It is beneath good fortune that disaster crouches. ~ Who knows the limit? Does not the straightforward exist? ~ The straightforward changes again into the crafty, and the good changes again into the monstrous. ~ Indeed, it is long since the people were perplexed. ~ Therefore the sage is square-edged but does not scrape, ~ Has corners but does not jab, ~ Extends himself but not at the expense of others, ~ Shines but does not dazzle.

—[58c04t] R. L. Wing ~ If the administration is subdued, The people are sincere. ~ If the administration is exacting, The people are deficient. ~ Misfortune! Good fortune supports it. ~ Good Fortune! Misfortune hides within. ~ Who knows where it ends? ~ Is there no order? ~ Order can revert to the unusual; ~ Good can revert to the abnormal; ~ And people indeed are bewildered For a long, long time. ~ Thus Evolved Individuals are Square without dividing; ~ Honest without offending; ~ Straightforward without straining; ~ Bright without dazzling.

—[58c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ When the government is generous, the people will be honest and loyal; ~ When the government is severe, the people will complain. ~ O Misery! Happiness lies by its side; ~ O Happiness! Misery lurks beneath it. ~ Who knows the destination? ~ There is no master indeed. ~ The normal can at anytime become the abnormal, ~ The good can at anytime become the evil. ~ The delusion of the people (on this point) has persisted for a long time. ~ Therefore, the sage is right as a square, but not stiff, has edges, but cuts nobody. ~ He is straightforward, but not aggressive, bright, but not dazzling.

—[58c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ When the country is ruled with a light hand ~ The people are simple. ~ When the country is ruled with severity, ~ The people are cunning. ~ Happiness is rooted in misery. ~ Misery lurks beneath happiness. ~ Who knows what the future holds? ~ There is no honesty. ~ Honesty becomes dishonest. ~ Goodness becomes witchcraft. ~ Man's bewitchment lasts for a long time. ~ Therefore the sage is sharp but not cutting, ~ Pointed but not piercing, ~ Straightforward but not unrestrained, ~ Brilliant but not blinding.

—[58c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ When the government appears dull and boring, ~ The people enjoy a good and rich life. ~ When the government appears clever and innovative, ~ The people suffer a shortage. ~ What appears to be misfortune may pave the way for fortune. ~ What appears to be fortune may pave the way for misfortune. ~ Who knows the absolute? ~ The right that we know is often not right. ~ What is right may prove to be wrong. ~ What is good may prove to be bad. ~ Mankind has been lost in the maze since the old days. ~ The Sage has an open mind and is unpretentious. ~ He is incorruptible and will not succumb to bribery. ~ He is straight but is not arrogant. ~ He shines but not dazzles.

—[58c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ When the government is low-key, the people are sturdy and simple; ~ When the government is harsh, the people are selfish and heartless. ~ Fortune is followed by disaster, ~ Disaster is followed by fortune. ~ Who knows the ultimate outcome of this cycle? No one knows. ~ The straight can become crooked; the kind can become wicked. ~ People have not figured out this puzzle for a long time. ~ So the great men were square but not rigid, self-abstaining but did not hurt people, upright but not blunt, glowing but not blinding.

—[58c09t] Walter Gorn Old, LETTING OTHERS REFORM THEMSELVES ~ A free and generous government gives the people a chance to develop. ~ When the government is rigid and exacting the people are cramped and miserable. ~ Misery is but the shadow of happiness. ~ Happiness is but the cloak of misery. ~ When will there be an end to them? ~ If we dispense with rectitude, distortion will assert itself; and what was good in its way will give place to what is evil. ~ Verily the people have been under a cloud for a long time. ~ Therefore the wise man is full of rectitude, but he does not chip and carve at others. ~ He is just, but does not admonish others. ~ He is upright, but he does not straighten others. ~ He is enlightened, but he does not offend with his brightness.

—[58c10t] James Legge ~ The government that seems the most unwise, ~ Oft goodness to the people best supplies; ~ That which is meddling, touching everything, ~ Will work but ill, and disappointment bring. ~

Misery! - happiness is to be found by its side! ~ Happiness! - misery lurks beneath it! ~ Who knows what either will come to in the end? ~ Shall we then dispense with correction? ~ The (method of) correction shall by a turn become distortion, and the good in it shall by a turn become evil. ~ The delusion of the people (on this point) has indeed subsisted for a long time. ~ Therefore the sage is (like) a square which cuts no one (with its angles); ~ (like) a corner which injures no one (with its sharpness). ~ He is straightforward, but allows himself no license; ~ he is bright, but does not dazzle.

—[58c11t] David Hinton ~ When government is pensive and withdrawn people are pure and simple. ~ When government is confident and effective people are cunning and secretive. ~ Prosperity springs from calamity and calamity lurks in prosperity. ~ Who knows where it will all end ~ without leaders of principle? ~ And principle always reverts to sinister trickery, ~ virtue to depraved sorcery. ~ People have been confused for such a long long time. ~ That's why a sage is sharp but never cuts, ~ austere but never grates, ~ forthright but never provokes, ~ bright but never dazzles.

—[58c12t] Chichung Huang ~ If your government is muddled, ~ Your people will be simple; ~ If your government is exacting, ~ Your people will be daring. ~ Against misfortune leans good fortune; ~ In good fortune lurks misfortune. ~ Who knows its extremity? ~ There is no norm. ~ Normal reverts to abnormal; ~ Good reverts to evil. ~ The perplexity of rulers ~ Has been long indeed! ~ Hence, be square without cutting, ~ Angular without pricking; ~ Straight without binding; ~ Bright without dazzling.

—[58c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ When the government (cheng) is dull, ~ Its people are wholesome; ~ When the government is efficient (ch'a), ~ Its people are deficient (ch'üeh). ~ Calamities (huo) are what blessings depend on, ~ In blessings are latent calamities (huo). ~ Who knows where is the turning point (chi)? ~ Because there is no longer the normal (cheng), ~ The normal reverts and appears as the strange (ch'i), ~ The good reverts and appears as the uncanny. ~ Rulers (jen) have lost their way, ~ For a long stretch of days. ~ Therefore the sage is square but not cutting (ko), ~ Sharp but not injurious, ~ Straight but not overreaching, ~ Bright (kuang) but not dazzling.

—[58c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ If a ruler [is diligent but] keeps a low profile, his people shall remain simple and truthful; ~ If a ruler is [harsh and] censorious, his people shall be deceptive and dishonest. ~ Misfortune may be a blessing in disguise; ~ [On the other hand] under the surface of good luck may lie the seeds of misfortune. ~ [Accordingly, the question is] how can we be certain that ultimately an occurrence is [leading to good or to bad] consequence? ~ If there is no standard for righteousness: ~ What is [righteously] right-minded may be turned upside down to be called weird; ~ What is [righteously] good may be distorted to be referred to as sorcerous. ~ People definitely have had been bewitched [and perplexed by such trickery] for a long time already! ~ Accordingly: ~ A Sage keeps his integrity fair and square, still he does not truncate (impinge on) rights of others; ~ He is scrupulous and thrifty, yet he hurts nobody; ~ He is straightforward, but immune from being unrestrained [so he does not harm innocent people]; ~ He is open but free from being showy.

—[58c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ Where the government is dull, the people are simple. ~ Where the government is sharp, the people are deceitful. ~ Bad fortune is what good fortune leans on. ~ Good fortune is what bad fortune hides in. ~ Who knows the ultimate end of bad fortune and good fortune? ~ Is there the right? ~ The right changes into the strange. ~ The good changes into the monstrous. ~ Long indeed have the people been ignorant. ~ Therefore, the sage squares without cutting, sharpens without disfiguring, straightens without straining, enlightens without dazzling.

—[58c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ If the policy is liberal, people are honest. ~ If the policy is stringent, people play tricks. ~ Misfortune is where fortune can build upon. ~ Fortune is where misfortune can loom. ~ Who knows where is the extreme? ~ There is no such a thing as normal. ~ Normalcy can become an anomaly. ~ Good can become evil. ~ This has puzzled people for a long time. ~ This is why the sage is righteous yet not annoying. ~ He is just, yet not harsh. ~ He is outspoken, yet not offensive. ~ He is shiny, yet not glaring. —[58c17t] Arthur Waley ~ When the ruler looks depressed the people will be happy and satisfied; ~ When the ruler looks lively and self-assured the people will be carping and discontented. ~ 'It is upon bad fortune that good fortune leans, upon good fortune that bad fortune rests.' ~ But though few know it, there is a bourn where there is neither right nor wrong; ~ In a realm where every straight is doubled by a crooked, and every good by an ill, surely mankind has gone long enough astray? ~ Therefore the Sage: ~ Squares without cutting, ~ Shapes the corners without lopping, ~ Straightens without stretching, ~ Gives forth light without shining.

—[58c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ When the government is completely muddled, the common folk become pure and simple. ~ When the government conducts meticulous scrutiny, the common folk become devious and inscrutable. ~ It is on disaster that good fortune depends; ~ it is in good fortune that disaster lurks. ~ Who understands what the very best is? ~ It is to have no government at all! ~ Correctness turns into perversion. ~ Goodness turns into deviancy. ~ The people's confusion has certainly lasted a long time. ~ This is why the sage is square but does not cut, ~ He is pointed but does not stab. ~ He is straight but does not align. ~ He is bright but does not shine.

—[58c19t] Lin Yutang ~ LAZY GOVERNMENT ~ When the government is lazy and dull, ~ Its people are unspoiled; ~ When the government is efficient and smart, ~ Its people are discontented. ~ Disaster is the avenue of fortune, ~ (And) fortune is the concealment for disaster. ~ Who would be able to know its ultimate results? ~ (As it is), there would never be the normal, ~ But the normal would (immediately) revert to the deceitful, ~ And the good revert to the sinister. ~ Thus long has mankind gone astray! ~ Therefore the Sage is square (has firm principles), but not cutting (sharp-cornered), ~ Has integrity, but does not hurt (others), ~ Is straight, but not high-handed, ~ Bright, but not dazzling.

—[58c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ When government is anarchic, the people are honest; ~ When government is meddlesome, the state is lacking. ~ Disaster is that whereon good fortune depends, ~ Good fortune is that wherein disaster lurks. ~ Who knows their limits? ~ When there is no uprightness, correct reverts to crafty, good reverts to gruesome. ~ The delusion of mankind, ~ How long have been its days! ~ For this reason, be ~ Square but not cutting, ~ Angular but not prickly, ~ Straight but not arrogant, ~ Bright but not dazzling.

—[58c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ When the government is unseen ~ the people are simple and happy. ~ When the government is lively ~ the people are cunning and discontented. ~ On misery perches happiness. ~ Beneath happiness crouches misery. ~ Who knows when this will cease? ~ The straight changes into the crooked. ~ The good becomes the ominous. ~ Surely the people have been confused for a long time. ~ Therefore, ~ the True Person squares without cutting, carves without hacking, straightens without dislocating, gives forth light without blinding.

—[58c22t] David H. Li ~ When policies are broad, the populace live simply; ~ When policies are rigid, the populace complain roundly. ~ Facing disaster, is fortune not in the wing? ~ Experiencing fortune, is disaster not ready to spring? ~ Who knows the limit? ~ There is no norm. ~ Orthodoxy turns into heterodoxy, good turns into evil. ~ People have been bewildered long. ~ Thus, ~ the sage is square without infringing upon others, ~ fair without harming others, ~ straight without imposing upon others, ~ bright without overshadowing others.

—[58c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ When the government is inwardly contained and disciplined, ~ The people become wholesome and good. ~ When the government is outwardly demanding and exacting, ~

The people become tense and cunning. ~ Fortune rests on misfortune. ~ Misfortune hides in fortune. ~ There is no end to their perpetual cyclic interchange. ~ Likewise, there is nothing that is permanently fitting. ~ What is fitting eventually becomes unfitting. ~ What is proper eventually becomes improper. ~ Not knowing the complementarity inherent in cyclic interchange, ~ People's delusion of permanence tends to last for a long time. ~ Thus, knowing the dynamic balance existing in complementarity, ~ The sage chooses what is right without being divisive, ~ Points out what is true without being critical, ~ Straightens out distortions without overextending them, ~ Enlightens others without dazzling them.

—[58c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ Although the wise man rules the country with integrity, ~ And wages war cunningly, ~ He who wishes to rule the empire ~ Must not interfere with anything. ~ His wish is unattainable in any other way. ~ How do I know this? ~ Thus: ~ The more limitations and prohibitions there are, ~ The more poor people there will be. ~ The more weapons people possess, ~ The more riots there will be throughout the country. ~ The more artists and artisans there are among the people, ~ The greater the desire to create things that belong to the imagination. ~ The more rules and regulations there are, ~ The more robbers and thieves there will be. ~ Therefore the sage says: ~ When I choose non-action of my own accord, ~ The people reach the path of their own accord. ~ When I love peace and quiet of my own accord, ~ The people behave with integrity of their own accord. ~ When I desist from all occupation of my own accord, ~ The people become very wealthy of their own accord. ~ When I am free of all desire of my own accord, ~ The people remain simple of their own accord.

—[58c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ 'If you govern with a generous hand - ~ then your people will be good people. ~ But if your system is too constricting ~ then your people will outwit you ...' ~ Good fortune, we say, can come from disaster: ~ And the reverse is true as well. ~ Who knows where all this will lead? ~ Honesty can flip into deceit in a moment, ~ People trying to be good can fall into the dark ~ And it can take them years to get out of it. ~ So the sage is like a razor, but he doesn't cut ~ He is straight as a die, but not pointedly so ~ He is bright, but not blindingly so ...

—[58c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ When the governor is magnanimous, ~ The people will become simple; ~ When the governor is harsh, ~ The people will become cunning. ~ Disaster hides itself behind good fortune; ~ Good fortune leans against disaster. ~ Who knows the secret? ~ There is no definite answer. ~ The normal changes into the abnormal; ~ The good changes into the evil. ~ People have been long perplexed. ~ Thus the sage is square and upright ~ But does not wound the people; ~ He is edged but does not cut the people; ~ He is candid but does not behave wantonly; ~ He gives light but does not dazzle.

—[58c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ When the government is unobtrusive, the people will be simple and honest. ~ When the government is dictatorial, the people will be seized with panic. ~ Fortune depends on misfortune. ~ Misfortune is hidden in fortune. ~ He who knows how to stay within the limits will not have misfortune. ~ Correctness will lead to deceit. ~ Good will lead to evil. ~ Nothing can remain always the same. ~ People have been confused by this since ancient times. ~ That is why the sage ~ behaves correctly without hurting others, ~ behaves honestly without damaging others, ~ behaves straightforwardly without vilifying others, ~ behaves brightly without dazzling others.

—[58c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ If the government seems dark and tolerant, ~ The people will be honest and friendly; ~ If the government seems bright and sophisticated, ~ The people will be sly and cold-hearted. ~ What is bad goes with what is good; ~ What is good lies in what is bad. ~ Who can tell the exact difference ~ When all factors are considered? ~ The positive changes into the negative ~ And the negative changes into the positive. ~ Changing over and over again is the action of evil souls. ~ Such action has long been a confusing force in the world. ~ The wise person therefore prefers to be a simple square ~ That points in no directions,

~ A cutting tool that has no edge, ~ A straight line that goes nowhere, ~ And a light source that causes no fire.

—[58c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ An Easy Government ~ Lao Tze says, ~ When the government is dull and drowsy, its people are simple and sincere. ~ When the government is sharp and shrewd, its people are dishonest and deceitful. ~ Disaster is that by which side fortune is to be found. ~ Fortune is that beneath which disaster lurks. ~ Who would be able to know its ultimate results? ~ If a king of men cannot dispense with correction, correct subjects will in their turn become distorted, and a good government will in its turn become evil. ~ The delusion of the ruler on this point has indeed subsisted for a long time. ~ Therefore the sage inherits correctitude like a square symbol, but punishes no one. ~ He inherits honest property, but tells no tales. ~ He is straightforward, but allows himself no license. ~ He is bright, but does not dazzle.

—[58c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ When the government is blunt and inactive, the people will be happy and prosperous; ~ When the government is discriminative, the people will be dissatisfied and restless. ~ It is upon misery that happiness rests; ~ It is under happiness that misery lies. ~ Who then can know the supremacy (good government)? ~ Only when the government does no rectifying. ~ Otherwise, rectitude will again become stratagem, ~ And good become evil. ~ Men have been ignorant of this, since long ago. ~ Therefore the Sage is square but does not cut others; ~ He is angled but does not chip others; ~ He is straight but does not stretch others; ~ He is bright but does not dazzle others.

—[58c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ When the government is sluggish and dull, ~ The people are honest and content; ~ When the government is discriminating and exacting, ~ The people are wily and restless. ~ Calamity is what good fortune depends on. ~ Good fortune is what calamity hides in. ~ Who knows their utmost? ~ Is it not better to have no rectitude? ~ Rectitude returns to trickery; ~ And goodness returns to evil. ~ The people's delusion has long existed. ~ Therefore, the Sage is square but not cutting; ~ is honest but does not hurt; ~ is straight but does not bully; ~ is bright but does not shine.

—[58c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ When the ruler is dull and incompetent, ~ the people are pure and simple. ~ When the ruler is sharp and alert, ~ the people are a bad lot. ~ "Bad luck: good luck depends on it; ~ good luck: bad luck hides in it." ~ Who knows where this ends? ~ There is no norm. ~ What accords with the norm turns around and becomes weird; ~ what is excellent turns around and becomes ominous. ~ "People's blindness - ~ it has been going on so long now." ~ And so the Wise Person: ~ Is square and honest but does not cut, ~ is pointed and exact but does not hurt, ~ is straight and direct but not tactless, ~ shines but does not dazzle.

—[58c33t] Cheng Lin ~ When the government is simple, the people are honest. ~ When the government is complicate, the people are wily. ~ What one calls calamity is often a fortune under disguise. ~ What one calls fortune is often a cause of calamity. ~ Who knows what the final outcome will be? ~ How can there be absolute right! ~ The right may turn out to be wrong. ~ How can there be absolute goodness! ~ The good may turn out to be evil. ~ Indeed, men have been under a delusion for such a long time. ~ The Sage, ~ though he is strict in his own conduct, does not require other men to conform; ~ though he is honest, does not hurt other men; ~ though he is upright, does not condemn other men; ~ though he is glorious, he does not dazzle other men.

—[58c34t] Yi Wu ~ When the government is obscure and withdrawn, ~ The people are simple and honest. ~ When the government inspects and reinspects, ~ The people lack [morality and virtue]. ~ Bad fortune is what good fortune depends on; ~ Good fortune is what bad fortune hides in. ~ Who knows the ultimate end? ~ There is no norm. ~ Normality turns out to be odd; ~ Goodness turns out to be bad. ~ People's confusion has been long. ~ Therefore, the sage is ~ upright but not cutting, ~ incorruptible but not harmful, ~ straight but not reckless, ~ bright but not dazzling.

—[58c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ When the government is magnanimous, the people are contented and unsophisticated. ~ When the government is overbearing and mean-spirited, the people are resentful and miserable. ~ Whenever calamity occurs, boon is also lurking around the corner. ~ Whenever good fortune strikes, misfortune is always stalking in its shadow. ~ Nobody will ever know how things will end in any given situation, as there are no fixed patterns. ~ Sometimes, a normal affair can turn out to become exceptionally eventful. ~ Sometimes, an apparently good thing can go terribly wrong. ~ For a very long time, these things continue to befuddle the ordinary people. ~ Nevertheless, the sage is always sharp but not cutting. ~ He is incorruptible but not contemptuous of others. ~ He is upright and direct but not repugnant. ~ He is brilliant but not dazzling.

—[58c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ When the government does not interfere, the people are simple and happy. ~ When the government does interfere, the people are tense and cunning. ~ Disaster is what blessing perches on. ~ Blessing is where disaster abides. ~ Who can say what the ultimate end of all possibilities will be? ~ Appropriate means soon become unfitting. ~ Good means soon turn to evil. ~ Long indeed have the people been perplexed by the endless, topsy-turvy movement of life. ~ Therefore, one of subtle virtue dissolves and eliminates the vicious cycle of duality. ~ He may have sharp corners, but he does not jab. ~ He may extend himself, but not at the expense of others. ~ He may shine, but he does not dazzle.

—[58c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ When the country is governed through simplicity and leniency, ~ The people are genuine and honest. ~ When the country is governed through harshness and sharp investigation, ~ The people are more deceitful and dishonest. ~ From misfortune, good fortune is derived. ~ In good fortune, misfortune is conceived. ~ Who can determine the ultimate truth? ~ Or is there no ultimate truth at all? ~ As truth often turns out to be untruth, ~ Goodness often turns out to be evil. ~ This has long confused the people. ~ Thus, when the wise deals with things he is firm in his principles, ~ Yet not sharp. ~ He is pure, yet not harmful. ~ He is straightforward, yet not violent. ~ He is illuminated, yet not glittery.

—[58c38t] Henry Wei ~ Transformation Without Friction ~ Shun Hua ~ When the government is shrouded in gloom, ~ The people will be simple and honest. ~ When the government is sharp and officious, ~ The people will get disgusted and discontented. ~ Misfortune is what fortune leans on; ~ Fortune is where misfortune conceals itself. ~ Who can know the ultimate result? ~ Is there no justice? ~ Anyway, justice will become injustice again, ~ And good will turn into evil once more. ~ Mankind has been thus deluded for a long time. ~ That's why the Sage acts four-square, ~ But does not "cut" people to his own shape; ~ He has a high sense of integrity, ~ But is not offensive to people; ~ He is upright and straightforward, ~ But does not push people around; ~ He is bright and brilliant, ~ But does not outshine people.

—[58c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ When the government is dull, ~ The people are simple. ~ When the government is keen, ~ The people are discontented. ~ Bad fortune is what good fortune leans on; ~ Good fortune is where bad fortune lurks. ~ Who knows the fortune's end? ~ There is nothing straight. ~ What is straight turns monstrous. ~ What is beautiful turns grotesque. ~ Man has been deluded ~ From time immemorial. ~ Therefore the sage ~ Is square without cutting; ~ Honest without scraping; ~ Straight without overbearing; ~ Bright without dazzling.

—[58c40t] Tao Huang ~ When the government is silent, people are sincere. ~ When the government is intrusive, the state is decisive. ~ Disaster is what fortune depends upon, ~ Fortune is what disaster subdues. ~ Who knows a final outcome? ~ There is no right lawfulness. ~ Justice tends towards the extreme. ~ Kindness tends towards evil. ~ People have been familiar with this for a long time. ~ So, ~ Be rounded without cutting. ~ Be compatible without puncturing. ~ Be straightforward without trapping. ~ Be bright without dazzling.

—[58c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ Modest, and modest will be the government, then prosperous, and prosperous will be the people! ~ Shrewd will be the government, then discontented, and discontented will be the people! ~ Catastrophe rests upon fortune. ~ Fortune underlies catastrophe. ~ Who knows the ultimate answers? ~ What is normal soon becomes abnormal. ~ What is auspicious soon becomes ominous. ~ Do away with dogmatism! ~ Indeed, it is a long, long time ago since Man lost his way of Dao! ~ Therefore, a Sage is: ~ solidly square but has no sharp corners; ~ purely austere but not harmful; ~ straightly upright but not offensive; ~ humbly modest but not submissive; ~ and harmoniously bright but not dazzling.

—[58c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ When the government is non-discriminative and dull, ~ The people are contented and generous. ~ When the government is searching and discriminative, ~ The people are disappointed and contentious. ~ Calamity is that upon which happiness depends; ~ Happiness is that in which calamity is latent. ~ Who knows when the limit will be reached? ~ Is there no correctness (used to govern the world)? ~ Then the correct again becomes the perverse. ~ And the good will again become evil. ~ The people have been deluded for a long time. ~ Therefore the sage is as pointed as a square but does not pierce. ~ He is as acute as a knife but does not cut. ~ He is as straight as an unbent line but does not extend. ~ He is as bright as light but does not dazzle.

—[58c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ При несведущем правительстве народ бесхитростен и добр, ~ при вьедливом правительстве народ корежит недовольство. ~ В несчастье коренится счастье, ~ в счастье укрывается несчастье. ~ Кто знает их пределы? ~ В них нет определенности. ~ Прямолинейность переходит в хитрость, ~ добро приносит пагубу. ~ Люди заблуждаются уже очень давно. ~ Вот почему Премудрый человек, квадратным делаясь, не режет; ~ остер углами, но не колок, ~ прям, но не задирист, ~ ярок, но не затмевает.

—[58c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Когда власть пассивно-отстранённа, то и народ чистосердечно-прост. ~ Когда правительство жестокосердно-строгое, то и народ хитёр и убог. ~ Несчастье - вот что является опорой счастья. ~ Счастье - вот где кроется несчастье. ~ И кто знает, где положен предел этому? ~ И нет в этом правильности. ~ Правильность оборачивается ловкостью. ~ Добро оборачивается коварством. ~ Людские заблуждения, о сколь стары и неизменны они! ~ Вот почему мудрец хотя и прям, но не груб; ~ остёр, но не колет; ~ прямолинеен, но не своеволен; ~ ярок, но не слепит.

—[58c93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Когда правление беспомощно и слабо, народ прост и добродушен. ~ Когда правление активно и всевластно, народ испытывает нужду и недостаток. ~ О горе, ты - опора счастья! ~ О счастье, в тебе таится горе! ~ И кто пределы ваши знает? ~ Нет прямоты, она хитростью обернулась, а добро превратилось в злобу. ~ Заблуждения людские, о как они долговечны! ~ Поэтому совершенномудрый угловат, но не вонзится в человека. ~ Он остер, но зла не содеет. ~ Он прям, но не заносчив. ~ Он словно свет, но блистать не хочет.

—[58c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Кто правит, сокрывшись и молча, у того и народ добр и прост. ~ Кто правит, взыска с пристрастием, у того и народ в непомерной нужде. ~ О, несчастье - опора счастья! ~ О, счастье - ложе несчастья! ~ Кто знает этому предел? ~ Он в отсутствующей здесь прямоте. ~ Прямота превратилась в хитрость, добро превратилось в зло. ~ Людские заблуждения день ото дня все более укореняются и дольше держатся. ~ Вот почему совершенномудрый человек образует квадрат-(совершенство) без выкройки по образцу, ~ [он] бескорыстен и не алчен, справедлив и не своеволен, светел и не блещит.

—[58c95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Когда правительство спокойно, народ становится простодушным. ~ Когда правительство деятельно, народ становится несчастным. ~ О несчастье! Оно является опорой счастья. ~ О счастье! В нем заключено несчастье. ~ Кто знает их границы? ~ Они не имеют постоянства. ~ Справедливость снова превращается в хитрость, добро - в зло. ~ Человек уже давно находится в заблуждении. ~ Поэтому совершенномудрый справедлив и не отнимает ничего у другого. ~ Он бескорыстен и не вредит другим. ~ Он правдив и не делает ничего плохого. ~ Он светел, но не желает блеснуть.

— [58c96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Когда не будет мелочности в управлении государством, то народ обогатится. ~ А когда управление государством мелочно, то народ обеднеет. ~ О, беда! Где благо, там и несчастье. ~ О, благо! Где беда, там и счастье. ~ Но я не знаю, где оканчивается беда и где начинается счастье. ~ Где нет правды, там люди будут относиться к правде как к чему-то странному, к добру - как к призрачному. ~ Издавна люди находятся в заблуждении, поэтому святой муж никогда не сделает им уступки. ~ Он не корыстолюбив, но ничего не раздает им. ~ Он - праведник, поэтому он ничего не сделает своевольно. ~ Хотя он - светило для всего мира, но не любит блеска.

— [58c97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Когда миром правят отстраненно-покойно, ~ Люди просты и добродушны. ~ Когда миром правят придирчиво-строго, ~ Люди хитры и коварны. ~ Беда - вот где счастья опора, ~ Счастье - вот откуда приходит беда. ~ Кто знает, где их предел? ~ В них нет ничего навек "правильного". ~ Правильное станет неправильным, ~ Доброе станет худым, ~ И люди пребывают в заблуждении с давних пор. ~ Вот почему премудрый человек ~ Ровен, а ничего не срезает, ~ Остер, а ничего не ранит, ~ Прямо, а не идет напролом, ~ Ярко сияет, а никого не слепит.

— [58c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Его управление невежественно, а народ его бесхитроушен. ~ Его управление пронизательно, а народ его хитер и коварен. ~ Несчастье пусть станет опорой для счастья. ~ Счастье пусть таит в себе несчастье. ~ Кто осознает свой предел? ~ Нормальное обращается, становясь аномальным. ~ Добро обращается, становясь нечистью. ~ Человек потерял свое солнце в глубокой древности. ~ Это дает: ~ Человек мудрости, ~ упорядочивая по квадрату, не разделяет; выделяя грани, не режет; ~ будучи прямым, не жесток; будучи светлым, не слепит.

— [59c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ For ordering humanity and serving Heaven, nothing's so good as being sparing. ~ For only if you are sparing can you, therefore, early submit [to the Way]. ~ Early submission - this is called to repeatedly accumulate {Virtue}. ~ {If you repeatedly accumulate Virtue, then there is nothing you can't overcome}. ~ {When there is nothing you can't overcome}, no one knows {where} it will {end}. ~ {When no one knows where it will end}, you can possess the state. ~ And when you possess the mother of the state, you can last a very long time. ~ This is called [having] deep roots and a firm base, ~ It's the Way of long life and long-lasting vision.

— [59c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ IN governing a people and in serving Heaven, ~ There is nothing like frugality. ~ To be frugal is to return before straying. ~ To return before straying is to have a double reserve of virtue. ~ To have a double reserve of virtue is to overcome everything. ~ To overcome everything is to reach an invisible height. ~ Only he who has reached an invisible height can have a kingdom. ~ Only he who has got the Mother of a kingdom can last long. ~ This is the way to be deep-rooted and firm-planted in the Tao. ~ The secret of long life and lasting vision.

— [59c03t] D. C. Lau ~ In ruling the people and in serving heaven it is best for a ruler to be sparing. ~ It is because he is sparing ~ That he may be said to follow the way from the start; ~ Following the way from the start he may be said to accumulate an abundance of virtue; ~ Accumulating an abundance of virtue there is nothing he cannot overcome; ~ When there is nothing he cannot overcome, no one knows his limit; ~ When no one knows his limit ~ He can possess a state; ~ When he possesses the mother of a state ~ He can then endure. ~ This is called the way of deep roots and firm stems by which one lives to see many days.

—[59c04t] R. L. Wing ~ In leading people and serving Nature, ~ There is nothing better than moderation. ~ Since, indeed, moderation means yielding early; ~ Yielding early means accumulating Power. ~ When Power is accumulated, ~ Nothing is impossible. ~ When nothing is impossible, ~ One knows no limits. ~ One who knows no limits ~ Can possess the organization. ~ An organization that possesses the Mother ~ Can endure and advance. ~ This means deep roots and firm foundation: ~ Durability and longevity through observation of the Tao.

—[59c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ For the rule of the people and the service of Heaven, there is nothing better than the principle of "parsimony." ~ Only by "parsimony" can one be unhurried and get ready early. ~ Being unhurried and getting ready early is what I call the repeated accumulation of the "De" of "parsimony." ~ With the repeated accumulation of De, one can victoriously overcome any obstacles. ~ The power which can overcome any obstacles is immeasurable. ~ With immeasurable power one can govern a state. ~ Having the foundation of government, one can maintain sovereignty very long. ~ This is called the Way in which one can plant the roots deep and make the stalks firm and maintain a long life.

—[59c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ In caring for others and serving heaven, ~ There is nothing like using restraint. ~ Restraint begins with giving up one's own ideas. ~ This depends on Virtue gathered in the past. ~ If there is a good store of Virtue, then nothing is impossible. ~ If nothing is impossible, then there are no limits. ~ If a man knows no limits, then he is fit to be a ruler. ~ The mother principle of ruling holds good for a long time. ~ This is called having deep roots and a firm foundation, ~ The Tao of long life and eternal vision.

—[59c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ To rule over men or to serve heaven ~ Nothing works better than following the farmer's example. ~ The farmer does his preparatory work early. ~ To be like him, one must pay attention to the accumulation of virtue. ~ That way one can overcome all difficulties. ~ That way one's ability knows no limit. ~ That way one can sustain a nation. ~ Virtue being the mother of a nation, ~ With virtue the nation can last a long time. ~ With deep roots and secure trunks, one is on the way to a long life and a long view.

—[59c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ The best thing in life is to be thrifty. ~ Only when you are thrifty, can you be prepared ahead of time. ~ Preparing ahead of time allows you to accumulate more DE. ~ Accumulating more DE allows you to overcome everything. ~ Overcoming everything allows you to have unmeasurable limits. ~ Having unmeasurable limits allows you to control a country. ~ When a country has the DAO, it can last long. ~ This is how you deepen and secure your roots, live long and last forever.

—[59c09t] Walter Gorn Old, PRESERVING THE TAO ~ In ruling men and in serving Heaven there is nothing like moderation. ~ By means of it one attains to his first estate. ~ When this is attained a man is possessed of an indefinite store of virtue. ~ With such a store of virtue he will overcome everything. ~ And of this mastery there will be no limit. ~ Thus, without hindrance, he may possess the Kingdom. ~ Such a man has the mother-constitution, and will endure indefinitely. ~ He is like the plant whose roots are deep and whose stem is firm. ~ Thus may a man live long and see many days.

—[59c10t] James Legge ~ For regulating the human (in our constitution) and rendering the (proper) service to the heavenly, there is nothing like moderation. ~ It is only by this moderation that there is effected an early return (to man's normal state). ~ That early return is what I call the repeated accumulation of the attributes (of the Tao). ~ With that repeated accumulation of those attributes, there comes the subjugation (of every obstacle to such return). ~ Of this subjugation we know not what shall be the limit; ~ and when one knows not what the limit shall be, he may be the ruler of a state. ~ He who possesses the mother of the state may continue long. ~ His case is like that (of the plant) of which we say that its roots are deep and its flower stalks firm: ~ - this is the way to secure that its enduring life shall long be seen.

—[59c11t] David Hinton ~ To govern people and serve heaven ~ there's nothing like thrift. ~ Thrift means submitting early, ~ and submitting early means storing up Integrity. ~ Store up Integrity and nothing is beyond you. ~ Once nothing is beyond you, ~ no one knows where it will all end. ~ Once no one knows where it will end, ~ you can nurture a nation. ~ And nurturing the nation's mother too ~ you can last and last. ~ This is called rooted deep and solid, ~ the Way of long life and enduring insight.

—[59c12t] Chichung Huang ~ In governing the people and serving heaven, ~ There is nothing like sparingness. ~ Sparingness alone ~ Can lead you to early submission. ~ Early submission means accumulating virtue repeatedly. ~ If you accumulate virtue repeatedly, ~ There is nothing you cannot overcome. ~ If there is nothing you cannot overcome, ~ Nobody knows its limit. ~ If nobody knows its limit, ~ You are fit to possess a state. ~ If you possess the mother of governing a state, ~ You may long endure. ~ This is called the way ~ To deepen the roots and strengthen the base, ~ To lengthen life and perpetuate vision.

—[59c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ In governing people and serving heaven, ~ Nothing is better than being sparing (se). ~ Being sparing, ~ Is called early adherence [to Tao]. ~ Adhering early, ~ Is called being heavy with accumulated te (chung chi te). ~ To be heavy with accumulated te, ~ Then [such a person is] all overcoming. ~ Being all overcoming, ~ Then there is no knowing the limit (chi). ~ Not knowing the limit, ~ One may rule a state. ~ Having the mother of a state, ~ It may last long. ~ This is called being deeply rooted and firmly founded, ~ The way to long life and enduring vision (chiu shih).

—[59c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ In order to carry out the heavenly Tao, it is most important for [a leader to be] well-prepared, i.e. he must know more than what is fundamentally required, before he takes charge of people's affairs; ~ In order to be so well prepared, [a leader] should start early in his life to seriously pursue [Tao and aggravated Te]; ~ [In other words] those who starts early will have accumulated adequately [knowledge and arete before he takes charge of other people's affairs]; ~ Consequently, [his well-rounded knowledge and arete] will facilitate him to overcome all kinds of obstacles; ~ It is difficult for others to determine the limits of a person who can overcome all kinds of obstacles; ~ [Therefore] one whose limits are difficult to be ascertained can be entrusted with the sovereign responsibility of a country; ~ A country which has a creative resource (mother) will last for a long time. ~ This is what I described as the [growth of the main root was perceived through its] deeper and deeper penetration into the ground, ~ So that the main root [of a tree] could support the [gradual] expansion and strengthening (hardening) of its branch roots; ~ If one would make improvement in this way, he shall look far ahead and his establishment will thus exist for a very long time.

—[59c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ In governing a people and in serving Heaven, there is nothing like frugality. ~ To be frugal is to return early. ~ To return early is to accumulate an abundance of Virtue. ~ Accumulating an abundance of Virtue, everything can be overcome. ~ Overcoming everything, the unknown height is reached. ~ He who has reached an unknown height can reign a state. ~ He who reigns a state from its root can last long. ~ This is the Way of the deep root and the firm foot, of the of long life and not-getting-old.

—[59c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ Frugality is the best for governing people or serving heaven. ~ With frugality, we can be prepared in advance. ~ Advanced preparation is to emphasize accumulating Te. ~ Accumulating Te, we can accomplish any endeavor. ~ Accomplishing any endeavor means there is not limit. ~ With no limit we can have a kingdom. ~ With frugality as the mother of the kingdom, the kingdom can last long. ~ This is called deep root and firm foundation. ~ With such root and foundation we can enjoy longevity.

—[59c17t] Arthur Waley ~ You cannot rule men nor serve heaven unless you have laid up a store; ~ This 'laying up a store' means quickly absorbing, ~ And 'quickly absorbing' means doubling one's garnered 'power'. ~ Double your garnered power and it acquires a strength that nothing can overcome. ~ If there is nothing it cannot overcome, it knows no bounds, ~ And only what knows no bounds ~ Is huge enough to keep a whole kingdom in its grasp. ~ But only he who having the kingdom goes to the Mother ~ Can keep it long. ~ This is called the art of making the roots strike deep by fencing the trunk, of making life long by fixed staring.

—[59c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ For ordering the people and serving Heaven, nothing is better than husbandry. ~ Only husbandry can be called the quick way to submission. ~ By "quick way to submission" we mean the repetitive accumulation of virtue. ~ If one repetitively accumulates virtue, there is nothing that he cannot conquer. ~ As there is nothing that he cannot conquer, no one knows the limits he can reach. ~ As no one knows his limits, he can, accordingly, keep his state. ~ If one maintains the mother of the state, he can, accordingly, long endure. ~ This we refer to as having deep roots firmly established, for it is the Dao of long life and enduring oversight.

—[59c19t] Lin Yutang ~ BE SPARING ~ In managing human affairs, there is no better rule than to be sparing. ~ To be sparing is to forestall; ~ To forestall is to be prepared and strengthened; ~ To be prepared and strengthened is to be ever-victorious; ~ To be ever-victorious is to have infinite capacity; ~ He who has infinite capacity is fit to rule a country, ~ And the Mother (principle) of a ruling country can long endure. ~ This is to be firmly rooted, to have deep strength, ~ The road to immortality and enduring vision.

—[59c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ To rule men and serve heaven, there is nothing like thrift. ~ Now, ~ Only through thrift can one be prepared; ~ Being prepared means having a heavy store of integrity; ~ With a heavy store of integrity, he can overcome everything. ~ Able to overcome everything, no one knows his limits; ~ If no one knows his limits, he can have the kingdom; ~ Having the mother of the kingdom, he can long endure. ~ This is called "sinking roots firm and deep, the Way of long life and lasting vision."

—[59c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ For governing others and serving heaven there is nothing better than moderation. ~ A person who is moderate returns to the path. ~ Returning to the path brings an abundance of Virtue. ~ This good store of Virtue cannot be conquered. ~ Virtue that cannot be conquered knows no limit. ~ Only a person who has limitless Virtue is fit to lead. ~ Only the leader who possesses the Mother of the country will long endure. ~ This is called making the roots go deep by restraining the trunk. ~ Learn to focus your life and you will see many days.

—[59c22t] David H. Li ~ In governing people and in taking care of the cosmos, the best is restraint. ~ With restraint, one is ever ready. ~ Ever ready, one focuses on virtue. ~ Focusing on virtue, one overcomes everything. ~ Overcoming everything, one's limit does not come into being. ~ With one's limit not coming into being, one gains the state. ~ Having the foundation to governance, one lasts long. ~ This is deep root and solid foundation. ~ This is Direction - long lasting and long living.

—[59c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ In governing people and serving heaven, ~ There is nothing better than thrift. ~ Thrift means expeditiously regaining balance after expending resources. ~ Expeditiously regaining balance means continually accumulating virtue. ~ Continually accumulating virtue means increasingly becoming invincible. ~ Increasingly becoming invincible means knowing that everything is possible. ~ One who knows that everything is possible is fit to govern people. ~ The mother principle of governing people holds good for a long time. ~ This is called deepening the root and firming the foundation, ~ Which is the way of long life and lasting vision.

—[59c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ When the government is indifferent and inactive, ~ The people will be happy and wealthy, ~ When the government discriminates and divides, ~ The people will be restless and dissatisfied. ~ Happiness is borne on the back of sorrow, ~ Sorrow dwells beneath happiness. ~ Therefore, who can know the virtues of good government? ~ Only when the government does not rectify anything. ~

Otherwise, the rectification becomes a strategy, ~ And good becomes evil. ~ People have been aware of this for a long time. ~ Therefore the sage is square and does not cut others, ~ He has a point, but he does not pierce others, ~ He is straight, but he does not straighten others, ~ He shines, but he does not dazzle others. —[59c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ When ruling the world and serving Heaven, ~ The sage uses simplicity in everything he does. ~ Simplicity comes from letting go of what you want. ~ If you've been true to yourself earlier in your life ~ Then te builds up in you like a well that never fails. ~ Nothing is impossible, then - and nothing can stop you. ~ And if you have no limits - then you can hold the State. ~ If the sage can find the Mother of a Nation ~ Then he will govern for a long, long time. ~ All this comes from his rootedness in the Tao, ~ The Tao of Ages, the Mountain Of Vision And Of Wings.

—[59c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ The best way to govern the state and keep in good health ~ Is to stint vitality. ~ To stint vitality means to attempt an early preparation; ~ The early preparation means to keep accumulating virtue; ~ Keep accumulating virtue and one can become all-conquering; ~ Be all-conquering and one's power will be beyond measure; ~ When one's power is beyond measure, ~ He can be entrusted with the duty of defending the state. ~ When there is the principle of governing the state, ~ The government can long endure. ~ This is called the Tao of deep roots and sturdy stems ~ By which one can live and see longer time.

—[59c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ The best way to rule the people and serve Heaven is to be frugal. ~ To be frugal means to return to the beginning of creation. ~ To know the beginning of creation means to accumulate virtue. ~ Accumulating virtue means to overcome everything. ~ To overcome everything means to reach the limit. ~ By reaching the limit, one can possess a kingdom. ~ When one has possessed the mother of the kingdom, ~ the kingdom will then live long. ~ This is called the deep-rooted foundation. ~ This is the way to long life.

—[59c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ To govern the world to cultivate one's nature, ~ One should stick to frugality. ~ For being frugal, ~ One will not stray from the Way as others do. ~ Staying with the Way, one can accumulate earlier. ~ Since one has stayed and accumulated longer in the Way, ~ One can overcome more wanton desires. ~ When one has overcome all desires, ~ Others would by no means be able to know ~ The limits of one's abilities. ~ One can then be qualified to lead a nation. ~ With a qualified leader, a nation can be long. ~ The Way is therefore the longest-rooted system ~ That supports the longest life span.

—[59c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ A Way To The Longevity ~ Lao Tze says, ~ If a king of men knows to regulate human affairs by using the way of Heaven, he should know there is nothing better than to be sparing. ~ It is only by being sparing that an early obedience to the Tao is effected. ~ That early obedience is what I call the repeated accumulation of the attributes. ~ With the repeated accumulation of those attributes, there comes the conquest of every obstacle in the way. ~ Of this conquest he knows not what shall be the limit, and when he knows not what the limit shall be, he is qualified to be the ruler of a state. ~ He who possesses this motherly method of governing may continue to hold his rulership. ~ This method may be compared to a giant tree with its roots deep and its flower stalks firm; ~ and it is also a way which leads to enjoy long life and eternal gazing.

—[59c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ In ruling men and in serving Heaven, the Sage uses only moderation. ~ By moderation alone he is able to have conformed early (to Tao). ~ This early conformity is called intensive accumulation of virtue. ~ With this intensive accumulation of virtue, there is nothing that he cannot overcome. ~ Because there is nothing that he cannot overcome, no one will be able to know his supremacy. ~ Because no one knows his supremacy he can take possession of a country. ~ Because what he does is identified with the Mother in taking possession of a country, he can long endure. ~ This means that he is deep rooted and firmly based, and knows the way of longevity and immortality.

—[59c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ In governing the people and serving heaven, ~ There is nothing like thriftiness. ~ Only through thriftiness can one submit [to Tao] early; ~ Having submitted early, one accumulates virtue. ~ Having accumulated virtue, one can overcome everything. ~ Having overcome everything, one can know no limits. ~ Knowing no limits, one is able to rule a nation. ~ Possessing the mother of the nation, he may last long. ~ This is called the deep root and firm stalks, ~ And the way to longevity and everlasting vision.

—[59c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ "When it comes to governing the people and serving Heaven, there's no one like a farmer." ~ Just being a farmer - ~ this means getting dressed early. ~ Getting dressed early means increasing one's store of Te; ~ increasing one's store of Te, then nothing is impossible; ~ nothing impossible, then no telling the limit; ~ no telling the limit, then one can possess the state. ~ One who possesses the Mother of the state, ~ can last a long time. ~ This means having deep roots and strong foundations, ~ the Way of 'lasting life, good eyesight into old age'.

—[59c33t] Cheng Lin ~ In governing men and serving Heaven, there is nothing better than temperance. ~ In order to practise temperance, one must first follow Truth, and this means adherence to the inherent qualities. ~ When one adheres to the inherent qualities, he becomes invincible. ~ When he is invincible, he also becomes unfathomable. ~ When he is unfathomable, he also becomes one with Truth. ~ When he is one with Truth, he becomes everlasting. ~ This is the way to attain immortality.

—[59c34t] Yi Wu ~ In governing people and serving Heaven, ~ There is nothing better than thrift. ~ Only by thrift can one submit early. ~ To submit early is to fully accumulate virtue. ~ With a full accumulation of virtue, ~ there is nothing that cannot be overcome. ~ With nothing that cannot be overcome, ~ one's limits are beyond knowing. ~ With limits beyond knowing, ~ one can rule a nation. ~ If one has the country's mother, ~ one can long endure. ~ This is called deep-root and firm-stalk. ~ This is the way of long life and lasting vision.

—[59c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ Nothing beats frugality in governing a country or following the way of Dao. ~ Frugality compels you to get ready in advance. ~ To get ready in advance means you start to amass virtues straightaway. ~ The accumulation of virtues will enable you to achieve practically anything in life. ~ Ability to accomplish anything means you have incredible power. ~ With this limitless power, you can govern a country. ~ Governing the country by following the way of Dao, you will endure. ~ A plant can bear great fruit only if it has deep roots. ~ Building deep roots is the way to perpetuate.

—[59c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ In managing people and serving Heaven, there is nothing better than sparing unnecessary activities and expense. ~ To be thrifty means to return to the simple essence of life. ~ To return to the simple essence of life is to nourish subtle virtue. ~ To nourish subtle virtue is to be able to overcome any difficulty. ~ Being able to overcome difficulties, ~ one can break through all limitations. ~ One's limitlessness is derived from whole and boundless virtue. ~ The source of such virtue can support one to serve a nation. ~ Then one's benevolence can be enduring. ~ This is the way to firmly plant and deeply root oneself in the subtle path of universal integration. ~ This is the achievement of the Way of immortality.

—[59c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ In guiding people and working according to nature, ~ It is best to follow renunciation. ~ Following renunciation means returning soon. ~ Returning soon means accumulating attainment. ~ Accumulating attainment, everything can be dealt with. ~ Dealing with everything leads to limitlessness. ~ With limitlessness, one can govern the country. ~ Governing the country through its origin leads to endurance. ~ This means that to root deeply and to plant firmly leads to longevity and eternal consciousness. ~ Therefore, governing a large nation is as simple as preparing a dish of food.

—[59c38t] Henry Wei ~ Adherence to Tao ~ Shou Tao ~ In ruling men and serving Heaven, ~ Nothing is comparable to a prudent economy. ~ A prudent economy means early preparation; ~ Early preparation means further accumulation of virtue; ~ Further accumulation of virtue can subdue everything; ~ The ability to subdue everything knows no bounds; ~ Knowing no bounds (in subduing opposition) ~ Can lead to the possession of a kingdom; ~ Possession of a kingdom along with its Mother ~ Can endure a long time. ~ This is called "deep roots and strong stalks." ~ It is the way to eternal life and everlasting vision.

—[59c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ In ruling the people and serving Heaven ~ Nothing is better than being sparing. ~ Truly, being sparing ~ Means submitting early. ~ Submitting early ~ Means accumulating Te heavily. ~ If you accumulate Te heavily, ~ There will be nothing you cannot overcome. ~ If there is nothing you cannot overcome, ~ You will find no limit. ~ If you find no limit, ~ You will be fit to rule a state. ~ If you possess the mother of the state, ~ You will be long-lasting. ~ This is called deeply rooted and firmly planted. ~ It is the way of long life and lasting sight.

—[59c40t] Tao Huang ~ For governing people and serving the heaven, nothing is better than frugality. ~ Only frugality enables the pre-empty measures. ~ Pre-empty measures mean a great accumulation of Action. ~ A great accumulation of Action leaves nothing to be conquered. ~ When nothing needs to be conquered, ~ No-boundary is known. ~ When no-boundary is known, it allows the country to exist. ~ The country, existing from its source, can endure. ~ This is the Tao of having a deep root, a strong stem, a long life, and an enduring vision.

—[59c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ To rule the people and serve the world there is nothing better than to follow the model of nature. ~ To follow the model of nature is to be the early appreciation of Dao. ~ To be the early appreciation of Dao is to give emphasis to the accumulation of Virtues. ~ To give emphasis to the accumulation of Virtues there is nothing that cannot be overcome. ~ When one has nothing that cannot be overcome, then nobody knows his limit. ~ When nobody knows his limit, then he may have a kingdom to rule. ~ When one has a kingdom to rule, he may mother (rule) the world. ~ He may rule everywhere and forever. ~ This is called the way of deepening the root; ~ consolidating the sprout; ~ prolonging the life; ~ and enduring the rule.

—[59c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ To rule people and to serve Heaven there is nothing better than to be frugal. ~ Only by being frugal can one recover quickly. ~ To recover quickly means to accumulate virtue heavily. ~ By the heavy accumulation of virtue one can overcome everything. ~ If one can overcome everything, then he will acquire a capacity the limit of which is beyond anyone's knowledge. ~ When his capacity is beyond anyone's knowledge, he is fit to rule a state. ~ He who possesses the Mother (Tao) of the state will last long. ~ This means that the roots are deep and the stalks are firm, ~ Which is the way of long life and everlasting vision.

—[59c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Для управления людьми и службы Небу нет лучше бережливости. ~ А бережливость - это когда загодя посвящают себя Дао. ~ Загодя посвятить ему себя значит скопить вдвое больше добродетели. ~ Кто скапливает ее вдвое больше, становится непобедим. ~ Когда становится непобедим, его предел перестает кому-либо быть ведом. ~ А чей предел становится неведом, тот может иметь княжество. ~ Мать, обладающая княжеством, может достигнуть долговечности, ~ и это называется глубоким корнем, прочным основанием, Дао вечной жизни и нескончаемого видения.

—[59c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ В правлении людьми и служении Небу ничто не сравнится с воздержанностью. ~ Тот, кто воздержан, зовётся изначально готовым [следовать Дао]. ~ Тот, кто готов изначально, зовётся собравшим Благость в избытке. ~ Для того, в ком Благость собрана в избытке, нет ничего, способного противостоять ему. ~ Если ему ничто не может противостоять, то нет ему предела. ~ Если нет ему предела, то он может владеть государством. ~ Обладая Матерью государства, можно стать долговечным. ~ Это зовётся глубокими и крепкими корнями нетленного и долговечного Дао.

— [59с93t] Е. А. Торчинов ~ Управлять людьми и служить Небу ничто так не способствует, как умеренность. ~ Ведь только про умеренность говорят, что она помогает рано подготовиться. ~ Рано подготовиться - значит обладать обильным накоплением Благой Силы. ~ Для обладающего обильным накоплением Благой Силы нет ничего непреодолимого. ~ Что касается того, для кого нет ничего непреодолимого, то никто не знает его предела. ~ Тот, предела которого никто не знает, может обладать царством. ~ Мать царства обретя, можно стать долговечным и непреходящим. ~ Этот принцип называют корнем глубоким и черенком крепким. ~ В нем путь продления жизни и вечного видения.

— [59с94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ В управлении людьми и служении Небу-Отечеству нет ничего лучшего, чем бережливость. ~ Если проявить бережливость - значит, заблаговременно позаботиться. ~ Заблаговременно позаботиться - значит, вдвое приумножить Дэ. ~ Если вдвое приумножить Дэ, то не будет непреодолимого. ~ Если не будет непреодолимого, ~ то никому не будет известен и его предел. ~ Если никому не будет известен его предел, ~ то можно овладеть царством. ~ Овладев Матерью-Родиной царства, ~ можно стать долговечным [вождем]. ~ (Вариант перевода: можно обеспечить долговечность [царству].) ~ Это и называется глубоким истоком, прочным корнем, вечно живущим и вечно существующим Дао.

— [59с95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Управляя людьми и служа небу, лучше всего соблюдать воздержание. ~ Воздержание должно стать главной заботой. ~ Оно называется совершенствованием дэ. ~ Совершенствование дэ - всепобеждающее. ~ Всепобеждающее обладает неисчерпаемой силой. ~ Неисчерпаемая сила дает возможность овладеть страной. ~ Начало, при помощи которого управляется страна, долговечно и называется глубоким и прочным, вечно существующим дао.

— [59с96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Для того чтобы служить небу и управлять людьми, всего лучше соблюдать воздержание. ~ Воздержание - это первая ступень добродетели, которая и есть начало нравственного совершенства. ~ Человек высокой нравственности преодолет всякую трудность. ~ Глубина и могущество силы преодолевшего всякую трудность неизмеримы. ~ Он может быть владыкою мира. ~ Владыка мира и есть мать вселенной. ~ Мать вселенной будет жить вечно, ибо она имеет глубокий корень и крепкое основание.

— [59с97t] В. В. Малявин ~ В управлении людьми и служении Небу ~ Нет ничего лучше, чем быть бережливым. ~ Кто умеет беречь, первым изготвится. ~ Первым изготвится означает копить Совершенство. ~ Кто умеет копить Совершенство, тот все превзойдет. ~ Если он все превзойдет, никто не будет знать, где его предел. ~ Кто не имеет предела, может владеть царством. ~ А кто владеет матерью царства, будет жить долго. ~ Вот что такое "глубокий корень, прочная основа", ~ Это Путь вечной жизни и долгого взгляда.

— [59с98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Упорядочивание - люди. ~ Дела - Небо. ~ Нет ничего, что сравнится с бережливостью. ~ Будь только бережливым. ~ Это определяется: ~ Заранее воспринимать. ~ Заранее воспринимать. ~ Это определяется: ~ Двойное накопление Потенции. ~ Двойное накопление Потенции - тогда отсутствие не-преодолимого. ~ Отсутствие не-преодолимого - тогда никто не знает своего Предела. ~ Никто не знает своего предела - может быть наличие государства. ~ Наличие материнского принципа в государстве позволяет достичь длительности и долготы. ~ Это определяется: Глубокий корень, прочный ствол. ~ Путь длинной жизни и долгого видения.

—[60c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ Ruling a large state is like cooking small fish. ~ When you use the Way to govern the world, evil spirits won't have godlike power. ~ Actually, it's not that evil spirits won't have godlike power, ~ It's that their power will not harm men. ~ But it's not [just] that their power won't harm men, ~ The Sage, also, will not harm them. ~ Since these two do not harm others, ~ Therefore their Virtues intermingle and return to them.

—[60c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ RULING a big kingdom is like cooking a small fish. ~ When a man of Tao reigns over the world, demons have no spiritual powers. ~ Not that the demons have no spiritual powers, but the spirits themselves do no harm to men. ~ Not that the spirits do no harm to men, but the Sage himself does no harm to his people. ~ If only the ruler and his people would refrain from harming each other, all the benefits of life would accumulate in the kingdom.

—[60c03t] D. C. Lau ~ Governing a large state is like boiling a small fish. ~ When the empire is ruled in accordance with the way, ~ The spirits lose their potencies. ~ Or rather, it is not that they lose their potencies, ~ But that, though they have their potencies, they do not harm the people. ~ It is not only they who, having their potencies, do not harm the people, ~ The sage, also, does not harm the people. ~ As neither does any harm, each attributes the merit to the other.

—[60c04t] R. L. Wing ~ Leading a large organization is like cooking a small fish. ~ If the Tao is present in the world, ~ The cunning are not mysterious. ~ Not only are the cunning not mysterious, ~ Their mystery does not harm others. ~ Not only does their mystery not harm others, ~ The Evolved also do not harm others. ~ Since together they do no harm, ~ The Power returns and accumulates.

—[60c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ Governing a great state is like frying small fish (so frequent disturbance should be avoided). ~ Applying Tao to the kingdom can render ghosts harmless. ~ It is not that the ghosts cannot function, ~ But that the function cannot harm men. ~ It is not that the function cannot harm men, ~ But that the sage never harms men at all. ~ So, men and ghosts will not harm each other, ~ Therefore both (men and ghosts) praise the De of the sage.

—[60c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ Ruling the country is like cooking a small fish. ~ Approach the universe with Tao, ~ And evil will have no power. ~ Not that evil is not powerful, ~ But its power will not be used to harm others. ~ Not only will it do no harm to others, ~ But the sage himself will also be protected. ~ They do not hurt each other, ~ And the Virtue in each one refreshes both.

—[60c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ To govern a great nation ~ Is not much different from frying a small fish. ~ To govern a nation according to the Dao, ~ Even the demons will not show their influences. ~ Not that they have lost all their influences, ~ But their influences will do people no harm. ~ Not only do the influences of the evil spirits do people no harm. ~ The Sage will also do people no harm. ~ Since demons at one extreme, ~ through the Sage at the other extreme, ~ All do people no harm. ~ We can conclude that the Virtue has perfected its job.

—[60c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ Governing a big country is like carefully cooking a small fish. ~ When the DAO rules, ghosts will not show their spirits. ~ Not only will the ghosts not show their spirits, but also the spirits will not hurt people. ~ Not only will the spirits not hurt people, but also the great men will not hurt people. ~ When neither the spirits nor the great men hurt people, the DE becomes natural and lasts long.

—[60c09t] Walter Gorn Old, FILLING THE THRONE ~ The state should be governed as we cook small fish, without much business. ~ Bringing the Tao to the governing of the Kingdom will give rest to the shades of the dead. ~ Not that the Spirits will be inactive, but that they will cease to trouble the people. ~ But what is of more importance, the wise ruler of the people will not hurt them. ~ And in so far as they do not interfere with one another, their influences conspire to the general good!

—[60c10t] James Legge ~ Governing a great state is like cooking small fish. ~ Let the kingdom be governed according to the Tao, and the manes of the departed will not manifest their spiritual energy. ~ It is not that those manes have not that spiritual energy, but it will not be employed to hurt men. ~ It is not that it could not hurt men, but neither does the ruling sage hurt them. ~ When these two do not injuriously affect each other, their good influences converge in the virtue (of the Tao).

—[60c11t] David Hinton ~ Govern a great nation as you would cook a small fish. ~ Use Way to rule all beneath heaven and spirits never become ghosts. ~ When spirits don't become ghosts, ghosts do people no harm. ~ When ghosts do people no harm, sages do them no harm. ~ And once humans and ghosts do each other no harm, they return together to Integrity.

—[60c12t] Chichung Huang ~ Governing a large state ~ Is like frying small fish. ~ Use the Tao to preside over the empire, ~ And its spirits will not be mischievous; ~ Not that its spirits will not be mischievous, ~ But that their mischief will not harm the people; ~ Not that their mischief will not harm the people, ~ But that a sage man never does any harm. ~ Since neither harms anyone, ~ Their favors will converge.

—[60c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ Governing a great state, ~ Is like cooking small fish. ~ If you rule the world by Tao, ~ The ghosts (kuei) will lose their spiritual (shen) power. ~ Not that the ghosts lose their spiritual power, ~ But their spiritual power will not harm the people. ~ Not that their spiritual power will not harm the people, ~ But neither does the sage harm the people. ~ Since both are harmless, ~ Te flows back and forth [without impediment].

—[60c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ Governing a big country is like cooking small fish unscathed [as both are delicate matters that requires extraordinary caution]. ~ If one leads the world in accordance with Tao, his ghosts (antagonists) cannot be efficacious [in such a righteous society]; ~ Even if his ghosts are efficacious, [yet under the influence of Tao] they still cannot harm people; ~ A Sage would [under no circumstance] harm them either; ~ Because neither one would harm the other side, their Te shall be reciprocally beneficial to each other.

—[60c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ Governing a big state is like cooking a small fish. ~ When a man of the Way reigns over the world, demons no longer have spiritual powers. ~ Not that the demons have no spiritual powers, but the spirits themselves do no harm to men. ~ Not that the spirits do no harm to men, but the sage himself does no harm to his people. ~ If the sage and his people refrain from harming each other, Virtue will return.

—[60c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ Governing a big kingdom is like cooking small seafood. ~ With Tao as guidance, evils will never have their way. ~ It is actually not that the evils do not have their way, but that the evils will not hurt people. ~ Not only do Evils not hurt people, but also do not hurt the sage. ~ When both people and the sage are not hurt, Te is in dominance.

—[60c17t] Arthur Waley ~ Ruling a large kingdom is indeed like cooking small fish. ~ They who by Tao ruled all that is under heaven did not let an evil spirit within them display its powers. ~ Nay, it was not only that the evil spirit did not display its powers; neither was the Sage's good spirit used to the hurt of other men. ~ Nor was it only that his good spirit was not used to harm other men, the Sage himself was thus saved from harm. ~ And so, each being saved from harm, their 'powers' could converge towards a common end.

—[60c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ Ruling a large state is like cooking a small fish. ~ If one uses the Dao to oversee all under Heaven, the malign spirits there will lose their numinous power. ~ It is not that these malign spirits have no numinous power; ~ it is just that they will do no harm to the people. ~ It is not these numinous powers that do not harm the people but the sage, in fact, who does not harm the people. ~ It is because neither of these two cause any harm that they unite their virtues and revert to it.

—[60c19t] Lin Yutang ~ RULING A BIG COUNTRY ~ Rule a big country as you would fry small fish. ~ Who rules the world in accord with Tao ~ Shall find that the spirits lose their power. ~ It is not that the spirits lose their power, ~ But that they cease to do people harm. ~ It is not (only) that they cease to do people harm, ~ The Sage (himself) also does no harm to the people. ~ When both do not do each other harm, ~ The original character is restored.

—[60c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ Ruling a big kingdom is like cooking a small fish. ~ If one oversees all under heaven in accord with the Way, demons have no spirit. ~ It is not that the demons have no spirit, but that their spirits do not harm people. ~ It is not merely that their spirits do not harm people, but that the sage also does not harm them. ~ Now, ~ When neither harms the other, integrity accrues to both.

—[60c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ Governing a big country is like cooking a small fish. ~ Let all under heaven be governed in accordance with the Tao, ~ and demons will not manifest their power. ~ It is not that they lack power but rather they will not use their power to harm the people. ~ They are not the only ones who have power and do not use it to harm the people. ~ The True Person does not harm the people. ~ Whenever there is no harm done, ~ that power flows into the common Virtue.

—[60c22t] David H. Li ~ Govern a large state is like frying a small fish. ~ With Direction embracing the world, ghosts become ineffective. ~ It is not because ghosts become ineffective; ~ it is because their effect becomes inoffensive. ~ Not only have ghosts become inoffensive; ~ The sage has also become inoffensive. ~ With the two not inflicting harm, the people are showered with virtue.

—[60c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ Governing a big country is like cooking a small fish. ~ The more you stir the pot, the less the fish stays intact. ~ If the world is guided by the Tao, ~ Even evil spirits are rendered spiritless. ~ Not that evil spirits are in themselves spiritless, ~ But their spirits do not harm people. ~ Not only do evil spirits not harm people, ~ But powerful rulers also do not harm people. ~ When no harm is done from either side, ~ Virtue accrues to both and all return to pristine oneness.

—[60c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ When ruling people, like serving heaven, the sage acts only in moderation. ~ Only with moderation can he learn the Tao in an instant. ~ This study is called "the rapid accumulation of a virtue." ~ Through the rapid accumulation of a virtue ~ He can overcome everything. ~ Since there is nothing he cannot overcome, ~ No one can know of his superiority. ~ Since no one knows of his superiority, ~ He can rule the country. ~ Since what he does when he acquires everything is identified with the mother, his days are extended. ~ Thus his roots are deep and his foundations strong, and he knows the way of longevity and immortality.

—[60c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ Ruling a big country ~ Is like cooking a small fish: ~ You have to handle it with care. ~ If a sage uses the Tao ~ Then evil forces have no power: ~ He doesn't harm people either. ~ Through te, you see ~ We have harmony.

—[60c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ Ruling a large state resembles frying a small fish ~ (It is inappropriate to turn it over frequently). ~ When the Tao prevails in the world, ~ Even ghosts and spirits become harmless. ~ It is not that ghosts become harmless ~ But that their potencies can no longer harm people. ~ Not only ghosts become harmless, ~ Sages harm no people either. ~ Hence neither does any harm to the people ~ And both sages and ghosts help the people to enjoy the benefit of virtue.

—[60c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ Governing a large country is like cooking a small fish. ~ It is spoiled by too much interference. ~ When the ruler presents his country with Tao, Heaven will not harm him. ~ Not only will the curse not fall upon him, but it will not even cause harm to the people. ~ As the curse will not hurt the people, neither will the sage cause harm to the people. ~ Only because they do not hurt one another, will they blend their virtue.

—[60c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ Governing a big country is like cooking small fish: ~ Too much stirring will spoil the whole dish. ~ If the ruler governs the country by the Way, ~ The evil souls will not work against the society. ~ It is not that evil souls will have lost their influence, ~ But that their influence can do no harm to the living. ~ When evil souls can exert no bad influence from below, ~ Nor rulers harm people from above, ~ Then the Way will have extended far enough ~ To bring all the living back to their nature.

—[60c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ Governing A Great State ~ Lao Tze says, ~ Governing a great state is like cooking small fish. ~ The king of men knows to pacify his kingdom by using the Tao; ~ the dead men's ghosts will not manifest their spiritual energy. ~ Not only will those ghosts not manifest their spiritual energy, but they will not hurt men. ~ Not only will they hurt men, even the sage in exercise of his government will not disturb those ghosts. ~ As these two do not injuriously affect each other, so in the Tao's attribute, the living and the departed both find their rest places.

—[60c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ Govern a great state as you would cook a small fish (do it gently). ~ Let Tao reign over the world, and no spirits will show their ghostly powers. ~ Not that the spirits have no more powers, ~ But their powers will not harm men. ~ Neither will they harm men, ~ Nor will the Sage harm the people. ~ Inasmuch as none of them harms anybody, ~ Therefore virtue belongs to them both.

—[60c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ To rule a large nation is as to cook a small fish. ~ In a world with Tao prevailing, ~ Ghosts will not become goblins. ~ Not that ghosts will not become goblins, ~ But God will not hurt the people; ~ Not that God will not hurt the people, ~ But the Sage will not hurt them either. ~ When both will not hurt each other, ~ All virtue will converge to them.

—[60c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ Governing a large state is like cooking a small fish. ~ Rule the world by Tao, ~ then ghosts will not take to haunting. ~ It is not that the ghosts will not haunt, ~ their haunting will cause no hurt to humankind. ~ (It's not only that their haunting will not hurt humankind, ~ the Wise Person also does not cause hurt to them. ~ These two do not hurt each other.) ~ Yes, Te unifies and restores.

—[60c33t] Cheng Lin ~ To govern a large State is as easy as frying small fishes. ~ When one rules an Empire according to Truth, the spirits become powerless. ~ Not only the spirits, but also the gods are powerless to do harm to men. ~ Not only the gods, but also the Sages are powerless to do harm to men. ~ When these do not do harm to one another, their inherent qualities will enable them to arrive at a common end.

—[60c34t] Yi Wu ~ Govern a big country as if cooking a small fish. ~ Reign over the world with the Way, ~ Then its demons will have no spiritual power. ~ Not that demons are not spiritually powerful, ~ But their spiritual powers will not harm people. ~ Not that their spiritual powers cannot harm people, ~ But, because the sage also will not harm people, ~ Neither harms the other. ~ Therefore, they return to virtue together.

—[60c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ Governing a big country is akin to frying a small fish. ~ When the power of Dao is prevalent, ~ Even the demons become impotent. ~ Although the demons continue to possess magical power, ~ Their power is rendered innocuous. ~ Hence, the demons cannot harm people. ~ The sage also does not harm people. ~ Both do not interfere with people. ~ Thus by sticking to non-intervention, both let their virtues merge together.

—[60c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ Managing a big country is like cooking small fish. ~ The more you stir them, the less their shape can be maintained. ~ When one applies the subtle Way of the universe to the world, ~ all high spirits unite and harmonize their potencies. ~ Thus, they do not harm people. ~ All the world's leaders know to merge with the great Oneness, ~ thus all people are preserved from harm. ~ When the subtle Way of the universe is all pervading, ~ there is no longer any distinction between subject and object, ~ between spiritual and material, ~ between holy and unholy. ~ All energies merge into harmonious Oneness.

—[60c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ When Tao prevails in the world, evil loses its power. ~ It is not that evil no longer possesses spiritual power. ~ It is that its power does not damage men. ~ Indeed, it is not that its power does not damage men. ~ It is primarily that the ruler does not become harmful to men. ~ When opposites no longer damage each other, ~ Both are benefitted through the attainment of Tao.

— [60c38t] Henry Wei ~ Maintaining One's Position ~ Chu Wei ~ Ruling a big country is like frying a little fish. ~ When Tao is made to prevail in the world, ~ Evil spirits will lose their supernal power. ~ Not that they lose their supernal power, ~ But rather that the supernal power does no harm to people. ~ Not only the supernal power does no harm to people, ~ The Sage (Ruler) also will do no harm. ~ As both do not mutually cause any harm, ~ Virtue reverts to all parties respectively.

— [60c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ Governing a large state ~ Is like boiling a small fish. ~ When you rule all under Heaven according to Tao, ~ The spirits of the dead cease to exercise supernatural power. ~ It is not that they cease to exercise supernatural power. ~ Their supernatural power does not harm the people. ~ It is not simply that their supernatural power does not harm the people. ~ The sage, too, does not harm the people. ~ Since neither of them harms the people, ~ Their Te, united, returns.

— [60c40t] Tao Huang ~ Governing a large country is like cooking a small fish. ~ If Tao is utilized to manage the society, its ghost will not become spirit. ~ Not that ghost is not spiritual, but that the spirit harms no people; ~ Not only does the spirit harm not the people, but that the sage is harmless. ~ As those two cause no harm, they are united in Action.

— [60c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ To rule a big country should be so simple like cooking small fish. ~ When the world rule is approaching Dao: ~ The Ghost and Spirit will not necessarily be divine. ~ It is not that the Ghost and Spirit will not necessarily be divine but the divine will not be utilized to threaten people with harm. ~ Not only the divine should not threaten people with harm, the Sage ruler should not threaten people with harm either. ~ When those two (state and religion) do no harm to each other, both will achieve the same goal - Return to Nature.

— [60c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ Ruling a big country is like cooking a small fish. ~ If Tao is employed to rule the empire, ~ Spiritual beings will lose their supernatural power. ~ Not that they lose their spiritual power, ~ But their spiritual power can no longer harm people. ~ Not only will their supernatural power not harm people, ~ But the sage also will not harm people. ~ When both do not harm each other, ~ Virtue will be accumulated in both for the benefit (of the people).

— [60c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Править великим государством - это как готовить кушанье из мелкой рыбы. ~ Когда правят Поднебесной на основе Дао, души умерших не имеют чудотворной силы. ~ Они не только не имеют чудотворной силы, но и не наносят вреда людям. ~ Не только души не наносят вреда людям, но и Премудрый человек не причиняет вреда людям. ~ А так как обе стороны друг другу не чинят вреда, их добродетели между собой соединяются.

— [60c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Управление большим государством подобно варке мелкой рыбёшки. ~ Когда управление Поднебесной согласно с Дао, даже духи утрачивают своё могущество. ~ Но даже если они и не теряют своего могущества, то хотя бы не вредят людям. ~ И если даже духи не вредят людям, то и мудрецы не могут им повредить. ~ А поскольку они не вредят друг другу, то и Благость их, сочетаясь, восходит [к Дао].

— [60c93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Управлять большим государством - все равно что готовить блюдо из мелкой рыбы. ~ Если посредством Дао-Пути власть над всей Поднебесной обрести, то нави не будут обладать божественностью. ~ И не только нави Поднебесной не будут обладать божественностью, но и сами божества не смогут навредить народу. ~ Но не только сами божества не смогут навредить народу, совершенномудрый тоже не сможет навредить народу. ~ А коль эти двое навредить народу не смогут, благие силы их соединятся и возвратятся к людям на их благо.

— [60с94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Управление великим царством подобно приготовлению мелкой рыбы. ~ Тот, кто посредством Дао служит Поднебесной, ~ у того душа не [ранит (?)] дух. ~ И не только его душа не [ранит (?)] дух, ~ но и его дух не ранит людей. ~ Да и не только его дух не ранит людей, ~ но и совершенномудрый человек тоже не ранит людей. ~ А поскольку обе стороны не ранят друг друга, ~ то они связаны друг с другом Дэ (Добродетелью).

— [60с95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Управление большим царством напоминает приготовление блюда из мелких рыб. ~ Если Поднебесной управлять, следуя дао, то злые духи [умерших] не будут действовать. ~ Но злые духи не только не будут действовать, они также не смогут вредить людям. ~ Не только они не смогут вредить людям, но и совершенномудрые не смогут вредить людям. ~ Поскольку и те и другие не смогут вредить людям, их дэ соединятся друг с другом.

— [60с96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Управление великой страной напоминает приготовление вкусного блюда из мелких рыб. ~ Когда святой муж будет управлять страной, то злой дух перестанет быть богом. ~ Это, впрочем, не значит, что злой дух перестанет быть богом (или духом), - но люди не будут терпеть вреда от него. ~ Святой муж никому не сделает вреда и никто не повредит ему. ~ Поэтому нравственность святого мужа все более и более усовершенствуется.

— [60с97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Управлять большим царством - все равно что варить мелкую рыбу. ~ Если мир упорядочивать посредством Пути, ~ Злые духи лишатся власти над душами. ~ Не то чтобы в них не было духовной силы, ~ Но их сила не сможет больше вредить людям. ~ И не только их сила не будет вредить людям, ~ Но и премудрый человек не будет вредить им. ~ Коль эти оба не будут причинять друг другу вред, ~ Их совершенства сольются и в себе упокоятся.

— [60с98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Порядок в большом государстве отражается в приготовлении мелкой рыбешки. ~ Посредством Пути управляют Поднебесной - ~ их бесы не обожествляются. ~ Суть не в том, чтобы их бесы не обожествлялись, а в том, чтобы их божественность не вредила людям. ~ Суть не в том, чтобы их божественность не вредила людям, а в том, чтобы человек мудрости тоже не вредил людям. ~ Пусть в паре не возникают отношения взаимного уничтожения. ~ Причинность: ~ Тогда Потенция, соединившись, возвращается.

— [61с01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ The large state is like the lower part of a river; ~ It is the female of the world; ~ It is the meeting point of the world. ~ The female constantly overcomes the male with tranquility. ~ Because she is tranquil, therefore she is fittingly underneath. ~ The large state - if it is below the small state, then it takes over the small state; ~ The small state - if it is below the large state, then it is taken over by the large state. ~ Therefore some by being low take over, ~ And some by being low are taken over. ~ Therefore the large state merely desires to unite and rear others; ~ While the small state merely desires to enter and serve others. ~ If both get what they want, ~ Then the large {state} should fittingly be underneath.

— [61с02t] John C. H. Wu ~ A GREAT country is like the lowland toward which all streams flow. ~ It is the Reservoir of all under heaven, the Feminine of the world. ~ The Feminine always conquers the Masculine by her quietness, by lowering herself through her quietness. ~ Hence, if a great country can lower itself before a small country, it will win over the small country; ~ and if a small country can lower itself before a great country, it will win over the great country. ~ The one wins by stooping; the other, by remaining low. ~ What a great country wants is simply to embrace more people; ~ and what a small country wants is simply to come to serve its patron. ~ Thus, each gets what it wants. ~ But it behooves a great country to lower itself.

— [61с03t] D. C. Lau ~ A large state is the lower reaches of a river - ~ The place where all the streams of the world unite. ~ In the union of the world, ~ The female always gets the better of the male by stillness. ~ Being still, she takes the lower position. ~ Hence the large state, by taking the lower position, annexes the small state; ~ The small state, by taking the lower position, affiliates itself to the large state. ~ Thus the one, by taking the lower position, annexes; ~ The other, by taking the lower position, is annexed. ~ All that the large state wants is to take the other under its wing; ~ All that the small state wants is to have its services accepted by the other. ~ If each of the two wants to find its proper place, ~ It is meet that the large should take the lower position.

—[61c04t] R. L. Wing ~ A large organization should flow downward ~ To intersect with the world. ~ It is the female of the world. ~ The female always overcomes the male by stillness; ~ Through stillness, she makes herself low. ~ Thus if a large organization ~ Is lower than a small organization, ~ It can receive the small organization. ~ And if a small organization ~ Stays lower than a large organization, It can receive the large organization. ~ Therefore one receives by becoming low; Another receives by being low. ~ Yet what a large organization desires ~ Is to unite and support others. ~ And what a small organization desires ~ Is to join and serve others. ~ So for both to gain the position they desire, The larger should place itself low.

—[61c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ A great state lies lower (like rivers and seas into which all streams run), ~ To it all things under Heaven tend, It considers itself as the female under Heaven. ~ The female always overcomes the male by stillness, because it is still and lies lower. ~ Therefore, a great state can, by lowering itself to small states, make the small states rely upon the big states. ~ Small states can, by lowering themselves to a great state, win trust from it. ~ Thus a great state sometimes makes small states rely upon it by lowering itself, ~ And sometimes, small states win the trust from a great state only by lowering themselves. ~ What the great state desires is to lead the small states, ~ And what the small states desire is to serve the great state. ~ Then each side gets what it desires, ~ But the great state should especially learn to lower itself.

—[61c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ A great country is like low land. ~ It is the meeting ground of the universe, ~ The mother of the universe. ~ The female overcomes the male with stillness, ~ Lying low in stillness. ~ Therefore if a great country gives way to a smaller country, ~ It will conquer the smaller country. ~ And if a small country submits to a great country, ~ It can conquer the great country. ~ Therefore those who would conquer must yield, ~ And those who conquer do so because they yield. ~ A great nation needs more people; ~ A small country needs to serve. ~ Each gets what it wants. ~ It is fitting for a great nation to yield.

—[61c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ Big nations should be like a stream that flows low. ~ In relating to other nations under heaven. ~ They should be like a female animal. ~ Female animals often lie low and still. ~ By doing so they win over male animals. ~ Big nations that take on a lower profile than small nations ~ will win the adherence of small nations. ~ Small nations that take on a lower profile than big nations ~ will win the assistance from the big nations. ~ Big nations keep low and get what they want. ~ Small nations keep low and get what they want. ~ Big nations (with an abundance of land) want to have a bigger population. ~ Small nations (with a shortage of land) want to have more jobs. ~ If big nations keep low, both the needs of big nations ~ and those of the small will be fulfilled.

—[61c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ When governing a big country, you should be humble, ~ Like the lowest point where water meets, or like the females of the world. ~ Females always overcome males by being peaceful; being peaceful is humble. ~ Therefore, if a big country humbles itself to a small country, it can lead the small country; ~ If a small country humbles itself to a big country, it can get help from the big country. ~ So, humbleness leads either to leading a small country or to getting help from a big country. ~ A big country always wants to lead a small country, ~ A small country always wants to get help from a big country; ~ They can achieve their goals by being humble. ~ So the big should be humble.

—[61c09t] Walter Gorn Old, THE VIRTUE OF HUMILITY ~ The kingdom, like a river, becomes great by being lowly; it is thereby the centre to which all the world tends. ~ It is similar in the case of woman: ~ She conquers man by continual quietness. ~ And quietness is the same as submission. ~ Therefore a great state, by condescension to those beneath it, may gain the government of them. ~ Likewise a small state, by submission to one that is greater, may secure its alliance. ~ Thus the one gains adherence, and the other obtains favours. ~ Although the great state desires to annex and to nourish others, yet the small state desires to be allied to and serve the greater. ~ Thus both will be satisfied, if only the greater will condescend.

—[61c10t] James Legge ~ What makes a great state is its being (like) a low-lying, down-flowing (stream); ~ - it becomes the centre to which tend (all the small states) under heaven. ~ (To illustrate from) the case of all females: ~ - the female always overcomes the male by her stillness. ~ Stillness may be considered (a sort of) abasement. ~ Thus it is that a great state, by condescending to small states, gains them for itself; ~ and that small states, by abasing themselves to a great state, win it over to them. ~ In the one case the abasement leads to gaining adherents, in the other case to procuring favour. ~ The great state only wishes to unite men together and nourish them; ~ a small state only wishes to be received by, and to serve, the other. ~ Each gets what it desires, but the great state must learn to abase itself.

—[61c11t] David Hinton ~ A great nation flows down into ~ the place where all beneath heaven converges, ~ the female of all beneath heaven. ~ In its stillness, female lies perpetually low, and there perpetually conquers male. ~ A great nation that puts itself below a small nation takes over the small nation, ~ and a small nation that puts itself below a great nation gives itself over to the great nation. ~ Some lie low to take over, and some lie low to give over. ~ A great nation wanting nothing more than to unite and nurture the people and a small nation wanting nothing more than to join and serve the people: they both succeed in what they want. ~ Great things lie low and rest content.

—[61c12t] Chichung Huang ~ A large state is the lower stream, ~ The female to all under heaven, ~ The converging point of all under heaven. ~ The female constantly uses stillness ~ To overcome the male. ~ As she is still, ~ It is proper that she stay low. ~ Therefore, if a large state ~ Stays low to a small state, ~ It wins the small state; ~ If a small state ~ Stays low to a large state, ~ It is won by the large state. ~ Therefore, one stays low to win; ~ One stays low to be won. ~ Therefore, the large state ~ Merely wishes to annex and feed the other; ~ The small state ~ Merely wishes to join and serve the other. ~ If each is to have its wish, ~ The large state should stay lower.

—[61c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ A large state is down stream (hsia liu). ~ Where the rivers under heaven (t'ien hsia) converge, ~ Is the female (p'in) under heaven. ~ The female always wins the male (mou) by stillness (ching), ~ By stillness it is low-lying (hsia). ~ Therefore, by being low-lying (hsia) to a small state, ~ A large state acquires (ch'ü) a small state. ~ By lowering (hsia) itself to a large state, ~ A small state acquires a large state. ~ The one acquires by being low-lying (hsia), ~ The other acquires by lowering (hsia). ~ A large state without overstepping its boundary (pu kuo), ~ Wishes to keep others under its wings. ~ A small state without overstepping its boundary (pu kuo), ~ Wishes to offer service to others. ~ Now both are granted their proper wishes, ~ It is fitting that a large state takes the low (hsia) place.

—[61c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ A big country was formed by being at the right position, i.e. like the waterway at the lowest position where other waterways (small countries) converged together spontaneously; ~ Diplomacy in this world was generally conducted similar to the manner a cow took an initiative to tempt an ox; ~ The fact was that the ox was led to believe deceptively that serenely passive cow was the weaker [party to be mastered]. ~ Therefore: ~ If a big country deals with small countries by taking the lower position [for currents to flow in], then it would secure small countries [with ease]; ~ If a small country negotiates with a big country, by positioning itself in the lower [passive] position, it could insinuate big country to yield to its needs; ~ One country may lower itself in order to take possession of another country, or one country may insinuate itself into favor through submissiveness [it all depends on the circumstance]. ~ A big country should not press onward too far its intention to lord over people of small countries; ~ A small country should not let itself be overridden by its intention to yield to the big country; ~ Accordingly, when a big country and a small country each has achieved its intended purpose respectfully, the big country should try harder to be modest.

—[61c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ A great country is like the low stream. ~ It is where the world flows together. ~ It is the feminine of the world. ~ The feminine always conquers the masculine by her quietness; she is in a lower place by her quietness. ~ Hence, if a big state is below a small state, it will win over the small state. ~ If a small is below a big state, it will win over the big state. ~ The one wins by lowering itself; the other, by remaining low. ~ What a great state wants is simply to embrace and protect more people. ~ What a small country wants is simply to participate and to submit its patron. ~ Thus, each gets what it wants. ~ But it behooves a big state to lower itself.

—[61c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ A great kingdom is like the mouth of rivers; it is like the female, or the hub of the world. ~ Females frequently win males with their serenity. ~ Serenity means humbleness. ~ Therefore when a great kingdom is humble, it wins small kingdoms. ~ When a small kingdom is humble, it wins great kingdoms. ~ This is why with humbleness one can win and will win. ~ A great kingdom should not excessively conquer. ~ A small kingdom should avoid undue vassalage. ~ In order for both great and small kingdoms to have their wishes, it is better for great kingdoms to be humble.

—[61c17t] Arthur Waley ~ A large kingdom must be like the low ground towards which all streams flow down. ~ It must be a point towards which all things under heaven converge. ~ Its part must be that of the female in its dealings with all things under heaven. ~ The female by quiescence conquers the male; by quiescence gets underneath. ~ If a large kingdom can in the same way succeed in getting underneath a small kingdom then it will win the adherence of the small kingdom; ~ and it is because small kingdoms are by nature in this way underneath large kingdoms that they win the adherence of large kingdoms. ~ The one must get underneath in order to do it; ~ the other is underneath and therefore does it. ~ What large countries really need is more inhabitants; ~ and what small countries need is some place where their surplus inhabitants can go and get employment. ~ Thus each gets what it needs. ~ That is why I say the large kingdom must 'get underneath'.

—[61c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ A large state is a catchment into which flow occurs. ~ It is where all under Heaven unite. ~ It is the female for all under Heaven. ~ The female always conquers the male because of quietude. ~ She is able to take the low position because of quietude. ~ Thus the large state, by placing itself beneath the small state, ~ Consequently takes over the small state. ~ The small state, by placing itself beneath the large state, subsequently is taken over by the large state. ~ Thus some, by taking a place beneath, take over, and some, by taking a place beneath, are taken over. ~ The large state should desire nothing more than to bring people together and nurture them, and the small state should desire nothing more than to join in and serve people. ~ In order that both obtain what they desire, it is fitting that the large one place itself beneath.

—[61c19t] Lin Yutang ~ BIG AND SMALL COUNTRIES ~ A big country (should be like) the delta low-regions, ~ Being the concourse of the world, ~ (And) the Female of the world. ~ The Female overcomes the Male by quietude, ~ And achieves the lowly position by quietude. ~ Therefore if a big country places itself below a small country, ~ It absorbs the small country; ~ (And) if a small country places itself below a big country, ~ It absorbs the big country. ~ Therefore some place themselves low to absorb (others), ~ Some are (naturally) low and absorb (others). ~ What a big country wants is but to shelter others, ~ And what a small country wants is but to be able to come in and be sheltered. ~ Thus (considering) that both may have what they want, ~ A big country ought to place itself low.

—[61c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ A large state is like a low-lying estuary, ~ the female of all under heaven. ~ In the congress of all under heaven, ~ the female always conquers the male through her stillness. ~ Because she is still, it is fitting for her to lie low. ~ By lying beneath a small state, ~ a large state can take over a small state. ~ By lying beneath a large state, ~ a small state can be taken over by a large state. ~ Therefore, ~ One may either take over or be taken over by lying low. ~ Therefore, ~ The large state wishes only to annex and nurture others; ~ The small state wants only to join with and serve others. ~ Now, ~ Since both get what they want, ~ It is fitting for the large state to lie low.

—[61c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ A great country is like the low lands where all the streams unite. ~ In all things under heaven the female overcomes the male by her stillness, ~ and because she is still she lies below. ~ Hence, ~ if the great country will take the low place ~ it will win over the little country. ~ If the little country will take the low place ~ it will win over the great country. ~ Thus, ~ the one gets below and prospers ~ and the other remains below and prospers. ~ All that the great country wants is more people. ~ All that the little country wants is a place for its people to go and to be employed. ~ If each is to get what it wants ~ it is necessary for the great country to take the low place.

—[61c22t] David H. Li ~ A great nation is like a down-stream - the feminine to the world, the rendezvous of the world. ~ The feminine frequently wins over the masculine with serenity. ~ Serenity is obsequiousness. ~ Thus, ~ a great nation, obsequious to a small nation, gains the small nation; ~ a small nation, obsequious to a great nation, gains the great nation. ~ Thus, one is obsequious in order to gain. ~ Or, one is obsequious because it needs to gain. ~ A great nation is not to be too keen on conquering. ~ A small nation is not to be too keen on acquiescing. ~ Since each gains what each desires, it is better for the great nation to be obsequious.

—[61c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ A great country is like a low-lying estuary, ~ A place where the myriad streams of the world come together. ~ She is also like a receptive female drawing in an eager male. ~ The female always conquers the male through her stillness, ~ Because she knows how to lie low through her stillness. ~ Thus, ~ a great country can win over a small country by lying low. ~ A small country can also win over a great country by lying low. ~ Therefore, one may either win over or be won over by taking the lower position. ~ A great country only wants to embrace and nourish more people. ~ A small country only wants to be embraced and serve her benefactor. ~ Thus, both can achieve their ends by practicing humility. ~ Therefore, especially a great country must practice humility.

—[61c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ Govern a large country as you would cook a small fish, gently. ~ Let the Tao govern the world, and spirits will not roam freely. ~ This does not mean that spirits will not have powers, ~ But rather that their powers will not harm people. ~ They will not harm people, ~ Nor will the sage harm people. ~ When neither he nor they harm anybody, ~ The virtue belongs to both of them. ~ When the Tao governs the world, the spirits are not known as spirits and the sage is not considered a sage, says Wang-Pi.

—[61c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ A great country is like a low-lying estuary - ~ It is a place where all the lesser streams mingle and merge. ~ Everything comes together there ... ~ And a woman wins her man: how does she do it? ~ By using the power of her yin like an anchor, ~ A still deep bowl into which it all flows. ~ This is passiveness. ~ So if a great country takes a low place ~ It wins over the trust of a smaller state; ~ And if a small country shows humility ~ It wins the trust of a whole nation. ~ And it's like this: ~ those who want to win must yield, ~ And those who are yielding should stay where they are. ~ A great country needs to grow: ~ A small one needs protection. ~ That way, everyone gets what they want - ~ when the greater learns to be below.

—[61c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ A large state should play the role of female, ~ Just like the lowest reaches of a river ~ Where all the other streams meet. ~ The female always conquers the male by motionlessness, ~ Because the motionless female always takes the lower position. ~ Hence the large state can annex the small one by taking the lower position (being modest); ~ The small state can gain the trust of the large one by taking the lower position, ~ The case being either the former or vice versa. ~ The large state wants to put the small one under its protection, ~ The small state wants to be shielded by the large one, ~ Thus both can satisfy their wishes, ~ But the large state should be more willing to take the lower position.

—[61c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ When a large country is like water, ~ which runs towards lower places, ~ all the other countries will unite with it. ~ In the unity of the world, the female always overcomes the male with stillness. ~ The stillness is akin to the lower position - that is how a large country can be respected by a small country and conquer it. ~ And if a small country takes the lower position and allows itself to be influenced by the large country, the small can conquer the large. ~ That is why by being lower to take, or lower to be taken, ~ a large country only tries to annex a small one and a small country only tries to protect its people. ~ They both find what they want. ~ Therefore it is fitting for a large country to be the lower one.

—[61c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ A big country should position itself low ~ So as to be the world's mother ocean. ~ The biggest producer is for ever still and peaceful, ~ Dissolves all the commotions with her stillness, ~ And keeps her lowness with her stillness, too. ~ Therefore, if a big country can be humble toward a small one, ~ It will win over the small country. ~ If a small country can be humble toward a big one, ~ It will win over the big country. ~ Thus, countries either lower themselves to win over others ~ Or lower themselves to be tolerated by others. ~ A big country's purpose is to support all kinds of people. ~ A small country's purpose is to gain support to serve people. ~ To satisfy the two purposes, ~ The big country should be more yielding in attitude.

—[61c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ The Large And Small States ~ Lao Tze says, ~ Like water, a large state should keep a low profile as it goes down stream, in order that it becomes the pivot of the world. ~ The female is the master of the world. ~ The female always overcomes the male by being still. ~ Stillness may be considered as a sort of abasement. ~ Thus a large state, by abasing itself to smaller states, annexes the small states; ~ while small states, by abasing themselves, affiliate themselves with larger states. ~ In one case the abasement leads to gaining allies, in the other case it procures favors. ~ The large state wishes only to increase population; ~ small states wish only to be guarded. ~ Each gets what it desires, but the large state must learn to abase itself first.

—[61c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ A great state is the world's low-stream (to which all the river flows down), the world's field and the world's female. ~ The female always conquers the male by quietude, which is employed as a means to lower oneself. ~ Thus a great state lowers itself towards a small state before it takes over the small state. ~ A small state lowers itself towards a great state before it takes over the great state. ~ Therefore some lower themselves to take, while others lower themselves to gather. ~ A great state wishes nothing more than to have and keep many people, and a small state wishes nothing more than to get more things to do. ~ When the two both mean to obtain their wishes, the greater one should lower itself.

—[61c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ A large state is like the low land; ~ It is the focus point of the world ~ And the female of the world. ~ The female always conquers the male by serenity. ~ In serenity, she puts herself low. ~ Therefore, the large state puts itself beneath the small state, ~ And thereby absorbs the small state. ~ The small state puts itself under the large state, ~ And thereby joins with the large state. ~ Therefore, one either puts himself beneath to absorb others, ~ Or puts himself under to join with others. ~ What the large state wants is no more than to feed the people. ~ What the small state wants is no more than to join and serve the people. ~ Both have their needs satisfied. ~ Thus the large ought to stay low.

—[61c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ The great state is a low and easy, ~ woman for the world, ~ the one the whole world unites with. ~ Femininity always overcomes Masculinity, by Stillness, ~ in Stillness it takes the low place. ~ Yes: ~ A great state, ~ by putting itself lower than the smaller state, ~ will win out over the smaller state. ~ A small state, ~ by putting itself lower than the great state, ~ will win out over the great state. ~ Yes: ~ One puts itself lower so it will win out, ~ if the other gets lower, then it will win. ~ (A great state has no further desire, ~ than to embrace and protect other states. ~ A small state has no further desire, ~ than to enter and serve other states. ~ So both get what they want.) ~ The greatest should be the lowest.

—[61c33t] Cheng Lin ~ In order to govern a large State, one must practise humility. ~ The father of an Empire should behave as though he were the mother. ~ The female willing to occupy a subordinate position uses quietude to subjugate the male. ~ Thus, ~ when a large State is humble, it can win over the small States; ~ when a small State is humble, it can win over the large States. ~ In the case of the large States, humility makes them desirous of protecting all men, and no more. ~ In the case of the small States, humility makes them desirous of serving all men, and no more. ~ These obtain what they desire because they practise humility.

—[61c34t] Yi Wu ~ A big state puts itself in the low place: ~ It is the focal point of the world ~ And the female of the world. ~ The female constantly wins over the male by her tranquility. ~ Tranquility is regarded as the low place; ~ Therefore, a big state, by lowering itself beneath a small state, ~ Can have the small state. ~ The small state, by lowering itself beneath a big state, ~ Can be taken to the big state's heart. ~ Therefore, one puts itself low to take, ~ and the other puts itself low to be accepted. ~ The big state wants only to embrace more people; ~ The small state wants only to join and serve the big state; ~ Thus, both have satisfied their needs. ~ The big one is right to put itself in the low place.

—[61c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ When a great nation takes a low profile, it becomes the hub of small nations. ~ Dao is the world's mystic female. ~ The mystic female triumphs over the male by her quietude. ~ Her characteristics are quietude and humility. ~ If the larger nation is humble, it will gain the trust of the smaller nations and absorb them. ~ By being compliant, the smaller nations will gain protection from the larger nation. ~ Both need to take a lowly position to gain control or to be protected. ~ The large nation aims to embrace and expand. ~ The smaller nation wishes to gain protection and to prosper. ~ Although they both aim to achieve their respective objectives, the larger nation should still take the lower profile.

—[61c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ A great country is like the lower regions of a river: a place where all the streams of the world unite. ~ She is the mother of the world. ~ The peaceful and feminine always overpowers the masculine. ~ Being peaceable, one takes the lower position. ~ Hence, if a great country can lower itself to greet a small country, ~ it will win the friendship and trust of the small country. ~ If a small country can lower itself to greet a great country, ~ it will win the friendship and support of the great country. ~ One wins by taking the lower position, ~ while the other wins by remaining low. ~ Thus, if each is to find its proper place, ~ the one that is great must place itself low and offer help.

—[61c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ A greater nation must be humble and like a reservoir ~ Where all the waters join together. ~ It is the passivity of the universe. ~ Passivity always prevails over activity through quiescence. ~ Quiescence is humble before activity. ~ When a greater nation is humble before a lesser nation, ~ It prevails over the lesser nation. ~ When a lesser nation is humble before a greater nation, ~ It prevails over the greater nation. ~ Thus, by being humble one prevails over others. ~ Or, by being originally in a lower position, ~ One prevails over others. ~ A greater nation simply likes to bring people together ~ And to nurture them. ~ A lesser nation simply likes to participate ~ And work together with others. ~ In this way, both have what they like, ~ But the greater nation must be humble.

—[61c38t] Henry Wei ~ Virtue of Humility ~ Ch'ien Teh ~ A great country should assume a low position. ~ Being the hub of the world, ~ It should play the part of the Female. ~ The Female always employs quiescence ~ To subdue the Male, and takes a low position. ~ Therefore, a big country, stooping low, ~ Will win over a small country; ~ And a small country, staying low, ~ Will win over a big country. ~ Therefore, some stoop low to conquer, ~ And some stay low to conquer. ~ What a big country wants is merely ~ To absorb and support more people; ~ What a small country wants is merely ~ To enter a big country to offer services. ~ For each of the two to get what it wants, ~ The big country, therefore, should be lowly.

—[61c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ The large state is the lower reaches of a river, ~ The place where all under Heaven meets - ~ The female of all under Heaven. ~ The female always overcomes the male by stillness. ~ With stillness she plays the lower part. ~ Therefore, when the large state plays the lower part toward the small state, ~ It takes the small state. ~ When the small state plays the lower part toward the large state, ~ It takes the large state. ~ Therefore some take by playing the lower part; ~ Some are taken by playing the lower part. ~ The large state merely wants to unite with the other and nurture it; ~ The small state merely wants to join and serve the other. ~ Each gets what it wants. ~ It is right that the large state should play the lower part.

—[61c40t] Tao Huang ~ A great nation flows downwardly, it is the mother of the world and the integration of the world. ~ The mother is always tranquil and overcomes the male by her tranquility, so she benefits the world. ~ A great nation relies on a low position to take over a small nation. ~ A small nation, being in a low position, is taken over by a great nation. ~ So being lower allows taking over or being taken over. ~ Being a great nation only desires to unify the people. ~ Being a small nation only seeks people's business. ~ They both get what they want, but the greater is being lower.

—[61c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ To conduct a policy of a large country should be like a valley staying in the lower ground. ~ To conduct international affairs the best policy, is to be humble and non-aggressive (inactive). ~ Everyplace under the sun, all females outsmart the males by inaction. ~ Be inactive and be humble. ~ Therefore, the large country which is humble before the small country will lead the small country. ~ The small country which is humble before the large country will please the large country. ~ Thus sometimes a country unites the world by being humble and sometimes a country becomes humble in order to unite the world. ~ What a great country wants is no more than to lead more people. ~ What the small country wants is no more than to serve others. ~ To let both of them get what they want is simply to insure that the large country be humble.

—[61c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ A big country may be compared to the lower part of a river. ~ It is the converging point of the world; ~ It is the female of the world. ~ The female always overcomes the male by tranquility, ~ And by tranquility she is underneath. ~ A big state can take over a small state if it places itself below the small state; ~ And the small state can take over a big state if it places itself below the big state. ~ Thus some, by placing themselves below, take over (others), ~ And some, by being (naturally) low, take over (other states). ~ After all, what a big state wants is but to annex and herd others, ~ And what a small state wants is merely to join and serve others. ~ Since both big and small states get what they want, ~ The big state should place itself low.

—[61c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Великая держава образует нижнее течение реки. ~ Это скрепа Поднебесной, ее самка. ~ Самке неизменно в состоянии покоя удается побеждать самца. ~ Покой ей позволяет быть внизу. ~ Когда великая держава ставит себя ниже небольшого государства, то она его берет; ~ когда небольшое государство принижается перед великою державой, то оно ее берет. ~ Так берут тем, что ставят себя ниже, либо находятся внизу. ~ Не пожелай великая держава, когда что-либо захватывает, большего, чем возвращать людей, ~ а небольшое государство - большего, чем вступить в то, где служат людям, ~ то оба обрели бы исполнение своих желаний. ~ Великому пристало быть внизу.

— [61c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Великое государство подобно низовью реки, где сходятся [воды] Поднебесной, и самке Поднебесной. ~ Самка всегда одолевает самца своим покоем. ~ Пребывая в покое, она занимает нижнюю позицию. ~ Поэтому великое государство, занимая нижнюю позицию, завоёвывает доверие малого государства. ~ Малое государство, занимая нижнюю позицию, оказывает доверие великому государству. ~ Поэтому то, что занимает нижнюю позицию, либо завоёвывает доверие, либо оказывает его. ~ Всё, к чему стремится большое государство, - лишь принимать людей под своё крыло. ~ Всё, к чему стремится малое государство, - это вникать в людские дела. ~ Если оба хотят достичь желаемого, большее должно занять нижнюю позицию.

— [61c93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Великое государство стремится в низину подобно потоку воды. ~ Оно - средоточие всей Поднебесной, оно самка Поднебесной. ~ Самка постоянно посредством покоя самца побеждает, покой ее вниз опускает. ~ Поэтому великое государство опускается под малые царства и так берет эти малые царства. ~ Если же малое царство опустится под великое государство, то оно возьмет великое государство. ~ Поэтому одни опускаются вниз, чтобы взять, а другие опускаются вниз, чтобы их взяли. ~ Великое государство не должно желать ничего сверх возможности равно пестовать свой народ. ~ Малое царство не должно желать ничего сверх возможности равным образом служить своим людям. ~ Поэтому и то и другое получают желаемое, когда великое соглашается опуститься под малое.

— [61c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Великое царство - это низовье реки, ~ это связь Поднебесной, это Самка Поднебесной. ~ Самка всегда спокойствием побеждает самца, тихо ложась внизу. ~ Поэтому если великое царство ляжет под малое царство, ~ то овладеет малым царством. ~ Если малое царство ляжет под великое царство, ~ то овладеет великим царством. ~ Поэтому одно стремится лечь внизу, чтобы овладеть, другое лежит внизу и овладевает. ~ Великое царство желает лишь принять заботу о людях, ~ малое царство желает лишь впустить людей для дела. ~ Из них каждое получает то, что желает. ~ Великому полагается быть внизу.

— [61c95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Великое царство - это низовье реки, узел Поднебесной, самка Поднебесной. ~ Самка всегда невозмутимостью одолевает самца, а по своей невозмутимости [она] стоит ниже [самца]. ~ Поэтому великое царство располагает к себе маленькое тем, что ставит себя ниже последнего, а маленькое царство завоёвывает симпатию великого царства тем, что стоит ниже последнего. ~ Поэтому располагают к себе либо тем, что ставят себя ниже, либо тем, что сами по себе ниже. ~ Пусть великое царство будет желать не больше того, чтобы все одинаково были накормлены, а малое царство пусть будет желать не больше того, чтобы служить людям. ~ Тогда оба получают то, чего они желают. ~ Великому полагается быть внизу.

— [61c96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Великая страна похожа на устье реки. ~ Совокупление вселенной есть начало всего мира. ~ Самка всегда побеждает самца потому, что она тиха и спокойно стоит ниже самца. ~ Когда большая страна стоит ниже маленькой, то первая завладеет последней. ~ Когда маленькая страна стоит ниже большой, то первая завладеет последней. ~ Отсюда видно, что стоящая ниже других страна будет владычествовать над всеми другими. ~ Что такое большая страна и маленькая? ~ Большая страна - вместителище многих народов, а маленькая - вместителище немногих. ~ Если правитель страны будет стоять ниже других, то он осуществит свой добрый замысел. ~ Отсюда ясно, что желающий быть великим должен быть ниже всех.

— [61c97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Большое царство - как низина, куда стекаются воды: ~ Средоточие мира, Сокровенная Родительница мира. ~ Самка всегда одолеет самца покоем, и, покоясь, пребывает внизу. ~ Посему большое царство возьмет малое, если будет ниже его, ~ Малое царство будет взято большим, ибо находится ниже его. ~ Вот так, себя ставя ниже, забирают других ~ И, стоя ниже, дают другим взять себя. ~ Большое царство хочет только объединить и пестовать других, ~ Малое царство хочет только примкнуть к другим и им послужить. ~ Чтобы те и другие смогли получить то, что хотят, ~ Большому царству подобает быть внизу.

— [61c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Большое государство - это нисходящий поток, фокус нисхождения Небес, ~ женский принцип нисхождения Небес. ~ Постоянство женского в том, что покой побеждает мужское. ~ Покой осуществляет нисхождение. ~ Причинность: ~ Большое государство способно нисходить к маленькому государству, и тогда берет маленькое государство. ~ Маленькое государство способно нисходить к большому государству, и тогда берет большое государство. ~ Причинность: ~ Или, нисходя, способен взять; или нисходишь и берешь. ~ Большое государство стремится только присоединить и накопить людей. ~ Маленькое государство стремится только подключиться к делам других людей. ~ Вот пара, в которой каждый обретает то, к чему стремится. ~ Большое - это необходимость осуществлять нисхождение.

— [62c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ The Way is that toward which all things flow. ~ It is the treasure of the good man, ~ And that which protects the bad. ~ Beautiful words can be bought and sold; ~ Honored deeds can be presented to others as gifts; ~ [Even with] things that people regard as no good - will they be rejected? ~ Therefore, when the Son of Heaven is being enthroned or the Three Ministers installed, ~ Though you might salute them with disks of jade preceded by teams of four horses, ~ That's not so good as sitting still and offering this. ~ The reason why the ancients valued this - what was it? ~ Did they not say, "Those who seek, with this will attain, and those who commit offenses, with this will escape"?! ~ Therefore, it's the most valued thing in the world.

— [62c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ THE Tao is the hidden Reservoir of all things. ~ A treasure to the honest, it is a safeguard to the erring. ~ A good word will find its own market. ~ A good deed may be used as a gift to another. ~ That a man is straying from the right path ~ Is no reason that he should be cast away. ~ Hence, at the Enthronement of an Emperor, ~ Or at the Installation of the Three Ministers, ~ Let others offer their discs of jade, following it up with teams of horses; ~ It is better for you to offer the Tao without moving your feet! ~ Why did the ancients prize the Tao? ~ Is it not because by virtue of it he who seeks finds, ~ And the guilty are forgiven? ~ That is why it is such a treasure to the world.

— [62c03t] D. C. Lau ~ The way is the refuge for the myriad creatures. ~ It is that by which the good man protects, ~ And that by which the bad is protected. ~ Beautiful words when offered will win high rank in return; ~ Beautiful deeds can raise a man above others. ~ Even if a man is not good, why should he be abandoned? ~ Hence when the emperor is set up and the three ducal ministers are appointed, he who makes a present of the way without stirring from his seat is preferable to one who offers presents of jade disks followed by a team of four horses. ~ Why was this way valued of old? ~ Was it not said that by means of it one got what one wanted and escaped the consequences when one transgressed? ~ Therefore it is valued by the empire.

— [62c04t] R. L. Wing ~ The Tao is a refuge for All Things, ~ The treasure of the good, ~ The protector of the not good. ~ Honor can be bought with fine words; ~ Others can be joined with fine conduct. ~ So if some are not good, ~ Why waste them? ~ In this way the Emperor is established; ~ The three officials are installed. ~ And although the large jade disc ~ Is preceded by a team of horses, This is not as good as sitting, ~ Advancing in the Tao. ~ Why did those of old treasure the Tao? ~ Did they not say: ~ Seek it and it is attained; ~ Possess faults and they are released? ~ Thus it is the treasure of the world.

—[62c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ Tao, as the abyss where all the things are hidden, is effective and precious to good men, and also must be preserved by bad men. ~ Eloquent words can purchase honour from others, ~ And admirable deeds can put one above others, ~ How can it be abandoned by men, even in their evil deeds? ~ Therefore, when the Son of Heaven mounts the throne and the principal ministers come to their places, ~ It is better to offer Tao as a present (without any ceremonies), ~ Though there is the round jadeware, followed by the four-horse chariot. ~ Why is Tao so much valued from the old days on? ~ Can it not be said that (with it) one can get what he seeks for and be forgiven his sin? ~ Thus it is valued by all under Heaven.

—[62c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ Tao is the source of the ten thousand things. ~ It is the treasure of the good man, and the refuge of the bad. ~ Sweet words can buy honor; ~ Good deeds can gain respect. ~ If a man is bad, do not abandon him. ~ Therefore on the day the emperor is crowned, ~ Or the three officers of state installed, ~ Do not send a gift of jade and a team of four horses, ~ But remain still and offer the Tao. ~ Why does everyone like the Tao so much at first? ~ Isn't it because you find what you seek and are forgiven when you sin? ~ Therefore this is the greatest treasure of the universe.

—[62c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ The Dao is the deepest learning for all living things, ~ It is the good man's treasure ~ and the bad man's refuge. ~ Fine words attract respect; ~ Fine deeds make people look gallant. ~ (Because of such fine consequences that are expected) ~ even men who are bad ~ may not be stingy with fine words and good deeds! ~ On the occasion of the enthronement of the Emperor ~ or at the installation of three ministers of the state, therefore, ~ It is far better to follow the Dao (which certainly will bring good fortune) than to have a jade disc displayed, leading a chariot of four horses. ~ In the ancient times those people who value the Dao ~ do not do so for the consequences, ~ or in order to achieve atonement for their sins. ~ For this reason they are truly honored by all under heaven.

—[62c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ The DAO is the protector of everything. ~ Kind people treat it like a treasure; ~ Unkind people also seek its protection. ~ The DAO makes people say nice words, and thus, they are respected. ~ The DAO makes people do good deeds, and thus, they are greater. ~ Even for the unkind people, have you ever seen the DAO neglect them? ~ Therefore, being an emperor or a minister, receiving jade gifts, or being equipped with fast carriers are not as precious as having the DAO. ~ Why did the ancient people value the DAO? ~ Did they not say that it is for gaining things and redeeming sins? ~ So the DAO is the most valuable thing in the world.

—[62c09t] Walter Gorn Old, PRACTICAL TAO ~ Tao is the secret guardian of all things. ~ It enriches the good man and forefends the evildoer. ~ Its counsel is always in season; its benevolence is always in demand. ~ Even those who are not good it does not forsake. ~ Therefore, when the Emperor takes his throne and appoints his nobles, he who comes before him bearing the insignia of a prince and escorted by a mounted retinue is not to be compared with one who humbly presents this Tao. ~ For why did the ancients hold it in such esteem? ~ Was it not because it could be had without much seeking, and because by means of it man might escape from sin? ~ For this it was esteemed the greatest thing in the world!

—[62c10t] James Legge ~ Tao has of all things the most honoured place. ~ No treasures give good men so rich a grace; ~ Bad men it guards, and doth their ill efface. ~ (Its) admirable words can purchase honour; ~ (its) admirable deeds can raise their performer above others. ~ Even men who are not good are not abandoned by it. ~ Therefore when the sovereign occupies his place as the Son of Heaven, and he has appointed his three ducal ministers, though (a prince) were to send in a round symbol-of-rank large enough to fill both the hands, and that as the precursor of the team of horses (in the court-yard), such an offering would not be equal to (a lesson of) this Tao, which one might present on his knees. ~ Why was it that the ancients prized this Tao so much? ~ Was it not because it could be got by seeking for it, and the guilty could escape (from the stain of their guilt) by it? ~ This is the reason why all under heaven consider it the most valuable thing. —[62c11t] David Hinton ~ Way is the mystery of these ten thousand things. ~ It's a good person's treasure ~ and an evil person's refuge. ~ Its beautiful words are bought and sold ~ and its noble deeds are gifts enriching people. ~ It never abandons even the evil among us. ~ When the Son of Heaven is enthroned and the three dukes installed, parades with jade discs and stately horses can't compare to sitting still in Way's company. ~ Isn't it said that ~ the ancients exalted this Way because ~ in it whatever we seek we find, ~ and whatever seeks us we escape? ~ No wonder it's exalted throughout all beneath heaven.

—[62c12t] Chichung Huang ~ The Tao is where ~ The ten thousand things flow; ~ The good man's treasure, ~ That by which the evil man is preserved. ~ Good words can win one honor; ~ Good deeds can command esteem from others. ~ The evil among men ~ Why should they be abandoned? ~ Therefore, in enthroning the Son of Heaven, ~ Or installing the Three Counselors, ~ Though one has a jade-disk ~ That fills one's arms, ~ Preceding a team of four horses, ~ It is better to prostrate oneself ~ And present this. ~ Why did the ancients treasure this Tao so? ~ Is it not said: ~ "What one seeks will thereby be obtained; ~ What one is guilty of will thereby be pardoned?" ~ Therefore it was treasured by all under heaven.

—[62c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ To all beings Tao is the hidden secret (ao): ~ To the good persons it is their treasure (pao), ~ To the not good it is that by which they are preserved (pao). ~ Beautiful speech can go to the market. ~ Respectable conduct can be bestowed on others. ~ Those who are not good, ~ Why discard them? ~ Therefore on crowning the Son of Heaven, ~ On appointing the Three Ducal Ministers (kung), ~ Although there are tributes of jade, ~ Preceding teams of four horses, ~ It is better to kneel (tso) and present this Tao. ~ Why did the ancients honor this Tao? ~ One does not say that they did it for the purpose of gain, ~ Rather they wish to be free from offenses (tsui). ~ Therefore they were the honored under heaven.

—[62c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ Tao provides the profound maxim for myriad things and creatures; ~ It provides security for all the good people; ~ Even people of no good [morality] must seek security through it. ~ Beautiful and appealing talks could buy appreciation; ~ Actions of celebrities could carry their weight around; ~ If people are not good [at discernment that they are deceived in the manner described above], would this be the reason [for me] to abandon them? ~ Accordingly [by reconciling the above two, I conclude as follows]: ~ Neither the honor of becoming an emperor, or being appointed as one of the Three Grand Dukes, ~ Nor [the prominence of] marching down the public street, surrounded by servants carrying jade cups and riding in carriages drawn by four horses, ~ Can match the fulfillment of the pursuit and advancement of this (Tao). ~ Why has [Tao] had being valued ever since very ancient times? ~ Didn't someone say that [the apprehension of Tao] enabled us to achieve what we had prayed for? ~ And [practicing Tao] would purge us of our sins? ~ For all of the above reasons, [Tao] is extremely valuable for this world.

—[62c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ The Way is the shelter of all things, the treasure of the good, and the refuge of the bad. ~ A beautiful word may bring admiration. ~ A precious deed may bring a high rank. ~ That a man is not good is not a reason that he should be cast away. ~ Hence, at the enthronement of an emperor, or at the appointment of the three ministers, the offering of jade and four-horsed carriages is not as good as the kneeling presentation of the Way. ~ Why did the ancients prize the Way? ~ Is it not because they said that

"by virtue of it he who seeks finds, and the guilty are forgiven"? ~ That is why it is such a treasure to the world.

—[62c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ Tao is the law of the universe. ~ For able people Tao is a treasure. ~ For less able people, Tao is a guardian. ~ Good words can win reverence. ~ Good behavior can win admiration. ~ For people who are inept, should they be abandoned? ~ Therefore for the emperor who is enthroned and the three senior administrators who are appointed, there may be priceless jades and fast carriages, none is as good as adopting Tao. ~ Why Tao is so treasured by generations? ~ Is it not because it helps us reach our goals and avoid mistakes? ~ Therefore it is treasured by the whole world.

—[62c17t] Arthur Waley ~ Tao in the Universe is like the south-west corner in the house. ~ It is the treasure of the good man, ~ The support of the bad. ~ There is a traffic in speakers of fine words; ~ Persons of grave demeanour are accepted as gifts; ~ Even the bad let slip no opportunity to acquire them. ~ Therefore on the day of an Emperor's enthronement ~ Or at the installation of the three officers of State ~ Rather than send a team of four horses, preceded by a disc of jade, ~ Better were it, as can be done without moving from one's seat, to send this Tao. ~ For what did the ancients say of this Tao, how did they prize it? ~ Did they not say of those that have it 'Pursuing, they shall catch; pursued, they shall escape?' ~ They thought it, indeed, most precious of all things under heaven.

—[62c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ The Dao is the shelter of the myriad things. ~ It is the treasure of the good man ~ And the protector of the man who is not good. ~ Fine words can be used to market it, and noble behavior can be used to influence others by it. ~ As for men who are not good, how could they ever be discarded? ~ Thus the son of Heaven is established, and the three dukes are installed. ~ Although one could promote it by providing them with disks of jade to hold and teams of four horses to lead, this falls short of promoting this Dao by just letting them sit quietly. ~ How did the ancients show their esteem for the Dao? ~ Did they not say: ~ "When beseeching it, one obtains, and, when in violation of it, one is forgiven"? ~ Thus it was that it was esteemed by all under Heaven.

—[62c19t] Lin Yutang ~ THE GOOD MAN'S TREASURE ~ Tao is the mysterious secret of the universe, ~ The good man's treasure, ~ And the bad man's refuge. ~ Beautiful sayings can be sold at the market, ~ Noble conduct can be presented as a gift. ~ Though there be bad people, ~ Why reject them? ~ Therefore on the crowning of an emperor, ~ On the appointment of the Three Ministers, ~ Rather than send tributes of jade and teams of four horses, ~ Send in the tribute of Tao. ~ Wherein did the ancients prize this Tao? ~ Did they not say, "to search for the guilty ones and pardon them"? ~ Therefore is (Tao) the treasure of the world.

—[62c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ The Way is the cistern of the myriad creatures; ~ It is the treasure of the good man, ~ And that which is treasured by the bad man. ~ Beautiful words can be traded, ~ Noble deeds can be used as gifts for others. ~ Why should we reject even what is bad about men? ~ Therefore, ~ When the son of heaven is enthroned or the three ministers are installed, ~ Although they may have large jade disks ~ And be preceded by teams of four horses, ~ It would be better for them to sit down and make progress in this. ~ What was the reason for the ancients to value this so highly? ~ Did they not say: ~ "Seek and thou shalt receive; ~ Sin and thou shalt be forgiven"? ~ Therefore, ~ It is valued by all under heaven.

—[62c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ The Tao is to the ten thousand things what the shrine is in the home. ~ It is the treasure of the virtuous ~ and the protection of the wrongdoer. ~ Good words are appreciated. ~ Good deeds are accepted as gifts. ~ Even the wrongdoers are not abandoned. ~ Hence, ~ on the day an Emperor is installed ~ and appoints the three ducal ministers, ~ remain where you are and make an offering of the Tao. ~ It will be preferable to a gift of jade discs followed by a team of four horses. ~ Why did the ancients value the Tao? ~ Was it not because through it ~ you can find what you seek, ~ and because of it ~ you can escape what is hounding you? ~ Therefore, it is the most valuable thing under heaven.

—[62c22t] David H. Li ~ Direction, ~ to myriad matters, is an enclosure; ~ to people who are good, it is a treasure; ~ to people who are not good, it can reassure. ~ Good words gain people's respect; ~ good deeds gain people's admiration. ~ Why abandon people who are not good? ~ Thus, when a King is enthroned, three senior positions are filled. ~ Though there are precious jades and speedy stallions, the best present is Direction. ~ Why, through the ages, is Direction so valued? ~ Is it not because whoever seeks it gets it, and whoever is guilty, with it, receives amnesty? ~ That is why it is so valued by the world.

—[62c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ The Tao is the Innermost of all life, ~ The treasure of the virtuous who is centered therein, ~ And the refuge of the non-virtuous who has gone astray. ~ Beautiful words arising from the Tao will find an appreciative audience, ~ Noble deeds arising from the Tao will make great contributions to people, ~ And even if a person may have gone astray, ~ the Tao will not abandon him. ~ Therefore, on the day a new emperor is crowned or new ministers installed, ~ Rather than rushing to offer them discs of jade or teams of horses, ~ Simply be still and show them the Tao. ~ Why did the ancients esteem the Tao so highly? ~ Did they not say that with the Tao, ~ Those who seek find what they seek ~ and those who go astray are forgiven? ~ This is why the Tao is esteemed as the greatest treasure of the world.

—[62c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ A great country is like the drainage basin of the entire world, ~ Into which all the rivers flow, ~ It is the field of the entire world, ~ It is the femininity of the entire world. ~ Femininity always overcomes masculinity with its calmness of spirit, ~ Which it uses as a means to lower itself. ~ Thus the great country lowers itself before the small country, ~ Before it conquers the small country. ~ A small country lowers itself before a great country, ~ Before it conquers the great country. ~ Therefore some lower themselves to take, ~ And others lower themselves to gather. ~ The only wish of a great country is to hold on to and keep its endless subjects, ~ And the only wish of a small country is to engage in many occupations and tasks. ~ When they both wish to realize their aspirations, ~ Both of them together, ~ The greater of them must lower itself.

—[62c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ The Tao is the source of 'the ten thousand things', ~ It is the sage's priceless pearl, ~ And it redeems everything. ~ You know, people like to use nice words to impress you. ~ People act nicely to gain your respect - ~ but even if a person is bad, ~ neither the sage nor the Tao will desert him. ~ They accept him. ~ And when the Emperor is crowned and the three ministers appointed, ~ it's better to stay where you are and be with the Tao than to hurry off with gifts of jade and a team of four horses. ~ The old ones 'knew this gesture', ~ and by ruling this way they were never guilty of transgressions or errors. ~ Nothing under Heaven matters more than this kind of knowing.

—[62c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ The Tao is the innermost recess of all things; ~ It is what the good man cherishes ~ As well as what the bad man wants to keep. ~ With the Tao, beautiful words can buy respect; ~ Beautiful deeds can be highly regarded. ~ How can the bad man desert the Tao? ~ Hence when the emperor ascends the throne and appoints three ducal ministers, ~ It would be better to present to the emperor the Tao than jade disks followed by a team of four horses. ~ Why did ancients value the Tao so much? ~ Was it not said that by making use of the Tao ~ One could get what one desired ~ Or avoid punishment when committing an offense? ~ That is why it is valued so much in the world.

—[62c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ The Tao is the mystery of the myriad creatures. ~ It is the treasure of good men. ~ It is the protection of bad men. ~ Beautiful words of Tao can reach a high rank. ~ Respectful deeds of Tao can raise a man above others. ~ Even if a man is not good, why should he be abandoned? ~ That is why when the emperor takes office and the three ducal ministers are appointed, although gifts such as the ceremonial jade and the carriage and horses are usually given, it is better to offer the Tao. ~ And the Tao has been valued since ancient times, ~ so why shouldn't the emperor seek for it every day? ~ If he can follow this Tao, all sins will be absolved. ~ That is why the most valuable thing under Heaven is Tao.

—[62c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ The Way is the pacifier appreciated by all. ~ It is the treasure of the wise and the shelter for the unwise. ~ Eloquent words can win respect. ~ Kind deeds can win praises. ~ Since the unwise are not affected, ~ Why should they be given up as hopeless? ~ Therefore, ~ It is better to sit down and present the Way ~ Than to present a king and officials to the world ~ And to give them a precious jade ~ And a carriage and four horses at the ceremony. ~ Didn't the ancient wise ones rightly appreciate the Way ~ Because it can both satisfy our needs ~ And forgive us for our sins and folly? ~ That is why the Way is the most respected.

—[62c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ The Most Valuable Thing ~ Lao Tze says, ~ The Tao is the refuge for all existence, a treasure to men of correctitude, and a guard of less capable men. ~ Its admirable words can purchase honor; ~ its noble deeds can raise a man above others. ~ The less capable man should not be rejected. ~ That's why there is the king being selected as the Son of Heaven, and three premier ministers are arranged on their positions. ~ Although riding chariots pulled by four horses and studded with precious stones is a great honor, ~ it is even more honorable to ride on a chariot which is made of the Tao. ~ Why was it that the ancients prized this Tao so much? ~ Was it not because it could be found by seeking, and the guilty could be pardoned by it? ~ This is the reason why the whole world considered it the most valuable thing.

—[62c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ Tao is the source of all things, the treasure of good men, and the sustainer of bad men. ~ Therefore at the enthronement of an emperor and the appointment of the three ministers, better still than those, who present jewels followed by horses, is the one who sitting presents (propounds) this Tao. ~ Why did the ancients prize this Tao? ~ Was it not because it could be attained by seeking and thus sinners could be freed? ~ For this reason it has become the most valuable thing in the world. ~ Good words will procure one honour; good deeds will get one credit.

—[62c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ Tao is the refuge of all things: ~ The treasure of the good man and the shield of the bad man. ~ Beautiful words can be for sale. ~ Good deeds can become gifts to others. ~ If a man is bad, can he be forsaken? ~ Therefore when the king is crowned and the three dukes are installed, ~ Though large, priceless jade preceding a team of four horses can be offered, ~ It is not as good as sitting down and offering this Tao. ~ Why did the ancients treasure this Tao? ~ Wasn't it said: ~ "With this Tao, the seeker will obtain, and the guilty will be spared"? ~ Therefore it is valued by the world!

—[62c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ Tao is the honored center for the thousands of things. ~ The treasure of the good; ~ what protects the not good. ~ Elegant words can buy and sell; ~ fine conduct gets people promoted. ~ People who are not good, ~ why are they rejected? ~ Yes: ~ When they are enthroning the Son of Heaven or installing the Three Ministers - ~ although they are presenting in tribute jade medallions out in front of four-horse teams, ~ this cannot compare to sitting and setting forth this Tao. ~ What was the reason that the ancients treasured this Tao? ~ Is it not said: ~ "By it the seeker obtains; ~ by it the guilty escapes." ~ Yes: ~ It is the Treasure of the World.

—[62c33t] Cheng Lin ~ Truth is the abode of the whole of creation. ~ It is treasured by good men, and it should also be treasured by bad men. ~ Good words enable one to obtain honour, and good conduct enables one to receive respect. ~ When a man is bad, why should we spurn him? ~ Wherefore, it is better to advance toward Truth than to be an Emperor, or a Grand Minister, or a royal messenger wearing precious jades and riding in fine carriages. ~ Why did the ancients esteem Truth? ~ Was it not for the reason that by following Truth men could obtain what was desirable and avoid what was undesirable? ~ Because of Truth they could rule the whole Empire.

—[62c34t] Yi Wu ~ The Way is the refuge of all beings. ~ It is the good man's treasure ~ And the safeguard of the man who is not good. ~ Fine words can buy, ~ Respectable conduct can win people over. ~ If a man is not good, ~ How could he abandon the Way? ~ Therefore, if one is crowned king, ~ Installed by three dukes, ~ Although with hands full of jade, ~ Preceded by a four-horse team, ~ It is not as good as sitting here, advancing the Way. ~ Why, since ancient times, has the Way been thus valued? ~ Is it not because the one can get what he seeks ~ And the other can get rid of his sins? ~ Therefore, the Way is valued by the world.

—[62c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ Dao is the safe haven for all beings. ~ The good people value it. ~ The bad people receive protection from it. ~ Words consistent with Dao will place you in a coveted position. ~ Deeds consistent with Dao will make you stand out from the crowd. ~ Even if people are bad, Dao will not reject them. ~ There are important events as such coronation and swearing in of ministers. ~ In these pompous ceremonies, officials carrying precious jade lead the procession followed by four thoroughbreds. ~ This largess becomes insignificant when compared to simply presenting Dao as a gift. ~ Why has Dao always been valued since antiquity? ~ It is as the saying goes: ~ "If you seek it, you will get it; if you make an error, you will be forgiven." ~ Hence, Dao is valued by all.

—[62c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ The subtle essence of the universe supports all things. ~ It is a treasure to virtuous people, ~ yet it is a refuge for unvirtuous people too. ~ Good words will find their market. ~ Good deeds may be presented as a gift to another. ~ Though a person has strayed from the right path, ~ the all-encompassing subtle essence of the universe will never abandon him. ~ Hence, at the enthronement of an emperor, ~ or the appointment of the three highest ministers of the empire, ~ rather than present them with discs of jade and teams of fine horses, ~ show them the priceless subtle Way of the universe. ~ Why did the ancients esteem the subtle Way of the universe? ~ Didn't they say that a seeker will find nothing, ~ but that he can be free from all transgression? ~ That is why it is such a treasure to the world.

—[62c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ Tao is concealed in the depths of all things. ~ The worthy value it. ~ The unworthy are protected by it. ~ Good words may be traded for honor. ~ Good works may impress men. ~ Even if a man is unworthy, Tao will never exclude him. ~ Although in a great nation an emperor is established, ~ Ministers are appointed, and ~ Jade and horses are all decorated, ~ None of these is a better offer to the nation than Tao. ~ Tao has been highly esteemed since the remote past. ~ Why? ~ Because not searching for it, one obtains it. ~ Even if one has faults, one is free from them. ~ Thus, the Tao is the most highly esteemed thing in the universe.

—[62c38t] Henry Wei ~ Practicing Tao ~ Wei Tao ~ Tao is a mystery within all things. ~ It is a treasure to the good men; ~ To the bad men it gives protection. ~ Fine words may be shown at the market place; ~ Noble deeds may serve as gifts to people. ~ Some people may not be good, ~ But why should any of them be discarded? ~ Therefore, when an emperor is enthroned, ~ Or when the three chief ministers are installed, ~ Though they may have fine pieces of jade ~ Respectfully presented before the team of horses, ~ There is nevertheless nothing better for them ~ Than to sit (in meditation) and advance in Tao. ~ For what reason did the ancients prize this Tao? ~ Did they not say: ~ "With Tao one finds what one seeks, ~ And can get pardoned for one's offenses"? ~ Hence Tao is highly prized by the world.

—[62c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ Tao ~ Is the sanctuary of the ten thousand things, ~ The good man's treasure, ~ The bad man's refuge. ~ Beautiful words can buy honor, ~ Beautiful deeds can benefit people. ~ Though a man may be bad, ~ How can he be abandoned? ~ Therefore, on occasion of crowning the Son of Heaven ~

Or installing the three ministers of state, ~ Rather than present a large disc of jade, accompanied by a team of four horses, ~ Better remain in your seat and offer a tribute of this Tao. ~ Why did the ancients honor this Tao? ~ Did they not say: ~ "You get thereby what you seek; ~ You escape thereby when you have sinned." ~ Therefore they regarded it as the most precious of all things under Heaven.

—[62c40t] Tao Huang ~ Tao is the conductor of all things. ~ The treasure of the good. ~ The protector of the bad. ~ Beautiful words can advertise well. ~ Noble conduct brings praise to people. ~ As for those who conduct the bad, why reject them for it? ~ Therefore, after the crowning of the emperor comes the appointing of three administrations. ~ Being presented with jade in front of the team of four horses is not better than sitting and entering thus. ~ The reason why this is valued of old is, ~ It allows having without asking, and it allows forgiveness of wrong. ~ Thus, it is most valuable to the world.

—[62c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ Dao is the wonder of All Things. ~ Perfection is what people like. ~ Imperfection is what people dislike. ~ Beautiful words may be used for markets. ~ Beautiful deeds may be used for pride. ~ If a person is imperfect why should he be ignored? ~ Hence, the "Son of Heaven" was installed and the three dukes (Ministers) were appointed, ~ Even though one has abundant jade and wealth to establish war horses and chariots, it is not as good as to consolidate and advance Dao. ~ For what reasons did the ancients bless this Dao? ~ Is it not said that: ~ "Whatever is prayed for is obtained. ~ Whoever has sin is forgiven."? ~ Thus Dao becomes the blessing of the world.

—[62c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ Tao is the storehouse of all things. ~ It is the good man's treasure and the bad man's refuge. ~ Fine words can buy honor, ~ And fine deeds can gain respect from others. ~ Even if a man is bad, when has (Tao) rejected him? ~ Therefore on the occasion of crowning an emperor or installing the three ministers, ~ Rather than present large pieces of jade preceded by teams of four horses, ~ It is better to kneel and offer this Tao. ~ Why did the ancients highly value this Tao? ~ Did they not say, "Those who seek shall have it and those who sin shall be freed"? ~ For this reason it is valued by the world.

—[62c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Дао - это святыня десяти тысяч вещей, сокровище для людей добрых и то, что берегут недобрые. ~ Прекрасные слова могут найти непревзойденный спрос, ~ почтенному поступку могут все последовать. ~ Зачем отбрасывать людскую скверну? ~ Ведь именно для этого поставлены Сын Неба и три его советника. ~ Хотя они и выезжают на четверке лошадей с большой регалией из яшмы впереди, им лучше было бы сидя продвигаться в Дао. ~ Почему же в древности ценили это Дао? ~ Не потому ли, что, благодаря ему, успешно обретали то, к чему стремились, ~ и избегали наказания, когда были виноваты? ~ Поэтому нет ничего его ценнее в Поднебесной.

—[62c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Дао - величайшее хранилище мириад существ. ~ Это то, что является сокровищем добрых людей и защитой для тех, в ком нет добра. ~ Прекрасные слова высоко ценятся при продаже. ~ Прекрасные поступки могут вызвать людское уважение. ~ Даже если в человеке нет добра, зачем же отвергать его? ~ Поэтому взошедший на трон правитель и три властвующих князя, хотя и имеют драгоценные кольца и сопровождаются четвёркой лошадей, не сравнятся с теми, кто, не сходя с места, снискал дары Дао. ~ Почему древние ценили Дао? ~ Разве не говорилось: "Устремись, дабы достичь его, и даже если ты имел пороки - избегнешь зла". ~ За это оно и ценится в Поднебесной.

—[62c93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Дао-Путь - глубинная тайна природы всего сущего. ~ Он есть сокровище добрых; он есть то, что хранят недобрые. ~ Хорошие речи могут прославить человека в городах и весях, достойное поведение может увеличить уважение людей к нему. ~ Но даже недоброго человека можно ль отбросить? ~ Поэтому, когда Сын Неба вступает на престол и трем великим князьям-советникам даруется их сан, то впереди процессии несут диск яшмы, за коим следует четверка лошадей. ~ Но эта церемония все же хуже поведения человека, который лишь сидит, чтобы к Пути Великому приблизиться. ~ За что же древние ценили так сей Дао-Путь? ~ Разве не говорили они: "С ним вы будете искать - и обряцете, будете виновны - и избежите кары". ~ Вот почему его ценит Поднебесная.

— [62с94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Дао - таинственная основа мириад вещей, ~ драгоценность добрых людей, защита от недобрых людей. ~ Красивыми речами, конечно, можно заморозить толпу на базарной площади. ~ Благопристойным поведением, конечно, можно возвыситься над другими. ~ Однако как же избавиться от того недоброго, что глубоко таится в людях? ~ Для этого утверждают на престоле Сына Неба и назначают трех гунов. ~ Они хотя и держат в руках символы власти и ездят в экипажах, ~ запряженных четверками лошадей, но все же не лучше ли [им] воссесть и ехать на самом Дао! ~ Почему в древности ценили это Дао? ~ Безгласные через него получали необходимое, ~ а совершившие злодеяние через него искореняли вредное. ~ Вот почему [оно] было ценностью для Поднебесной.

— [62с95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Дао - глубокая [основа] всех вещей. ~ Оно сокровище добрых и защита недобрых людей. ~ Красивые слова можно произносить публично, доброе поведение можно распространять на людей. ~ Но зачем же покидать недобрых людей? ~ В таком случае для чего же выдвигают государя и назначают ему трех советников? ~ Государь и советники хотя и имеют драгоценные камни и могут ездить на колесницах, но лучше будет им спокойно следовать дао. ~ Почему в древности ценили дао? ~ В то время люди не стремились к приобретению богатств и преступления прощались. ~ Поэтому [дао] в Поднебесной ценилось дорого.

— [62с96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Тао есть глубина бытия. ~ Оно и есть сокровище добрых людей. ~ Оно также и есть то, что держат злые люди. ~ Изящные слова могут быть куплены ценою. ~ Добрые поступки могут быть совершаемы всеми. ~ Хотя люди злы, но нельзя совсем бросить их. ~ Выбирают царя и трех великих сановников. ~ Имея в руках драгоценный камень, они разъезжают в колесницах, но это бесконечно хуже, нежели проповедовать Тао, сидя на одном месте. ~ В чем заключается причина того, что в древности Тао глубоко уважалось? ~ Не в том ли заключается, что благодаря Тао прощались преступники? ~ Оттого, быть может, в древности Тао почиталось во всем мире.

— [62с97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Путь - это хранилище всех вещей, ~ Сокровищница для добрых людей и убежище для недобрых. ~ Красивыми речами можно торговать, ~ Славными поступками можно привлечь почитателей. ~ Пусть человек недобр - бывало ли так, чтоб его отвергали? ~ Посему, когда восходит Сын Неба или жалуют ~ Трех Князей, ~ Не подносите им яшмовые жезлы и четверки коней, ~ А лучше, сидя покойно, вручите им этот Путь. ~ Древние ценили этот Путь - что же он такое? ~ Разве не сказано: "Кто ищет с ним, тот обряцет, ~ Кто провинился, тот, обладая им, уцелеет"? ~ Вот почему его ценили в мире.

— [62с98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Путь - красный угол мириад сущностей. ~ Сокровище для совершенствующихся людей. ~ Охраняющая сила для не-совершенствующихся людей. ~ Красивые слова подходят для базаров. ~ Благородные поступки нужны для репутации. ~ Есть в человеке несовершенное. ~ Как можно избавиться от этого? ~ Причинность: ~ Происходит интронизация сына Неба, инаугурация трех князей-гунов. ~ Хотя несут регалии двумя руками и впереди четверка лошадей, не лучше ли сидеть, чтобы продвигаться по этому Пути. ~ В древности то, из-за чего ценили этот Путь, разве не выражали таким образом: ~ Через это ищущий обряцет, а имеющий грехи будет прощен. ~ Причинность: ~ Осуществляют благородное в Поднебесной.

—[63c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ Act without acting; ~ Serve without concern for affairs; ~ Find flavor in what has no flavor. ~ Regard the small as large and the few as many, ~ And repay resentment with kindness. ~ Plan for the difficult while {it is easy}; ~ {Act on the large} while it's minute. ~ The most difficult things in the world begin as things that are easy; ~ The largest things in the world arise from the minute. ~ Therefore the Sage, to the end does not strive to do the great, ~ And as a result, he is able {to accomplish the great}; ~ {Those who} too lightly agree {will necessarily be trusted by few}; ~ And those who regard many things as easy will necessarily [end up] with many difficulties. ~ Therefore, even the Sage regards things as difficult, ~ And as a result, in the end he has no difficulty.

—[63c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ DO the Non-Ado. ~ Strive for the effortless. ~ Savour the savourless. ~ Exalt the low. ~ Multiply the few. ~ Requite injury with kindness. ~ Nip troubles in the bud. ~ Sow the great in the small. ~ Difficult things of the world ~ Can only be tackled when they are easy. ~ Big things of the world ~ Can only be achieved by attending to their small beginnings. ~ Thus, the Sage never has to grapple with big things, ~ Yet he alone is capable of achieving them! ~ He who promises lightly must be lacking in faith. ~ He who thinks everything easy will end by finding everything difficult. ~ Therefore, the Sage, who regards everything as difficult, ~ Meets with no difficulties in the end.

—[63c03t] D. C. Lau ~ Do that which consists in taking no action; ~ Pursue that which is not meddlesome; ~ Savour that which has no flavour. ~ Make the small big and the few many; ~ Do good to him who has done you an injury. ~ Lay plans for the accomplishment of the difficult before it becomes difficult; ~ Make something big by starting with it when small. ~ Difficult things in the world must needs have their beginnings in the easy; ~ Big things must needs have their beginnings in the small. ~ Therefore it is because the sage never attempts to be great that he succeeds in becoming great. ~ One who makes promises rashly rarely keeps good faith; ~ One who is in the habit of considering things easy meets with frequent difficulties. ~ Therefore even the sage treats some things as difficult. ~ That is why in the end no difficulties can get the better of him.

—[63c04t] R. L. Wing ~ Act without action; work without effort. ~ Taste without savoring. ~ Magnify the small; increase the few. ~ Repay ill-will with kindness. ~ Plan the difficult when it is easy; ~ Handle the big where it is small. ~ The world's hardest work begins when it is easy; ~ The world's largest effort begins where it is small. ~ Evolved Individuals, finally, take no great action, ~ And in that way the great is achieved. ~ Those who commit easily, inspire little trust. ~ How easy to inspire hardness! ~ Therefore Evolved Individuals view all as difficult. ~ Finally they have no difficulty!

—[63c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ Consider nonaction as an action, having no trouble as an affair and flavourless as a flavour. ~ No matter how hostile others are towards me, I always repay them with "De." ~ Prepare for a difficult problem while it is easy, ~ Enter on a great task while it is small. ~ All the difficult things under Heaven necessarily arise from the state in which they were easy; ~ All the great tasks under Heaven arise from the state in which they were small. ~ For this reason, the sage never does great things, ~ And he can accomplish great things just on that account. ~ Light promising makes one lose one's credit, ~ And thinking things easy leads to difficulties. ~ So, the sage, though he is very wise, pays much attention to the difficulties, ~ Therefore he is free from difficulties in the end.

—[63c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ Practice non-action. ~ Work without doing. ~ Taste the tasteless. ~ Magnify the small, increase the few. ~ Reward bitterness with care. ~ See simplicity in the complicated. ~ Achieve greatness in little things. ~ In the universe the difficult things are done as if they are easy. ~ In the universe great acts are made up of small deeds. ~ The sage does not attempt anything very big, ~ And thus achieves greatness. ~ Easy promises make for little trust. ~ Taking things lightly results in great difficulty. ~ Because the sage always confronts difficulties, ~ He never experiences them.

— [63c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ Act in the state of non-action; ~ Work but do not work for gain; ~ Taste but do not taste for the taste. ~ Never mind if it is big, small, many, or few, ~ Just repay injury with benevolence. ~ To do the difficult we start with the easy. ~ To do the great thing we start with the small. ~ All the difficult tasks under heaven must begin with the easy parts. ~ All the great achievements under heaven must begin with the small steps. ~ The Sage never sets out to do great things. ~ That way he accomplishes great results. ~ Those who make easy promises will not be trusted. ~ Those who say everything is easy ~ will often have difficulty accomplishing their tasks, ~ The Sage, on the other hand, takes on the easy tasks as he takes on the difficult. ~ So in the end no difficulty will hold him up.

— [63c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ Treat lack of achievement as the achievement, ~ treat lack of accomplishment as the accomplishment, ~ treat lack of flavor as the flavor. ~ Make the small big, make the less more, return hatred with DE. ~ Solve problems while they are simple; accomplish big things while they are small. ~ The most difficult tasks in the world can only be finished if you attack them while they are simple; ~ The most important things in the world can only be accomplished if you start them while they are small. ~ Therefore, the great men never started with big things, so they accomplished big things. ~ Promises made easily have no credibility; if you view everything as easy, you will meet many difficulties. ~ So, the great men tried to find as many difficulties as possible, so they never had difficulties.

— [63c09t] Walter Gorn Old, FORETHOUGHT ~ Acting without design, occupying oneself without making a business of it, finding the great in what is small, and the many in the few, repaying injury with kindness, effecting difficult things while they are easy, and managing great things in their beginnings, is the method of Tao. ~ All difficult things have their origin in that which is easy, and great things in that which is small. ~ Therefore the wise man can accomplish great things without even attempting them. ~ He who lightly assents will seldom keep his word. ~ He who accounts all things easy will have many difficulties. ~ Therefore the Sage takes great account of small things, and so never has any difficulty.

— [63c10t] James Legge ~ (It is the way of the Tao) to act without (thinking of) acting; ~ to conduct affairs without (feeling the) trouble of them; ~ to taste without discerning any flavour; ~ to consider what is small as great, and a few as many; ~ and to recompense injury with kindness. ~ (The master of it) anticipates things that are difficult while they are easy, and does things that would become great while they are small. ~ All difficult things in the world are sure to arise from a previous state in which they were easy, and all great things from one in which they were small. ~ Therefore the sage, while he never does what is great, is able on that account to accomplish the greatest things. ~ He who lightly promises is sure to keep but little faith; ~ he who is continually thinking things easy is sure to find them difficult. ~ Therefore the sage sees difficulty even in what seems easy, and so never has any difficulties.

— [63c11t] David Hinton ~ If you're nothing doing what you do, ~ you act without acting and savor without savoring, ~ you render the small vast and the few many, ~ use Integrity to repay hatred, ~ see the complexity in simplicity, ~ find the vast in the minute. ~ The complex affairs of all beneath heaven are there in simplicity, ~ and the vast affairs of all beneath heaven are there in the minute. ~ That's why a sage never bothers with vastness and so becomes utterly vast. ~ Easy promises breed little trust, and too much simplicity breeds too much complexity. ~ That's why a sage inhabits the complexity of things and so avoids all complexity.

— [63c12t] Chichung Huang ~ Act without action; ~ Disturb without disturbance; ~ Taste the tasteless. ~ Great, small, much, little, ~ Requite enmity with favor. ~ Tackle a difficult issue while it is easy; ~ Create a great enterprise while it is small. ~ All difficult issues under heaven ~ Begin from easy ones; ~ All great enterprises under heaven ~ Begin from small ones. ~ Hence, the sage man never presumed vastness, ~ So, he could achieve vastness. ~ For he who makes promises lightly ~ Must lack in trustworthiness; ~ He who takes many things easy ~ Must encounter many difficulties. ~ Hence, even the sage man ~ Considered the task difficult, ~ Therefore, eventually he had no difficulty.

—[63c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ Do (wei) when there is nothing to do (wu-wei), ~ Manage affairs (shih) when there are none to manage, ~ Know (chih) by not knowing. ~ Regard the great as small, the much as little. ~ Repay injury (yüan) with te. ~ Plan the difficult while it is easy. ~ Accomplish (wei) the great when it is small. ~ Difficult affairs of the world, ~ Must be done while they are easy. ~ Great affairs of the world, ~ Must be done while they are small. ~ The sage never does anything great, ~ Therefore he can accomplish the great. ~ He who makes promises lightly seldom keeps his words. ~ He who takes much to be easy finds much to be difficult. ~ Therefore even the sage takes things to be difficult, ~ So that in the end they are not difficult.

—[63c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ A person who quests for Tao must carry out the principle of non-interference; ~ He must restrain himself from implementing his selfish desires [particularly at the cost of others]; ~ He must examine facts thoroughly in spite of boredom; ~ He must requite all accusations and animosities with virtuous acts, no matter whether it is serious, minor, many, or few. ~ A difficult problem should be tackled from its easiest points; ~ To accomplish a great deed one should start from working on its minute details; ~ Difficult works in this world must be built up from easy points; ~ Grand tasks in this world should be started from within small scales. ~ Accordingly, a Sage did not [consciously] aim at accomplishing a grand task, yet he would eventually complete great deeds [with accrual of realistic achievements through working diligently step-by-step]. ~ A person who makes promises easily would keep only a few of them; ~ A person who seeks easy way out will confront more difficulties later; ~ Therefore, a Sage would think hard and keep in mind that each task could be more intricate than it appears to be; ~ Eventually no hardship can hampered him.

—[63c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ Do non-doing. ~ Carry out no-work. ~ Taste the tasteless. ~ Make the small big. ~ Make the little much. ~ Render Virtue to enmity. ~ Plan the difficult when it is still easy. ~ Accomplish the great when it is still small. ~ Difficult things in the world can be achieved in what is easy. ~ Big things in the world can be achieved in what is minute. ~ Thus, the sage never does big things, yet by that he is capable of achieving them! ~ He who promises lightly must rarely fulfill it. ~ He who thinks a thing easy will find it difficult. ~ Therefore, the sage, who regards everything as difficult, meets with no difficulties in the end.

—[63c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ Practice no forcing; undertake natural tasks; eat plain food. ~ No matter big or small, more or less, reply hostility with kindness. ~ When handling difficulties, one should start with the easiest first. ~ When eating the elephant, take one bite at a time. ~ In the world, difficult tasks are composed of easy ones; ~ Big tasks are formed by small ones. ~ This is why the sage never attempt big, but can achieve big. ~ Easily promising results in less credibility. ~ Broadly underestimating leads to a lot of difficulties. ~ This is why sages treat everything as if it was difficult. ~ So they never have difficulties.

—[63c17t] Arthur Waley ~ It acts without action, does without doing, finds flavour in what is flavourless, ~ Can make the small great and the few many, ~ 'Requites injuries with good deeds, ~ Deals with the hard while it is still easy, ~ With the great while it is still small.' ~ In the governance of empire everything difficult must be dealt with while it is still easy, ~ Everything great must be dealt with while it is still small. ~ Therefore the Sage never has to deal with the great; and so achieves greatness. ~ But again ~ 'Light assent inspires little confidence ~ And "many easies" means many a hard.' ~ Therefore the Sage knows too how to make the easy difficult, and by doing so avoid all difficulties!

—[63c18t] Richard John Lynn ~ Act by not acting; ~ do by not doing; ~ find flavor in that which has no flavor. ~

Deal with the small as if it were the great, and deal with the few as if it were the many, but respond to resentment in terms of virtue. ~ Plan for the difficult while it is still easy; ~ work on the great while it is still small. ~ Every difficult matter under Heaven surely originates in something easy, and every great matter under Heaven surely originates in something small. ~ Therefore it is because the sage never tries to be great that he fulfills his greatness. ~ Assent lightly given surely inspires little trust. ~ Regarding many things as easy is sure to result in many difficulties. ~ Therefore the sage still regards them as difficulties. ~ Thus he never has difficulties.

—[63c19t] Lin Yutang ~ DIFFICULT AND EASY ~ Accomplish do-nothing. ~ Attend to no-affairs. ~ Taste the flavorless. ~ Whether it is big or small, many or few, ~ Requite hatred with virtue. ~ Deal with the difficult while yet it is easy; ~ Deal with the big while yet it is small. ~ The difficult (problems) of the world ~ Must be dealt with while they are yet easy; ~ The great (problems) of the world ~ Must be dealt with while they are yet small. ~ Therefore the Sage by never dealing with great (problems) ~ Accomplishes greatness. ~ He who lightly makes a promise ~ Will find it often hard to keep his faith. ~ He who makes light of many things ~ Will encounter many difficulties. ~ Hence even the Sage regards things as difficult, ~ And for that reason never meets with difficulties.

—[63c20t] Victor H. Mair ~ Act through nonaction, ~ Handle affairs through noninterference, ~ Taste what has no taste, ~ Regard the small as great, the few as many, ~ Repay resentment with integrity. ~ Undertake difficult tasks by approaching what is easy in them; ~ Do great deeds by focusing on their minute aspects. ~ All difficulties under heaven arise from what is easy, ~ All great things under heaven arise from what is minute. ~ For this reason, ~ The sage never strives to do what is great. ~ Therefore, ~ He can achieve greatness. ~ One who lightly assents will seldom be believed; ~ One who thinks everything is easy will encounter much difficulty. ~ For this reason, ~ Even the sage considers things difficult. ~ Therefore, ~ In the end he is without difficulty.

—[63c21t] Tolbert McCarroll ~ Act without striving. ~ Work without interfering. ~ Find the flavor in what is flavorless. ~ Enlarge the small, increase the few. ~ Heal injury with goodness. ~ Handle the difficult while it is still easy. ~ Cultivate the great while it is still small. ~ All difficult things begin as easy things. ~ All great things begin as small things. ~ Therefore, ~ the True Person never attempts anything great, and accomplishes great things. ~ Lightly made promises inspire little faith. ~ Trying to make things easy results in great difficulties. ~ Therefore, ~ the True Person regards everything as difficult, and is never overcome by difficulties.

—[63c22t] David H. Li ~ Govern with laissez-faire. ~ Act without fanfare. ~ Dine with the commonest fare. ~ Big begins as small; many accrue from few. ~ In tackling difficult tasks, first tackle those easy; ~ In tackling big tasks, first tackle those flimsy. ~ The difficult tasks of the world begin as easy; ~ The big tasks of the world begin as flimsy. ~ Thus, the sage, who never considers self big, completes many big tasks. ~ Thus, ~ promise easily made leads to promise not fulfilled; ~ difficulty underestimated leads to difficulty multiplied. ~ Thus, the sage, in treating every task as difficult, encounters no difficulties.

—[63c23t] Yasuhiko Genku Kimura ~ Act from the still fulcrum of non-action, ~ Engage from the still fulcrum of non-engagement, ~ Experience from the still fulcrum of non-experience. ~ Regard the insignificant as significant, ~ Regard the minor as major, ~ Requite the unkind with kindness. ~ Meet the difficult while it is still easy, ~ Solve the major while it is still minor. ~ Difficult problems of the world always arise from easy ones, ~ Major issues of the world always arise from minor ones. ~ Therefore, the sage never deals with major issues, ~ Yet his action always leads to major accomplishment. ~ Those who commit lightly are seldom to be trusted. ~ Those who assume things to be easy are always met with difficulties. ~ Therefore, the sage assumes everything to be difficult, ~ And ends up having no difficulty at all.

—[63c24t] Chou-Wing Chohan ~ The Tao is the source of everything, ~ The treasure of the good man, ~ The sustainer of the bad man. ~ Therefore, ~ Even the ceremonial splendor of the coronation of the emperor and his three ministers, ~ And the value of the jewels and the knights' horses, ~ Are nothing compared to the splendor of this Tao. ~ Why did the ancients value the Tao? ~ Is it because it is possible to seek it and find it and liberate sinners with it? ~ For this reason, the Tao is the most valuable thing in the world. ~ Good words will nurture our honor, ~ Good deeds will give a person a good name.

—[63c25t] Man-Ho Kwok ~ The sage does nothing, and so he never fails - ~ He holds on to nothing, and so he never loses ... ~ Whereas the rest of us always seem to mess up our lives just at the moment when we seem to be succeeding! ~ That's why the sage wants nothing for himself. ~ He doesn't want precious things or possessions. ~ What is he? ~ A Student Of The Unknowable, so he doesn't make mistakes like the rest of us but always tries to help us to be true to who we are without ever standing in our way. ~ And so he says: ~ Do things wu-wei, by doing nothing; ~ Achieve without trying to achieve anything; ~ Savour the taste of what you cannot taste; ~ Make a small thing great, and the few into many; ~ Take on the largest things when they're still small, ~ Start the hardest things while they're still easy. ~ It's always the person who thinks things are easy that finds them the hardest in the end. ~ The way he sees it: everything's potentially tricky, so he never ends up out of his depth.

—[63c26t] Gu Zhengkun ~ Act by means of inaction; ~ Deal with matters by means of not being meddlesome; ~ Taste by means of tastelessness. ~ The big stems from the small; ~ The many is based on the few. ~ To overcome the difficult should begin with the easy; ~ To accomplish what is big should begin with the small. ~ The difficult things in the world must originate in the easy; ~ The big things in the world must take root in the small. ~ That is why the sage can accomplish what is great by never attempting to be great. ~ Light promise-giving, light promise-breaking; ~ The easier one considers things, the more difficult things become. ~ That is why the sage never meets with difficulty ~ Because he always considers things difficult.

—[63c27t] Chao-Hsiu Chen ~ Do that which takes no action. ~ Deal with that which engenders no effort. ~ Taste that which has no flavour. ~ Treat the small as the great. ~ Return enmity with virtue. ~ Plan the difficult as the easy. ~ Carry out the hard work as if it were the finer details. ~ The difficult things under Heaven come from the easy things. ~ Great matter is made up of minor matter. ~ Therefore the sage does not try to be great, and thus he can be great. ~ He who makes easy promises can be little trusted. ~ He who considers things to be easy will meet many difficulties. ~ That is why the sage expects difficulties, and therefore encounters none.

—[63c28t] Liu Qixuan ~ One does things so that one needs to do nothing. ~ One takes actions so that one needs no action. ~ One tastes so that one can appreciate tastelessness. ~ One values what is small or little, and returns good for evil. ~ One starts from the easiest to achieve the most difficult. ~ One starts from the most trivial to achieve the highest. ~ For it is only by taking easy measures ~ That one can achieve the most difficult in the world. ~ It is only by taking trivial steps ~ That one can achieve the highest in the world. ~ Therefore, the wise person who never looks important ~ Is able to be the most important. ~ Those who make hasty promises can rarely keep them. ~ Those who think nothing difficult will have many difficulties. ~ That is why the wise person worries about difficulties ~ And can therefore solve them successfully.

—[63c29t] Shi Fu Hwang ~ Difficult And Easy ~ Lao Tze says, ~ He who practices acting without intent to control fate will find that there is no business which is troubling him to manage. ~ He who can taste a tasteless thing will learn to regard what is small as great, and a few as many; ~ and to recompense injury with kindness. ~ He will deal with things that are difficult while they are easy, ~ and handle things that would become great while they are still small. ~ All difficult things in the world arise from an original state of having been easy, ~ and all great things arise from an original state of having been small. ~ Therefore the sage never attempts to achieve a great feat. ~ He who makes promises lightly rarely keeps good faith. ~ He who likes to think things will be easy will find them difficult. ~ Therefore the sage sees difficulty even in what seems easy, so they are always free of difficulties.

—[63c30t] Ch'u Ta-Kao ~ Act non-action; undertake no undertaking; taste the tasteless. ~ The Sage desires the desireless, and prizes no articles that are difficult to get. ~ He learns no learning, but reviews what others have passed through. ~ Thus he lets all things develop in their natural way, and does not venture to act. ~ Regard the small as great; regard the few as many. ~ Manage the difficult while they are easy; ~ Manage the great while they are small. ~ All difficult things in the world start from the easy; ~ All great things in the world start from the small. ~ The tree that fills a man's arms arises from a tender shoot; ~ The nine-storeyed tower is raised from a heap of earth; ~ A thousand miles' journey begins from the spot under one's feet. ~ Therefore the Sage never attempts great things, and thus he can achieve what is great. ~ He who makes easy promises will seldom keep his word; ~ He who regards many things as easy will find many difficulties. ~ Therefore the Sage regards things as difficult, and consequently never has difficulties.

—[63c31t] Paul J. Lin ~ Acting by inaction; ~ Doing by not doing; ~ Tasting by not tasting. ~ Whether it is great or small, whether it is much or little, ~ Always repaying malice with virtue. ~ Planning difficulties from the easier. ~ Employing the great from the small. ~ The world's difficult things surely begin with the easy. ~ The world's great things surely begin with the small. ~ Therefore, the Sage never does anything to be great ~ And so accomplishes greatness. ~ To take one's promises lightly results in little confidence. ~ To take things too easily results in much difficulty. ~ Therefore, even the Sage takes things seriously. ~ And never has any difficulty.

—[63c32t] Michael LaFargue ~ Be a Non Doer, ~ work at Not Working, ~ acquire a taste for that which has no taste. ~ Treat small things as though they were great; ~ treat few things as though they were many. ~ "Reward what is injurious, with kind Te." ~ Plan difficult things focusing on the easy parts; ~ do great things focusing on the small details. ~ Difficult tasks in the world always begin from what is easy, ~ great tasks in the world always begin from what is small. ~ And so the Wise Person: ~ Does not 'do great things', ~ and so is able to fulfill his greatness. ~ Yes: ~ Light agreement is never very trustworthy, ~ considering everything easy makes everything difficult. ~ And so the Wise Person: ~ Treats things as difficult, ~ and in the end has no difficulty.

—[63c33t] Cheng Lin ~ Abide by inaction. ~ Do not crave for accomplishment. ~ Discard learning. ~ Regard great, small, much and little as the same. ~ Deal with what is easy as though it were difficult; ~ with what is trivial as though it were important. ~ The world's difficult tasks may appear easy in the beginning, just as the world's great achievements may appear small in the beginning. ~ Because the Sage does not go about great undertakings, he is able to accomplish great things. ~ He who lightly makes promises will surely be found wanting in good faith. ~ He who often underestimates difficult tasks will surely be beset with difficulties. ~ Because the Sage is always aware of the existence of difficulties, he never encounters difficulties.

—[63c34t] Yi Wu ~ Act through non-action, ~ Serve through non-doing, ~ Taste through non-tasting, ~ Do the great through the small, ~ Deal with the myriad through the few, ~ Repay malice with virtue, ~ Solve the difficult problem at its easiest, ~ Do the great work at its smallest. ~ The difficult affairs of the world surely start from the easy, ~ The great works of the world surely begin from the small. ~ Therefore, the sage, never doing anything for greatness, ~ Is able to achieve greatness. ~ One who promises lightly surely will not be trustworthy; ~ One who thinks everything easy will end in more difficulty. ~ Therefore, the sage, taking everything as difficult, ~ Will have no difficulty in the end.

—[63c35t] Han Hiong Tan ~ Normal people act rashly, but the sage does not. ~ Normal people interfere freely, but the sage is different. ~ Normal people prefer tasty cuisine, but the sage prefers plain food. ~ The sage will deal with all matters, big or small, by always recompensing ill will with goodwill. ~ To solve a complex issue, you must first start working with the easy problems. ~ To accomplish a huge task, you must start and graduate from a series of simpler tasks. ~ To solve the most complex problem, you must tackle the simplest one first. ~ The greatest task in the world is often the aggregation of smaller tasks. ~ The sage has never endeavoured to accomplish a great task. ~ Yet, he accomplishes a great task. ~ A person who readily gives promises often fails to keep them. ~ A person who takes things too lightly will definitely be plagued with many problems. ~ The sage regards everything as potentially troublesome. ~ Consequently, he will never encounter any difficulty.

—[63c36t] Hua-Ching Ni ~ Do that which is not done by doing. ~ Make that which is not made by making. ~ Taste that which cannot be distinguished by taste. ~ Hold the same regard for the few and the many. ~ Requite the unkind with kindness. ~ Thus, one of subtle virtue desires what is not connected with desire, ~ sets no value on the rare goods of the world, ~ learns what is not learned through learning, ~ and induces people to return to that which they have overlooked.

—[63c37t] Chang Chung-yuan ~ Action or non-action, work or non-work, knowledge or non-knowledge, ~ Large or small, more or less: ~ It is just like returning hatred with love, ~ Contemplating the difficult with the easy, ~ Working on the great through the small. ~ Because the hard tasks in the world must be preceded by what is easy, ~ Great affairs in the world must begin with what is minute. ~ Hence, the wise never works on what is great; ~ He achieves what is great. ~ The easier it is to promise a thing, ~ The less one can fulfill. ~ The more lightly things are taken, ~ The more difficulties occur. ~ Therefore, the wise takes things as difficult; ~ He is always free from the difficult.

—[63c38t] Henry Wei ~ Origin of Favors ~ En Shih ~ Practice non-interference. ~ Assert non-assertion. ~ Taste the tasteless. ~ Regard small as great, little as much. ~ Requite evil with virtue. ~ Tackle difficult tasks while they are easy; ~ Perform great tasks while they are small. ~ Difficult tasks must be begun when yet easy; ~ Great tasks must be begun when yet small. ~ That's why the Sage, to the end of his days, ~ Does not have to tackle great tasks, ~ And for this very reason achieves greatness. ~ Promises lightly made show little good faith; ~ Duties neglected are bound to become difficult. ~ That's why the Sage assumes things to be difficult, ~ And never in life incurs any difficulty.

—[63c39t] Ha Poong Kim ~ Act through no-action, ~ Attend to no-affair, ~ Relish no-flavor, ~ Take the small as big and the few as many. ~ Repay hatred with Te. ~ Plan difficult things while they are easy. ~ Handle big things while they are small. ~ Difficult things under Heaven ~ Always arise from what is easy; ~ Big things under Heaven ~ Always arise from what is small. ~ For this reason the sage ~ Never intends big things, ~ And thus can accomplish big things. ~ He who agrees lightly invariably inspires little faith. ~ He who considers many things easy invariably encounters many difficulties. ~ For this reason even the sage considers things difficult; ~ Therefore he never encounters difficulties.

—[63c40t] Tao Huang ~ Do nondoing. ~ Engage in non-affairs. ~ Savor non-flavor. ~ Large or small, many or few, reward or punishment, are all being done through Action. ~ Seek what is difficult with ease. ~ Effect what is great while it is small. ~ The most difficult things in the world are done while they are easy. ~ The greatest things in the world are done while they are small. ~ The sage never plans to do a great thing. ~ Thus, he accomplishes what is great. ~ Facile promises necessarily result in little trust. ~ What is easy necessarily entails difficulty. ~ Thus the sage, through extreme trials, encounters no difficulty.

—[63c41t] Tang Zi-chang ~ Do not interfere; ~ prepare the unprepared; ~ and think the unthinkable. ~ No matter whether it is great or small, whether it is much or little, hatred must be met with love. ~ Therefore, resolve the difficulty when it is easy. ~ Change the graveness when it is insignificant. ~ A difficult world affair must be solved when it is still easy. ~ A grave world situation must be changed when it is insignificant. ~ However, the Sage ruler never wishes himself to be superior, therefore he eventually becomes superior. ~ Hence an easy promise must result in promise-breaking. ~ Frequent easy-goings meet more difficulties. ~ A Sage was always aware of difficulties, thus he met no difficulty at last.

—[63c42t] Wing-tsit Chan ~ Act without action. ~ Do without ado. ~ Taste without tasting. ~ Whether it is big or small, many or few, repay hatred with virtue. ~ Prepare for the difficult while it is still easy. ~ Deal with the big while it is still small. ~ Difficult undertakings have always started with what is easy. ~ And great undertakings have always started with what is small. ~ Therefore the sage never strives for the great, ~ And thereby the great is achieved. ~ He who makes rash promises surely lacks faith. ~ He who takes things too easily will surely encounter much difficulty. ~ For this reason even the sage regards things as difficult. ~ And therefore he encounters no difficulty.

—[63c91t] И. И. Семенов ~ Действовать в бездействии, заниматься делом недеяния и наслаждаться вкусом не имеющего вкуса. ~ Находить большое в малом, многое в немногом и воздавать добром за ненависть. ~ Добывают трудное из легкого, создают великое из незначительного. ~ Все, что в Поднебесной трудно делать, начинать легко, ~ и все великие дела берут начало в самом незначительном. ~ Именно поэтому Премудрый человек никогда не делает великого и потому он наделен способностью осуществить свою великость. ~ Кто много обещает, тому мало доверяют. ~ Большая легкость оборачивается великим затруднением. ~ Вот почему Премудрый человек как бы во всем испытывает затруднение, но именно поэтому он никогда не затрудняется.

—[63c92t] А. А. Маслов ~ Действуй недеянием. ~ Совершай дела недеянием. ~ Осязай то, что не имеет запаха. ~ Умаяй великое и делай большое малым. ~ И на зло воздавай Благостью. ~ Намеревайся свершить трудное, пока оно легко. ~ Осуществляй большое, пока оно мало. ~ Все трудные дела в Поднебесной должны вершиться, пока они легки. ~ Все великие дела в Поднебесной должны вершиться, пока они малы. ~ Вот почему мудрецы, никогда не начиная своих свершений с великого, могли достичь Великого. ~ В том, кто легко даёт обещания, мало искренности. ~ Тот, кто считает дела лёгкими, неизбежно столкнётся с великими трудностями. ~ Вот почему мудрецы, считая многие дела крайне трудными, от начала не сталкивались с трудностями.

—[63c93t] Е. А. Горчинов ~ Действуй в недеянии; ~ служи, не служа, ~ вкушай, не чувствуя вкуса; ~ в великом зри мелкое, ~ во многом зри малое. ~ На зло плати благом. ~ Стремись совершать трудное благодаря тому, что в нем легкое, и верши великое благодаря тому, что в нем незаметное. ~ Ведь трудные дела Поднебесной свершаются только исходя из легкого; ~ великие дела Поднебесной вершатся только благодаря незаметному. ~ Тот, кто может до конца не творить ничего великого, один лишь способен завершить великое. ~ Поэтому легкомысленному редко верят, поэтому во многом легком обязательно таится много трудного. ~ Поэтому совершенный мудрец считает свои дела трудными, но до самого их завершения не испытывает никаких затруднений.

—[63c94t] А. Е. Лукьянов ~ Деяй недеяние, служи неслужбу, вкушай безвкусное, ~ в величии и ничтожестве, в достатке и недостатке ~ на зло ответь Дэ (Добродетелью). ~ Планирование трудного начинается с самого легкого. ~ Созидание великого начинается с самого малого. ~ Трудные дела Поднебесной непременно начинаются с легкого. ~ Великие дела Поднебесной непременно начинаются с малого. ~ Вот почему совершенномудрый человек никогда не стремится к величию, поэтому может создать свое величие. ~ Кто легко обещает, непременно теряет доверие. ~ Кто умножает легкое, непременно умножает трудное. ~ Вот почему совершенномудрый человек относится ко всему как к трудному, поэтому никогда не испытывает трудностей.

— [63c95t] Ян Хин-шун ~ Нужно осуществлять недеяние, соблюдать спокойствие и вкушать безвкусное. ~ Великое состоит из малого, а многое - из немногого. ~ На ненависть нужно отвечать добром. ~ Преодоление трудного начинается с легкого, ~ осуществление великого начинается с малого, ~ ибо в мире трудное образуется из легкого, а великое - из малого. ~ Поэтому совершенномудрый начинает не с великого, тем самым он совершает великое. ~ Кто много обещает, тот не заслуживает доверия. ~ Где много легких дел, там много и трудных. ~ Поэтому совершенномудрый относится к делу как к трудному, поэтому он не испытывает трудности.

— [63c96t] Д. П. Конисси ~ Все должны быть бездеятельными. ~ Всем следует соблюдать полное спокойствие. ~ Все должны употреблять простейшую пищу. ~ Великое есть малое, многое - не многое. ~ Ненавидящим вас отомстите добром. ~ Когда вы благополучны, то подумайте, что нужно предпринять во время беды, так как великая беда начинается с незначительной. ~ Беда всего мира происходит из мелочи, как великое дело - из малых. ~ Святой муж не желает быть великим мира, поэтому и совершает великое дело. ~ Легко достигнутое согласие не заслуживает доверия. ~ Где много легких дел, там много и трудных. ~ Вот почему святой муж всегда живет как в беде, поэтому для него не существует беды.

— [63c97t] В. В. Малявин ~ Действуй, не действуя. ~ Делай, не делая. ~ Находи вкус там, где вкуса нет. ~ Находи большое в маленьком и многое в малом. ~ На зло отвечай совершенством. ~ Готовься к трудностям, пока легко, ~ Предвидь великое в пустячном: ~ Все трудное в мире происходит из легкого, ~ Все великое в мире происходит из ничтожного. ~ Премудрый человек никогда не стремится к величию - ~ И потому может стать великим. ~ Кто легко раздает обещания, тот не заслужит доверия, ~ Кто многое считает легким, познает много трудностей. ~ Вот почему премудрый человек все считает трудным - ~ И вовек не испытывает трудностей.

— [63c98t] Б. Б. Виноградский ~ Осуществляют отсутствие осуществления. ~ Действуют в отсутствии дел. ~ Вкушают отсутствие вкуса. ~ Большое - маленькое. ~ Многое - малое. ~ Отвечай на обиды посредством Потенции. ~ Замышляя трудное, будь в его легком. ~ Осуществляя большое, будь в его тонком. ~ В Поднебесной трудные дела обязательно складываются из легких. ~ В Поднебесной большие дела обязательно складываются из мелочей. ~ Это дает: ~ Человек мудрости заканчивает, не осуществляя большого. ~ Причинность: ~ Может совершить это большое. ~ Ведь, легко обещая, уменьшаешь веру. ~ Умножая легкое, обязательно умножаешь трудное. ~ Это дает: ~ Человек мудрости приближает к трудному. ~ Причинность: ~ Заканчивает в отсутствии трудного.

— [64c01t] Robert G. Henricks ~ What is at rest is easy to hold; ~ {What has not yet given a sign is} easy to plan for; ~ {The brittle is easily shattered}; ~ {The minute is easily scattered}; ~ {Act on it before it comes into being}; ~ {Order it before it turns into chaos}. ~ A tree {so big} that it takes both arms to surround starts out as the tiniest shoot; ~ A nine-story terrace rises up from a basket of dirt. ~ A high place one hundred, one thousand feet high begins from under your feet. ~ Those who act on it ruin it; ~ Those who hold on to it lose it. ~ Therefore the Sage does not act, ~ {And as a result}, he doesn't ruin [things]; ~ He does not hold on to [things], ~ And as a result, he doesn't lose [things]; ~ In people's handling of affairs, they always ruin things when they're right at the point of completion. ~ Therefore we say, "If you're as careful at the end as you were at the beginning, you'll have no failures." ~ Therefore the Sage desires not to desire and doesn't value goods that are hard to obtain; ~ He learns not to learn and returns to what the masses pass by; ~ He could help all things to be natural, yet he dare not do it.

—[64c02t] John C. H. Wu ~ WHAT is at rest is easy to hold. ~ What manifests no omens is easily forestalled. ~ What is fragile is easily shattered. ~ What is small is easily scattered. ~ Tackle things before they have appeared. ~ Cultivate peace and order before confusion and disorder have set in. ~ A tree as big as a man's embrace springs from a tiny sprout. ~ A tower nine stories high begins with a heap of earth. ~ A journey of a thousand leagues starts from where your feet stand. ~ He who fusses over anything spoils it. ~ He who grasps anything loses it. ~ The Sage fusses over nothing and therefore spoils nothing. ~ He grips at nothing and therefore loses nothing. ~ In handling affairs, people often spoil them just at the point of success. ~ With heedfulness in the beginning and patience at the end, nothing will be spoiled. ~ Therefore, the Sage desires to be desireless, ~ Sets no value on rare goods, ~ Learns to unlearn his learning, ~ And induces the masses to return from where they have overpassed. ~ He only helps all creatures to find their own nature, ~ But does not venture to lead them by the nose.

—[64c03t] D. C. Lau ~ It is easy to maintain a situation while it is still secure; ~ It is easy to deal with a situation before symptoms develop; ~ It is easy to break a thing when it is yet brittle; ~ It is easy to dissolve a thing when it is yet minute. ~ Deal with a thing while it is still nothing; ~ Keep a thing in order before disorder sets in. ~ A tree that can fill the span of a man's arms ~ Grows from a downy tip; ~ A terrace nine storeys high ~ Rises from hodfuls of earth; ~ A journey of a thousand miles ~ Starts from beneath one's feet. ~ Whoever does anything to it will ruin it; ~ Whoever lays hold of it will lose it. ~ Therefore the sage, because he does nothing, never ruins anything; ~ And, because he does not lay hold of anything, loses nothing. ~ In their enterprises the people ~ Always ruin them when on the verge of success. ~ Be as careful at the end as at the beginning ~ And there will be no ruined enterprises. ~ Therefore the sage desires not to desire ~ And does not value goods which are hard to come by; ~ Learns to be without learning ~ And makes good the mistakes of the multitude ~ In order to help the myriad creatures to be natural and to refrain from daring to act.

—[64c04t] R. L. Wing ~ What is at rest is easy to hold; ~ What is not yet begun is easy to plan. ~ What is thin is easy to melt; ~ What is minute is easy to disperse. ~ Deal with things before they emerge; ~ Put them in order before there is disorder. ~ A tree of many arm spans is produced from a tiny sprout. ~ A tower of nine stories is raised from a pile of earth. ~ A journey of a thousand miles begins with a footstep. ~ Those who act on things, spoil them; ~ Those who seize things, lose them. ~ Thus Evolved Individuals do nothing; ~ Hence they spoil nothing. ~ They seize nothing; ~ Hence they lose nothing. ~ People often spoil their work at the point of its completion. ~ With care at the end as well as the beginning, No work will be spoiled. ~ Thus Evolved Individuals desire to be desireless ~ And do not treasure goods that are hard to get. ~ They learn without learning, ~ By returning to the place where the Collective Mind passes. ~ In this way they assist All Things naturally Without venturing to act.

—[64c05t] Ren Jiyu ~ The stability of things is easy to hold while they are stable; ~ Things are easy to deal with while they show no sign of change; ~ Things are easily broken while they are fragile; ~ Things are easily dispersed while they are minute. ~ Deal with things before they have happened, ~ And get things in order before their disorder begins. ~ A huge tree which fills one's arms grows from a tiny seedling; ~ A high terrace which has nine storeys rises from a small heap of earth; ~ A journey of a thousand li begins with the first step. ~ He who takes action messes things up; ~ And he who holds things fast loses them. ~ Therefore, the sage does not fail in anything since he does nothing; ~ Does not lose anything since he holds nothing. ~ People often fail when they are about to succeed in their business. ~ If they are as careful at the end as at the beginning, ~ They would not ruin their business. ~ Therefore the sage's desire is to have no desire, ~ And he doesn't value rare goods. ~ (The Sage's) learning is to learn nothing, in order to remedy the fault that people often have. ~ Thus he helps the natural development of all things, and does not dare to act constrainedly. —[64c06t] Gia-fu Feng ~ Peace is easily maintained; ~ Trouble is easily overcome before it starts. ~ The brittle is easily shattered; ~ The small is easily scattered. ~ Deal with it before it happens. ~ Set things in order before there is confusion. ~ A tree as great as a man's embrace springs up from a small shoot; ~ A terrace nine stories high begins with a pile of earth; ~ A journey of a thousand miles starts under one's feet. ~ He who acts defeats his own purpose; ~ He who grasps loses. ~ The sage does not act, and so is not defeated. ~ He does not grasp and therefore does not lose. ~ People usually fail when they are on the verge of success. ~ So give as much care to the end as to the beginning; ~ Then there will be no failure. ~ Therefore the sage seeks freedom from desire. ~ He does not collect precious things. ~ He learns not to hold on to ideas. ~ He brings men back to what they have lost. ~ He helps the ten thousand things find their own nature, ~ But refrains from action.

—[64c07t] Lok Sang Ho ~ When the situation is peaceful and orderly, ~ Maintaining peace and order is not difficult; ~ When the situation has not yet developed to a mature stage, planning to change the outcome is easy; ~ What is brittle is easy to break; ~ What is minute is easy to scatter. ~ We set out to work before problems emerge. ~ We put things in order before they get out of order. ~ A tree that is big enough for one to embrace around it grew from a tiny seed. ~ A nine-story pagoda begins from a heap of earth. ~ A journey of a thousand miles ("li") begins with the first step. ~ Those who work for gain in the end will be frustrated. ~ Those who hold on to something in the end will lose it. ~ The Sage never works for gain and so will never be frustrated. ~ He never holds on to anything so he never loses anything. ~ People often fail in their tasks when they are about to accomplish them. ~ If only they take the same care in the end as they do in the beginning, ~ they will avoid many failures. ~ The Sage desires to be free of desires, so he will not value goods that most people value; ~ He learns to unlearn, ~ so he will value things that most people do not value. ~ The Sage only hopes that all living things will live out their inner nature. ~ He will not dare to go against Nature.

—[64c08t] Xiaolin Yang ~ When the situation is peaceful, it is easy to control; ~ when nothing has happened, it is easy to plan; ~ Brittle things are easily broken, thin things are easily dispersed. ~ Do things when they have not yet happened, control things when they are not yet out of control. ~ A full-grown tree began as a sapling; ~ A nine-story building began with a bucket of dirt; ~ A thousand-mile trip began with the first step. ~ If you fiddle with something for your own purposes, you will ruin it; ~ If you are stubborn, you will fail. ~ Therefore, the great men practiced WUWEI, so they did not fail anything; ~ They were not stubborn, so they did not make mistakes. ~ People often fail at the last step to success. ~ Be cautious at the end like you are at the beginning; then you will never fail. ~ Therefore, the great men treated having no desire as their desire, and did not value things that were precious. ~ They treated not learning as learning, and repaired the mistakes people had made. ~ They helped everything and made them natural, but did not dare to do things for their own purposes.

—[64c09t] Walter Gorn Old, GUARDING THE SMALL ~ What is still is easily held. ~ What is expected is easily provided for. ~ What is brittle is easily broken. ~ What is small is soon dispersed. ~ Transact your business before it takes shape. ~ Regulate things before confusion begins. ~ The tree which fills the arms grew from a tender shoot. ~ The castle of nine storeys was raised on a heap of earth. ~ The journey of a thousand miles begins with one step. ~ Whoever designs only destroys. ~ Whoever grasps, loses. ~ The Sage does not thus act, therefore he does no harm. ~ He does not grasp, and therefore he never loses. ~ But the common people, in their undertakings, fail on the eve of success. ~ If they were as prudent at the end as they are at the beginning, there would be no such failures. ~ Therefore the Sage is only ambitious of what others despise, and sets no value on things difficult to obtain. ~ He acquires no common learning, but returns to that which the people have passed by. ~ Thus he aims at simple development in all things, and acts without design.

—[64c10t] James Legge ~ That which is at rest is easily kept hold of; ~ before a thing has given indications of its presence, it is easy to take measures against it; ~ that which is brittle is easily broken; ~ that which is very small is easily dispersed. ~ Action should be taken before a thing has made its appearance; ~ order should be secured before disorder has begun. ~ The tree which fills the arms grew from the tiniest sprout; ~ the tower of nine storeys rose from a (small) heap of earth; ~ the journey of a thousand li commenced with a single step. ~ He who acts (with an ulterior purpose) does harm; ~ he who takes hold of a thing (in the same way) loses his hold. ~ The sage does not act (so), and therefore does no harm; ~ he does not lay hold (so), and therefore does not lose his hold. ~ (But) people in their conduct of affairs are constantly ruining them when they are on the eve of success. ~ If they were careful at the end, as (they should be) at the beginning, they would not so ruin them. ~ Therefore the sage desires what (other men) do not desire, and does not prize things difficult to get; ~ he learns what (other men) do not learn, and turns back to what the multitude of men have passed by. ~ Thus he helps the natural development of all things, and does not dare to act (with an ulterior purpose of his own).

—[64c11t] David Hinton ~ It's easy to embrace the tranquil ~ and easy to prevent trouble before omens appear. ~ It's easy for the trifling to melt away ~ and easy for the slight to scatter away. ~ Work at things before they've begun ~ and establish order before confusion sets in, ~ for a tree you can barely reach around ~ grows from the tiniest rootlet, ~ a nine-tiered tower ~ starts as a basket of dirt, ~ a thousand-mile journey ~ begins with a single step. ~ Work at things and you ruin them; cling to things and you lose them. ~ That's why a sage does nothing and so ruins nothing, clings to nothing and so loses nothing. ~ When people devote themselves to something they always ruin it on the verge of success. ~ Finish with the same care you took in beginning and you'll avoid ruining things. ~ This is why a sage desires without desire, ~ never longing for rare treasures, ~ learns without learning, ~ always returning to what people have passed by, ~ helps the ten thousand things occur of themselves by never presuming to work at them.

—[64c12t] Chichung Huang ~ When stable, ~ It is easy to maintain; ~ When no symptoms have emerged, ~ Easy to deal with; ~ When tender, ~ Easy to break; ~ When tiny, ~ Easy to disperse. ~ Tackle it before it takes shape; ~ Bring order before it becomes chaotic. ~ A tree the circumference of an embrace ~ Grows out of a downy tip; ~ A nine-storied tower ~ Rises from a basketful of earth; ~ A hundred-ren ascent ~ Begins from under one's foot. ~ He who acts upon them ruins them; ~ He who holds on to them loses them. ~ Hence, the sage man acted not ~ So that he ruined not; ~ He did not hold on to them ~ So that he did not lose them. ~ When people engage in a task, ~ They often ruin it at its completion. ~ Therefore, it is said: ~ "Be discreet in the end as in the beginning, ~ And you will not ruin your task." ~ Hence, the sage man ~ Desired to be desireless, ~ And treasured not goods hard to come by; ~ He learned to be unlearned, ~ And was exempted from the errors ~ Other rulers had committed; ~ He was able to assist the ten thousand things ~ To be the way they were ~ Without daring to act.

—[64c13t] Ellen M. Chen ~ What is at equilibrium is easy (i) to maintain; ~ What has not emerged is easy (i) to plan (mou); ~ What is fragile is easy (i) to dissolve; ~ What is minute is easy (i) to disperse. ~ Act (wei) when there is yet nothing to do. ~ Govern (chih) when there is yet no disorder (luan). ~ A tree whose trunk is of a man's embrace, ~ Begins from something extremely tiny. ~ A tower of nine stories high, ~ Is built from a heap of earth. ~ A trip of a thousand miles, ~ Begins right at one's feet. ~ He who acts (wei) fails, ~

He who holds on to loses. ~ Therefore the sage does not act (wei) so he does not fail, ~ He does not hold on to, so he does not lose. ~ The people in launching their projects, ~ Often fail when these are near completion. ~ Had they been as careful at the end as at the beginning, ~ There would have been no failures. ~ Therefore the sage desires not to desire, ~ He does not treasure hard-to-get goods; ~ Learns not to learn, ~ He recovers the transgressions (kuo) of many. ~ In assisting the self-becoming (tzu-jan) of all beings, ~ He dares not act (wei).

—[64c14t] Lee Sun Chen Org ~ A stable situation is easier to handle; ~ Before the situation [of danger or chaos] shapes up, it is easier to work out strategies for its disintegration; ~ When [its effect on] the environment is weak, it is easier to break it loose; ~ When its influence is still small, it is easier to dispense it; ~ Danger should be guarded against before it develops; ~ Chaos should be averted before it emerges. ~ A tree, with a trunk big enough for a person to encircle it with both arms stretched, was evolved primarily from something as tiny as a fine tip of its branch; ~ A nine-story terrace is elevated from the small beginning of a basket of dirt; ~ A journey of one thousand miles started out from one single step. ~ A person who tampers with [Tao] will fail; ~ A person who treats [Tao] as a possession has already lost it; ~ A Sage would not tamper with [Tao], so he will not flounder; ~ A Sage would not treat [Tao] as his possession, so he will not lose it; ~ Many people, when engaging in pursuing Tao, often failed at the point when they were just about to gain final success; ~ [Nevertheless] If one is [constantly] careful from beginning to end, he will never ruin his pursuit. ~ For reasons stated above: ~ A Sage shall extinguish [selfish] desires; ~ He shall not value hard-to-get goods; ~ He shall study the [lackluster fundamental] learnings most people [of the world] are reluctant to pursue; ~ He shall point out to people mistakes they have made; ~ He shall help myriad things and creatures to embark and stay on their natural courses but shall never dare to intervene.

—[64c15t] Tien Cong Tran ~ What is still is easy to keep. ~ What does not manifest yet is easy to deal with. ~ What is fragile is easily broken. ~ What is small is easily scattered. ~ Deal with a thing before it occurs. ~ Repair a thing before it is in disorder. ~ A tree as big as a man's embrace springs from a tiny sprout. ~ A nine story tower begins with a basket of earth. ~ A journey of a thousand miles starts from where one stands. ~ To do is to fail. ~ To grip is to lose. ~ Therefore the sage does not do and so does not fail, does not grip and so does not lose. ~ In handling affairs, people often fail just at the point of completion. ~ Be as careful at the end as at the beginning, then there will be no failure. ~ Therefore, the sage desires no-desire, does not prize rare goods, learns non-learning, helps the masses return from their ignorance. ~ He wants to help all creatures to live by their own nature, and does not interfere with them.

—[64c16t] Thomas Z. Zhang ~ When things are stable, it is easy to hold. ~ When problems have not occurred, they are easy to cope with. ~ When things are brittle, they break easily. ~ When things are tiny, they dissolve easily. ~ Prepare for problems before they appear. ~ Put things in order before they become chaotic. ~ Giant trees grow from tiny seeds. ~ High-rise buildings start from the first mound of earth. ~ Long journeys begin with a first step. ~ People often fail when the tasks are close to complete. ~ If they keep working as diligently as the beginning, then they would not fail. ~ Sages want things others do not want. ~ They do not treasure rare goods. ~ They study things others ignore. ~ They remind themselves of others' mistakes. ~ They let everything develops naturally and do not dare to force it.

—[64c17t] Arthur Waley ~ 'What stays still is easy to hold; ~ Before there has been an omen it is easy to lay plans. ~ What is tender is easily torn, ~ What is minute is easy to scatter.' ~ Deal with things in their state of not-yet-being, ~ Put them in order before they have got into confusion. ~ For 'The tree big as a man's embrace began as a tiny sprout, ~ The tower nine storeys high began with a heap of earth, ~ The journey of a thousand leagues began with what was under the feet'. ~ He who acts, harms; he who grabs, lets slip. ~

Therefore the Sage does not act, and so does not harm; ~ Does not grab, and so does not let slip. ~ Whereas the people of the world, at their tasks, ~ Constantly spoil things when within an ace of completing them. ~ 'Heed the end no less than the beginning,' ~ And your work will not be spoiled. ~ Therefore the Sage wants only things that are unwanted, ~ Sets no store by products difficult to get, ~ And so teaches things untaught, ~ Turning all men back to the things they have left behind, ~ That the ten thousand creatures may be restored to their Self-so. ~ This he does; but dare not act.
